

Coiling Dragon (盘龙)

盘龙, aka Panlong, aka Coiling Dragon, is a webnovel by popular Chinese Xianxia (fantasy/kung fu) writer I Eat Tomatoes (我吃西红柿).

Status : Completed [806 Chapters with 18 Books]

Synopsis:

Linley is a young noble of a declining clan. He has large aspirations and wants to save his clan. Linley's journey begins with an accident when he discovers a ring. He took a liking to this ring with a dragon coiling around its entirety. Upon being injured during a battle between two powerful fighters he discovers that his ring is not what he thought it was and possesses powers beyond his imagination.

Author Info :

Coiling Dragon/Panlong is an online web novel by a Chinese web author known as 'I Eat Tomatoes' (我吃西红柿). His works are fairly popular, and Coiling Dragon is one of the more popular stories he has written.

Coiling Dragon (盘龙)

盘龙, aka Panlong, aka Coiling Dragon, is a webnovel by popular Chinese Xianxia (fantasy/kung fu) writer I Eat Tomatoes (我吃西红柿).

Status : Completed [806 Chapters with 18 Books]

Synopsis:

Linley is a young noble of a declining clan. He has large aspirations and wants to save his clan. Linley's journey begins with an accident when he discovers a ring. He took a liking to this ring with a dragon coiling around its entirety. Upon being injured during a battle between two powerful fighters he discovers that his ring is not what he thought it was and possesses powers beyond his imagination.

Author Info :

Coiling Dragon/Panlong is an online web novel by a Chinese web author known as 'I Eat Tomatoes' (我吃西红柿). His works are fairly popular, and Coiling Dragon is one of the more popular stories he has written.

This genre is called 'Xian Xia' (仙侠), which roughly translates into 'Immortal Heroes'; sort of a mix of wuxia/martial arts and Daoist fantasy, with lots of magical beasts, battles, and even planar travel.

Be forewarned; this story is a long one, with 806 chapters.

Tomatoes has written other 'Xian Xia' novels as well, with the most famous being Stellar Transformations which is a sequel of Coiling Dragon.

Translation of Names:

In this novel, the author deliberately transliterates a lot of foreign names into Chinese characters; for example, one character has the name 沃顿 in original Chinese, which in pinyin translates into Wodun, but should have originally been Wharton.

After careful consideration and discussion with friends and readers, I have decided to translate these names using what I suspect the original name was, while also including the pinyin the first time the name comes up, ie, Wharton (Wo'dun).

Info:

<https://www.mangaupdates.com/series.html?id=118138>

Raws:

<http://www.piaotian.net/bookinfo/0/121.html>

<http://www.piaotian.net/html/0/121/index.html>

Translator:

<http://www.wuxiaworld.com/cdindex-html/>

Table of content:

There are a total of 21 books spanning 806 chapters.

Book 1 – The Ring - Chapter 1-23

Book 2 - Growing Up - Chapter 1-25

Book 3 - The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts - Chapter 1-26

Book 4 - The Dragonblood Warrior - Chapter 1-21

Book 5 - The Godsword, Bloodviolet - Chapter 1-17

Book 6 - The Road to Revenge - Chapter 1-32

Book 7 - Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down - Chapter 1-25

Book 8 - The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey - Chapter 1-59

Book 9 - His Fame Shakes the World - Chapter 1-50

Book 10 – Baruch - Chapter 1-48

Book 11 – The Necropolis of the Gods - Chapter 1-39

Book 12 – The Descent of the Gods - Chapter 1-39

Book 13 – Gebados - Chapter 1-45

Book 14 - Fiend - Chapter 1-31

Book 15 – Priceless Treasure - Chapter 1-42

Book 16 – The Starmist Sea - Chapter 1-32

Book 17 – Indigo Prefecture - Chapter 1-64

Book 18 – Highgod - Chapter 1-32

Book 19 – Metamorphosis - Chapter 1-64

Book 20 – The Crown's Riddle - Chapter 1-48

Book 21 – The Peak - Chapter 1-44

AfterWord By Author

AfterWord by Translator

Book 1 – The Ring - Chapter 1-23

Chapter 1, Early Morning at a Township Chapter 2, The Dragonblood Warrior Clan (part one) Chapter 3, The Dragonblood Warrior Clan (part two) Chapter 4, Growth (part 1)

Chapter 5, Growth (part 2)

Chapter 6, Coiling Dragon Ring (part 1) Chapter 7, Coiling Dragon Ring (part 2) Chapter 8, Magical Beast, Velocidragon!

Chapter 9, Magical Beast, Velocidragon! (part 2) Chapter 10, Dance of the Fire Serpents (part 1) Chapter 11, Dance of the Fire Serpents (part 2) Chapter 12, The Will of the Mighty (part 1) Chapter 13, The Will of the Mighty (part 2) Chapter 14, The Battle in the Sky (part 1) Chapter 15, The Battle in the Sky (part 2) Chapter 16, Catastrophe (part 1) Chapter 17, Catastrophe (part 2) Chapter 18, The Coiling Dragon Spirit (part 1) Chapter 19, The Coiling Dragon Spirit (part 2) Chapter 20, Earth-Style Magic (part 1) Chapter 21, Earth-Style Magic (part 2) Chapter 22, Spring Ends, Autumn Comes (part 1) Chapter 23, Spring Ends, Autumn Comes (part 2)

Book 2 - Growing Up - Chapter 1-25

Chapter 1, Magical Beast, Shadowmouse Chapter 2, A Clumsy Method (Part 1) Chapter 3, A Clumsy Method (Part 2) Chapter 4, The Ernst Institute

Chapter 5, 'Bebe' the Shadowmouse (part 1) Chapter 6, 'Bebe' the Shadowmouse (part 2) Chapter 7, Fenlai City

Chapter 8, The Magical Aptitude Test (part 1) Chapter 9, The Magical Aptitude Test (part 2) Chapter 10, The Secret Dragonblood Training Tome (part 1) Chapter 11, The Secret Dragonblood Training Tome (part 2)

Chapter 12, Instructions

Chapter 13, A Congregation of Talents Chapter 14, The Bros of Dorm 1987 (part 1) Chapter 15, The Bros of Dorm 1987 (part 2) Chapter 16, Wind-Style Magic

Chapter 17, A Learning Period (part 1) Chapter 18, A Learning Period (part 2) Chapter 19, Who is Number One? (part 1) Chapter 20, Who is Number One? (part 2) Chapter 21, The Proulx Gallery (part 1) Chapter 22, The Proulx Gallery (part 2) Chapter 23, A Wonderful Surprise Chapter 24, The Straight Chisel School Chapter 25, Six Years

Book 3 - The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts - Chapter 1-26

Chapter 1, Stone Sculpting (part 1) Chapter 2, Stone Sculpting (part 2) Chapter 3, A Night at the Jade Water Paradise Chapter 4, The Price (part 1)

Chapter 5, The Price (part 2)

Chapter 6, The Invitation

Chapter 7, The Journey (part 1)

Chapter 8, The Journey (part 2)

Chapter 9, The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts (part 1) Chapter 10, The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts (part 2) Chapter 11, Wolf Pack (part 1)

Chapter 12, Wolf Pack (part 2)

Chapter 13, Danger (part 1)

Chapter 14, Danger (part 2)

Chapter 15, Cruelty

Chapter 16, Cruelty (part 2)

Chapter 17, Bebe’s Prowess (part 1) Chapter 18, Bebe’s Prowess (part 2)

Chapter 19, The Black Dagger (part 1) Chapter 20, The Black Dagger (part

2) Chapter 21 – The Foggy Gulch (part 1) Chapter 22, The Foggy Gulch

(part 2) Chapter 23, Her Name Was Alice (part 1) Chapter 24, Her Name

Was Alice (part 2) Chapter 25, Violet in the Night Wind (part 1) Chapter

26, Violet in the Night Wind (part 2)

Book 4 - The Dragonblood Warrior - Chapter 1-21

Chapter 1, Coming Home (part 1)

Chapter 2, Coming Home (part 2)

Chapter 3, Hogg

Chapter 4, The Price of a Sculpture Chapter 5, The Rose in Winter (part

1) Chapter 6, The Rose in Winter (part 2) Chapter 7, Experts Everywhere

(part 1) Chapter 8, Experts Everywhere (part 2) Chapter 9, Cracks (part 1)

Chapter 10, Cracks (part 2)

Chapter 11, A Meeting

Chapter 12, The Desolate Snow

Chapter 13, Ten Days, Ten Nights Chapter 14, Liquefy

Chapter 15, Returning to the Foggy Valley Chapter 16, Forbidden the Skies

Chapter 17, The Gloomy Depths

Chapter 18, The Armored Razorback Wyrms Chapter 19, Viciousness

Chapter 20, The Draconic Crystal’s Transformation Chapter 21, The Dragonblood Warrior

Book 5 - The Godsword, Bloodviolet - Chapter 1-17

Chapter 1, The Mysterious Magical Formation Chapter 2, The Four Higher Planes Chapter 3, Piercing the Heavens

Chapter 4, Grandmaster Sculptor?

Chapter 5, Sword Training

Chapter 6, Applying For Graduation Chapter 7, Second in History

Chapter 8, The Upper Classes of the Yulan Continent Chapter 9, Abduction

Chapter 10, Status

Chapter 11, A Lack of Money

Chapter 12, Rage

Chapter 13, The Old Master

Chapter 14, The Auction

Chapter 15, A Sky-High Price

Chapter 16, An Owner Found

Chapter 17, Going Home

Book 6 - The Road to Revenge - Chapter 1-32

Chapter 1, The Dusty Affairs of the Past Chapter 2, The Decision

Chapter 3, Assembling at the Township Chapter 4, A Nighttime Chat

Chapter 5, Writ of Nobility

Chapter 6, Tomes of Magic Chapter 7, Heavy Casualties
Chapter 8, An Excessive Desire to Kill Chapter 9, The Engagement
Chapter 10, Captured
Chapter 11, The Man Behind the Curtain Chapter 12, The Investigation
Chapter 13, Secrets Exposed
Chapter 14, Imprisoned
Chapter 15, To Be Wronged
Chapter 16, Limits
Chapter 17, The Plea
Chapter 18, The Visit
Chapter 19, The King of Killers
Chapter 20, Poison
Chapter 21, The Trial
Chapter 22, The Enormous Fine
Chapter 23, The Bloodrupture Poison Chapter 24, Breakthrough
Chapter 25, Producing the Powder Chapter 26, The Scheme
Chapter 27, The Wine
Chapter 28, Mother's Life or Death Chapter 29, Kill However Many Come!
Chapter 30, Even if I Die, I'll Kill You!
Chapter 31, Won't Accept it
Chapter 32, In Dire Straits

Book 7 - Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down - Chapter 1-25

Chapter 1, A Hope of Living

Chapter 2, The Divine Boon Descends Chapter 3, Would Definitely Die?

Chapter 4, A Giant Foot

Chapter 5, Apocalypse Day

Chapter 6, Deity-Level Combatant Chapter 7, Fleeing in Panic

Chapter 8, One Hand

Chapter 9, Interspatial Ring

Chapter 10, A Terrible Situation Chapter 11, The Titanic Black Python

Chapter 12, The Rescue

Chapter 13, A Major Treasure

Chapter 14, The City of Hess

Chapter 15, The Clan of the Violetflame Warriors Chapter 16, The Furnace

Chapter 17, The Heavy Sword, 'Bladeless'

Chapter 18, A Missing Hand?

Chapter 19, With Bated Breath

Chapter 20, The Full Story

Chapter 21, Fate

Chapter 22, Passing Away

Chapter 23, Crazy

Chapter 24, Stillness

Chapter 25, Departure

Book 8 - The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey - Chapter 1-59

Chapter 1, Thunderbolt

Chapter 2, The Howling Worldwolf Chapter 3, A Slaughter

Chapter 4, The Black Shadow

Chapter 5, The Mysterious Black Panther Chapter 6, Another Transformation Chapter 7, A Battle of Speed

Chapter 8, Leaving the Mountains Chapter 9, Olivier

Chapter 10, A Single Sword

Chapter 11, Hands

Chapter 12, Blackrock City

Chapter 13, Persuasion

Chapter 14, Repeated Assassination Attempts Chapter 15, The Apothecary

Chapter 16, The Yulan River

Chapter 17, Poison Gas Fluttering in the Wind Chapter 18, The Prefectural City of Cerre Chapter 19, Search and Seizure

Chapter 20, The Summer Inferno

Chapter 20, The Summer Inferno

Chapter 21, Gift

Chapter 22, The Vast Earth

Chapter 23, The Cardinal

Chapter 24, Zassler

Chapter 25, When Experts Join Forces Chapter 26, Mutual Trust

Chapter 27, Secrets of the Church Chapter 28, Flower-Like Sisters

Chapter 29, Investigation
Chapter 30, The Five Year Agreement Chapter 31, Concealed by the Night Chapter 32, The Decision
Chapter 33, The Four Bros' Paths Chapter 34, In Dire Straits
Chapter 35, The Profound Truths of the Earth Chapter 36, True Experts
Chapter 37, The Undying Warriors Chapter 38, The Church's Strategy
Chapter 39, Time Passing Slowly
Chapter 40, Undying Warrior Transformation Chapter 41, The Power of the Hundred Layered Waves Chapter 42, An Appointment Kept Chapter 43, The Gathering in Basil Chapter 44, Neighbors
Chapter 45, Vicious Acts
Chapter 46, A Change of Plans
Chapter 47, The Angel Battle Formation Chapter 48, The Four-Winged Angel Chapter 49, Saint-Level Dragonblood Warrior Chapter 50, An Appointment
Chapter 51, Wharton
Chapter 52, The Beirut Clan
Chapter 53, Guest
Chapter 54, Personal Disciple
Chapter 55, A Saint-Level Battle Chapter 56, The Magicite Core
Chapter 57, Yet Another Saint-Level Chapter 58, Blumer's Request
Chapter 59, The Brothers Meet

Chapter 1, A Powerful Supporter

Chapter 2, A Breakthrough in Spiritual Energy Chapter 3, Provocation

Chapter 4, The Blade Named 'Slaughterer'

Chapter 5, The Colosseum

Chapter 6, The Duel

Chapter 7, Intending to Inflict Serious Wounds Chapter 8, The Prodigy
Sword Saint Chapter 9, Linley vs. Olivier

Chapter 10, The Two Geniuses

Chapter 11, The Challenge

Chapter 12, Front Courtyard as Busy as a Marketplace Chapter 13, Caylan's Arrival

Chapter 14, An Exchange Between Geniuses Chapter 15, The Results

Chapter 16, Congratulatory Gift

Chapter 17, Stepping Onto the Stage Chapter 18, Experts of Other Planes Chapter 19, A Choice

Chapter 20, The War God's College Chapter 21, The Eldest Disciple

Chapter 22, The War God's Summons Chapter 23, Pulseguard

Chapter 24, Olivier vs Haydson

Chapter 25, As Resilient as a Monolith Chapter 26, A Time and a Place

Chapter 27, The Yulan Empire's Special Envoy Chapter 28, Delia

Chapter 29, Meeting Ten Years Later Chapter 30, Delia's Protector

Chapter 31, The Anticipation of the Crowd Chapter 32, Desperate

Chapter 33, Astonishment

Chapter 34, Fame Spreading Far

Chapter 35, Target: Anarchic Lands!

Chapter 36, Reynolds' Crisis

Chapter 37, Grievous News on the Wedding Day Chapter 38, Is it True?
Chapter 39, The Cover-Up and the Truth Chapter 40, The Secrets of the Yulan Continent Chapter 41, The War God's Favor Chapter 42, The Southeast Administrative Province Chapter 43, The Corpse
Chapter 44, Enslaved
Chapter 45, Cruelty
Chapter 46, The Order
Chapter 47, Establishing a Base in the Anarchic Lands Chapter 48, Administration
Chapter 49, The Mysterious Mountain Village Chapter 50, Linley and Olivier

Book 10 – Baruch - Chapter 1-48

Chapter 1, Delia and Linley
Chapter 2, Two Letters
Chapter 3, Expanding Power
Chapter 4, War Machine
Chapter 5, Heading Out
Chapter 6, Third Bro?
Chapter 7, Desri
Chapter 8, The Terrifying Power of Grand Magus Saints Chapter 9, Sparring
Chapter 10, Forget It!

Chapter 11, The Order Comes Down Chapter 12, A Sudden Change of Events Chapter 13, Linley's Return

Chapter 14, Downfall

Chapter 15, The Fierce Battle Against Osenno Chapter 16, Baruch

Chapter 17, Homecoming

Chapter 18, Delia, Marry Me

Chapter 19, Kingdom

Chapter 20, A Procession of Arrivals Chapter 21, The Laws of Light

Chapter 22, The Four Sided Gathering Chapter 23, The Wedding

Chapter 24, That Night

Chapter 25, Twelve Years in the Blink of an Eye Chapter 26, Blueheart Grass, Dragon's Blood Chapter 27, A Heated Battle

Chapter 28, Submission

Chapter 29, Glory

Chapter 30, Discovery

Chapter 31, Magicite Gemstone Mine Chapter 32, Joining Forces

Chapter 33, Calling the Troops, Summoning the Generals Chapter 34, A Beast of Burden?

Chapter 35, The Call to Assemble Chapter 36, The Door

Chapter 37, The Power of Magicite Cannons Chapter 38, Explosive Fury

Chapter 39, Battle to the Death

Chapter 40, Meat Grinder

Chapter 41, Trump Card

Chapter 42, An Utter Catastrophe Chapter 43, The Ratmageddon Wave Chapter 44, Meeting Invitation

Chapter 45, Shameless

Chapter 46, A Falling Out

Chapter 47, Downfall of Many Saints Chapter 48, Beirut

Book 11 – The Necropolis of the Gods - Chapter 1-39

Chapter 01, Founding of an Empire Chapter 02, Breakthrough

Chapter 03, Bebe's Heritage

Chapter 04, Deity Level Magical Beast Chapter 05, Bebe's Revenge

Chapter 06, Everyone Assembled

Chapter 07, The Mettalic Castle

Chapter 08, Three Corridors

Chapter 09, The Necropolis' Sculptures Chapter 10, Moving Cautiously

Chapter 11, Plant Lifeforms

Chapter 12, The Ba-Serpent Awakens?

Chapter 13, True Awakening! The Impending Calamity!

Chapter 14, The World of Snow

Chapter 15, Eight Years in the Necropolis Chapter 16, The Flame Tyrant

Chapter 17, The Tunnel's Location Chapter 18, The Fate-Determining Strike Chapter 19, Three Divine Artifacts Chapter 20, The Magical Beasts in Action Chapter 21, The Queen Mother, 'Lachapalle'

Chapter 22, Regrowth

Chapter 23, Fast, Slow?

Chapter 24, Myriad Swords Converge, the Pearl of Life!

Chapter 25, Entering the Eighth Floor Chapter 26, The Beholder King

Chapter 27, A Hospitable Host

Chapter 28, Thorium Devil

Chapter 29, Abyssal Blade Demon

Chapter 30, Grand Magus Saint

Chapter 31, Necropolis of the Gods, the Eleventh Floor!

Chapter 32, The Blood Stained Underground Chapter 33, Life and Death

Chapter 34, Death?

Chapter 35, Fleeing For His Life Chapter 36, One Against A Million

Chapter 37, Divine Spark

Chapter 38, Desiring a Divine Spark?

Chapter 39, The Predictions of Beirut

Book 12 – The Descent of the Gods - Chapter 1-39

Chapter 01 Coming Home

Chapter 02 Becoming a Deity?

Chapter 03 Dividing the Treasures

Chapter 04 A Major Event

Chapter 05 The Apocalypse War of Ten Thousand Years Ago Chapter 06
Slaughtering a Path to the Sacred Isle

Chapter 07 Judgement Day Descends

Chapter 08 The Great Six-Point Battle Formation

Chapter 09 The Descent

Chapter 10 Lord Chiquitas!

Chapter 11 One Night

Chapter 12 New Variables

Chapter 13 Meditative Training Begins Chapter 14 A Visit From Yale

Chapter 15 A Sudden Change

Chapter 16 Five Years

Chapter 17 Mysterious Religions

Chapter 18 Guidance

Chapter 19 Controlled

Chapter 20 Discarding a Piece

Chapter 21 Soulsilk

Chapter 22 Linley Becomes a Deity

Chapter 23 The Elemental Sea

Chapter 24 Violet Blood, Coiling Dragon Chapter 25 Must Go
Chapter 26 The Coiling Dragon Ring

Chapter 27 Battle to the Death

Chapter 28 The Grand Warlock’s Treasure Chapter 29 The Disposition of the Divine Sparks

Chapter 30 Haeru

Chapter 31 The Deity-Level Expert, Muba Chapter 32 Divine Artifacts and Divinities Chapter 33 A Wave of Refugees

Chapter 34 Accepting the Heavy Burden Chapter 35 Claws and Fangs

Chapter 36 Olivier Has Arrived

Chapter 37 The Great Botha Levee

Chapter 38 Smiling Meekly

Chapter 39 Creating a Catastrophe!

Book 13 – Gebados - Chapter 1-45

Chapter 01 Planar Prison

Chapter 02 Departure

Chapter 03 The World Changed

Chapter 04 Ferocious

Chapter 05 Sound

Chapter 06 A Legend

Chapter 07 Willingly Surrender

Chapter 08 Downfall

Chapter 09 Timely

Chapter 10 Foundation

Chapter 11 Desri's Divine Spark

Chapter 12 Desri's Decision

Chapter 13 The Millennial Cycle

Chapter 14 Two Powers Join Forces Chapter 15 Unwilling to Admit Defeat Chapter 16 Turned Back

Chapter 17 Mental Message

Chapter 18 Bebe Becomes a Deity

Chapter 19 Profound Mysteries, High and Low Chapter 20 The Invincible Highgods Chapter 21 Four Mighty Gods

Chapter 22 Intimidation

Chapter 23 Sadista

Chapter 24 The Mountain Range of Death Chapter 25 The Profound Mysteries of Death?

Chapter 26 Homeland

Chapter 27 The Lord of Mount Copper Gong Chapter 28 Mount Copper Gong

Chapter 29 Elemental Training

Chapter 30 A So-Called Spar

Chapter 31 The Throbbing Pulse of the World Chapter 32 Earth and Wind

Chapter 33 An Implacable Rage

Chapter 34 Darkness and Flame

Chapter 35 Paying Respect

Chapter 36 Secret

Chapter 37 For the Clan

Chapter 38 Attacked On the Way Back Chapter 39 Drawing Legs on a Snake Chapter 40 Creek, Ocean?

Chapter 41 An Abrupt Change

Chapter 42 Beirut's Power

Chapter 43 Extreme Joy Turns to Grief Chapter 44 Only One Person

Chapter 45 Indigo Prefecture

Book 14 - Fiend - Chapter 1-31

Chapter 01 Mirrormoon Cliff

Chapter 02 Inkstone

Chapter 03 Black Dragon Tribe

Chapter 04 Royalwing City

Chapter 05 Fiend Medallion

Chapter 06 Red-Eyed With Greed

Chapter 07 A Bloody Battle

Chapter 08 Survival of the Fittest

Chapter 09 Omnipresent Danger

Chapter 10 The Three Castles of Royalwing City Chapter 11 The Third Floor

Chapter 12 Instant Refining

Chapter 13 Planning to Commit Violence?

Chapter 14 Fiend Castle

Chapter 15 Royalwing Fiend

Chapter 16 The Full God Level!

Chapter 17 Profound Mysteries Fused, Power Greatly Strengthened

Chapter 18 Moon Lake

Chapter 19 The Pink Mist

Chapter 20 Cannon Fodder

Chapter 21 Chaos

Chapter 22 Deathgod Golem

Chapter 23 Moon Ring

Chapter 24 Black-Robed Guards

Chapter 25 Nowhere to Run

Chapter 26 You Can't Kill Me

Chapter 27 Highest Bidder Takes It Chapter 28 Wild Revenge

Chapter 29 Penitent Flames

Chapter 30 Inventory Checking

Chapter 31 Escort Mission

Book 15 – Priceless Treasure - Chapter 1-42

Chapter 01 The Fiends Assemble

Chapter 02 Extremely Heavy Casualties Chapter 03 Probe

Chapter 04 Strength in Numbers

Chapter 05 Sword Intent

Chapter 06 The Ancient Castle of Sand Chapter 07 To Choose

Chapter 08 Many Dangers

Chapter 09 Blue Water Drop

Chapter 10 Meeting

Chapter 11 Secret

Chapter 12 A Breakthrough in Wind Chapter 13 Re-Employment

Chapter 14 The Scorching Volcano Chapter 15 News of Olivier

Chapter 16 Golden Magma

Chapter 17 The Fight Over the Priceless Treasure Chapter 18 Salomon's Rage

Chapter 19 Kiss

Chapter 20 Talisman

Chapter 21 Sovereign's Might

Chapter 22 Water Drop, Sovereign's Might?

Chapter 23 Execution

Chapter 24 Insight

Chapter 25 A Trillion Years of Depression Chapter 26 Head Out, Stay Behind?

Chapter 27 Disaster Descending From the Skies Chapter 28 The Essence of Fire

Chapter 29 The Amethyst Mountains

Chapter 30 The Fog Sea

Chapter 31 Blessing, Curse

Chapter 32 Violet Light Rising to the Heavens Chapter 33 The Strange Fog Sea

Chapter 34 Highgod

Chapter 35 Amethyst Beasts

Chapter 36 The Storm Caves

Chapter 37 The Rescue

Chapter 38 Juvenile Beast

Chapter 39 Fleeing For Their Lives

Chapter 40 Life in the Amethyst Mountains

Chapter 41 Trapped Five Hundred Years

Chapter 42, 108

Book 16 – The Starmist Sea - Chapter 1-32

Chapter 01, Black Stone

Chapter 02, Ten Years of Harvesting Chapter 03, Saturation

Chapter 04, Out To Sea

Chapter 05, That Powerful Man

Chapter 06, Knifeblade Island

Chapter 07, Hidden Expert

Chapter 08, Blackstone Prison

Chapter 09, Emotions

Chapter 10, Ganmontin

Chapter 11, So It Was Him

Chapter 12, A Great Battle

Chapter 13, Unbindable

Chapter 14, Drifting For Twenty Years Chapter 15, Miluo Island

Chapter 16, Familiar Face

Chapter 17, A Confrontation

Chapter 18, The Blood-Colored Miluo Insignia Chapter 19, War God, Cesar

Chapter 20, With Child?

Chapter 21, I Want Him Dead!

Chapter 22, All Who Bar My Path Shall Die!

Chapter 23, Turning the World Upside Down Chapter 24, Life and Death,
Two Paths Chapter 25, Red-Robed Elder

Chapter 26, Scryer Records

Chapter 27, Secret Area

Chapter 28, The Secret

Chapter 29, Unable to Leave!

Chapter 30, Sledgehammer

Chapter 31, Purgatory Commander

Chapter 32, The Might of a Sovereign

Book 17 – Indigo Prefecture - Chapter 1-64

Chapter 01, Training Speed

Chapter 02, Travelling to Indigo Prefecture Chapter 03, Azure Dragon Clan

Chapter 04, Seize Them

Chapter 05, Baruch

Chapter 06, The Weakest, Smallest Branch Chapter 07, The Clan's Crisis

Chapter 08, The Secrets of the Ancestral Baptism!

Chapter 09, Eighty Years

Chapter 10, Dragonize Pool

Chapter 11, Innate Divine Ability Chapter 12, The Might of the Dragon

Roar Chapter 13, Greed!

Chapter 14, The Challenge

Chapter 15, Life-And-Death Duel

Chapter 16, No Mercy!

Chapter 17, Prestige

Chapter 18, 'Punishment'

Chapter 19, Elder

Chapter 20, Conclave of Elders

Chapter 21, The Grand Elder

Chapter 22, Comfort

Chapter 23, Receiving the Order

Chapter 24, Give Me a Ride

Chapter 25, Blood Splattering the Skies Chapter 26, Spiritual Chaos

Chapter 27, Bestowal

Chapter 28, Freedom

Chapter 29, Joining Forces

Chapter 30, Surrounded And Attacked Chapter 31, A Battle of Sovereign's Might Chapter 32, Wanting to Steal a Chicken, Instead Losing the Bait Chapter 33, Bulo, Unwilling to Give Up Chapter 34, The Eight Great Patriarchs Chapter 35, A Tremendous Threat!

Chapter 36, Decision

Chapter 37, Calmness and Savagery Chapter 38, Most Powerful Attack
Chapter 39, Firmament Splitter

Chapter 40, Betrayal

Chapter 41, A Mysterious Visitor Chapter 42, Nobody There

Chapter 43, Wade

Chapter 44, Catching a Ride

Chapter 45, A Frantic Battle

Chapter 46, Spare No One!

Chapter 47, Begging for Salvation Chapter 48, Their Proposals

Chapter 49, Three Months

Chapter 50, Between Life and Death!

Chapter 51, Beirut's Abilities

Chapter 52, Two Drops of Sovereign's Might Chapter 53, Putting on a Performance Chapter 54, Nowhere to Run

Chapter 55, Beirut's Craftiness

Chapter 56, Vitality

Chapter 57, Dangerous

Chapter 58, Unwillingness

Chapter 59, Suspicion

Chapter 60, A Major Event

Chapter 61, Group Battle

Chapter 62, The Thorn in Their Side Chapter 63, A Turn Of Events

Chapter 64, Supremacy

Book 18 – Highgod - Chapter 1-32

Chapter 01, What Type of Weapon?

Chapter 02, Mirage

Chapter 03, Goals

Chapter 04, Ironknife Gorge

Chapter 05, Back to the Yulan Continent!

Chapter 06, After Two Thousand Years, Even Seas Can Become Plains!

Chapter 07, Parting Words

Chapter 08, Marvelous Treasures

Chapter 09, Battle!

Chapter 10, The Manner of Death

Chapter 11, A Pleasant Surprise

Chapter 12, Entering the Netherworld Chapter 13, Northbone Prefecture Chapter 14, Sayant

Chapter 15, Throwing One's Life Away Chapter 16, Abyssal Mountain

Chapter 17, Abyssal Fruit

Chapter 18, The Young Red-Haired Lady Chapter 19, Warning – Snakes and Trees!

Chapter 20, Lost

Chapter 21, Green Snakes

Chapter 22, The Gray Fog Region – Slaughter!

Chapter 23, A Strange Situation

Chapter 24, Fortune? Misfortune?

Chapter 25, The Abyssal Fruit Appears Chapter 26, Choice

Chapter 27, Sovereign's Emissary Chapter 28, Repercussions

Chapter 29, Invincible

Chapter 30, Unable to Help

Chapter 31, The Chief Sovereign of Death Chapter 32, The Netherworld Heart

Book 19 – Metamorphosis - Chapter 1-64

Chapter 01, Desire

Chapter 02, Flamebone Mountain

Chapter 03, Target

Chapter 04, Redcliff Lord

Chapter 05, Sudden Emergence

Chapter 06, Unstoppable

Chapter 07, A Blaze

Chapter 08, The Storm Gathers

Chapter 09, A Battle Between Supreme Experts of the Earth Chapter 10, The Final, Supreme Technique!

Chapter 11, Victory and Defeat

Chapter 12, Four Badge Colors

Chapter 13, Dangerous

Chapter 14, Ambushed

Chapter 15, A Choice

Chapter 16, Murderous Blows!

Chapter 17, Hemmers

Chapter 18, List of Names

Chapter 19, An Untended Willow Grows Chapter 20, A Tranquil Heart

Chapter 21, Flee on Sight

Chapter 22, Sixty Years in the Planar Battlefield Chapter 23, Three Person Squad

Chapter 24, A Dead End? A New Beginning!

Chapter 25, Innate Divine Ability Chapter 26, The First Battle

Chapter 27, A Change

Chapter 28, Five Hundred Years

Chapter 29, Four Against One

Chapter 30, Canteen?

Chapter 31, The Number One Clan

Chapter 32, What's This?

Chapter 33, A Battle

Chapter 34, A Battle of Attrition?

Chapter 35, A Rock

Chapter 36, Blood Binding, Crown Chapter 37, Supreme Technique

Chapter 38, An Inch of Land, A Foot of Sky Chapter 39, Bluefire

Chapter 40, Will

Chapter 41, High Spirits

Chapter 42, A Nightmare Descends Chapter 43, Attacked and Killed

Chapter 44, Results

Chapter 45, Arrangements

Chapter 46, The Unfinished Battle Chapter 47, Suicidal?

Chapter 48, The Death of Linley

Chapter 49, The Line Between Life and Death Chapter 50, A Terrifying
Tenacity Chapter 51, Metamorphosis – Breaking Through the Cocoon, Becoming a Butterfly!

Chapter 52, The Path to the Peak Chapter 53, Spiritual Power!

Chapter 54, Disappearing In a Blink of an Eye Chapter 55, The Experts By the Banks of the Stellar River Chapter 56, Bebe's Request

Chapter 57, The Final Battle

Chapter 58, Linley's Power

Chapter 59, The Duel Above the Stellar River Chapter 60, The Most Powerful Technique!

Chapter 61, Gathering Point

Chapter 62, Who Is Alive, Who Is Dead?

Chapter 63, Return

Chapter 64, Gathered From Many Places

Book 20 – The Crown’s Riddle - Chapter 1-48

Chapter 1, Father and Son

Chapter 2, An Inescapable Calamity Chapter 3, Power

Chapter 4, The Clan’s Changes

Chapter 5, Refusal

Chapter 6, Overgod Artifact

Chapter 7, Olivier

Chapter 8, Whither To?

Chapter 9, Bonin

Chapter 10, Right and Wrong

Chapter 11, The Lord Prefect of Skymount Chapter 12, Not Dead

Chapter 13, The Secret of the Nine Pearls Chapter 14, True, False

Chapter 15, The Sovereign Descends Chapter 16, A Tribulation

Chapter 17, Too Hot to Handle

Chapter 18, Joke

Chapter 19, Parchment

Chapter 20, After A Millennium, An Astonishing Change!

Chapter 21, Four Divine Powers Fuse Chapter 22, Real and Fake Chapter 23, Red Caltrop Diamond
Chapter 24, Status
Chapter 25, A Sudden Shockwave
Chapter 26, The Struggle
Chapter 27, The Critical Point
Chapter 28, Toyed With Chapter 29, Begging to be Spared Chapter 30, Overgod Decree
Chapter 31, The Chief Sovereign Descends Chapter 32, I'd Rather Die! A Change of Events Chapter 33, Descent
Chapter 34, Hiding One's Strength Chapter 35, Coercion
Chapter 36, Nine Supreme Experts Chapter 37, Infiltration
Chapter 38, Lionheart City
Chapter 39, Relief Sculpture
Chapter 40, The Red Caltrop Diamond Emerges!
Chapter 41, Two Preparations
Chapter 42, Linley's Terrifying Strength Chapter 43, Utterly Exasperated
Chapter 44, Whither To?
Chapter 45, Beirut's True Power!
Chapter 46, Beirut, Sovereign?
Chapter 47, Battle
Chapter 48, Success

Chapter 1, The Overgod of Life

Chapter 2, The Eighteenth Floor of the Necropolis of the Gods Chapter 3, Ten Thousand Years Ago – The Truth Chapter 4, Sovereign Linley

Chapter 5, Magic Compilation, Fusion Sovereign!

Chapter 6, Entrusted

Chapter 7, Dragonblood Continent Chapter 8, Entreaty

Chapter 9, The Next Five Thousand Years Chapter 10, Sword Intent

Chapter 11, Hunt and Kill, A Storm Brews!

Chapter 12, The First Display of Power Chapter 13, Punishment

Chapter 14, The Gathering of the Sovereigns Chapter 15, Covetous Intent

Chapter 16, The Verdict

Chapter 17, Tenfold Victor's Reward Chapter 18, Divine Beast, Sable Leviathan Chapter 19, Orloff's Invitation

Chapter 20, Fight, Kill!

Chapter 22, Trump Card

Chapter 23, Twelve-Winged Angel

Chapter 24, Nine Rounds

Chapter 25, Revisiting the Divine Light Plane Chapter 26, An Extremely High Price!

Chapter 27, Memories

Chapter 28, Beginning to Act

Chapter 29, Windhunter

Chapter 30, Sovereign's Emissaries Chapter 31, A Meeting

Chapter 32, Gathering Point

Chapter 33, The Bula Race

Chapter 34, Samsara

Chapter 35, Thousand Years

Chapter 36, The Final Battle

Chapter 37 – Eye-Catching

Chapter 38 – Lies!

Chapter 39, Linley’s Fiery Rage

Chapter 40, A Battle of Chief Sovereigns Chapter 41, Can He Actually Be...?

Chapter 42, Earth Fire Water Wind Chapter 43, A New Name (part 1)

Chapter 44, A New Name (part 2)

Afterword – By Author, ‘I Eat Tomatoes’

RWX’s Afterword

Glossary of Terms, Places, and People :

This Glossary is not complete!

A

Absolute Zero – A forbidden-level water-style spell that can freeze an entire army to death.

Abyssal Blade Demon – A Saint-level creature, its body is formed from metal and every limb is covered with numerous blades. They are considered the weakest life forms in the Abyss plane the equivalent of ants in the Yulan continent. The blades on their back contain their essence and can rival low level divine artifacts.

Adamantine – An extremely hard and extremely heavy metal which even Deities might find hard to break. A fist sized chunk of adamantine weighs ~1000 pounds.

Affleck – The Dark Patriarch of the Cult of Shadows, equivalent to Holy Emperor Heidens of the Radiant Church.

Airwings – A wind-style spell that is the higher level form of the Soaring Technique, it creates two wings of air which allows the user to fly at high speeds.

Alice Straf – A female magus and Linley's first love interest, Linley saved her from a Bloodthirsty Warpig when they first met.

Anarchic Lands – The lands near the Forest of Darkness, comprising the 48 Anarchic Duchies which are ruled by no Empire.

Angel – Powerful winged humanoids that are servants of the Radiant Lord, and can Descend into human bodies, which limit their power depending on how powerful the bodies are. Generally, the more powerful the Angel is, the more wings it has. A Six-Winged Angel is known as a Seraphim and possesses the power of a peak-stage Saint-level combatant.

Angelic-Descent – A forbidden-level light-style spell that creates a illusionary Six-Winged Angel similar to the forbidden-level earth-style spell “World Protector”.

Annihilating Tempest – A forbidden-level wind-style spell that can fill the entire sky with blade-like gusts of wind.

Armand – The clan of the Undying Warriors, one of the Four Supreme Warriors clan. Armand was the first Undying Warrior and first clan leader.

Austoni – A manager/curator at the Proulx Gallery. Made the decision to invite Linley to open a private booth in the Hall of the Masters.

B

Battle qi – 斗气, a form of internal energy

Barker Armand – The eldest of five siblings, all of whom are Undying Warriors. As Barker is the eldest, the five are often just called the ‘Barker brothers’. The names of the five siblings are: Barker (eldest), Ankh (second), Hazer (third), Boone (fourth), and Gates (fifth).

Basil – The provincial capital of the Northwest Administrative Province of the O’Brien Empire. Watched over by Saint-level combatant McKenzie Jacques.

Bebe – The name of Linley’s “Shadowmouse” magical beast companion. Bebe is quite stronger than he seems, despite not growing up physically. A major character.

Beholder King – A powerful ruler of the Beholder race. His main body is a glowing golden eye, he is proficient in spiritual attacks and can manipulate ice.

Beirut – Had children with 'Carolina', three of them named Harry, Hart, and Harvey. The first Godeater Rat.

Bernard Debs – Father of Kalan Debs, current leader of the Debs clan, one of the top three most powerful clans within Fenlai City.

Blackcloud Panther – Blackcloud Panther, the most secretive type of panther-type magical beasts. A magical beast of the ninth rank, it has two transformations available to it and its fur is strong enough to shrug off blows from most ninth-rank human warriors.

Black Dragon – A powerful dragon-type magical beast with wings, over a hundred meters long, covered in black scales, breathes black fire. At least of the ninth-rank in power, and possibly even Saint-level in power.

Blackstripe Panther – A panther-type magical beast of the eighth rank that is covered with straight black lines.

Bloodgem Dragons – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, has wings.

Bloodrupture poison – A powerful and highly expensive poison that can shut down the battle-qi of all warriors beneath the Saint-level.

Bloodshadow Scimitar – A sword-type Divine artifact which can be used by Saint-level experts.

Bloodthirsty Warpig – A fire-element magical beast of the fifth rank, with a single horn above its snout.

Bloodviolet (Godsword) – The name of a flexible sword Linley ends up acquiring.

Bloody-eyed Maned Lion – A Saint-level lion-type behemoth magical beast, 20-30 meters tall. Supposedly only the Golden Behemoths are a match for it amongst 'behemoth' type creatures.

Blue-eyed Thunderhawk – A flying magical beast of the seventh rank.

Blueheart Grass – A magical grass with cold, protective properties. Can be combined with dragon's blood to ameliorate the negative effects of dragon's blood.

Blumer Akerlund – The younger brother of the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier Akerlund. Selected to become an honorary disciple of the War God's College.

Boleyn – The name of the royal clan of Fenlai.

C

Castro – A Saint-level warrior and personal disciple of the War God.

Caylan – A magus of the seventh rank, the son of the O'Brien Empire's Imperial Left Premier, Judd Darryl. Interested in Seventh Princess Nina.

Cayley – A minor clan in the country of Fenlai.

Channe – The imperial capital of the O'Brien Empire. Its name was chosen by the War God himself.

Cena – The son of Wharton.

Cerre – A prefecture-level city in the Northwest Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire, run by the Jacques clan.

Cesar – A six thousand year old peak-stage Saint-level assassin, described as a genius by Doebling Cowart. Helps Linley out more than once. Leads the Saber assassins' guild.

Clay – A Saint-level expert who trains in the Elemental Laws of Earth has a powerful defense (10 times that of Haydson).

Clayde Boleyn – The golden-haired ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai, and a warrior of the ninth rank in his own right. Known as the 'Golden Lion of Fenlai'.

Coiling Dragon Ring – A mysterious ring with many special powers, found by Linley Baruch. It contained for a time the spirit of Doebling Cowart, an earth-style Grand Magus.

D

Dantian (Lower / Central) – The location where either mageforce or battle-qi is gathered in the human body. The 'central dantian' is located in the chest, directly between the nipples and is where mageforce gathers. The dantian (also known as the 'lower dantian') is located right beneath the navel and is where battle-qi gathers.

Dark Alliance – One of the six principal political organizations, located west of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, led by the Cult of Shadows. Opposed by the Holy Union.

Dawson Conglomerate – One of the three largest trading unions in the Yulan continent, with wealth to match an Empire. Even the Holy Union, the Dark Alliance, and the Four Great Empires have to be respectful to the three trading unions. Yale is an important member of this Conglomerate.

d'Bero shadow diamond – A dark violet gemstone desired by magi, worth 100,000 gold coins.

Deland – The Vice Chancellor of the Ernst Institute.

Delia Leon – A fellow student of Linley's at the Ernst Institute. Wind-style magus who has a crush on Linley. A member in the primary line of descent of the Leon clan.

Delsarte – A fellow wind-style student of Linley's at the Ernst Institute, travelled with Linley for a time. Died by ambush on Linley's first training excursion.

Desri – One of the five Prime Saints. Trained in the Laws of Light. The War God says he is on par with Fain. Lives in a hidden village in a giant mountain located roughly a hundred kilometers south of Southmount City, in the southern part of the Anarchic Lands.

Dillon – A Saint-level swordsman who engaged in battle with Rudi in Wushan township. Proved to be inferior to Rudi. Nicknamed the 'Stellar Sword Saint'.

Dimensional Edge – A forbidden Saint-level wind-style attacking spell, supposedly the most powerful 1 vs 1 spell in existence. According to Doehring Cowart, can slice through the walls of reality itself.

Divine Power – The power that a Deity-level expert can draw from an Elemental Sea.

Divine Spark – The crystallized essence of a Deity-level expert's insights into the laws they train in.

Dixie Leon – The foremost genius of the Ernst Institute, exceptional elemental affinity in two different elements, super exceptional spiritual essence (62 times others). A member in the primary line of descent of the Leon clan.

Doehring Cowart – A Saint-level Grand Magus, earth-style, who lived in the Coiling Dragon Ring. Linley's eventual instructor in earth-style magic.

Dragonhawk – A winged, flying dragon-type magical beast of the sixth rank. One of the weakest dragon-type creatures, its wingspan is over 20 meters.

Dunstan clan – The clan of Reynolds, a powerful clan in the O'Brien Empire that has tremendous military control.

Dylin – A very powerful magical beast who looks like a devilish young man who was accidentally released by Linley. Causes the 'Apocalypse Day'. Has three children.

E

Earthguard – A staple earth-style defensive spell, can be used at the fifth rank to cover one's body with stone, at the seventh rank to cover it with jade, eighth rank for crystal jade, ninth rank for platinum, and Saint-level for diamond. According to legend, at the Deity-level, the Earthguard armor is made of adamantium.

Earth Spear Array – An earth-style spell of the fifth rank, a modification of the basic 'earth spear' spell, causes multiple earth spears to appear in an area.

Earth Tremor – A earth-style spell of the first rank, shakes the ground beneath the opponent's feet.

Ecclesiastical Tribunal – The branch of the Radiant Church in charge of killing heretics and warring against other factions. Led by the Praetor, Deputy Arbiters, and Executors.

Electrobolt Panther – A Saint-level panther type magical beast.

Elemental essence – The energy of nature, which magi absorb into their bodies and use to create spells.

Elemental Sea – A boundless plane filled with a massive concentration of divine power that is guided by the Laws and Edicts. One has to be at least a Deity-level expert to absorb energy from an Elemental Sea. The deeper a Deity can sense into the Elemental Sea the more pure their divine power becomes.

Ernst Institute – The number one magus academy of the Yulan continent, located in the Holy Union. Named after Pope Ernst, a famous leader of the Radiant Church/Holy Union.

F

Fain – The eldest disciple of the War God. Nearly five thousand years ago. The War God believes him to be the most likely of his disciples to reach the Deity-level.

Fenlai – The kingdom which Wushan town belongs to. Main kingdom of the Holy Union. The capital of the Kingdom of Fenlai is Fenlai City.

Floating Technique – A wind-style spell of the fifth rank which allows a wind user to float in the air. Not quite as useful as true flight.

Foreman – An earth-style Warrior Saint who serves Desri.

Forest of Darkness – One of the three dangerous places on the Yulan continent.

Forhan – The son of the Grand Elder. Very envious of Linley and the Coiling Dragon Ring.

Four Higher Planes – Refers to four higher planes of existence; the Netherworld, the Infernal Realm, the Celestial Realm, and the Life Realm, respectively.

G

Gebados Prison – The prison dimension where Dylin was trapped before being inadvertently freed by Linley. A hellish place.

George Walsh – One of Linley's three dormmates at the Ernst Institute. A year older than Linley, hails from the Yulan Empire.

Gislason – The Patriarch of the Azure Dragon clan and the son of the Azure Dragon Sovereign.

Glacial Snow Lion – A water (ice) element magical beast of the 8th rank, comes from the north. Lion type creature.

God – As described by Doehring Cowart, beyond the Saint-level lies the realm of the Gods. Above the Saint-level are the Deities, then the Sovereigns, then finally the four Overgods. The 'Radiant Sovereign' of the Radiant Church and the 'Shadow Sovereign' of the Cult of Shadows are Sovereign-class Gods.

Godeater Rat – A Deity-level rat-type magical beast, from whom the Violet-Gold Rat Kings, the Shadowmice, and the Stoneater Rats are descended.

Golden Bank of the Four Empires – The premier bank in the world, set up by the Four Great Empires. Offers magiccrystal cards.

Gold Dragon – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, has wings.

Goldmane Mastiff – A fire-type magical beast of the eighth rank. Generally lives and travels in packs. Has glowing golden eyes and a lion-like mane.

Golden Tattooed Panther – A panther-type magical beast of the seventh rank.

Griffin – A magical beast of the fourth rank, hybrid of a lion and an eagle.

Guillermo – An Arch Magus of the ninth rank, one of the Cardinals of the Radiant Church. One of the most powerful men in the entire Holy Union.

H

Hadley – Friend of Linley.

Haeru – The name of a certain black panther.

Hamelin – A Saint-level Grand Magus who ambushed Doehring Cowart along with another Saint-level combatant.

Hanmu, Kingdom – One of the six kingdoms within the Holy Union.

Haydson – Nicknamed the 'Monolithic Sword Saint', reputed to be the most powerful Saint in the Yulan continent. A warrior who utilizes the Laws of the Earth. His second most powerful attack is known as 'Worldquake', while his most powerful attack is the 'Worldbreaker'.

Hayward – A powerful Saint who is a friend of Desri. Fire-style Grand Magus Saint.

Heaven Collapses, Earth Shatters – A forbidden-level earth-style spell that can cause the earth to roil about, unleashing chasms which will spew countless amounts of magma.

Heavenly Fire Burning the Fields, Earthly Fire Burning the Cities – A forbidden-level fire-style spell which can burn a city to ashes.

Heavenly Lightning of Absolute Destruction – A forbidden-level lightning-style spell which can unleash tens of thousands of thunderbolts.

Heavenly Meteor's Descent – A forbidden-level earth-style spell that can cause countless giant boulders to fall from the sky and reduce a city to rubble.

Heidens – The Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church and the ruler of the Holy Union. Ostensibly the strongest, most important figure in the Holy Union. A Saint-level combatant.

Heishi – Main kingdom of the Dark Alliance.

Hess – The name of both the Kingdom of Hess, as well as Hess City, the capital of the kingdom. A member of the Holy Union.

High Magic – Three types of extremely powerful magic, passed down by the Overgods. They are Oracular Magic, Necromantic Magic, and Life Magic.

Higginson – A powerful Saint who is a friend of Desri.

Hillman – Warrior of the sixth rank, captain of the guards for the Baruch clan.

Hiri – Housekeeper for the Baruch family.

Hodan – The Planar Overseer for the Yulan continent. Only meets with Saint-level experts.

Hogg Baruch – Leader of the Baruch clan, and father to protagonist Linley, and his younger brother Wharton.

Holy Emperor – The traditional title for the leader of the Radiant Church, also the head of state for the Holy Union.

Holy Union – One of the six principal political organizations, located west of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, led by the Radiant Church. Opposed by the Dark Alliance.

Howling Worldwolf – An earth-style spell of the eighth rank that produces an incredibly durable wolf-construct made from earth elemental essence that explodes on death.

Hyde clan – The clan of the Violetflame Warriors, one of the other Four Supreme Warriors. Currently led by Vincente Hyde.

I

Infernal Realm One of the Four Higher Planes of Existence ruled by the Seven Sovereigns of Destruction. Home to the Four Divine Beasts Clan.

Interspatial Rings – Rings with extradimensional storage capacity, capable of storing large numbers of items.

J

Jade Water Paradise – A very high class brothel, located within Fenlai City.

Jacques clan – A major clan within the O'Brien Empire that has run the Northwest Administrative Province for a thousand years.

Jebs Lucas – Marquis and leader of the Lucas clan, an influential, old family within Fenlai City. In possession of an heirloom of the Baruch clan.

Jenne – A beautiful girl and a member of the branch clan of the Jacques clan. Sister to Keane.

Johann – The current reigning Emperor of the O'Brien Empire, the father of Nina.

Judd Darryl – The Imperial Left Premier of the O’Brien Empire, and a childhood friend of the Emperor.

Julin O’Brien – The younger brother of Emperor Johann of the O’Brien Empire. Incompetent and spineless, yet doted on by his brother.

K

Kaiser – A warrior of the ninth rank, one of only two such in the entire Kingdom of Fenlai.

Kalan Debs – A rich noble who initially meets Linley when they were adventuring in the Mountain Ranges of Magical Beasts. A warrior of the fifth rank. Childhood sweetheart of Alice.

Keane – A member of a branch clan of the Jacques clan. Son of the deceased governor of the prefectural city of Cerre.. Younger brother of Jenne.

L

Lachapalle – A Saint-level plant life form known as the Queen Mother. She practices in the Elemental Laws of Water and Wind.

Lampson – A Cardinal of the Radiant Church. He accompanied Cardinal Guillermo to the auction.

Landwurm – A non-flying dragon-type magical beast of the sixth rank. One of the weakest dragon-type monsters. Fire-type.

Lanke – A Saint-level warrior and personal disciple of the War God.

Lehman – A Saint-level warrior, the Commander of the Zealots Division for the Radiant Church. Trains as a light-style warrior. A massive man, 2.5 meters tall, specializes in single-target attacks.

Leon clan – The clan of Dixie and Delia. The third most powerful clan in the Yulan Empire, and one of the most powerful clans in the continent as a whole.

Levels – There are nine standard ranks, then the Saint-level, with each level having 'early', 'mid', 'late' and 'peak' stages. Above the Saint-level is the Deity-level, which consists of three levels: Demigod, God, and Highgod. Above the Deity-level is the Sovereign level, and then the Overgod level. Each level has early, mid, late, and peak stages.

Lina Baruch – The mother of Linley and Wharton, wife to Hogg. Supposedly died in childbirth, but Hogg, Hillman, and Housekeeper Hiri know the truth...

Linley Baruch – Protagonist of this story, the eldest son and heir to the Baruch clan, the clan of the legendary Dragonblood Warriors.

Livingston – A peak-stage Saint who trains in the Elemental Laws of Fire. Serves Desri.

Lomu – A magus who serves Reynolds and his family. Has taught Reynolds magic.

Longhaus – A wind-style Saint-level Grand Magus who teaches Delia later in the story. Pampers her.

Lorry – Guardsman for the Baruch clan, under Sherman.

M

Magus – Term used to describe any individual who can use magic. A magus of the seventh rank is titled Senior Magus, a magus of the eighth rank is titled Master Magus, a magus of the ninth rank is titled Arch

Magus, and a magus at the Saint-level is titled Grand Magus.

Mageforce – Purified, distilled elemental essence which mages absorb into their body, which is then used to direct natural elemental essence to produce spells, under the guidance of spiritual energy.

Marcus – The Commander of one of the Eight Ace Regiments of Knights guarding the Holy Union. A warrior of the ninth rank.

McKenzie Jacques – A Saint-level clan leader of the Jacques clan.

Merritt – The Right Premier of the Kingdom of Fenlai, and a powerful warrior. A lecherous man with many wives.

Miller – A peak-stage Saint who trains in the Elemental Laws of the Wind, especially in the ‘Slow’ aspect. Serves Desri.

Monica – A female light-style magus who is the daughter of Desri. Reynolds is interested in her.

Monroe Dawson – The father of Yale, and the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate. A tall and immensely fat man, weighing 300-400 pounds.

Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – A mountain range filled with (duh) magical beasts! The largest mountain range on the Yulan continent. One of three dangerous places on the Yulan continent, it bisects the continent, north to south.

Mountain Range of the Setting Sun – The second largest mountain range on the Yulan continent. One of the three dangerous places in the Yulan continent.

Muhan Kingdom – A kingdom in the great plains to the far east.

N

Nader – The oldest son of Hillman. Not a very talented warrior, but extremely careful and conscientious.

Necropolis of the Gods – A name by which the plane of the Yulan continent is known in the Higher Planes. Also a secret location in the Yulan continent, which only Saints are informed about.

Neil City – A border city between the O'Brien Empire and the Rohault Empire which often sees warfare.

Nimitz – The Second Grand-Uncle of Kalan, one of the seniormost figures of the Debs clan.

Nina – The Seventh Princess of the O'Brien Empire. Doted on by her father, the Emperor. Currently in a relationship with Wharton, but has many pursuers.

O

O'Brien Academy – The number one martial academy for warriors, located in the O'Brien Empire, the most militarily powerful empire in the Yulan continent.

O'Brien Empire – One of the six principal political organizations, located east of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Northern empire.

O'Casey – The Senior Judge for the Tribunals of the Cult of Shadows. Essentially the counterpart of Praetor Osenno.

Odin Jacques – The current leader of the Jacques clan.

Olivier Akerlund – A Saint-level combatant in the O'Brien Empire, renowned as the Prodigy Sword Saint. Defeated the Stellar Sword Saint Dillon shortly after reaching the Saint-level (at a very young age).

Osenno – A (presumably) Saint-level combatant belonging to the Radiant Church, leads the Ecclesiastical Tribunal as its Praetor. Considered one of the two pillars of the Radiant Church, along with the Holy Emperor.

P

Patterson Boleyn – A Duke of the Kingdom of Fenlai, and brother to King Clayde of Fenlai. Involved with some backstory with Linley's father and mother. Warrior of the seventh rank.

Pearl of Life – A Divine artifact which contains enormous amounts of life energy, a Saint-level expert who uses this artifact will regenerate from any physical wounds but will still die if their body is completely destroyed.

Pegasi – A type of winged flying horse. Normal Winged Pegasi are of the sixth rank, while Thunderwing Pegasi are magical beasts of the seventh rank.

Pennslyn – The wife of Desri, and a Saint in her own right. Mother of Monica, looks identical to her.

Philip – A member of a noble clan situated near Wushan town. In sounder financial straits, he often purchases ancestral heirlooms that the Baruch family is forced to sell.

Phoenix Metamorphosis – A forbidden-level fire-style magic spell that will create an extremely powerful Fire Phoenix. Only weaker to the Dimensional Edge spell in power.

Plaket – A Tyrant Wyrms that had to serve Linley for 100 years.

Pouant Empire – An empire that was destroyed nearly five thousand years ago. Doehring Cowart hailed from this empire.

Prismatic Dragons – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, also known as Rainbow Dragons, has wings.

Proulx – A grandmaster stone sculptor, acclaimed throughout the ages.

Pulsating Guard – A forbidden-level earth-style defensive spell that protects a wide area from spells, even some other forbidden-level spells.

Pulseguard Defense – A type of personal defense which Linley developed, with principles similar to the Pulsating Guard spell.

Q

R

Radiant Church – A primary religion in the Yulan continent, headquartered in the Holy Union. Light-style focused.

Radiant Temple – The HQ of the Radiant Church, located in West Fenlai City. A huge building over a hundred meters high.

Rand – A fellow 1st grade student when Linley first entered the Ernst Institute. Won the yearly tournament for 1st grade students, then was thrashed by Linley.

Ranks – There are nine standard ranks, then the Saint-level, then the 'Deity/Divine' level, then the Sovereign level, then the Overgod level. Each level has early, mid, late, and peak stages.

Reynolds Dunstan – One of Linley's three dormmates at the Ernst Institute. One year younger than Linley. Hails from the O'Brien Empire's Dunstan clan.

Rhine Empire – One of the six principal political organizations, located east of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Southeastern empire.

Rohault Empire – One of the six principal political organizations, located east of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Eastern empire.

Roger – Guardsman for the Baruch clan, under Sherman.

Rosarie – The Holy Lady of the Frost Goddess Shrine, a Prime Saint. The older sister of Pennslyn, and romantically linked to Cesar.

Rowling – An adorable, golden-haired girl who became engaged to Kalan as his principal wife.

Rudi – A Saint-level earth-element magus who engaged in battle with Dillon in Wushan township. Has a Black Dragon as servant. Proved stronger than Dillon.

S

Sacred Isle – Formerly a hidden base of the Radiant Church, it comes the new headquarters after certain events later in the story. Located off the coast of the Yulan continent.

Saint – 聖, a level which exceeds the normal nine ranks of warriors/mages

Sartius – An Armored Razorback Wyrn, a dragon-type creature of the ninth rank, with incredible defensive abilities, speed, and sharp claws. Part of Linley's transformation.

Sasha – The name of Linley's daughter. Twin to Taylor.

Savage Worldbear – A Saint-level bear-type magical beast.

Scorching Meteor Shower – A fire-style magic spell of the ninth rank that creates many house-sized chunks of flaming meteors.

Shadowmouse – One of two types of rat-type magical beasts, the other being Stoneater Rats. Shadowmice are extremely fast and can range in ranks from 3-8. At rank 5, their fur turns blue, while at rank 7, their fur turns violet. Omnivorous, have sharp teeth, particularly feared for attacking in waves.

Shattered Rocks – A scaling earth style attack spell that has different names and levels of power. Used as a way to 'test' one's strength.

Six-Eyed Golden Ni-Lion – Saint-level magical beasts that are the progeny of the 'Suanni Lion', a Deity-level magical beast also known as the 'Heaven Devouring Beast'.

Slaughterer – The name of the ancestral warblade of the Dragonblooded Warrior clan. Sold off many years ago.

Soaring Technique – A wind-style spell of the seventh rank that allows the caster to truly fly in the air.

Spiritual energy – Mental energy used to shape mageforce and elemental essence into magical spells. A magus needs to have at least 5 times more spiritual energy than an average person.

Stehle – A peak-stage Saint-level combatant belonging to the Radiant Church. While nominally only a 'Special Executor', in reality, he is on the same level of power as Osenno, the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.

Stegowurm – A ninth-rank dragon-type magical beast, no wings. Appearances to be based on the real-life stegosaurus.

Stoneater Rat – One of two types of rat-type magical beasts, the other being Shadowmice. Stoneater Rats are extremely tough and can range in ranks from 1-8. At rank 4, their fur turns silver, while at rank 7, their fur turns gold. Omnivorous, have sharp teeth, even sharper than Shadowmice, particularly feared for attacking in waves.

Suanni Lion – A Deity-level beast that is capable of holding an enormous amount of material. Also known as the 'Heaven Devouring Beast'.

Supergravity Field – A scaling earth-magic spell that can only be used by magi of at least the fifth rank. It allows an earth-style magus to strengthen the gravity field in a localized area to negatively impact his opponents.

Supersonic – A scaling wind-magic spell that can dramatically increase one's speed.

Taylor – The name of Linley’s son. Twin to Sasha.

Thorium Devil – A metallic-life form made out of the rare metal Thorium, an extremely precious and highly elastic metal that can bond with a variety of materials. Has the ability to bind to different elements in order to increase its power and can shape shift into almost any form. Has very strong resistance against earth, wind, water, fire, dark, and light attacks.

Thunder Lizard – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, no wings. Appears to be based on the real life Brontosaurus.

Thunderwinged White Tiger – A Saint-level winged tiger-type magical beast.

Trey – Linley’s first instructor in wind magic, a sixth year student at the Ernst Institute.

Triceratops Wurm – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, no wings. Has three horns, appears to be based on the real life Triceratops.

Tulily – Nicknamed the ‘War Saint’, one of the Five Prime Saints. Located in the great plains of the far east.

Tyrant Wurm – A Saint-level dragon-type magical beast, no wings. Appears to be based on the real-life Tyrannosaurus Rex.

U

Unicorn Boar – A wild pig type magical beast of the third rank, with a single horn in the middle of it’s head. An earth-element creature.

V

Vampiric Iron Bull – A large bull-type creature with blood red eyes, a magical beast of the fifth rank.

Velocidragon – 迅猛龙, aka 'velociraptor', an enormous, dragon-type, 20-30 meter long, two-story building tall magical beast of the seventh rank. Fire type.

Vincente – Leader of the Hyde clan, the clan of the Violetflame Warriors. Himself a Violetflame Warrior, has two sons. A master blacksmith.

Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape – A huge Saint-level ape-type magical beast, with giant purple eyes, 20-30 meters tall.

Violet-Gold Rat King – The rulers of the rat race. Bebe meets three of them in the Forest of Darkness, named Harry, Hart, and Harvey. Apparently, when Stoneater Rats advance from the seventh level, their gold fur becomes increasingly tinged with violet while Shadowmice's violet fur begins to increasingly tinged with gold.

Void Extermination – A wind-style attack spell of the ninth rank.

W

Walsh clan – An ancient, powerful clan in the Yulan Empire, on about the same level as the Leon clan of Delia and Dixie. The clan of George.

Wendi – Linley's first grade instructor in earth magic. Praised by Doehring Cowart as having solid fundamentals, but still of course inferior to Doehring Cowart.

Wharton – Younger brother of main protagonist Linley, a member of the Baruch clan.

Wildthunder Stormhawk – A wind-element hawk-type magical beast of the ninth rank, with a wingspan of many meters wide. One named Parry is a magical beast companion for Longhaus.

Windhowl – A wind-style attack spell of the fifth rank.

Windscout – A wind-style scouting spell.

Windshadow – A wind-style spell of the ninth rank that combines the best parts of the Airwings spell and the Supersonic spell.

Worldbear – A Saint-level bear-type magical beast. One named 'Hatton' was tamed by wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Longhaus.

World Protector – A forbidden tenth-rank spell of the earth element type. The strongest offensive earth element spell.

Wushan – Mt. Wu, where the protagonist lives.

X

Y

Yale Dawson – One of Linley's three dormmates at the Ernst Institute. Extremely wealthy, also hails from the Holy Union. One year older than Linley, and the oldest of the four bros. Belongs to the Dawson clan.

Yulan continent – The name of the continent where the early parts of the story takes place.

Yulan Empire – One of the six principal political organizations, located east of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Central empire.

Z

Zassler – An 800-year old Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank.

Book 1, Chapter 1 – Early Morning at a Township

The town of Wushan. An ordinary little town located within the Kingdom of Fenlai, west of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the largest mountain range within the Yulan continent.

As the morning sun rose, in the town of Wushan, there remained a slight hint of the cold, pure pre-dawn air. However, virtually all of the citizens of this small town had already come out to begin working. Even the six or seven year old children had already gotten out of bed and were preparing to begin their traditional morning exercises.

On an empty area in the eastern region of Wushan town, the warmth of the rays of the morning sun passed through the surrounding trees, leaving behind scattered spots of light on the empty ground.

A large group of children could be seen there, approximately one or two hundred in number. These children were separated into three groups, each group divided into several lines. All the children stood there silently, their faces solemn. The northernmost group of children were approximately six years old. The group in the middle, approximately nine to twelve years old. The ones in the south, the thirteen to sixteen year olds.

In front of this large group of children, there were three sturdily-built middle-aged men. All three of them wore short-sleeved shirts and roughly cut trousers.

"If you want to be a powerful warrior, then you must work hard from youth." The leader of the middle-aged men, head raised high, hands clasped behind his back, said to them coldly. He swept his cold, fierce gaze across the northernmost group of children. All of those six and seven year olds tightened their lips. Gazing at this man with their big, round eyes, none of them dared to make a sound.

The leader's name was Hillman (Xi'er'man). He was the captain of the guard for the Baruch (Ba'lu'ke) clan, the noble clan which owned Wushan town.

"All of you are commoners. Unlike those noble families, you won't have access to any secret manuals teaching you how to cultivate battle qi [dou qi]. If you want to become someone of worth, if you wish to be respected, then all of you must use the most ancient, most simple, and most basic ways of improving yourselves – through exercising your bodies, and building up your strength! Am I clear?!"

Hillman swept the group of children with his gaze.

"Understood." The voices of the children replied brightly in unison.

"Good." Satisfied, Hillman coldly nodded. The eyes of the six year old children displayed their confusion, while the eyes of the teenagers became very determined. They understood the meaning behind Hillman's words.

Virtually every male in the Yulan continent would exercise very hard from a very young age. If anyone slacked off, in the future, they would be looked down upon by others! Money and power – these were the things that determined a man's status! A man without power would be looked down upon even by women.

If one wanted their parents to be proud of them, wanted women to worship them, wanted to live a glorious life?

Then they must become powerful warriors!

All of them were commoners. None of them would have access to any of those precious manuals which taught the arts of cultivating battle qi. Their only road to glory was through exercising from a young age, and gathering strength! Bitterly hard work! They would work harder than those nobles, spend more of their energy and blood in strengthening themselves!

“When the sun rises in the morning, all things begin to thrive. This is the best time to absorb the natural energy from your surroundings and improve the conditioning of our bodies. Same rules as always – Legs spread apart, as wide as your shoulders! Both knees bent slightly, both hands pressed down at the waist. Assume the ‘Qi Building Stance’. When assuming this stance, remember – ‘Focus your concentration, maintain a calm mind, and breath naturally.’” Hillman coldly instructed.

The ‘Qi Building Stance’ was the most simple, yet most effective way of exercising one’s body. This was based off of the experiences of generations of forefathers.

Immediately the nearly two hundred children assumed the ‘Qi Building Stance’ position.

“Remember, focus your concentration, maintain a calm mind, and breath naturally!” Hillman said coldly as he walked amidst the children.

At a glance, he could tell that the teenagers in the southern group all were maintaining the stance calmly and breathed naturally. At the same time, all of them attained the goals of being stable and steady in their stance. Clearly, they had attained some degree of proficiency in the 'Qi Building Stance.'

But glancing at the northernmost group of children, with their waists and knees crooked at odd degrees, their legs relaxed and loose, it was clear to Hillman that they were standing unstably and without any power.

Hillman said to the two other middle aged men, "The two of you, take charge of the south group and the middle group. I will go take care of the youngest children."

"Yes, Captain." The two middle aged men immediately obeyed, paying close attention to those two groups. Every so often, they would kick the legs of those teenagers, checking to see who was standing firmly and who was not.

Hillman walked towards the northern group of children. Those children immediately became nervous.

"Crap, the Head Monster is coming!" A golden-haired child with large, bright eyes named Hadley (Ha'de'li) said in a low voice.

Hillman strode into the midst of the children. Staring at them, his face was cold, but in his heart, he was sighing. "These kids are just too young. They are just too lacking in both wisdom and strength. I can't demand too much from them. However, it's still good to get them exercising from a young age. If they work hard from a young age, in the future, when they are on the battlefield, they will have a higher chance of survival."

And to teach young children...getting them interested was the most effective way! If he forced them too hard, it would have the opposite effect!

"All of you, stand firm!" Hillman coldly harrumphed.

Immediately, all of the children straightened, sticking out their chests and staring straight ahead.

A hint of a smile played at Hillman's lips. He then moved to the front and took off his shirt. The lines running across the powerful muscles on his body made the eyes pop out of all of the kids. Even the children in the middle group and southern group couldn't help but stare at him, admiring his physique.

Aside from his perfect musculature, on Hillman's bare upper body, there were countless knife scars, sword scars, and dozens of other old wounds. All of the children stared at those wounds, their eyes shining.

Knife scars. Sword scars. These were a man's medals!

In their hearts, they were filled with veneration towards Hillman. Hillman, a mighty warrior of the sixth rank, a warrior birthed from life and death struggles! Even in large cities, he would be an amazing individual. In the tiny town of Wushan, he was a man who every single person venerated.

Seeing the ardent gazes of the children, Hillman couldn't help but let a slight smile escape. He wanted to stir up a feeling of worshipfulness in the children, a desire to be like him. That way, they would work harder and be more motivated!

"Let's add some more fuel to the fire!" Hillman secretly grinned, then walked in front of a giant boulder, which weighed three or four hundred pounds.

With one hand, Hillman grabbed the boulder. In a very relaxed manner, he began brandishing it about. That three hundred pound boulder, in Hillman's hands, seemed to be as light as wood. All of those children's jaws dropped, and their eyes widened.

"Too light! Lorry (Luóruì), if you have some free time after training, go and get some larger boulders for me." With a casual toss, Hillman sent the boulder flying several dozen meters. Crash! It smote the ground next to a large tree, and the entire ground trembled. Hillman casually walked in front of some random stones.

"Hah!"

Hillman breathed deeply. All of the veins on his muscular body popped out prominently, as Hillman directly struck at a nearby bluish boulder. His fist shattered the air, creating a howling sound that made all of the watching children widen their eyes even further. Hillman's mighty fist smashed directly onto the boulder.

Crash! The sound of the fist smashing into the boulder made the hearts of all the children tremble.

That was an extremely hard bluestone boulder!

The bluestone boulder trembled. Suddenly, six or seven giant cracks appeared on it, as with a 'peng' sound, it split into four or five pieces. But on Hillman's fist, not the slightest injury could be seen.

"The Captain is as formidable as ever." Lorry, one of the two other middle-aged men, laughed, as Hillman walked back towards them.

The other man, Roger (Luo'jie), also walked over. Usually, when the children practiced the 'Qi Building Stance', it was time for the three of them to relax and freely chat, while paying attention to any child who decided to slack off.

Hillman laughed as he shook his head. "No way. In the past, when I was in the army, every day I would train like crazy, while on the battlefield, I engage in bloody close combat. Nowadays, all I'm doing is relaxing and stretching my muscles a bit in the morning. I'm not filled with as much energy as in the past."

All of the children stared worshipfully at Hillman.

That huge bluestone boulder was shattered by a single blow from his fist. What sort of power was this? And that three or four hundred pound boulder was so easily tossed with a flick of the arm. What sort of power was this?

Hillman turned his head. Staring at the children, he was very satisfied with the children's reactions.

"Remember, even if you aren't able to cultivate battle qi, in principle, if you reach your body's fullest potential, you can still become a warrior of the sixth rank! And a sixth ranked warrior, upon entering the army, can easily become a mid-level officer, and easily obtain the military manuals which teach one how to cultivate battle qi! Even if you cannot become a warrior of the sixth rank, and can only become a common warrior of the first rank, you will still be qualified to enter the military. Remember! If a man isn't able to become even a warrior of the first rank, that man can't be considered a man at all!"

"If you are a man, then you must raise your chest high, welcome any and all challenges, and fear nothing!"

Upon hearing these words, smiles appeared on the faces of all the six and seven year olds. All of them forced themselves to remain expressionless. These words were Hillman's often-repeated mantra, and he repeated these words endlessly to the children.

"All of you, stand straight. Look at your elders to the south, then look at how you are standing!" Hillman censured them.

All of the six year olds immediately tried to adjust their stance to be more stable.

After a while, the six and seven year olds began to wobble. All of the kids felt that their legs were cramping fiercely, but they gritted their teeth. But after holding out for a short period of time, the children began to collapse and sit on the ground, one after the other.

Hillman's face was cold and callous, but in his heart, he secretly nodded. He was still very satisfied with the performance of these six and seven year olds.

After a short period of time, some of the ten year olds in the middle group also could no longer hold out, and one by one, they began to fall as well.

"Hold out for as long as you can. I won't force you. But if in the future, you are weaker than your peers, then you'll have no one to blame than yourselves." Hillman coldly said.

"Hmm?" Lorry suddenly stared, astonished, at the northern group.

At this point in time, many of the kids in the middle group had fallen down, but in the northern group, a six year old child had held strong.

"This must be Linley's [Lin'lei] first day at training. Who would've thought he'd be so formidable?" Lorry said, amazed. Next time him, Roger and Hillman also noticed. Looking in that direction, they saw that to the north, a single brown haired boy was still holding firm. His lips tightened, the boy stared determinedly in front, both fists tightly clenched so hard that his fists were white.

A look of pleased surprise appeared in Hillman's eyes.

"Good kid!" Hillman secretly praised. Despite being just six years old, he could maintain the 'Qi Building Stance' for as long as the ten year old kids.

Linley, full name Linley Baruch, was the eldest son and heir to the Baruch clan, which ruled over the Wushan town. The Baruch clan was an extremely old clan. Once, it was extremely prosperous, but after thousands of years, it had only three members remaining. The clan leader, Hogg [Huó'ge] Baruch, and his two sons. The elder son was Linley Baruch, six years old. The younger son, Wharton [Wó'dun] Baruch, was just two years old. As for his wife, when she gave birth to the younger son, she died in the midst of childbirth. Linley's grandfather also was dead, having lost his life in battle.

Linley's legs were trembling. Although his willpower was strong, his leg muscles were strained to their utmost and were beginning to tremble uncontrollably. He finally collapsed and sat down.

"Linley, how do you feel?" Smiling, Hillman walked towards him.

Linley cracked a smile, revealing his small canines. "I'm fine, Uncle Hillman." As captain of the Baruch clan's guardsmen, Hillman had watched Linley grow up. Naturally, the two of them were very close.

"Well done. You acted like a man." Hillman patted Linley on the head. Immediately, the hair on Linley's head became tousled like windblown grass.

"Haha." Linley grinned widely. In his heart, he felt very happy at being praised by Hillman.

After resting for a while, they continued their exercises. The training regime for the six and seven year olds was a lot more relaxed. But for the teenagers, the training regime was terrifyingly strict.

The large group of children, including the six and seven year olds, were lying down with their heads and their feet each on top of a flat rock, relying solely on the strength in their waists to keep straight.

"The waist and the thighs form a triangular region." Hillman gestured with his hands to show the area he was describing. "This area is a person's nucleus. Speed and power all come from this triangular nucleus, making this region extremely important."

As Hillman spoke, he continued to walk about, carefully inspecting the youths to see if their movements were correct.

"Tighten that up! Your waists need to be straight!" Hillman thundered.

Immediately, the waists of many youths straightened. This was Linley's first day of training. His tiny head and his feet were both flat on the rocks, but by this point in time, Linley could already feel his waist growing tight and hot.

"Hold, gotta hold. I'm the best!" Linley kept encouraging himself. Linley's body had always been very strong, even as a baby. He had virtually never gotten sick. Given that he also worked very hard, for him to excel was nothing special.

"Thud!" The first child fell down.

However, the stones they were using as a pillow and footrest were only twenty centimeters high, so although the child fell down, it didn't hurt much. (In the Yulan continent, the goldsmiths used standardized lengths of 1 meter = 10 decimeters = 100 centimeters = 1000 millimeters.)

"Thud!" "Thud!" As time went on, more and more children could no longer hold out.

Linley gritted his teeth. He could clearly feel that the tightness in his waist had already reached the limits of his endurance, to the point where it was almost going numb. "My body feels so heavy. I'm almost unable to control it. Hold, gotta hold for just a bit more." By this point in time, of the six to eight year olds, only Linley remained.

Staring at Linley, Hillman couldn't help but be filled with surprise and joy.

"Lorry." Hillman suddenly shouted.

"Captain." Lorry immediately straightened, awaiting his orders.

Hillman commanded, "Tomorrow, prepare some special dyes. When they are practicing their waist strength, put a branch under all of their waists, and dye the branches. If any of them slack off and let their waists touch the branch, their body will be dyed as well. Their training regime will double in difficulty."

"Yes, Captain." Lorry acknowledged the order. He couldn't help but let his lips tug up in a smile. He secretly laughed, "The Captain is always filled with so many devilish ideas. Those punks are really gonna get it now."

Wasn't that just so?

Looks of pain appeared on the faces of all the ten year olds. Normally, they could still make slight adjustments and slack off. But with Hillman's idea, they would have no chance to do so.

Hillman continued coldly, "Let me tell you all, when a warrior practices his battle qi, the battle qi is stored in a fist-sized location directly beneath the navel. You should understand that this is part of the triangle I was talking about. I expect you all now should understand the importance of strengthening the triangle region! This is your core. If it fails, then your body fails, no matter how strong the other parts of it might be."

A good instructor is of paramount importance to the children.

And Hillman really was a formidable warrior. He knew the important parts of training, and also knew how to increase the difficulty one step at a time. He knew what sort of tools to use with what ages. If it was too hard, it could make a child's body collapse.

"Battle qi?"

Upon hearing these words, all of the youths, including the youngest children resting off to the side, stared at Hillman with wide eyes.

All of the commoners were extremely eager to learn battle qi. Even Linley, this scion of a noble house, was extremely eager.

“Thud!”

Linley could finally hold out no longer, but he still used his arms to prop himself on the ground as he slowly rolled off.

“That feels good!” Linley could feel that his waist felt a numbness which pierced through to the bone, so comfortable that his eyes crinkled slightly.

“How long was I able to hold out?” Linley opened his eyes wide, looking around him.

All of the six year olds had collapsed. Even half the ten year olds had collapsed as well. All of the fourteen year olds, however, held on. Hillman’s face remained as cold as ever.

“All of you must remember. Your body is like a vessel, like a wineglass. Battle qi is like the wine! The amount of wine a vessel can hold is dependent on the size of the vessel. Same goes for the body; a person’s ability to practice battle qi is based on the extent of his training. If his body is too weak, even if he gains access to powerful battle qi manuals, his body won’t be able to hold much battle qi, and he still won’t become a powerful warrior.” Hillman imparted many important bits of advice to the children.

Many warriors, due to not having received proper guidance in their youth, only understood the connection between battle qi and body strength much later in life. But by that age, there wouldn't be much progress when they trained.

Many forefathers had gone on many wrong paths and gained much experience. Hillman continued to impart these experiences, like the spring wind imparting life-giving rain, deeply etching these important experiences in the minds of these children. Hillman didn't want these children to go on wrong paths as well.

After practicing the 'Qi Building Stance', the waist, back, thighs, shoulders, and other parts of the body would be harmonized. Now, almost all of the children were sitting, relaxed, on the ground. Hillman's training program was nearly perfect in the difficulty levels he assessed on each age group.

"Today's training ends now," Hillman announced.

Wushan town's training regimes were regulated. Every day, it happened twice, once at dawn, and once at dusk.

"Uncle Hillman, tell us some stories!" As training ended, the children immediately began to call out. Every day, after the dawn lessons, Hillman would tell them stories of his army days, or some events which had happened on the continent.

The children, all of whom had lived in the town their entire lives, thirsted for stories about the military.

Hillman smiled. He enjoyed telling stories to the children. This was a way to make the kids eager to train. Hillman had always felt that only by making the children voluntarily train would the children have great results.

"Today, I will tell you about the legendary Four Supreme Warrior bloodlines which everyone in the continent knows about." A look of awe appeared on Hillman's face.

The children's ears immediately perked up, and their eyes brightened. Linley, sitting on the ground, felt his heart thump furiously. "The legendary Four Supreme Warriors?" Linley's ears couldn't help but perk up as well, as he stared unblinkingly at Hillman.

In Hillman's eyes appeared a hint of excitement. His voice, however, remained calm. "On our continent, thousands of years ago, there appeared four powerful Supreme Warriors. All four of these Supreme Warriors possessed power comparable to an enormous dragon. They could wander amidst an army of millions at leisure, and easily take the head of any general! These Supreme Warriors were known as the Dragonblood Warrior, the Violetflame Warrior, the Tigerstriped Warrior, and the Undying Warrior!"

"Warriors are divided into nine ranks. I, a mere warrior of the sixth rank, can easily shatter boulders and kick down a large tree! But a ninth rank warrior, even within our country of Fenlai, would be considered a top level expert. But above the ninth rank warriors are the Four Supreme Warriors. They have surpassed the ninth rank warriors and can be considered the pinnacle of warriors. They belong to the level of legendary Saint-level warriors!" Hillman's eyes were filled with excitement. "The legendary Saint-level warriors can melt giant icebergs, make the boundless sea roar with angry waves, make tall mountains crumble, make cities with millions of people collapse, and make meteors fall from the sky! They are absolutely undefeatable, the highest possible power."

Silence. All of the children were stunned.

Hillman pointed at a mountain to the northeast.

"Look at Wushan. Isn't it huge?" Hillman smiled.

After hearing Hillman's words, many of the kids had been scared silly. They all immediately nodded. Wushan was over a thousand meters high, and thousands of meters in circumference. In the eyes of men, it would definitely be considered a huge mountain.

"But Saint-level combatants can destroy Wushan in the blink of an eye." Hillman said firmly.

A sixth-ranked warrior can only smash a boulder. But a Saint-level warrior can smash an entire mountain! All of the children's mouths dropped, and their eyes widened. All of them were shocked, and their hearts were suddenly filled with an unspeakable dread towards these Saint-level combatants. But, their hearts were also filled with longing.

"Destroy a mountain?" Hillman's words had a huge impact on Linley.

After a short period of time, the stunned children returned to their homes. Hillman, Roger, and Lorry were the last to leave. Watching the children depart in clusters of three or five, a smile appeared on Hillman's face.

"These children are the hope and future of Wushan," Hillman said with a smile.

Roger and Lorry also gazed at the group of children. On the continent, virtually all of the children of commoner's had to train hard from an early age. Seeing the kids, Roger and Lorry reminisced back to their own youth.

"Captain Hillman, you are definitely much more formidable than ole Potter of bygone years. Under your guidance, I believe that Wushan town will become the strongest town in our region, surpassing the other ten or so towns," Lorry said with a smile.

The strength of a teacher determined a place's future.

"Oh, Captain, how do you know about the power of Saint-level warriors, or the Four Supreme Warriors?" Lorry suddenly remembered to ask.

Slightly embarrassed, Hillman grinned, "Well, um, actually, I'm not too clear about exactly how powerful the Four Supreme Warriors are. After all, they are the stuff of legends. It's been years since any were seen."

Lorry and Roger were astonished. "You don't have any idea, and yet you lied to the kids?"

Hillman smiled slightly. "Although I'm not clear about the exact strength of the Four Supreme Warriors, I know this – a Saint-level mage maestro, which is to say a mage which has attained the Saint-level, can execute forbidden magical techniques and eradicate an entire army of tens of thousands, or an entire city. Since Saint-level mages are so powerful, I expect that Saint-level warriors can't be that much weaker."

"More importantly, the reason I told the children these stories was to make them work harder. Couldn't you tell how amazed those children were after hearing the stories?" Hillman smiled delightedly.

Lorry and Roger were both speechless.

.....

"See ya later, 'Ley!"

"See ya, Hadley!"

Bidding farewell to his good friend Hadley, Linley went back, alone, to his home. After walking for a while, he saw the Baruch estates.

The amount of land the Baruch manor was built upon was actually quite large. Moss was growing on the walls, and all sorts of ivy creepers twined up the walls as well. The scars of time were very apparent on the walls. The Baruch manor located in Wushan town was the ancestral home of the Baruch clan. An ancestral home which had existed for over five thousand years and endured countless renovations continued to stand here.

But, with the decline in the clan's fortunes, the Baruch clan's finances had taken a turn for the worse as well. Towards the end, it could only consume its previous gains. Over a hundred years ago, the then-leader of the Baruch clan determined that all the members of the clan would live in the front courtyard, which took up a third of the space of the manor. The rest of the manor would no longer be maintained. That way, a great deal of money could be saved.

But despite these measures, by this period in time, Linley's father, Hogg Baruch, still needed to sell off family possessions in order to keep the family afloat.

The towering doors to the manor were open.

"Saint-level warriors?" While walking, Linley was still thinking about that. "In the future, will I be able to become a Saint-level warrior?"

"Linley." Hillman's voice sounded from behind him. Hillman, Roger, and Lorry had finally caught up to him.

Linley turned around and immediately said happily, "Uncle Hillman!"

Following this, Linley sucked in a deep breath. Raising his head to look at Hillman, his voice filled with eagerness, he said, "Uncle Hillman, are Saint-level warriors really that powerful? Then what about me? Is it possible that I will become a Saint-level warrior?" In Linley's heart, there was a desire which all children possess.

Hillman was stunned. Besides him, Roger and Lorry were also speechless.

A Saint-level warrior?

“This kid really has the daring to dream big. The country of Fenlai has millions of citizens, but even so, after countless centuries, it hasn’t produced a single Saint-level warrior. To want to become a Saint-level warrior...” In Hillman’s mind, he fully understood how difficult it was to become a Saint-level warrior.

It required someone to work extremely hard from a young age, the support of a noble clan, and also a high amount of natural talent. It also required luck. How could it be easy to become a Saint-level warrior?

Hillman knew quite well how much he himself had to suffer in order to become a sixth-ranked warrior, and how many life-and-death battles he had to experience. Even a warrior of the sixth rank was very difficult to become. A seventh, eighth, and ninth ranked warrior was of course only harder. As for a Saint-level warrior? Even in his dreams, Hillman didn’t dare imagine himself as one.

But he was facing Linley’s earnest gaze.

“Linley, Uncle Hillman has faith in you. I’m sure you’ll become a Saint-level warrior.” Staring at Linley, Hillman spoke firmly. These words of encouragement caused Linley’s eyes to shine. In Linley’s heart, as well, a desire arose.

A desire which had never been so ardent!

“Uncle Hillman, from tomorrow onwards, can I participate in the training sessions with the ten year olds?” Linley suddenly asked.

Hillman, Roger, and Lorry all stared at Linley in surprise.

"My lord father always told me, if you want to become a man without peer, then you must work harder than other men." Linley unconsciously mimicked his father's manner of speech.

Hillman suddenly smiled. He had seen the results of Linley's training today. Although Linley was only six, his body conditioning could compare with nine year olds. He immediately nodded, smiling. "Fine. However, you'd best not slack off. You'd best realize that this isn't a one day or two day commitment. This will be a long-term regime."

Linley raised his small head proudly. Self-confidently, he smiled. "Uncle Hillman, you just wait and see."

This was a very normal morning for Wushan town. Afterwards, every morning was the same as this one. The group of Wushan youths would follow Hillman, warrior of the sixth rank, and train hard under his guidance. The only difference was, the six year old Linley was placed in the central squad of ten year olds.

Book 1, Chapter 2 – The Dragonblood Warrior Clan (part one)

In the blink of an eye, another half year had passed. Training hard and strengthening his body, Linley passed through the gentle, warm spring, the blazing summer, and the chilly autumn. The white poplar tree next to the empty training field of Wushan would always scatter some dried leaves onto the ground whenever the wind blew. The leaves slowly whirled down, covering the entire training ground.

The sky had slowly grown dark.

Today, there was an exceptionally large number of people on the training grounds, nearly three hundred.

“Today’s evening training session ends now.” Hillman smiled. “Before leaving, however, everyone needs to first congratulate this next crop of children who are about to leave Wushan and join the army.”

With autumn’s end came the season of military recruitment. With the entire continent engaged in an age of warfare, every youngster viewed becoming a mighty warrior as a badge of honor. Naturally, there were also those who wished to become mages, but becoming a mage is an extremely difficult task. Perhaps only one person in ten thousand had the necessary qualifications to become a mage. With such a low probability, the average person wouldn’t even consider it.

Becoming a warrior was much easier. Upon turning sixteen, as long as they were at least warriors of the first rank, they could easily enter the army.

"Uncle Hillman, thank you!"

A hundred and twenty six children, all age seventeen, respectfully bowed towards Hillman. These youngsters normally did not attend training. They had all become adults, and had their own jobs to do. But since they had all been trained by Hillman since they were toddlers, they all considered Hillman to have been their benevolent master.

Before joining the army, they all came here to say farewell to Hillman.

Staring at this group of energetic, eager seventeen year olds, Hillman was filled with countless mixed feelings. This was because Hillman knew that all of these children were eager to join the army, but after ten years of military service, how many of them would come back alive?

"I hope at least half of these hundred and twenty six will be able to return alive," Hillman prayed silently.

Hillman stared at the children, and said in a clear voice, "Brats, listen up! You are all men of Wushan town. The men of Wushan town must straighten their chests and welcome any challenges, and accept no fear. Am I understood?"

All of those seventeen year old youths straightened their chest, their bodies ramrod straight. Their eyes filled with a hot ardor for military life, they all responded in loud unison, "Understood!"

"Good!" Hillman stood ramrod straight as well. His cold gaze was filled with a military aura.

"Tomorrow, all of you will depart. Tonight, prepare well. I know how strong all of you are. All of you will be able to easily enter the army! I, Hillman, will wait here for all of you to make your glorious return to Wushan town!" Hillman said in a bright voice.

The eyes of those youths shone bright.

Returning home with honor. This was the dream of every youth.

"Now, I order all of you, go home immediately and begin your preparations. Disperse!" Hillman said in a cold, fierce voice.

"Yes sir!"

A hundred and twenty six youths respectfully saluted, and then departed. They were followed by the worshipful gazes of the nearly two hundred youths that remained. Tomorrow, they would begin a brand new journey.

"I have two more years. When I become of age, I also want to join the army."

"I really want to live the exciting, heart-throbbing life of a soldier. If I had to live here for my entire life, in Wushan town, even if I lived forever, it would be pointless."

.....

A group of thirteen year olds chatted amongst each other. All of them longed for that exciting life, a life filled with vigor. All of them wanted to accumulate merits and establish a reputation. They wanted to be adored by the girls and the esteem of their relatives.

This was their dream!

"Linley, your father, Lord Hogg, has some extremely important business with you. Don't go off playing with the other kids. Come home with me." Hillman walked to Linley's side. Gazing at him, Hillman felt very proud.

Linley was exceedingly smart. Under the tutelage of his father, Hogg, since a young age, he had learned many words and could read most books.

Reading was a very luxurious thing. Usually, only the scions of noble houses could read. The Baruch clan was an extremely old clan, and it held a large number of books.

"Uncle Hillman, I know already. My lord father already reminded me three times. My lord father has never been so insistent about anything. I won't go off and play." Linley grinned, revealing his pearly white teeth, perfect but for the fact that one was missing.

Linley was already beginning to grow permanent teeth.

"That's enough. You are missing one of your front teeth. When you smile, you let the wind in." Hillman laughed. "Go, go home."

.....

In the ancient front courtyard of the Baruch manor, after the family finished dinner, Linley was playing around with his younger brother.

"Big brother, hug, hug!"

Little Wharton was staring at Linley with a look of pure, simple love. Walking unsteadily, he extended a small, pudgy hand towards Linley, trying to hug him. Linley stood not too far away, quietly waiting for little Wharton to reach him.

"Wharton, you can do it!" Linley encouraged him.

Little Wharton's wobbly footsteps made people fear he would fall with each step. But in the end, little Wharton managed to rush into his big brother's embrace. His smooth skin, as soft as water, was slightly pink. His big round eyes stared at his elder brother, and in a baby voice, he said, "Big brother, big brother."

Looking at his baby brother, Linley's heart was filled with a boundless warmth and love.

No mother, no grandparents. Although he had his father and the family caretaker to take care of him, Linley, who had matured early, was extremely loving and protective towards his little brother. In Linley's eyes, as the big brother, it was his job to take care of his little brother.

"Wharton, what did you learn today?" Linley asked, smiling.

Wharton frowned, an extremely cute expression. After pondering, he excitedly said, "Today I learned about using rags!"

"Rags?" Linley's face revealed an uncontrollable smile. "What did you wipe?"

Counting on his fingers, little Wharton said, "First I used the rags to wipe the floors, then the toilet chamber pots, and lastly I wiped....wiped....right, I wiped the plates!" He looked excitedly at Linley, awaiting Linley's praise.

"You wiped the chamber pots, and then wiped the plates?" Linley's eyes were huge.

"What, did I do it wrong? I really wiped them clean." In little Wharton's tiny head, his eyes were filled with an uncomprehending look as he stared at his big brother.

"Young master Linley, your father is looking for you. Let me carry young master Wharton." A brandy-nosed old man walked over. This brandy-nosed old man was the Baruch clan's housekeeper, Hiri (Xi'li). In the entire manor, aside from the housekeeper, there wasn't even a serving girl.

Linley no longer had any time to chat with Wharton. He immediately handed Wharton over to Grandpa Hiri, and went towards the guest hall.

"I wonder why father summoned me?" Although he was young, Linley could sense that this time, his father had called him for something important.

Entering the guest hall, in one corner there was a desk clock that was higher than Linley was tall.

This desk clock can be considered a high quality object. Generally, only wealthy or noble families had such a clock. At this moment, Linley's father was seated next to the fireplace. The flames in the fireplace burned, constantly crackling and popping.

"Um? Why did father change his clothes?" Seeing his father, Linley was filled with astonishment. While at home, his father normally wore only simple very simple clothes. Just then, while eating dinner, his father wore normal clothes. But now, he had switched to a set of very noble, beautiful apparel.

Hogg's entire body emanated an ancient, noble aura. That aura wasn't the sort that money could buy. It was something which an ancient noble clan cultivated in its heirs. A clan which had survived for five thousand years. How could an ordinary noble clan compare?

Hogg stood up. Turning around, when he saw Linley, his eyes lit up.

"Linley, come with me. Let's go to the ancestral hall. Uncle Hiri, you know about the matters of my clan, so you can come as well." Hogg smiled.

"The ancestral hall?" Linley was astonished.

The members of the Baruch clan only stayed in the front side of the manor. The areas in the far back, virtually no one went there to clean. Only the ancestral hall in the back did they ever visit, once a month, to clean.

"But this isn't the time to sacrifice to our ancestors. Why are we going to the ancestral hall?" Linley had a belly full of questions.

Exiting the guest hall, Hogg, Linley, and Uncle Hiri, who still held Wharton, followed the blue stone path towards the back manor.

Deep autumn. The night was as cold as water.

The cold wind blowing, Linley couldn't help but shiver. But Linley didn't make a sound, because he could feel that something was different today. Following his father, Linley entered the ancestral hall as well.

"Clack." The door to the ancestral hall closed.

With the candles in the hall becoming lit, the entire hall immediately became very bright. Linley could instantly see the many spirit tablets placed in the very front of the hall. That thick, dense cluster of spirit tablets spoke volumes as to the age of the Baruch clan.

Hogg quietly stood in front of the spirit tablets, not saying a word.

Linley felt very nervous. In the entire hall, aside from the sounds of the whispering candles, no sound was heard. The quiet was terrifying, creating an oppressive feeling on the heart.

Suddenly, Hogg turned and focused his gaze on Linley. In a weighty voice, he said, "Linley, today, there are many things that must be done. But first, let me tell you some of the history of our Baruch clan."

Linley could feel his heart thumping frantically.

"Our clan's history? What can it be?" In his heart, Linley was eager to know, but he didn't dare to make a sound.

A look of pride appearing on his face, Hogg said in a clear voice, "Linley, our Baruch clan has existed for five thousand years. Even scanning the entire Kingdom of Fenlai, I don't believe we can find a second clan which is as ancient as ours." Hogg's voice contained an absolute pride.

Ancient. This was a word which some noble clans viewed with great importance.

"Linley, have you heard of the legendary Four Supreme Warriors of the Yulan continent?" Turning his head, Hogg looked at Linley.

Eyes brightening, Linley nodded. "I know. According to Uncle Hillman, the legendary Four Supreme Warriors are the Dragonblood Warrior, the Violetflame Warrior, the Tigerstriped Warrior, and the Undying Warrior."

Satisfied, Hogg nodded. Smiling, he said, "Right! Now, I am going to tell you something. The Four Supreme Warriors actually represent four ancient clans. And our Baruch clan is the ancient clan which contains the exalted bloodline of the Dragonblood Warriors!"

Book 1, Chapter 3 – The Dragonblood Warrior Clan (part two)

“The Dragonblood Warrior Clan?!” Linley felt as though his entire head was buzzing.

In Linley’s eyes, his clan was nothing more than just an ancient clan which had fallen on hard times. How could it be related to the legendary Dragonblood Warrior?

“You don’t believe me?” A trace of arrogance could be seen on Hogg’s face. “Linley, go up and take a close look at those spirit tablets. By now, you can read all the words on them. On the back of every single spirit tablet is the history of those departed forefathers. The three spirit tablets at the very top, are three who are Dragonblood Warriors!”

Hogg took Linley by the hand. “Come.”

Hogg led Linley towards the area behind the many spirit tablets. Lifting him up, Hogg said, “Take a close look at those characters behind.”

Linley widened his eyes and began to read.

The words carved onto the uppermost tablet were etched very deep and very clearly. Those five thousand year old characters told of an astonishing story!

“Baruch, the very first Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. In the year 4560 of the Yulan calendar, outside the walls of the city of Linnan, Baruch did battle against a Black Dragon and a Titanic Frost Wurm. In the end, he slew both the Titanic Frost Wurm and the Black Dragon, causing his fame to be spread across the world. In the year 4579 of the Yulan calendar, along the coastline of the northern sea of the continent, Baruch did battle against a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor. On that day, the waves crashed unceasingly and nearby cities crumbled, but after a vicious fight lasting a full day and night, Baruch finally executed the Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor....finally, Baruch founded the Baruch clan, and became the first leader of the Baruch clan!"

"Ryan [Rui'en] Baruch, the second Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. In the year 4690 of the Yulan calendar, in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he defeated and subdued a Saint-level Golden Dragon, and became known as the Golden Dragonrider Saint! In the year 4697..."

"Hazard [Ha'ze'de] Baruch, the third Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. Born in the year 5360 of the Yulan calendar, in his very first battle, he fought fiercely with a Saint-level Bloody-eyed Maned Lion in the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun. He defeated the lion, forcing it to scurry away and flee, causing Hazard to become famous throughout the world..."

....

One mighty name after another, one amazing story after another, made the blood in Linley's veins pump all the more vigorously.

"My clan, is actually the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors?" Linley was extremely excited.

Beside him, Hogg said in a low voice, "The first three generations of the Baruch family were all Dragonblood Warriors. Upon becoming a Dragonblood Warrior, one's life expectancy would dramatically increase. The second generation Dragonblood Warrior didn't get married or have children until after he was seven hundred years old."

"And afterwards?" Linley wondered. "Father, why doesn't our clan have any more Dragonblood Warriors?"

Hogg nodded. "To become a Dragonblood Warrior, the most important thing is the density and thickness of the dragonblood which flows in our veins. The higher the density, the better. After many generations, the density of the dragonblood in our veins has grown thinner and thinner. However...that isn't an absolute. Because as time goes on, sometimes, out of nowhere, a descendant will possess a very high density of dragonblood."

"After Hazard Baruch, the fourth Dragonblood Warrior appeared, nearly a thousand years later. And then, after fifteen hundred years passed, which is to say tens of generations later, the fifth Dragonblood Warrior finally appeared in our clan. But in the thousand years from then until now, not a single Dragonblood Warrior has shown up."

Hogg shook his head and sighed. "The fifth Dragonblood Warrior only stayed on the Yulan continent for around two centuries, before he disappeared. In the thousand years since then, our Baruch clan has totally decayed."

After a thousand years, even the most illustrious of families could decay.

"However, our clan still has hope. Perhaps in the future, one of our descendants will have the requisite density of dragonblood in their veins, and meet the requirements to become a Dragonblood Warrior. If they meet the requirements, after just a few decades of training, they would be able to become a true, full Dragonblood Warrior. And at that time, the Baruch clan would once more be restored to the glorious days of yore, when we were known as the Dragonblood Warrior Clan!" Hogg's eyes shone. "Linley, you are six and a half now. According to our rules, at your age, the test to see if your blood has a high density of dragonblood will be fairly accurate. Today, I am going to test you."

Linley was stunned. "Testing the density of dragonblood in my veins? Test me?" Linley fully understood the implications of his father performing this test. This test would show whether or not he met the requirements for becoming a Dragonblood Warrior.

"Linley, wait here. I'll go get the 'Dragonblood Needle'!" Hogg clearly was very excited, as he immediately departed the ancestral hall for a nearby private room.

"Dragonblood Warrior? Will I really become a Dragonblood Warrior?" Linley was mentally fidgeting.

Standing there, Linley's mind was a confused mess. He was filled with both eagerness and fear. He feared that the density of dragonblood in his veins wasn't high enough.

"If I fail, I guess father will be extremely disappointed." Linley couldn't help but think. Having grown up with his father and his younger brother, Linley didn't want to disappoint his father. But the density of dragonblood in his veins wasn't something he could decide.

After just a short period of time, Hogg returned with a twenty-centimeter long needle that was extremely thin as he walked out from the private room.

"Dragonblood Needle?" Linley guessed, as he stared at the long needle in his father's hands.

"Alright, Linley. This needle will just barely break the skin when it goes in. It won't hurt at all. Stretch out your hand." Hogg smiled, and Linley nodded. Taking a deep breath, Linley stretched out his right arm. The slight trembling in his arm showed that Linley really was very nervous.

Not just Linley. To tell the truth, even Hogg was very nervous.

"Hold it." Holding the translucent Dragonblood Needle, Hogg lightly pricked Linley's ring finger with it, easily piercing the skin. Linley felt a piercing pain, and the translucent needle immediately turned crimson as well.

Hands shaking, Hogg immediately lifted the Dragonblood Needle up and inspected it carefully.

Raising his head, Linley stared at his father, feeling extremely agitated. "Is the density of dragonblood in my veins sufficient? Why has father stared at the Dragonblood Needle for so long?" Linley had a bad premonition...

"Sigh..." with an exhaled breath, Hogg placed the Dragonblood Needle off to one side.

Hearing his father's sigh, the nervous Linley knew that the density of dragonblood in his veins clearly didn't reach the required level. His tears immediately began to flow.

"Linley, why are you crying? Don't cry, be good, don't cry." Hogg immediately hugged Linley. Seeing Linley cry, Hogg felt sick at heart. After all, Linley was still just six and a half. He was just a child.

"I won't cry. Yeah. Won't cry." Linley sniffled twice, then forced himself to calm down. "Father, I'm sorry. I've let you down."

Hearing Linley's words, Hogg felt a warm feeling in his heart. He couldn't help but hold Linley against his bosom. "Linley, don't feel bad. I actually didn't raise my hopes too high. Over a thousand years and tens of generations, no one has become a Dragonblood Warrior. It doesn't matter that you also failed. Father doesn't blame you."

Feeling the warmth of his father's chest, Linley's tightened chest gradually loosened.

By this point, the two year old Wharton had long since fallen asleep in Grandpa Hiri's arms.

"Linley, at this point in time, the Baruch family just consists of you, me, and your little brother. I don't have any extravagant hopes. I've never dared to dream of becoming a Dragonblood Warrior.” Hogg laughed at himself satirically. How could becoming a Dragonblood Warrior be an easy task?

Linley raised his head, staring at his father.

Linley rarely saw his father speak to him in such a manner. Normally, his father was always very strict and unyielding.

Staring at the rows of spirit tablets, Hogg’s eyes were filled with a dreary sadness. “My true goal is actually to recover the ancestral heirloom of the Baruch clan, passed down across the generations.”

“Our ancestral heirloom? What’s that? Why have I never heard about it?” Linley asked curiously.

Hogg proudly said, “Our ancestral heirloom – the warblade, ‘Slaughterer’. This was the weapon used by the very first leader of the Baruch clan, the very first Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. Alas...his descendants were unfilial. Six hundred years ago, because of poverty, a descendant who loved luxury actually sold our ancestral weapon for money.”

As he spoke, Hogg was filled with so much fury that his body actually trembled.

Shaking his head helplessly, he said, “Afterwards, every single generation tried to recover the warblade ‘Slaughterer’, but despite six hundred years of trying, none of us have succeeded. After all, when we sold the warblade 'Slaughterer', it was for the price of 180,000 gold coins of gold. 180,000 gold coins of gold! We aren't able to produce such a vast sum, but even if we were, the current owner wouldn't be willing to sell to us."

The ancient clan of the Dragonblood Warriors, actually had sold off its own ancestral heirloom.

This was a humiliation!

The humiliation of the ancient clan of the Dragonblood Warriors!

Every succeeding generation had attempted to come up with ways to regain the warblade 'Slaughterer', but despite six hundred years of trying, they had never succeeded.

As the current clan leader, Hogg also had this desire, but the clan's economic situation was in dire straits. 180,000 gold coins of gold? Even if they sold off the manor and all their possessions, they might not be able to produce such a vast sum.

The ancestral heirloom was lost. This humiliation constantly weighed on Hogg's heart. He felt ashamed and helpless, and unable to face his forefathers.

Seeing the look on his father's face, Linley consoled him, "Father, don't be unhappy! I promise that one day, I will recover our family's heirloom and bring it back to this manor."

"You?" Hogg chuckled. Eyes filled with love, he ruffled Linley's hair.

In his heart, Hogg secretly said, "Linley. Do you know, these words you just said...all those years ago, I said these same words to your grandfather as well." Six hundred years of efforts had all failed. How could it be easy to accomplish? After all, the person who had purchased the warblade 'Slaughterer' couldn't be any ordinary person.

Why would they be willing to sell?

Even if they were willing to sell, how could the decrepit Baruch clan afford the cost?

"Father, you don't believe me?" Raising his head, Linley looked at his father questioningly.

"I believe you, I believe you," Hogg laughed.

Father and son held each other close. Only three members remained of the ancient Dragonblood Clan in this era. When would this decaying clan be able to regain the glory and honor it had in prior years? At this moment, lying against his father's chest, Linley's fists were clenched tightly!

Book 1, Chapter 4 – Growth (part 1)

The spring wind came, turning green the poplar trees near the empty space outside of Wushan town. On the empty ground, a group of youths were ardently training. Almost a year had passed since the Dragonblood test, and Linley was eight years old now. Over the course of this period of time, Hillman clearly saw that Linley had only become even harder working!

“Well done, Linley! Hold it, hold it!” Hillman encouraged from the side.

Right now, Linley was only wearing trousers. His upper body was covered with sweat, and his body, as taut as a drawn bowstring, was lying on the ground. His hands were pressed fiercely to the ground, as straight as tree trunks, while the rest of his body was motionless. He was supporting himself from a push-up position, with just his hands and the tips of his toes! His entire body was taut!

The ‘Static Tension’ training exercise!

A very simple yet very effective training exercise. If a person could reach the level of being able to maintain this pose for an hour, then his body would no longer fear ordinary swords or sabres.

Drip, drip!

Beads of sweat rolled down from Linley’s forehead. The sweat entered Linley’s left eye, and he couldn’t help but wince at the pain.

"Ley is really amazing. Just eight years old, but he's able to match the thirteen year olds in doing the 'Static Tension' exercise." Some of the children who had already given up were sprawled on the ground, chatting as they watched Linley.

"Ley, keep it up! Keep it up for the rest of us! Beat those thirteen year olds!" The golden-haired Hadley shouted from the side.

"Yeah, keep it up, Ley!" The other children started to chant as well.

Linley was on extremely good terms with the other kids. Although Linley was the child of a noble house, he was extremely kind to the children of commoners, and often helped them train as well.

"Gotta hold it. Gotta hold it." Linley constantly said to himself.

In the back of Linley's mind, the words his father said a year ago constantly echoed. "Linley, we are the family of the Dragonblood Warriors. As a member of the Dragonblood Warriors clan, you have an advantage, but also a disadvantage! The advantage is, even though the density of Dragonblood in your veins hasn't reached a sufficient level, your body will still be much stronger than those of most ordinary people. It might be very difficult for others to become a warrior of the sixth rank through training alone, but for you, it will be somewhat easier."

"However, your disadvantage is this. The descendants of the Dragonblood clan are not able to train battle qi according to normal manuals. This is because the blood in our veins is only suited to the training method inside the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual'. It conflicts with all other types of battle qi cultivation methods. Unfortunately, only those who have reached a certain density of Dragonblood are able to practice using the method within the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual'. Therefore, you will not be able to cultivate battle qi at all."

"Also, although in theory, anyone training the body can reach the sixth rank, that's just in theory. In practice, the number of people who accomplish this is very low. But for us, it is different. Even if the amount of Dragonblood in our veins is low, our starting level will be higher than others. Just from training alone, we can become warriors of the sixth rank. Your great grandfather, based on training alone, managed to become a warrior of the seventh rank!"

Linley remembered his father's words very clearly.

Linley growled to himself, "I'm stronger than everyone else now, only because of the Dragonblood in my veins. But since I can't practice battle qi, my only options are to work hard, and to work harder! Since great grandfather was able to become a warrior of the seventh rank, then I shall...I shall become a warrior of the eighth rank. Or even the ninth rank! Nothing is impossible!"

A warrior of the eighth rank!

A warrior of the ninth rank could be considered the most powerful expert in the entire country of Fenlai. A warrior of the eighth rank, although unable to restore the Baruch family to its former glories, would be able to dramatically improve its current situation.

"Gotta hold!" Linley gritted his teeth.

By this point, his muscles felt like they were being chewed on by countless ants. His entire body was quivering, and every single muscles on his entire body trembled. Every single trembling muscle could be seen visibly.

After a long time, in the end...

Thud!

Linley, exhausted, collapsed to the ground.

"That feels wonderful." Flat on the floor, his entire body relaxed, Linley could clearly feel how numb his entire body was. All the muscles on his body, after undergoing that training, were slowly growing. Although the growth wouldn't be noticeable from just one or two exercises, after a long period of time, the effects would be pronounced.

Hillman, off to the side, nodded with satisfaction.

And then, Hillman's face grew cold as he turned to look at the fourteen and fifteen year olds. "All of you had better hold on! Linley's only eight years old, while all of you are almost adults. Don't let an eight year old get the better of you!"

.....

After morning exercises ended, Linley bid farewell to his group of friends and went towards the Baruch clan manor. If a stranger had seen him, the eight year old Linley surely would have been assumed to be eleven or twelve years old, and not just a mere child of eight.

The descendants of Baruch truly were different from other men.

"Big brother!" Upon seeing Linley, the healthy-looking Wharton rushed over.

"That's enough, Wharton. My entire body is covered with sweat. Let me wash myself first." Linley patted Wharton on the face and laughed.

Wharton hmped. "I know that as soon as you wash up, you'll go take lessons from father."

As a member of a noble house, Linley's education began from a young age. The five-thousand year old Baruch clan was even stricter regarding educational matters than even the royal families of most kingdoms were.

"Enough, Wharton. I'll play with you around noon." Linley laughed.

Wharton was only a child, while Linley was much more mature.

After washing up and changing into some fresh clothes, Linley entered the study. At this moment, his father, Hogg Baruch, was sitting in front of a desk, his back ramrod straight. In front of Hogg were three thick tomes.

"Father!" Linley respectfully bowed.

Hogg coldly nodded, and Linley quickly walked next to him.

"Yesterday, I explained the history of the countries of the Yulan continent to you. Repeat it back to me." Hogg said coldly.

This was the real Hogg.

Instances like the time when he was holding the crying Linley in his arms were extremely rare. Normally, Hogg's attitude towards Linley could be summarized in one word: 'Strict'. In all things, Hogg strove for perfection. He wouldn't let Linley get away with any mistakes.

"Yes, father." Linley said calmly.

"In the Yulan continent, there are three dangerous areas. The number one mountain range, the 'Mountain Range of Magical Beasts'. The second mountain range, the 'Mountain Range of the Setting Sun'. And, the number one forest, the 'Forest of Darkness'. The space these three dangerous regions take up is incomparably large. The 'Mountain Range of Magical Beasts' runs across the entire continent, from north to south, covering over ten thousand kilometers. Within it are countless magical beasts, including Saint-level beasts which have the power to 'destroy the heavens and ravage the earth'. Because of the 'Mountain Range of Magical Beasts', the Yulan continent has been divided into different regions."

"West of the 'Mountain Range of Magical Beasts', there are twelve kingdoms and thirty-two duchies. Within these kingdoms and dukedoms, there are two major divisions. The first is the Holy Union, with the kingdom of Fenlai being the principal kingdom. The second is the Dark Alliance, with the kingdom of Heishi being the principal kingdom. These two alliances are opposed to each other and constantly battle because one is controlled by the Radiant Church, while the other belongs to the Cult of Shadows."

"East of the 'Mountain Range of Magical Beasts', there are four empires, six major kingdoms, and countless duchies! These four empires are enormous, and are not influenced by the Holy Union or the Dark Alliance. In these four empires, the rule of the emperors is absolute. Any of the four empires are comparable to the Holy Union."

"The four empires are the central Yulan Empire, the southeastern Rhine [Lai'yin] Empire, the eastern Rohault [Luó'ao] Empire, and the northern O'Brien [O'Bu'Lai'En] Empire." After having said all this at one go, Linley let himself relax slightly.

"Just this?" Hogg frowned.

Linley was about to immediately continue, but Hogg cut him off. "Let me ask you, within our Holy Union, how many kingdoms and duchies are there?"

"Within our Holy Union, there are six kingdoms and fifte...sevente..." Linley suddenly frowned.

How many duchies were there in the Holy Union? Linley's memory was a bit hazy. He wasn't sure if it was fifteen, or if it was seventeen. He couldn't be sure.

"Hmph!"

His face cold and harsh, Hogg pulled out a wooden stick, and Linley obediently stuck his hand out.

His eyes narrowing, with a 'WHAP' sound, Hogg whacked Linley's hand with the stick. A red line immediately appeared on Linley's hand, but Linley could only clench his teeth, not making a sound.

"Linley, you must remember, we are currently living within the Holy Union. You must know everything about the Holy Union!" Hogg coldly looked at his son. "In the entire Yulan continent, the most important entities are the four empires and the two alliances."

Linley nodded.

Although his father's words were simple, Linley clearly understood the deeper meaning.

"At the far northern end, the Holy Union shares a border with the O'Brien Empire. While at the southern end, the Dark Alliance intersects with the Yulan Empire. Under the guidance of the Radiant Church, the unity of our Holy Union isn't one whit inferior to that of the empires."

Listening to his father's words, Linley agreed.

Yesterday, he had read many books. Clearly, the Holy Union could be considered the 'cultural center' for the entire Yulan continent. At the same time, in terms of economic strength, it was on par with the Yulan Empire, making the two of them the most economically powerful entities in the world.

In addition, it had the support of the Radiant Church.

The Holy Union truly was very formidable.

"Today, we will study art," Hogg said coldly. "As the descendent of a noble family, you must have a thorough understanding and appreciation of art. Art is what gives noblemen an aura of gravitas!" Hogg pulled out a large tome as thick as a fist, immediately opening it.

"In the year 3578 of the Yulan calendar, the grandmaster stone-sculptor Proulx [Pu'lu'ke'si] was born...."

Off to the side, Hogg solemnly taught while Linley strove hard to memorize. He wanted to meet his father's requirements.

Book 1, Chapter 5 – Growth (part 2)

Time flew by quickly, and in the blink of an eye, the grandfather clock within the hall rang eleven times, signifying that it was now 11 in the morning.

“Is Hogg at home?” A clear voice rang out. The Baruch manor had no guards, so clearly, this person had already arrived within the manor grounds.

Hogg frowned, placing down the thick tome in front of him. “Linley, today we’ll come to a stop here.” Revealing a wisp of a smile, Hogg turned around and walked towards the guest hall.

“Ah, Hogg, my dear friend! Just the other day, I heard the clothspinner bird’s cry, and I just knew that something good was going to happen. Indeed, by noon, I received your missive, and as soon as I read it, I was overjoyed.”

“Dear Philip, I am very happy to see you as well. Hillman, quickly go and bring me the stone sculpture, ‘Fierce Lion’. Philip, come, let’s go to the main hall and wait. The sculpture will be here shortly.”

Hearing these words, Linley felt his heart twinge.

“We’re selling off more family belongings?” Linley knew that the ‘Fierce Lion’ sculpture was one which his father deeply liked. But the Baruch clan, which took very little taxes from Wushan township, really was in dire economic straits.

Fortunately, the Baruch clan was an ancient one, and by virtue of its age, had stored many rare and precious items.

Unfortunately, even the vastest of hoards could not withstand so many years of auctions and sales. By this point in time, the number of valuable items within the clan was very few. Linley couldn't help but turn to stare at the grandfather clock. "I wonder how long it will be before even this clock has to be sold off."

A middle aged man with long, golden hair and a nobleman's aura strode into the hall by Hogg's side. Linley immediately was able to guess that this middle-aged man must be 'Philip'.

"Oh, this adorable child must be your son, right Hogg?" Philip smiled very warmly at Linley. "Linley Baruch, right? May I address you as Linley?"

"It would be my honor, sire." Linley placed his right hand against his breast and respectfully bowed.

"What an adorable child." Philip seemed very pleased.

By his side, Hogg laughed. "Philip, stop wasting time with the child. Look, the 'Fierce Lion' you have desired for so long has arrived." As he spoke, Hillman easily carried in the large sculpture into the hall, and then easily set it down.

It was a nearly thousand-pound stone sculpture, but in Hillman's hands, it seemed like naught but a toy, clearly showing Hillman's strength.

"Mr. Hillman, your strength amazes me. My own manor doesn't have anyone as fierce as you, guard captain, even though I control twelve towns." Philip smiled as he spoke, but the implicit meaning in his words was quite clear; he wanted to invite Hillman to work for him.

Hillman said coldly, "Wushan town is my home, sire."

"Forgive me." Philip quickly apologized.

Philip turned to look at Hogg. "Hogg, I must say, although I like this stone sculpture very much, the artisanship of this 'Fierce Lion' sculpture cannot be considered to be top tier, much less the masterpieces of those grandmaster sculptors."

"Philip, if you don't wish to buy it, then forget about it." Hogg was quite succinct.

Philip's eyes couldn't help but narrow, but then he laughed. "Haha... Hogg, don't be angry. I'm not saying that I don't wish to buy it. I'm just telling the truth. How about this. I'll buy this sculpture for five hundred gold coins. What do you think?"

"Five hundred?" Hogg frowned.

This price was much lower than what Hogg had hoped for. He had been hoping for at least eight hundred.

In the Yulan continent, one gold coin equaled ten silver coins equaled a thousand copper coins. The average commoner would be able to earn twenty or thirty gold coins in a year. Even the average army soldier would only earn a hundred or so gold coins.

"The price is too low." Hogg shook his head.

"Hogg, you must know that in all the ten thousand plus years of the Yulan continent, there have been countless sculptures made. The true value of a sculpture is in terms of its artisanship. As far as the artisanship of this one....well, heh, suffice to say, I just like it. Five hundred gold really is my highest offer. If you don't accept, then let's just forget about it."

Philip laughed as he turned to look at the grandfather clock in the hall. His eyes gleaming, he said, "Hogg, if you were to sell this clock, however, I would be willing to pay a thousand gold."

Hogg's face grew cold.

"Ahem, two thousand gold would be acceptable as well. This would be my highest offer." Philip hurriedly said.

Hogg sternly shook his head firmly. "The grandfather clock is not for sale! As for the sculpture, six hundred gold. Take it or leave it."

Philip carefully studied Hogg for a moment, then chuckled. "Fine, Hogg. I'll give you some face. Six hundred gold it is. Housekeeper, bring me six hundred gold." The caretaker for his manor, who had been waiting outside the entire time, immediately ran over with the gold.

Six sacks of yellow gold.

"Six hundred gold, Hogg. You can count it, if you want." Philip smiled.

Hogg hefted the sacks. Just based on weight alone, Hogg was certain that there really were six hundred gold coins in them, a hundred gold per sack. Hogg smiled and nodded. "Philip, how about staying and having dinner with us?"

"No need, I still have some business back home." Philip laughed.

Philip's housekeeper subsequently instructed two powerfully built warriors to lift and carry away the sculpture, which they did with difficulty.

After Philip and his entourage had departed, Hogg stared at the six sacks of gold, a dim look in his eyes. This time, he sold the stone sculpture. Next time? Although the manor still had many things remaining, sooner or later, they would have nothing left.

"Father, I want to learn to be a sculptor!" Linley suddenly said.

Linley knew very well that in the Yulan continent, those famous master sculptors could produce works valued at tens of thousands of gold pieces each. Some famous sculptures could even reach a hundred thousand gold pieces. And wealth aside, the societal ranking of these sculptors was also very high.

"If I can become a master sculptor, then...then father will no longer have to sell our family possessions." This is what Linley was thinking.

"Sculpting?" Hogg glanced at Linley, his eyes cold.

"Linley, do you know that amongst the hundreds of millions of people in the Holy Union, there are at least several million who have studied sculpting. But in the entire Holy Union, the number of true masters can be counted on one hand. In addition, if you don't have a good instructor, you simply cannot succeed on your own."

"The inner circle of sculptors is not one which ordinary people are allowed into. You only see the sky-high valuation of the works of the masters, but do you know that the vast majority of sculptors only make a few dozen gold coins each year?"

Hogg's voice was very fierce.

Linley was so frightened, he immediately knelt down. Just now, he only spoke because he thought that sculpting could improve his family's situation. He didn't expect his father to say so much and lecture him so sternly.

"Enough. The ancestral hall needs some cleaning. After lunch, go and clean it up." Hogg said coldly.

"Yes, father." Linley said respectfully.

Looking at Linley, Hogg sighed in his heart. "Sculpting? Oh, child. Do you know that in the past, I also practiced sculpting? I spent ten full years of my life trying to learn. But unfortunately, my sculptures weren't worth a single coin." Hogg, too, had once foolishly dreamed of becoming a master sculptor and thereby improving his clan's situation.

But in his heart, he felt very helpless. Despite spending ten years training, his sculptures were still worthless. The field of sculpting could be described as a pyramid.

Those famous master sculptors were at the top of the pyramid. They enjoyed a high status, and each sculpture they made was worth hundreds of thousands of coins.

But the valuation of the work of the countless low level sculptors at the bottom of the pyramid was soul-crushingly low. Most of their works would just be bought by commoners for just a few silver coins to use as decorations in their homes.

Book 1, Chapter 6 – Coiling Dragon Ring (part 1)

Underneath the setting sun, the rosy clouds seemed to cover half the sky, casting their red hue upon the entire world.

“Cleaning the ancestral hall is pretty easy.”

Departing the ancestral hall, Linley had to admit that he had over-prepared. He had slotted an hour for this job, but in just fifteen minutes, he was finished cleaning.

On the Yulan continent, each year was divided into twelve months, each month thirty days, each day twenty four hours, and each hour sixty minutes. Most noble families owned grandfather clocks, and were able to accurately tell time. Some extremely wealthy or extremely high-status individuals might even own meticulously calibrated wrist watches.

“The ancestral hall is cleaned every month. Frankly speaking, in just a month, the ancestral hall won’t get too dirty. All I have to do is just casually wipe it down. I have almost an hour before training starts. What should I do?” Bored, Linley looked around in all directions.

The ancient Baruch mansion had five thousand years of history.

The front courtyard was cleaned every day, but the rooms in the much-larger back courtyard, aside from the ancestral hall, were all covered in dust, and even the walls were cracked. Wild grasses and dark green lichen covered the floors and even ran up the walls.

"Heeeeeeey..." Seeing the decrepit architecture, Linley's eyes slowly brightened. "Lots of places in the back courtyard haven't been visited in over a century. I wonder if there's any ancient, valuable items there?"

Upon coming to this realization, Linley's heart began to pound.

"If I am able to find some valuable things and give them to father, no doubt he will be very happy." Linley took a deep breath, then immediately entered a decrepit room next to the ancestral hall. Step by step, he walked carefully, wielding a sturdy wooden stick in his hands, which he used to strike down the cobwebs, allowing himself a more careful examination.

Immediately upon entering the room, a rotten scent wafted past Linley's nose. Thick cobwebs could be seen in each corner, and spiders could even be seen clambering about.

Many spiderwebs were covering decorative curtains and furnishings. Upon closer examination, all of these curtains appeared very ancient. Unfortunately, the curtains were tattered beyond belief, just barely holding together in the semblance of a curtain.

"If these curtains weren't ruined, no doubt they would be worth a lot of money." Linley helplessly shook his head. He continued to inspect the room, using his stick to brush aside the layers of cobwebs as he carefully searched.

He searched the floor, the cabinets, and even to see if there were any secret passageways on the walls.

"According to the books I've read, it is quite common for walls to contain hidden levers or passages." Linley carefully rapped the walls, listening to the sounds.

Linley very much enjoyed this feeling of searching for treasures in the ancient room. But he had forgotten something. If he could come up with this idea, wouldn't his father, his grandfather, and the other elders of the Baruch clan also have thought of this?

These ancient rooms had long ago been scoured clean by the deceased elders of the Baruch clan.

Linley was only eight years old, after all. Although the strict education of the clan helped him mature quickly, there was still a large gap between him and an adult. Naturally, he wouldn't be able to consider things from a more complete point of view.

"Nothing in this room. Next one..." Linley exited the first room and entered the second.

There were actually many rooms in the back courtyard. After all, the front courtyard which Linley resided in constituted only a third of the entire manor. The back courtyard was far larger. Linley would probably have to spend an entire day in order to finish searching the entire back courtyard.

"All these decorations are ruined. There isn't a single one worth money." Linley exited yet another empty room.

He stared up at the sky.

"Eh, looks like it's almost time for training. I have another fifteen minutes or so at most." Linley turned his head around and stared at an extremely large room. "I'll just look at that last one, that big one. I'll spend about ten minutes searching. If I can't find anything, I'll go off to training."

Having made up his mind, Linley raced towards the large room.

This ancient room was much larger than even the main hall in the front courtyard. Stepping inside, Linley carefully scrutinized the place. "I bet hundreds of years ago, this was the dinner hall for our Baruch clan." From the ornaments and furniture, Linley could tell that this was a living hall.

A huge, grandiose-looking hall.

"Search the ground first."

Same as before, Linley lowered his head, widened his eyes, and began carefully searching the room one part at a time. Upon seeing anything interesting, he would tap it twice with his stick. If it was made out of stone, he would ignore it. Since he didn't have much time left before training was to start, his searching speed increased as well.

"Time to search the walls and the curtains. Oi. Last, best hope." Linley grimaced as he scanned the surroundings. "Clan elders, I really hope you guys left one or two things behind for me to find. Even if it is just a small thing."

Linley carefully searched the walls, even peeking behind the tattered curtains.

On the ancient walls were many rotted wooden cabinets, each of which had many drawers. Linley pulled open each and every drawer, but the drawers were totally empty, almost immaculately so. The only thing inside of them? Some dust.

"Alas!"

After pulling open the last drawer, Linley felt bitter disappointment in his heart.

"After searching for all this time, I didn't even find a single valuable item. All I did was cover myself with sweat and dust." Linley stared at his clothes. They really were filthy, now. Linley couldn't help but feel discontented.

Linley's gaze once more flashed across the room.

"Hmph. I'm leaving." Linley angrily used the stick in his hand to strike hard against a nearby cabinet, as though he wanted to give vent to all the anger which had built up over an hour of fruitless searching.

"Thud!" The stick solidly struck against the cabinet.

The cabinet was extremely ancient. After having been chewed on by mites for a hundred years, it couldn't withstand any weight. After having been struck so fiercely, it began to creak and groan.

Hearing this, Linley couldn't help but look behind him in alarm. "Oh no, it's going to collapse!" While searching the other rooms, Linley had also destroyed a few other pieces of furniture, so by now, he was very experienced.

Linley hurriedly dodged to one side.

In the end, the cabinet, which was twice as tall as Linley himself, collapsed. With a crashing sound, the cabinet smashed against the floor, breaking into seven or eight pieces, covering the room with even more dust. But hidden amidst the dust, unseen by Linley, was...

Upon the shattering of the cabinet, a black ring which had been hidden within the wooden supports came tumbling out, falling to the ground.

"Ew, ew!" Linley spat out the two words as he hurriedly tried to escape the wave of dust.

"How unlucky! My entire body is covered with dust now, and I bet training is about to start. I'd best go take a quick shower and put on some new clothes." With a wave of his arm, Linley pushed open the door and departed the ancient room.

Book 1, Chapter 7 – Coiling Dragon Ring (part 2)

That black ring had rolled forward, landing precisely in front of the doorway.

When Linley had strode forward by three steps, reaching the doorway, he came to a sudden halt, because he could clearly feel that he had stepped on something hard.

"Just now, I searched the ground and didn't see a single rock. This must have come from the shattered drawers." Thinking about the collapsed drawers, Linley couldn't help but feel angry, and he viciously stomped on the piece of 'shattered wood' beneath his feet.

Based on Linley's thinking, if it was a piece of shattered wood, it should be stomped into fragments. But in reality...

"Whoah, it's hard! What's under my foot?" Linley felt that the item underneath his foot was extraordinarily tough, and immediately stepped aside to take a closer look.

He saw a jet-black object in the shape of a ring lying peacefully on the ground. It was covered by a layer of dust, and was not at all catching to the eye.

"Oh, a ring?" Linley's eyes were bandit-sharp. He happily plucked the ring up, then used his filthy sleeves to give the black ring a vigorous rub-down. Only then could Linley make out what this item really looked like.

This black ring was made of a material that seemed to have properties of both wood and stone. On the body of the ring, there was a very faint carving of an indistinct object as well...

"Earthworm?" Linley suspiciously looked at the carving on the ring.

At first glance, Linley felt that the sinuous carving on the ring seemed to be that of an earthworm.

Linley laughed to himself, "The carving skill for this ring is really terrible. I bet even an average carver could make something more attractive. Alas, what a waste. This black ring doesn't even have a single diamond on it, much less any valuable magic crystals."

Most rings were adorned with either diamonds or magic crystals.

Unfortunately, this black ring seemed to have been made out of a material that had properties of both wood and stone. Not even the shadow of a gemstone could be seen. Clearly, it was worthless.

But for some reason, upon seeing the ring, Linley immediately felt that he had taken a liking to it. He suspected that it was most likely because this was the only thing he had discovered after spending a prodigious amount of effort in searching the manor.

"Hm, this ring is really thick. There's no way to wear it on my finger without it slipping off. I'll string it through with silk and wear it around my neck." Linley's eyes brightened.

The eight-year old Linley's hands, after all, were much smaller than the hands of an adult. There was no way he could wear the ring on his fingers.

"Now, what name should I choose for this black ring? Earthworm Ring? No way, that sounds terrible." Linley mumbled for a few moments, then his eyes lit up. "Haha, that sinuous object can also be considered a 'dragon', right? A dragon curled around the ring...then let's call it, the Coiling Dragon Ring!" Although in his heat, Linley felt like the carving looked more like an earthworm, but he still chose the name 'Coiling Dragon Ring' for it.

"Coiling Dragon Ring!" Lifting up the dark, unadorned ring, Linley felt exceptionally pleased.

"Wait, crap! It's almost time for training!"

Linley suddenly remembered. He frantically stared at his filthy clothes, covered in dust and grime. He looked like a beggar. "Oh no..." Linley had no time to think. He immediately ran out of the ancient courtyard and charged straight for the washroom.

The sound of rushing water.

Linley dumped water over himself. His skin was bright and vigorous, and muscular lines were already beginning to develop. This was the result of Linley's training. Underneath the rushing water flow, the dust was quickly washed away.

Using the least amount of time possible, Linley washed himself clean, then hurriedly put on his training clothes.

“String, string...” Linley hurriedly looked about for a thread on which he could hang the Coiling Dragon Ring. Suddenly, Linley’s gaze fell on a ruined old washcloth. His eyes lit up, and he immediately pulled a string out from within the washcloth.

Although the washcloth was very ordinary, it was very sturdy and durable. The string, too, would be very resilient.

He quickly strung on the Coiling Dragon Ring, then immediately wore his makeshift necklace.

“I’m gonna be late. This is my first time being late!” Linley bolted out like a roaring flame. As he ran, he tucked the Coiling Dragon Ring into his clothes. Feeling the coolness of the ring against his chest, Linley couldn’t help but feel happy.

In exchange for being late, he gained the Coiling Dragon Ring.

Linley felt very happy.

In a flash, Linley rushed out of the Baruch clan manor, and then immediately ran towards the empty training ground east of Wushan town. By this time, most of the commoners had already returned home, leaving the streets empty, but as they saw Linley run, they were able to guess the reason.

"Young master Linley, careful, don't hurt yourself!"

"Master Hillman is extremely rigorous. I'm afraid young master Linley is going to be punished."

.....

The kindness which the Baruch clan had showed the commoners caused them to also be filled with love and goodwill towards Linley.

"How will Uncle Hillman punish me?" Even as he hurriedly rushed forward, Linley was still thinking about this question. At this point, Linley had no time to chat or pay respects to any of the uncles or aunties nearby. In a short period of time, Linley arrived at the training field of Wushan town.

By this time, all three squads had already lined up. Hillman was speaking, but upon hearing Linley's footsteps, Hillman's cold gaze couldn't help but shoot towards him.

Linley ran towards the training squads. Taking position next to the squads, he nervously awaited Hillman's instructions.

"Today's training exercises will be doubled for you. Return to your team!" Hillman calmly said.

"Yes sir!" Linley raised his head high and said in a bright voice.

The youngsters nearby couldn't help but stick out their tongues. He was just late by a short amount of time, but was punished with double duty training. Today, Linley probably wouldn't have any time to go home and eat dinner.

Just as Linley began jogging towards his usual position in the team, suddenly...

THUD! The entire earth seemed to tremble slightly, but with regularity. It was as though a giant creature was walking on the earth, causing it to tremble with each step.

"East. It came from the east." Linley immediately discerned the direction.

Not just Linley. Hillman, Roger, and Lorry all turned towards the east, their expressions growing solemn. The vibrations were growing stronger and clearer. All of the youths present could clearly feel that the regular vibrations were coming from an enormous creature headed their way.

Each of the thunderous footsteps seemed to caused a vibration powerful enough to shake Linley's heart.

What giant creature was causing this?

Linley widened his eyes and stared east...

Book 1, Chapter 8 – Magical Beast – Velocidragon!

The giant creature that caused the earth to shake finally revealed itself.

Upon seeing this enormous creature, Linley and the rest of the children were scared silly. Hillman, Roger and Lorry's reaction speeds were very quick; they immediately stood in front of the group of kids and carefully watched the enormous creature.

"A magical beast of the seventh rank. Velocidragon*!" Hillman's facial expression contorted, while Lorry and Roger, by his side, felt their legs grow weak.

"So bi, bi, big! Is, is this a legendary magical beast?" Linley was totally stunned.

Since he was born, the largest creature which Linley had ever seen was the warhorses that sometimes passed by Wushan township. Those large, powerful horses were 1.8 meters tall. But in front of this giant creature, they seemed like nothing more than a babe in front of a giant. The difference was truly astounding.

This creature was easily two stories high and at least twenty or thirty meters long.

Magical Beast – Velocidragon!

The Velocidragon's entire body was covered by huge, fire-red scales, each scale glittering with the reflected cold, golden light. The scales alone were stunning and frightening to behold. The Velocidragon's four scale-covered long legs were even more terrifying in their thickness. Two fully grown men would barely be able to surround them with their arms. The flame-red Velocidragon was entirely crimson in color, with the exception of its cold, deadly looking black claws.

The Velocidragon's long, scale covered tail made up over half of its total body length. Like a whip, it swept across the ground. Each time it struck the ground, a deep thud could be heard emanating from below.

"Grrr.."

With a low-throated growl, white steam erupted from the nostrils of the Velocidragon, carrying with it the stench of sulfur. Those diamond-like eyes, nearly the size of a lantern, were also, strangely enough, red as well. The huge head of the Velocidragon turned towards Linley and the children. Its cold gaze terrified all of the children, freezing them in their tracks.

"Tchhh. Tchhh." The Velocidragon's mouth tensed, revealing two rows of enormous, saw-like teeth. Each teeth was ivory white, and the sight of them caused everyone's hearts to grow cold. No one dared to question its sharpness.

Linley felt as though his heart had stopped beating. Right now, it seemed as though all sound had faded away.

"Too terrifying. Is there anyone who can possibly defeat such a creature?" Linley was scared stiff.

Just from looking at this huge magical beast, Linley felt as though its power was irresistible. Linley believed that with but a swipe of its enormous tail, most likely even the sturdiest stones of the houses of Wushan town would be disintegrated.

“Is this Wushan town?” Suddenly, a cold voice emanated from on top of the Velocidragon.

All of the terrified children looked up, astonished. Upon the Velocidragon’s enormous, scaly back, a mysterious man wearing violet robes was sitting cross-legged. The Velocidragon was simply too huge in size, and its back was extremely broad. There was more than enough space for someone to stand, sit, or even roll around.

“Lord Magus, this is indeed Wushan town. Is there anything we can help you with, Lord Magus?” Hillman’s voice rang out.

Upon hearing Hillman’s voice, everyone seemed to find their bearings again, and recovered from the state of stunned terror. But everyone present, including Roger and Lorry, didn’t dare make a single sound. They all stood behind Hillman and fearfully looked at the terrifying Velocidragon and the mysterious, violet robed magus.

“Wushan town. Looks like I didn’t get lost.” The violet-robed man said in a low voice.

And then the mysterious, violet-robed man didn’t say anything else. After gazing at Linley and the rest of the group with its cold eyes, the Velocidragon continued forward, two more lines of smoke appearing from its nostrils. Seeing the Velocidragon go in the direction of the township, the expression on Hillman's face changed.

"Everyone, stay here." After he spoke, Hillman immediately chased after the departing Velocidragon.

"Uncle Lorry, what is that? Is that a magical beast?" Linley was the first to ask.

Lorry cleared his throat, a look of terror still in his eyes. But he still nodded. "Yes, it is. But it's a very powerful one, a magical beast of the seventh rank. A Velocidragon!"

"Velocidragon?"

Linley memorized the word, forever etching it in his mind.

The Velocidragon's huge body, hard scales, sharp claws, and powerful tail served to create a terrifying appearance. Linley believed....a single Velocidragon could most likely annihilate the entire Wushan township.

"The defensive power of the Velocidragon's scales is astonishing, and its attack power is terrifying as well. In addition, it is proficient in destructive fire magic!" Lorry's heart was filled with fear as he explained to Linley and the others. "If faced with a terrifying magical beast such as the Velocidragon, most likely even a platoon of a thousand soldiers would be wiped out, unless it had a number of sixth or seventh ranked warriors and magi who could unite to penetrate the Velocidragon's scales."

Linley's heart trembled.

Even a platoon of a thousand soldiers would be wiped out?

"However, the most terrifying thing is not the Velocidragon...it is the mysterious violet-robed man." Lorry took two stabilizing breaths, calming his agitated heart.

By his side, Roger nodded as well. "Right. In order to subdue a Velocidragon, one must force the Velocidragon to willingly submit to being a servant. In other words...the violet-robed man must be significantly more powerful than the Velocidragon. Based on his clothing, he should be a magus."

"At least a magus of the seventh rank. Perhaps even a magus of the eighth rank!" Roger's fists couldn't help but tremble as well. "I never imagined such an important individual would come to our home."

Linley could also feel the fear which was in the hearts of Roger and Lorry.

Velocidragon, a magical beast of the seventh rank. And a mysterious magus whose power dwarfed that of the Velocidragon? This definitely was enough to cause terror.

"The magus was even more powerful than the Velocidragon?" Linley found this somewhat hard to believe.

The Velocidragon's huge body, hard scales, sharp claws, and powerful tail...all seemed to dwarf that small human figure of the magus.

"Roaaar!"

Suddenly, an angry roar erupted from the middle of the township.

"Crap!" Lorry and Roger were stunned. Linley and the other children grew worried as well. Was the Velocidragon's angry roar caused by Uncle Hillman, or by Wushan township? Nobody knew.

"All of you, stay here." Lorry and Roger, although terrified, still raced towards the center of the town.

Linley gritted his teeth. "Uncle Hillman!" Linley was also worried for Uncle Hillman, as well as the citizens of Wushan town. He also ran in that direction. At this moment, Lorry and Roger were both panic-stricken at the thought of the Velocidragon, and didn't notice Linley following behind them.

In but a few moments, they arrived in the middle of the town. Hillman was standing far away, watching.

"Why did you come?" Hillman reprimanded in a severe tone.

But upon seeing Linley follow behind Lorry and Roger, Hillman frowned even further. "Linley, it's far too dangerous here. Go back immediately." Only now did Lorry and Roger notice Linley had followed them.

"Linley, why did you..." Lorry and Roger didn't know what to say.

"Uncle Hillman, I'm not going back." Linley wasn't willing to return.

Hillman helplessly shook his head. He knew how stubborn Linley could be, and how hard it was to force him to change his mind. "Fine. Then stay behind me, do not go too far. As long as you stay next to me, I am confident that I can protect you."

"Thank you, Uncle Hillman. I definitely won't run around." Linley was overjoyed.

At this point in time, Hillman's group was roughly a hundred meters away from the Velocidragon. They quietly watched the events in the center of town unfold. In front of the huge Velocidragon, a group of youngsters could be seen. Four men, three women.

Book 1, Chapter 9 – Magical Beast – Velocidragon! (part 2)

“Captain, what’s going on up ahead?” Lorry said in a quiet voice to Hillman.

A hint of a smile played at Hillman’s lips. “That mysterious magus seems to be at odds with that party over there. Just stay here and watch. No need for us to interfere.” Hillman himself was only a warrior of the sixth rank. In truth, he didn’t dare to interfere either.

The Velocidragon alone was something he would not be able to fight off, much less the mysterious magus.

The strength of the seven-man party in front of the magus was not weak either. Five of them were warriors, while the other two were magi. The leader of their party was a powerfully built man with tousled red hair, who rode a pitch-black iron bull. The two sharp horns of the iron bull glittered under the light, dark and deadly.

Its blood-red eyes gave testament to the true nature of this bull – “Vampiric Iron Bull”, a magical beast of the fifth rank.

With a snort, smoke began to emit from the bull’s nostrils as well.

Of the seven people in the party, four were men, three were women. Both of the magi were women, while the third woman was an archer. Aside from the Vampiric Iron Bull, a huge griffin floated in mid-air.

“Griffin” – a magical beast of the fourth rank!

It had the head of a lion, but a pair of enormous, powerful wings. For a party to have two magical beasts and two magi, clearly this adventuring party was no ordinary one.

“Youngsters, it’d be better if you handed the [De’Pei’Luo’Ying] d’Bero shadow diamond over.” The mysterious man seated on the Velocidragon said a second time, his voice cold.

“Lord magus, we don’t wish to be your enemy, but in order to acquire this d’Bero shadow diamond, we spent countless amounts of time and effort. The value of it exceeds a hundred thousand gold coins, but you, lord magus, want to buy it from us for just seven hundred coins. This... this is impossible.” The red-headed leader of the group said in a solemn voice.

Listening to the conversation from far away, Linley, by Hillman’s side, now understood everything.

So this mysterious magus wanted to spend seven hundred gold to purchase this d’Bero shadow diamond which was worth a hundred thousand.

“Wow, the price of that diamond...” Linley was shocked. “For it to be worth so much money, clearly this d’Bero shadow diamond must have some significance attached to it. Otherwise, it wouldn’t cause this magus to be willing to lower his status and try to forcibly buy it.”

An offer of seven hundred gold, for an item worth a hundred thousand. No wonder the small party was unwilling to accept.

"Hmph." The mysterious magus coldly harrumphed.

"I only have seven hundred gold on me. Right now, I'm still willing to use money to buy it from you. If you lot don't know how to take a few steps back and do what's best for you...then not only will you not receive a single gold coin, you will also lose your little lives." The magus' said in a frozen voice.

"Grrrrrrrrr."

The Velocidragon, taller than most of the houses in the town, let out a deep growl, causing all the houses nearby to shudder.

"Captain, we risked our lives to obtain this d'Bero shadow diamond. How can we so easily cower in front of this guy and give it away?" A woman in black said coldly. As an experienced adventuring party, these seven people had experienced many battles and wouldn't easily submit.

The red-haired captain said in a solemn voice, "Honored lord magus, I am of the Kingdom of Fenlai's 'Cayley' clan..."

This captain wanted to use his background to force the opponent down.

But unfortunately, powerful magi usually were eccentric and didn't give a whit about noble families.

"You all have chosen death." The mysterious magus sneered coldly.

"Careful." In a flash, the seven person party raised its guard. The four warriors charged in front, the female archer in behind pulled out her strongest bow, and the two female magi began to prepare magic.

"ROAAAAR!"

The huge Velocidragon opened its mouth, and an enormous plume of fire erupted from its fangs, headed directly for the party.

Where the fire came near, the very stone road underneath the fireblast began to warp, crack, and even shatter from the intense heat as the entire road charred black.

"Careful."

The red-haired leader said in a deep voice, as his entire body became suffused with red-colored battle-qi. The other three warriors activated their battle qi as well.

The red-haired leader wielded an enormous claymore in his two hands. With rapid speed, he fiercely swung it against a nearby stone wall, and with a thundering sound, the stone wall collapsed, as hundreds of rocks rolled down to the floor and dust exploded outwards.

Just at this time, the fire from the Velocidragon enveloped the four men, who used their battle-qi to resist it.

"Hah!"

The red-haired man kicked a large rock nearly half a meter long at the magus.

The other three warriors did the same, also kicking large rocks with the speed and power of enormous slingshots. The four rocks split the air, howling as they pierced forth towards the magus seated on the huge Velocidragon.

"Swish! Swish! Swish!"

One after another, a barrage of rocks assaulted the magus. In the twinkling of an eye, all the rocks from the collapsed wall were used up.

Seeing this battle from afar, Linley's hands were tightly clenched.

"How incredible. They actually dare to use their feet to kick such huge rocks." Watching the four men unceasingly kick the huge rocks, he felt all the more in awe of warriors in general. "Although, the Velocidragon is even more terrifying!"

Staring at the Velocidragon, Linley watched as its whip-like tail snapped about, dancing in front of it.

"Crack! Crack! Crack! Crack!"

One giant rock after another was smashed into smithereens. The rocks couldn't even come close to harming the magus on the Velocidragon's back.

"Swoosh!" The Velocidragon's tail seemed to be totally unimpeded. It covered an enormous area, and whenever it casually passed by a stone house, it sliced through it as though the house was made of mud. The stones would be shattered without any resistance. As one house after another began to collapse, stones rolled about everywhere and the entire area was bathed in dust.

"Roaaaar!" Even in the middle of the dust storm, the Velocidragon's mighty roar could be heard, and it continued to vomit fire from its jaws.

This entire time, the two female magi in the back of the party were continuously mumbling magical incantations in a light voice. The words of magic were totally different from the common tongue spoken on the Yulan continent. It was much more awkward-sounding and complex. Before too much time had passed, the two female magi finished their incantations!

"Protective Icy Carapace!"

The two female magi chanted out in a low voice. Bright light erupted from their bodies, with four rays covering the four male warriors with a translucent, crystalline armor.

The red-haired leader was delighted. With the protective icy carapace supporting his battle-qi, he now felt more confident in this battle.

"Attack!" The red-haired leader ordered.

The four warriors shot out four more rocks at nearly the same time, attacking the mounted magus simultaneously. Immediately following, the four warriors charged forward like arrows released from bows as they shot towards the Velocidragon.

Book 1, Chapter 10 – Dance of the Fire Serpents (part 1)

“ROAR!” The flames erupting from the Velocidragon’s mouth encompassed a diameter of tens of meters of the surrounding area, bathing them in a sea of fire.

“Hiss.....”

The Velocidragon’s fire danced around the bodies of the four warriors, but guarded by the Protective Icy Carapace and their own battle-qi, the four warriors definitely would be able to resist the heat.

As for the archer, by this point, she had already mounted the Griffin and taken to the skies, her bow nocked.

The Vampiric Iron Bull stood there like a iron wall, protecting the two female magi.

“Swish! Swish! Swish!”

Her eyes filled with a fierce cold gleam, and her hands as steady as a rock, the Griffin-mounted archer shot out three arrows in a row. The target – the mysterious magus on the back of the Velocidragon!

“Whoosh!” The Velocidragon’s whip-like tail shot out like lightning, moving even faster than the arrows. In the blink of an eye, it shattered the arrows released from the archer’s triple shot. Immediately afterwards, its tail swept back towards the four charging warriors. The howling sound generated from the tail shattering the air with its movement caused the expressions on the faces of the four warriors to change dramatically. They immediately tried to leap backwards, like agile monkeys.

But the draconic tail didn't move in a purely straight pattern; it oscillated and curved strangely, with no fixed pattern.

"Crash!"

One of the four warriors didn't manage to dodge in time, and was directly struck by the draconic tail on the waist. Both the Protective Icy Carapace and his own battle-qi were smashed into nothingness in the blink of an eye. With a slight flick, the tail curled around him and tightly wrapped him up.

"Luke!" (Lu'jia). The red-haired warrior by his side howled angrily, his eyes filled with pain.

"No!" Luke was also screaming in terror.

With but a flick, the draconic tail tossed Luke directly towards the Velocidragon's mouth. The Velocidragon opened its jaws, revealing its bloody maw, and chomped down. With a terrifying crunching sound, the last thing escaping Luke's throat was an anguished scream.

Ground beneath the Velocidragon's saw-like teeth, Luke's entire body was turned into mincemeat. Half of one bloody leg escaped the Velocidragon's mouth and fell down to the ground. Gleaming white bone could be seen protruding from the bloody half-leg.

"Don't look." Hillman covered Linley's eyes.

That sudden display was simply too bloody. Even a fully grown adult, when faced with such a terrifying scene for the first time, would be panicked. Linley was just an eight year old child.

But it was too late. Linley had already seen everything.

"Huff. Huff." Linley felt as though his heart was being compressed by a giant boulder. His breathing was growing labored, and he started to pant. But in his mind's eye, he replayed the sight of the young man named Luke being eaten, over and over again.

His belly was ripped open, and his intestines had been shattered. His skull had been crushed, and half his leg had dropped to the ground!

All of these things made it hard for Linley to breathe, and he felt dizzy.

This was the first time Linley had seen a fight become so vicious and cruel. It was also the first time Linley had seen someone being eaten alive by a huge Velocidragon. The half-eaten leg, in particular, deeply buried itself in Linley's mind.

Hillman, Roger, and Lorry exchanged troubled glances as they watched Linley.

What sort of harm to the psyche would this bloody affair cause an eight year old child? Would it serve as a constant psychological trauma? Once a youth becomes traumatized by battle, his future accomplishments would be dramatically impacted.

“Killing someone. No big deal. No big deal.” Linley forced himself to think these words repeatedly. “When I grow up and join the army, I too will have to kill people. Gotta hold on. Gotta hold on.”

Linley really was intelligent. He had read many books, and knew what path he had embarked on for the future.

On the Yulan continent, when a man grew up, it would be very likely that he would experience life-and-death struggles. But since Linley was just a child who had not done so yet, he had to repeatedly tell himself to calm down. And slowly, the terror and horror in his heart really did begin to lessen.

In fact, much the opposite; in just a short period of time, Linley felt as though his blood was beginning to surge.

“That battle really is incredibly fierce. It really is exciting.” For some reason, that bloody battle just then made Linley’s blood boil with excitement, filling his heart with desire – a desire to battle and kill!

“Is it because of the Dragonblood in my veins?” Linley didn’t know.

But Linley suddenly discovered that he was actually very eager to participate in these bloody struggles. Linley immediately stepped to the side, bypassing Hillman’s protective arm, and continued to watch the battle which was still going on a hundred meters away.

"Linley, don't watch." Hillman saw that Linley was intending to continue watching, and was shocked.

"Uncle Hillman, I'm not afraid." Linley turned his head to glance at Hillman.

Hillman suddenly noticed a red gleam of excitement in Linley's pupils. Surprised, he no longer tried to prevent Linley from watching. As Linley continued to watch the battle from afar, he saw that it was reaching an even bloodier climax.

"ROAR!" With a howl, the Velocidragon turned its head and bit down towards a warrior, while its huge claws swept towards another one. Its lightning-fast, whip-like tail, as well, struck out, aiming at the third warrior.

The warriors were pressed to the point of abandoning their assaults and instead retreating.

The mysterious magus on the back of the Velocidragon still hadn't moved. He let the Velocidragon deal with the threats as his lips continued to mumble.

"Dance of the Fire Serpents!"

The cold voice of the mysterious magus suddenly rang out, and in the blink of an eye, seven enormous fire serpents, each spanning tens of meters long, appeared. Howling, they erupted away from the magus in all directions. Each fire snake appeared to be a real, living creature, with distinct scales and enormous bodies that inspired fear in all who saw it.

Everyone who was watching was stunned.

A Fire Element spell of the eighth rank – Dance of the Fire Serpent!

It now became clear that this entire time, the mysterious magus was mumbling the words to a magical incantation. He was preparing this terrifying Fire Element spell of the eighth rank – Dance of the Fire Serpent! This spell could unleash seven enormous fire serpents, each of which had a simply astonishing attack power. Even the terrifying defensive ability of the Velocidragon would not be proof against it; if struck, even if it survived, it would be badly injured.

If dealing with a magus of the seventh rank, the small squad might be able to hold on for a while longer, but dealing with a magus of the eighth rank, and a Velocidragon as well? They simply did not have the power to resist.

Only now did they understand that this mysterious magus was a master of the eighth rank!

“It’s the Dance of the Fire Serpents. Quick, run away!” The red-haired warrior’s facial expression changed dramatically, and he shouted in a loud voice.

The six remaining members of the small squad were now all filled with terror.

“Too late. Prepare for the baptism of death!” The mysterious magus said in a cold, cruel voice, which pierced like a cold dagger at the hearts of the members of the small squad.

Book 1, Chapter 11 – Dance of the Fire Serpents (part 2)

The seven fire serpents flew at a very high speed, and wherever they passed through, the stone houses nearby immediately began to blaze. The burning flames towered towards the high heavens, an absolutely catastrophic scene. Seeing their homes be disintegrated from afar, the denizens of Wushan township, who had long since fled and hidden far away, all felt pain and sorrow in their hearts.

In front of the seven giant fire serpents, their stone houses seemed like naught but toys. They were easily demolished, and the flames in the wreckages rose towards the sky.

“Run!” The female archer no longer cared about anything else. She immediately directed her griffin to fly to a higher altitude.

There was a limit to the distance at which a fire-element magus would be able to control the seven fire serpents. If the archer and her mount could fly beyond that point, she would be safe.

“Whooooosh.” Two of the blazing fire serpents enveloped the two female magi and the Vampiric Iron Bull as well. Almost instantaneously, the sound of burning, crackling flesh could be heard, and Linley thought that he could smell hair burning.

“Big brother Kerry [Kai'lai]! Save us!” The desolate cry of a female magus sounded out, filled with pain, from within the middle of the fire serpent.

"Snort. Snort." The eyes of the Vampiric Iron Bull were terrifyingly red, and every single muscle in its body was quivering nonstop. It continuously roared in anger, wanting to charge past through the encircling fire serpents, but unfortunately, the restrictive power of each fire serpent was simply too great.

"Louisa [Lu'yi'sha]!" The red-haired warrior howled angrily, his voice filled with anguish.

Very shortly afterwards, both female magi and the Vampiric Iron Bull were reduced to naught but gray ash. But the red-haired warrior no longer had even the opportunity to cry out. He and the other two warriors each had to face an enormous fire serpent of their own as well. In front of the titanic flaming body of the serpents, they seemed to be nothing more than children, incapable of the slightest resistance.

They had the power to split stone with a single punch, but so what? While constricted by a huge flaming serpent, what could they do?

"Ahhhh!" Surrounded by flaming serpents, the three warriors couldn't help but let out torturous cries.

As they shouted, their battle-qi vanished, having been demolished. The hissing sound of burning flesh once again could be heard. The muscles on the faces of the three warriors twitched, and their eyes bulged out. All the hair on their bodies was burnt clean in the twinkling of an eye, and following that their skin, their flesh, and their bones. Nothing could withstand the terrifyingly high temperature of the fire serpents.

In a very short period of time, the three formidable warriors had also been reduced to nothing more than dust.

"Huff...huff..."

The female archer's breath was ragged, but she had finally escaped the boundaries of the Dance of the Fire Serpents.

"Luke...Louisa...big brother Kerry...I will definitely avenge you all. Definitely." The female archer cried bitterly, and as she did, she directed her griffin to fly still higher."

"ZZZZT!"

An enormously thick bolt of lightning struck down from the clear, cloudless skies, striking directly down on the totally unprepared archer. Her entire body was turned directly to dust from that strike, while her griffin was scorched black as well. The two of them fell down from the sky, heavily crashing into the stone ground of the town as they crashed through a wooden roof and into the base of a dwelling.

"Want to run? Hmph." The mysterious magus let out a deep snort.

Over a hundred meters away, Hillman swallowed hard, his own heart filled with a thread of inescapable fear. "Not only is he a magus of the eighth rank...he is a dual element magus!"

....

"That spell was called Dance of the Fire Serpents?" Linley was still standing there, totally awestruck.

The sight of those enormous fire serpents and the inferno they had cast had totally shocked Linley, like he had never been shocked before. Each of the fire serpents was as terrifying as the Velocidragon. Seven of them together? They represented an utter apocalypse. Even the stone houses were disintegrated by their flames.

In the blink of an eye, those four mighty warriors, those two magi, and that archer, as well as their two magical beast companions were utterly destroyed, with the possible exception of that griffin.

The seven fire serpents had disappeared by now, but Linley could still feel the terrifying, seismic presence and power emanating from the area. The entire battlefield had been annihilated, leaving nothing left but the finest of debris. The debris all radiated tremendous heat, as though testifying to the power of the battle they had just endured.

"Ama...amazing."

Linley's breathing slowly began to stabilize. Swimming in his mind were images of those seven fire serpents, and how they had descended on the battlefield like a catastrophe of power.

Compared to that vision, even the Velocidragon was not as impressive as before.

Linley's gaze suddenly turned towards the mysterious magus on the back of the Velocidragon. By appearances, the magus was much smaller and much weaker.

"Just then...just then, was he the one who cast the 'Dance of the Fire Serpents'?" Linley really found it a little hard to believe. A person who seemed a full size smaller than Uncle Hillman was actually able to cast such an apocalyptic spell.

Linley's heart was suddenly filled with dread, as he stared at that far-off, distant figure.

"This...this is what a magus is?" For the first time, the concept of a magus clearly imprinted itself in Linley's mind.

At the same time...

Linley suddenly had a powerful urge to become a powerful magus as well.

"If one day, I too was capable of such a powerful attack..." Fantasizing about it, Linley felt the blood in his veins boil to the limit. He was in a state of tremendous excitement.

Right at that moment?

Linley knew the path that he would take in the future.

To pursue the peak, the pinnacle of power.

"Father!" Linley suddenly saw that his own father, Hogg. Seeing how Wushan township had just suffered an unmitigated catastrophe, as the lord of Wushan township, Hogg's heart was filled with helplessness.

"Don't make a sound." Hogg glanced at Linley, conveying that message with his eyes.

Hogg turned towards the magus, his heart filled with ruefulness. "He's actually a magus of the eighth rank. And a dual-element magus! Perhaps the entire kingdom of Fenlai has only a handful of people more powerful than him. Someone like him actually came to our little town..."

Hogg's only desire, at this point, was that the mysterious magus would leave as soon as possible, and let Wushan town return to its normal tranquillity.

The mysterious magus suddenly leapt down directly from the back of the Velocidragon. He was at least two stories up, but he descended easily with a single jump.

Striding up to the ashes of the red-haired warrior, the mysterious magus waved his hands, and the gray ash parted. A violet, almost translucent-looking diamond suddenly appeared. With a flick of the wrist, the mysterious magus plucked out the d'Bero Shadow Diamond.

"Haha, the d'Bero shadow diamond. I searched for you for ten years. Who would have thought that just because today, I decided to pass by this town, I would actually meet you by accident? Haha...Heymans [Hai'man'si], now that I have this shadow diamond, once I socket it into my staff, I want to see how you will possibly stand against me next time. Haha..." The mysterious magus began to laugh wildly.

Hogg and the other residents of Wushan township simply watched quietly from afar, not daring to make a sound, for fear of angering this powerful, mysterious magus.

"Wushan town, eh...who leads Wushan town?" The mysterious magus suddenly said.

"Father..." Linley was shocked.

At this point, Hogg had no choice but to stiffen his spine and step forward. He respectfully said, "Mighty lord magus, I am the leader of Wushan town."

"Oh." The mysterious magus' face was still covered by his violet robes, preventing anyone from seeing his face. He lightly said, "Your town suffered some serious damages today. I annihilated this small adventuring party. On their bodies, there is sure to be a good amount of gold coins. The gold coins, no doubt, have been melted and reforged by my 'Dance of the Fire Serpents', but they are still worth some money. Just consider them yours, as my recompense for what Wushan town just went through."

Hearing the words of the mysterious magus, Hogg felt a sense of relief.

This mysterious magus probably wouldn't go kill-crazy now.

"I, Hogg, on behalf of the entire Wushan township, would like to thank you for your kindness, lord magus." Hogg respectfully bowed down.

The mysterious magus lightly nodded, then turned and walked towards the Velocidragon. The Velocidragon immediately knelt down, stretching out his foreleg. The magus stepped onto the Velocidragon's leg, walked two steps, then easily jumped onto the Velocidragon's back.

"Hmph." The Velocidragon let out a lazy snort, as two plumes of white smoke once more emanated from its nostrils.

And then, the Velocidragon once more began walking, its heavy footsteps shaking the earth. Watching the enormous creature and the mysterious magus on its back walk far away and disappear off into the distance, all the citizens of Wushan township finally felt their hearts begin to calm down.

Book 1, Chapter 12 – The Will of the Mighty (part 1)

Only after seeing the magical beast of the seventh rank, the Velocidragon, and its mysterious magus master depart, did Hogg calm down.

“Uncle Hiri.” Hogg immediately turned to look at his housemaker Hiri. “Immediately order some people to recover all of the melted gold from within those piles of ashes. This adventuring party was quite extraordinary as well. No doubt, they had a great deal of wealth on them. I hope they had enough to recompense the losses we have suffered today”

Hogg stared in all directions, seeing how so many houses had been reduced to rubble.

“Yes, milord.” Hiri nodded.

“Hillman.” Hogg turned to look at Hillman. Smiling, he said, “What do you think?”

Hillman nodded as well. “I was absolutely terrified. When I saw that magical beast of the seventh rank, the Velocidragon, and that mysterious magus, I knew that Wushan township didn’t have the slightest ability to fight back in any way. If such an exalted personage as a magus of the eighth rank decided to destroy our town on a whim, I doubt anyone would dare to criticize him, much less sanction or punish him.”

Magi had extremely high social standings.

Normally, even an ordinary magus had the same social standing as a noble.

And a magus of the eighth rank? Even if he was in the presence of a king, he would not need to kneel or show obeisance. He could just chat while staying standing. From this, one could tell how exalted a level an eighth rank magus held.

"Right. So, we should all celebrate the fact that not a single person from Wushan town perished today." Hogg laughed.

"It definitely is worth celebrating," Hillman nodded and laughed as well.

"Hillman, take some men to assist Uncle Hiri. After finishing up, please address the issue of the commoners who lost their houses." Hogg instructed.

"Yes, lord Hogg." Hillman assented.

Hogg looked behind him carefully, then asked Hillman suspiciously, "Hm? Where did Linley go? He was just here a moment ago."

"No idea. Didn't notice." Hillman shook his head as well.

"My lord, young master Linley has already went home." Hiri said from the side. "Although, when he left, he seemed to be in a daze. No clue what he was thinking about."

Hogg thoughtfully nodded.

=====

If there was one thing which the Baruch clan manor did not lack for, it was rooms. In the days of the Baruch clan’s glories, hundreds of people lived here. The population now was much lower than before. Even an eight year old child such as Linley had his standalone quarters.

Within Linley’s bedroom.

Linley was kneeling on the bed, his brow furrowed in thought.

Again and again, the terrifying power of the ‘Dance of the Fire Serpents’ swam about in his mind’s eye. Those seven huge fire serpents and the tempest of flame they generated repeated in his mind over and over again, as well as how they instantly turned everything around them to ash, including the powerful warriors and magi of the small adventuring group.

“Magi are so powerful.”

Linley felt a thread of desire in his heart. “Although I am a member of the Dragonblood Warriors clan, the density of Dragonblood in my veins is too low. The fact that anyone with Dragonblood is totally unable to utilize any other battle-qi cultivating methods is something which will hold back my ability to develop my warrior abilities to the maximum. I wonder if it would be possible for me to be a magus, instead.”

Linley suddenly had the desire to become a magus.

“That Velocidragon was terrifyingly powerful as well. If I were to have a Velocidragon, then...”

Linley began to think back to the awe-inspiring might of the Velocidragon.

It's lightning-fast, whip-like tail had so easily shattered the stone projectiles aimed at it, and had demolished any houses it touched. Its enormous body resembled huge siege weapons which armies might field in a war. Once it charged forward at a fast pace, considering how tough its scales were, the Velocidragon really would be a terrifying opponent.

“Magical beasts...I wonder how someone acquires a magical beast.” Linley desired to have a magical beast of his own as well.

For whatever reason, as he lay on the bed, Linley simply couldn't fall asleep. He tossed and turned, his mind filled with images of the Velocidragon and the 'Dance of the Fire Serpents' which the magus had displayed.

“Linley, what's wrong?” A familiar voice said.

Linley scrambled to his feet. Raising his head, he saw that it was his father, Hogg. At the moment, a smiling, praising look was on Hogg's face as he watched Linley.

"Father," Linley said respectfully. Suddenly, Linley felt confused. "Why is father smiling at me? And with this sort of expression?"

Hogg was extremely strict with Linley, and rarely smiled at him in such a intimate manner. His current expression made Linley feel all the more astonished.

"Not bad, not bad," Hogg said proudly as he looked at Linley. "You really are a scion of our Dragonblood Warrior clan. You have our superior qualities. If a descendant of the Dragonblood Warriors were to be terrified of death, terrified of blood, of slaughter, then it would be an absolute joke."

Upon hearing these words, Linley immediately understood. His father was happy at how he had not been terrified by the sight of the Velocidragon eating Luke alive.

Linley said, surprised, "Father, you saw everything?"

"That Velocidragon caused such a stir. How could I not? As soon as the Velocidragon arrived at Wushan township, I came out as well, but I was off to a different side. I could clearly see the expressions on your face and on Hillman's," Hogg nodded.

Linley grinned.

Back then, aside from the initial bit of panic, he later only felt his blood boil and surge, filling him with a thirst for bloodletting. Linley, as well, had wondered at the time if it was because of the Dragonblood in his veins.

Hogg laughed. "Linley, did the events of today astonish you so much that you even forgot about dinner?"

"Dinner?" Linley was startled.

"Rumble." Linley's belly sounded in agreement at this time. Only now did Linley realize that the evening training hadn't even begun before the Velocidragon and the mysterious magus arrived.

By all rights, it was now time for dinner.

But Linley's mind was still preoccupied thinking about that 'Dance of the Fire Serpents' and that Velocidragon.

"Father, I'd like to ask, is it possible for a member of the Dragonblood Warrior clan to become a magus?" Linley's hands unconsciously balled up, clenching his bedsheets. He stared hard at his father.

Hogg was startled, but in the next moment he immediately understood. Looks like his child now wanted to become a magus.

"It is possible." Hogg nodded.

Linley couldn't prevent a look of joy from appearing on his face.

Hogg waved his hand, motioning for Linley to calm down, before saying, "Linley, there have been magi in the lineage of our Dragonblood Warrior clan. However, there's only been two in total. Linley, you should know that the most important thing for a magus is 'natural talent'. Normally, only one person in ten thousand has the talent to become a magus. One in ten thousand! The chance really is very low. So, you'd best not have too much hope."

Linley shook his head.

"Father, so long as there is any hope, I will persevere." A solemn look was on Linley's face.

Hogg looked at the serious expression on his eight year old boy's face. By all rights, a young child being so serious was an amusing thing. But Hogg did not laugh.

Hogg considered for a while, then said, "Linley, every year, when the army recruitment drive begins in deep autumn, in the royal capital of Fenlai City, there is a magus student recruitment testing drive. If you really wish to go, when autumn comes around, you can go take the test."

"Late autumn? Isn't that just half a year away?" Linley's eyes were filled with excitement.

Book 1, Chapter 13 – The Will of the Mighty (part 2)

At dinnertime, the three members of the Baruch clan and their housekeeper, Hiri, all shared dinner together. Little Wharton raised a cute ruckus at the dinner table, filling it with laughter. By the time dinner came to an end, the old housekeeper carried Wharton back to his room, while Linley and his father, Hogg, began to chat.

“Right. Father, which one is stronger? A magus, or a warrior?” Linley was curious.

Hogg glanced at Linley. Chuckling, he shook his head and said, “Linley, magi and warriors each have their own strengths. At the same rank, a magus is perhaps slightly stronger than a warrior. But the most important thing is that the status of a magus is a full rank higher than that of an equivalent warrior. For example, that dual-element magus of the eighth rank, in terms of social standing, is perhaps slightly superior to even a warrior of the ninth rank.”

“If they are only slightly more powerful, why is there such a big discrepancy in status?” Linley was curious.

Hogg laughed. “Before discussing this, first you should understand the ranking system of the magi. There are nine ranks. First rank and second rank magi are considered junior magi. Third and fourth rank magi are considered mid-level magi. Fifth and sixth rank magi are considered senior magi. The three ranks above them; seventh, eighth and ninth? These are all terrifyingly powerful people. And of course, above the magi of the ninth rank are the Saint-level magi!”

"The reason why magi have such social standings is because the destructive potential their spells have is enormous." Hogg picked up a glass of juice and continued talking while sipping at it.

"Destructive potential?" Linley looked at his father.

Putting down the glass of juice, Hogg nodded. "A single warrior, even a Dragonblood Warrior, can at most kill a hundred people with the swipe of a sword. When faced with a million man army, at best he could kill their leader, but when a leader dies, he can simply be replaced. But a Saint-level magus? If he chooses to utilize one of those powerful forbidden spells, he can annihilate an entire town or wipe out an army of hundreds of thousands. With an entire army destroyed, even if its leader survived, what's the use? Thus, to a kingdom, a Saint-level magus is more terrifying than an entire enemy army."

Linley immediately understood.

"Let's not discuss Saint-level magi for now. Even a magus of the eighth or ninth rank would be capable of using spells which contain shocking power and are able to change the course of a battle. This is why magi have such a high social standing." Hogg said with a light chuckle.

Linley quietly nodded.

In the war-torn land of the Yulan continent, one could imagine how important the magi were to a kingdom.

"Oh, right. Father, I read in one of the books that compared to a warrior, a magi's physical strength is much weaker. But just then, I watched that magus jump down from the back of the Velocidragon with ease. How could his body be physically weak?" Linley pursued.

Hogg replied, "Let's discuss this question later. Linley, you should know that in the Yulan continent, an average person's lifespan is around 120-130 years. Powerful magi and warriors can live for longer, usually up to two or three hundred years, or sometimes even four hundred years. The absolute limit to a person's lifespan is five hundred years. Only those who have attained the legendary power of Saint-level combatants can live eternally, unbound by the dictates of time."

Linley nodded.

He had read of this in his books as well.

"But Linley, do you know the reason why powerful warriors and magi enjoy such a long lifespan?" Hogg followed with a question.

Linley was startled.

Linley had always considered it to be a fact of life that powerful warriors and magi could live for three or four hundred years. He had never considered the reason.

Looking at the expression on Linley's face, Hogg couldn't help but laugh. "Linley, first of all, I must tell you that in this world, there are elemental powers. Fire-type element, water-type element, wind-type element, earth-type element, lightning-type element, light-type element, and darkness-type element. Warriors and magi both rely on absorbing these elements from nature as part of their training. Both magic spells and battle-qi are fueled by and determined by a specific elemental type. If you had carefully observed, you would have been able to notice that in the adventuring party you saw earlier today, for the four warriors, the red-headed leader had fire-type battle-qi. The other three had either wind-type battle-qi, or water-type battle-qi. And just like battle-qi, the spells of magi also have elemental types!"

This was the first time that Linley had ever heard about this. Only now did he learn that both magi and warriors relied on absorbing natural energy from the elements.

"The reason why powerful magi can live so long is because when magi absorb natural elemental energy into their body to generate pure mageforce, when the elemental energy flows through their body, it will naturally refine their apertures, their joints, and their flesh, making their bodies stronger and stronger. With a stronger body, naturally they will live longer. By the same logic, when warriors cultivate their battle-qi, they also absorb natural energy, which flows through their body and strengthens it. The more powerful a warrior is, the stronger his body will be. Naturally, he will live a long life." Hogg explained everything in detail.

Linley felt as though only now did everything become crystal clear.

Based on his father's words, the bodies of magi had also been strengthened by elemental power and would therefore naturally be very strong.

"But father, why is it that people say magi have weak bodies?" Linley was confused.

Hogg shook his head. "Can't you think this through yourself? Magi only have weak bodies in comparison to warriors of the same rank, and not in absolute terms. For example, a magi of the eighth rank might have the same physical strength of a warrior of the second or third rank, even if he never engaged in any physical training. But of course, compared to a warrior of the eighth rank, his body would be very weak indeed!"

Linley slapped himself on the head, then laughed, somewhat embarrassed.

How could he not have realized this simple logic? His thoughts really had been too rigid.

"Although, despite the fact that magi are vulnerable in melee combat, they do have their own ways to address this deficiency. One method is utilizing magical protective spells, such as the 'shield of earth', 'shield of ice', 'shield of wind', or 'shield of light' spells. First, they would use their magic to defend; then, they would use their magic to strike back!"

"And truly powerful magi have another method. Using 'magical beasts'!"

Hearing these words, Linley's eyes shone.

Linley wanted a magical beast of his own as well, such as a powerful Velocidragon.

"A powerful magical beast can protect the body of his magus, preventing enemies from getting close. This way, the magus can immediately cast his attacking spells to kill his opponents." Hogg smiled as he spoke.

Linley immediately asked, "Father, how can a person acquire a magical beast companion?"

Seeing the expression on Linley's face, Hogg couldn't help but laugh. "There's only two ways to acquire a magical beast companion. The first is to make the magical beast willingly subordinate himself to you and serve you. The second way is to use a soul-binding magical array to enslave the magical beast."

"The requirements for the former are very difficult. For a magical beast to willingly subordinate himself to you, perhaps the only way is to defeat the magical beast in direct combat. Only then would he willingly follow you. For example, if you wanted to subdue a Velocidragon, you would first have to be able to defeat that Velocidragon in battle." His father's words rendered Linley speechless.

He wanted a Velocidragon of his own, but how could he possibly have the power to defeat one?

"As for the second method, it is extremely complicated to set up a soul-binding magical array. Only a magus of the seventh rank, at the very least, could set up such an array." Hogg said in a composed voice.

Linley was stunned. "Father, by what you say...only a magus of the seventh rank or higher can enslave a magical beast?"

"No, not necessarily. If you have enough money, you can purchase a soul-binding scroll. When the time comes, all you have to do is to tear it apart, and it will automatically generate a soul-binding magical array. However, a soul-binding scroll is amazingly expensive," Hogg said with a self-deprecating laugh.

"How expensive is it?" Linley pursued the topic.

"Last I heard, the going price was around ten thousand gold coins. And what's more is, even if you had the money, there's almost no market for it due to its rarity." Hogg's words forced Linley to laugh bitterly at himself.

The hardest part to acquiring a magical beast companion was in defeating it.

Of course, you could always acquire a weak magical beast as a companion, but what would be the point? But for a powerful magical beast, do you have enough power of your own to subdue it? If you were to defeat it using traps and trickery, how could the magical beast possibly be willing to serve?"

It isn't an easy thing to convince someone to whole-heartedly subordinate themselves to you.

As for the second method of using a soul-binding array, it was clear that this option was only available to powerful magi or to wealthy people. Not even many noble clans would be willing to part with the extravagant sum of ten thousand coins for a single soul-binding scroll.

Chewing on his lips, Linley furrowed his brows in thought.

“If I really want to acquire a magical beast companion, based on my family’s economic situation, I would have to become a magus of the seventh rank first. That’s the only way.” Linley secretly pondered all the possibilities, but he knew very well how difficult this would be.

And the first barrier to this plan? The question of whether or not he even had the natural talent to use magic!

After all, he only had a ten-thousand in one chance. If he didn’t have the natural talent for it, then there was no way he could become a magus.

Book 1, Chapter 14 – The Battle in the Sky (part 1)

Dawn the next day.

Just like every other day, the empty ground east of Wushan township was filled with youths. Hillman and the other two teachers had not yet arrived, and so all the children were noisily and energetically chatting together. Naturally, the topic of their conversation was yesterday's shocking battle.

"That magical beast yesterday was so powerful. When Uncle Hillman and the others were standing up in front, I was behind them, sneaking peeks from afar. You guys have no idea. When that huge magical beast simply scraped its claws against the ground, the stone road was shattered into countless pieces. And those houses collapsed like they were made of mud." In the midst of all the children, Hadley, ever the most talkative of them, was narrating glibly and wildly, waving and gesticulating as though he had seen everything with his own eyes.

All the children were staring at Hadley with wide eyes.

"Hadley, yesterday you were with us on the east side as well. You didn't dare go over. How could you see all this?" A thirteen year old brown-haired child snorted.

These slightly older children weren't as easy to cozen as those seven and eight year old kids.

Hadley turned to stare at the thirteen year old youth. His eyes widening, he said, "Faura [Fu'la], you don't believe me? When have I, Hadley, ever tricked anyone?"

That brown-haired child named Faura said with a sneer, "Everyone knows what a big talker you are. When do you ever speak the truth? Hey everyone, why don't you guys speak for yourselves; has Hadley ever told the truth?" Faura said to the children next to him.

Those twelve to fifteen year old children all began to laugh. "Right on. This little scamp Hadley is always filled with nonsense."

A number of slightly older children stood on Faura's side.

Hadley immediately said urgently, "You guys don't believe me? Fine, don't believe me!" Furious, Hadley turned around, searching everywhere until he found Linley. His eyes brightening, he immediately said, "But everyone here knows that aside from Uncle Hillman and the other two, Linley also went. Linley saw everything with his own eyes. Linley's words should be true, right? Let Linley tell you if I spoke the truth or not."

"Young master Linley?" The youths turned to look at Linley.

In the eyes of the children of Wushan township, Linley had some stature amongst them. First of all, he was the heir to the Baruch clan, and secondly, as an eight year old child, Linley could match the thirteen and fourteen year olds in training. In the wartorn land of the Yulan continent, Linley's prowess caused all of the children of Wushan township to admire him.

“Young master Linley saw everything with his own eyes. Naturally, we would believe whatever young master Linley says.” Those youths nodded.

Those thirteen and fourteen year olds were more mature as well. They knew that Linley was a noble and not like them. Almost all of them addressed him as ‘young master Linley’. Only Hadley and the rest of the rascally seven and eight year olds still continued to directly address him as ‘Linley’, without regard for propriety.

“Tell’m, Linley! Was I lying? Tell’m what happened!” Hadley rushed towards Linley, tugging Linley’s hand and secretly winking towards Linley.

Linley couldn’t help but feel helpless. How was it that Hadley’s nonsense roped him into this conversation as well?

“That magical beast is known as a ‘Velocidragon’, and is a magical beast of seventh rank. It is incredibly powerful. Its entire body is covered in extremely hard scales, impenetrable to normal weapons. It is also armed with a sturdy, whip-like tail and with sharp claws. Those tough road stones and floor foundation stones were ripped apart like paper by its tail and claws. It was even able to breath fire from its mouth, fire so hot that even the stones cracked apart.” Linley said truthfully.

All of the children listened quietly to Linley.

“Actually, all of you knew how powerful the Velocidragon was from the moment you saw it. No need for me to elaborate.” Linley said with a smile.

All of the older children nodded.

As soon as they saw the Velocidragon the previous day, they had been scared stiff. Its huge body had seemed as massive as a mountain cliff, and those huge red scales on its body left nothing to the imagination with regards to how tough they must be.

"You hear that? I told you, that Velocidragon creature is really powerful!" Hadley began shouting loudly.

That youth named Faura glanced at him, and was about to say something.

"Uncle Hillman is coming." Linley saw Hillman, Lorry, and Roger walking towards them from afar, and immediately spoke up. Immediately, all of the children calmed down and in a very orderly fashion, lined up into three groups.

The empty training field immediately settled down. Only the footsteps of Hillman and the other two could be heard.

Hillman and the other two walked to the front of the three groups, facing the children. Hillman smiled and directly addressed what was on everyone's mind. "Everyone should know about what happened yesterday, right?"

"We do." Hearing Hillman's words and seeing how relaxed Hillman was, all of the children immediately replied vigorously.

“Great.” Hillman’s facial expression suddenly turned serious. “That huge creature is known as a Velocidragon. The magus on top of the Velocidragon is incredibly powerful. But everyone should know one thing!”

Hillman’s gaze immediately sharpened as it swept across the faces of each child. “Even that mysterious magus gained his power one step at a time, starting from the bottom ranks. In order to subdue that powerful Velocidragon, he had to spend many years of toil and hard work! If you guys want to subdue a Velocidragon of your own, to be as powerful as that mysterious magus, then all of you have to work hard without fail!”

“Every single person has the potential to become mighty. The only question is, are you willing to work hard enough at it?”

Uncle Hillman’s words were as clear and as hard as nails. His gaze was fierce and cold.

Immediately, all the children quieted down, but all of them still had their own imaginations running wild, and their gazes shone with their different thoughts.

“Now, time to do our morning exercises. Same as always – face the sun, and begin the ‘qi-absorbing exercise’.” Hillman crisply began the day’s program, and immediately the three groups of children began to practice the ‘qi-absorbing stance’.

Based on each squad's ability, Hillman assigned different exercises. Under the guidance of the three adults, each child studiously completed each exercise. Today, the training atmosphere was totally different. Almost none of the children complained of being tired.

Every single one of them had some fire in their belly today, and they trained hard!

"...fifty...fifty one..." Linley counted mentally as he laid horizontal to the ground, supporting himself with just the fingertips of one hand and the tips of his toes. His entire body was tense. He was in the middle of training through five-finger pushups.

This exercise could not only train his palm strength, it could also improve his finger strength and his elbow strength. This method was simple and effective.

If someone wanted to be a mighty warrior, normally they would have to practice cultivating battle-qi. The ability to cultivate battle-qi, in turn, was determined by how strong and sturdy one's body was, as a stronger body would be able to enjoy a more powerful battle-qi.

"Since my body has Dragonblood in its veins and is unable to practice battle-qi, my only option is to far outstrip everyone else in bodily strength." Linley's eyes were firm, and his fingers jutted into the ground, as tough and unyielding as old roots. He did one pushup after another, amazing many of the already-exhausted youths around him.

"Ninety eight, ninety nine..."

Linley continued to persevere.

“Morning exercises are over.” Hillman said in a loud voice, facing the children.

After saying these words, Hillman took a deep breath as he thought to himself, “What story should I tell them today?” Every day, when morning exercises were completed, Hillman would tell the children stories. This had turned into a routine.”

“Uncle Hillman, we-”

A child’s voice rang out.

But just at that moment, halfway through the child’s words, Hillman, who had been looking slightly downwards as he collected his thoughts, suddenly felt a strange feeling. He lifted his head up. Right now, all three groups of children were all staring east, eyes wide and jaws dropped. Roger and Lorry had also turned to stare east, and their gazes were also filled with awe.

“Eh?” Surprised, Hillman couldn’t help but turn around as well and stare to the east.

In the east, not too far away, perhaps two or three hundred meters in the air, an enormous, ebony-colored dragon lay coiled in the sky, its body at least a hundred meters long. The enormous black dragon’s giant eyes were the size of cartwheels. Its sparkling black scales were huge enough to fill any man's heart with dread. And its hundred-meter long wings were gently flapping, but with movement contained incredible powerful.

Magical beast – Black Dragon!

Book 1, Chapter 15 – The Battle in the Sky (part 2)

Black Dragons were ranked amongst the most powerful magical beasts in the world. The Black Dragon race were generally at least magical beasts of the ninth ranks. Powerful members of this race could even reach the stage of being Saint-level combatants. But regardless of whether a Black Dragon was of the ninth rank or Saint-level, it would indubitably be incomparably more powerful than the Velocidragon.

At present, the group of children and the three instructors were about several hundred meters away from the Black Dragon. To see a hundred-meter long Black Dragon from such a close distance is an awe-inspiring experience which simply can't be explained with words.

The most terrifying thing of all?

On top of the head of the Black Dragon, a gray-robed man stood, arrogant in demeanor. The wind howled about him, but although the man's gray robes fluttered a bit, he himself maintained a ramrod straight posture, as though he were a carved sculpture. His gaze was focused on a middle-aged, green-robed man who hovered in the middle of the air in front of him. The green-robed man wore a sword behind his back.

The gray-robed man mounted on the Black Dragon and the sword-bearing green-robed man were staring at each other.

Hovering in the sky!

Aside from wind-type magi who were able to use the seventh-ranked spell, 'Soaring Technique', only Saint-level combatants were able to stand and hover in the sky. The sword this green-robed middle-aged man bore on his back gave testament to his true status.

Warrior. A Saint-level warrior.

"A man in gray who was able to subdue a Black Dragon? And a Saint-level combatant who can fly?" The eight year old Linley was totally stunned, even after having witnessed the previous day's amazing battle. Not only him; even Hillman, a warrior of the sixth rank, was totally flabbergasted.

"Saint-level combatants. Actual Saint-level combatants." Hillman was mumbling, his entire body trembling.

Hillman, being a man who had been tested in trials of blood and death, was the first to recover and clear his mind. But even after recovering, Hillman still felt as though he were in a dream. "Yesterday, a dual-element magus of the eighth rank came. Today, something even more amazing; two Saint-level combatants, and a Black Dragon! In my entire life, I've never seen anything so amazing."

Hillman felt slightly dizzy.

Black Dragons were amongst the most powerful of magical beasts, at least ninth-rank in power. Someone who was able to subdue one was almost certainly a Saint-level combatant. And from the looks of it, the person facing off against him was also a Saint-level combatant.

This was ample proof that the gray-robed man was a Saint-level combatant as well.

Hillman and the others were hundreds of meters away from the Black Dragon. No matter how sharp their ears were, there was no way for them to hear the words being exchanged by the two parties.

Not knowing what was being said, they just watched, until suddenly...

"Roaaaaaaaaaar."

Suddenly, the enormous Black Dragon let out a furious roar as its two huge wings began to flap vigorously. It emanated a terrifying pressure, causing everyone, Hillman included, to feel their legs grow soft and to feel as though they couldn't breathe.

"Is this dragonsfear?" Linley also felt as though his heart was being squeezed by a huge stone, making it impossible for him to breathe, but nonetheless, Linley felt extremely excited, and his blood was beginning to boil.

The Black Dragon was simply too powerful.

"Rudi [Lu'di]! Don't go overboard!" That green-robed man suddenly let out a powerful shout. The explosive sound of his words reverberated in the air as though it were thunder. Not only did Hillman hear these words clearly; every single person in Wushan township heard the words clearly.

Hillman paused. He mumbled the words, "Rudi? Rudi?"

But Hillman quickly realized what was going on. Rapidly turning around, he shouted fiercely at all the children, "Everyone, go home right now! Go home and hide! NOW!" Hillman's loud roar and his urgent expression stunned every child present.

Hillman's thought processes were very clear.

These two Saint-level combatants obviously were engaged in some sort of dispute. Apparently, they were about to come to blows.

When Saint-level combatants were about to engage in a fight, the children standing there watching the fight would not be able to protect whatsoever. The slightest side reverberations could kill all the children present. Saint-level combatants were reputed to have the power to shatter the heavens and obliterate the earth.

Even if that reputation was slightly exaggerated, they definitely did have the power to obliterate a city or a tall mountain.

"Quick, let's move. Don't stand there in a daze, move!" Hillman shouted loudly while shoving some children away.

Only now did the rest of the children awaken from their stupor. Although they didn't understand why Hillman was pushing them to go back to their homes and wanted to continue watching the Saint-level combatants, Hillman's awe-inspiring presence was still enough to send all of the children running speedily for their homes.

"Lorry, Roger, quick, take the six and seven year olds back home. Quickly! If Saint-level combatants clash, when the side-effects of their struggle reach us, the aftermath will be...."

Hillman's face was filled with urgency.

"Understood, Captain!" Lorry and Roger totally understood what their captain was thinking.

Lorry and Roger immediately turned around and lifted up the children who were slow runners. They carried two in each arm and two on their backs as well. Hillman joined them as well, quickly beginning to pick up child after child.

"Linley, go home, quick!" Hillman, still carrying several children, shouted towards Linley, who was also running.

"I know, Uncle Hillman!" Linley replied loudly.

Although Linley was only eight years old, his running speed was on par with fourteen year olds. While running, Linley would often turn back to stare at the sky. That huge coiled Black Dragon and those two Saint-level combatants had fully captured his attention.

"Captain, Lord Hogg ordered us to come assist you!" Twelve warriors had come flying out of the Baruch clan manor. As soon as they saw Hillman, they shouted at him.

"Quick, take these children home!" Hillman immediately ordered.

"Yes, Captain!" The warriors hastily replied, and quickly began sending the six and seven year olds to their homes.

"All of you, go home! Go home and hide! Protect yourselves!" Hillman shouted again in a loud voice.

Hillman possessed a great deal of authority in Wushan township. Upon hearing his words, many of the villagers who had been terrified at the sight of a Black Dragon knew immediately what to do. Right now, the entire Wushan township had turned into a frenzy of activity. All of the children and all of the workers fled to their homes. At this point in time, the only thing which could protect them was the sturdy stone of their houses.

Linley directly charged into his own residence.

"Quick, hide in the cellar beneath the storage room." Hogg was standing in the middle of the courtyard. Upon seeing Linley, he immediately ordered him in. The cellar beneath the storage room was the largest, most sturdy cellar within the Baruch clan's manor. Anyone hiding there definitely would be able to survive.

"Yes, father!" Linley repeatedly nodded, and immediately ran in the direction of the storage room.

While running as fast as he could, Linley's mind returned to the Black Dragon, its gray-robed rider, and the green-robed man. He couldn't help but turn once again and look back at the eastern sky. Since all the buildings in the small town were fairly low in height, he could clearly see for hundreds of meters.

Right now, the Black Dragon was growling in a low voice nonstop.

“Dillon [Di’long], if you are going to be so stubborn about this, then don’t blame me for my actions.” A cold voice emanated from the sky. Immediately afterwards, the Black Dragon began to let out a series of angry roars and belching forth smoky black fire from its mouth.

“Rudi, today I’m going to see exactly how powerful of a Saint-level magus you are!” The green-robed man shouted angrily.

Book 1, Chapter 16 – Catastrophe (part 1)

Clearly, the swordsman wearing green was named Dillon, while the gray-robed man was named Rudi.

The Black Dragon beneath the gray-robed man breathed out a huge plume of black flame, surrounding the green-robed man and swirling like smoke. Suddenly, the green-robed swordsman's eyes shone with a fierce green light, and then his entire body was surrounded by a protective green aura, preventing the flames from injuring him in the slightest. At the same time, the ringing sound of a sword could be heard.

That ringing sound was even louder and more pure than the dragon's roar, encompassing the heavens and the earth.

The green-robed man struck out with his longsword, and suddenly, a huge, indistinct sword tip spanning tens of meters in length appeared and slashed outwards into the air, fiercely attacking the gray-robed man. The gray-robed man stared coldly at that sword of light. Not moving in the slightest, he just constantly mumbled magical incantations.

"Is this the tip of a sword? The tip of an enormous sword?" While running to the warehouse, Linley was still watching with his head turned. "How is that gray-robed man going to block? Using the Black Dragon?"

"Crash!"

The Black Dragon didn't block at all, and allowed the enormous sword-tip to come crashing down directly on the body of the gray-robed man.

The man's gray robes immediately exploded in all directions, but after having done so, a suit of shining protective battle armor was revealed underneath it. The battle armor was so shiny, it was piercing to the eye, as though it were made of diamonds.

The sword-tip's collision with the battle-armor had actually done no harm at all to the gray-robed man.

"How is that possible?!" Linley was truly scared silly.

Since he wasn't watching where he was running, Linley suddenly stumbled on a stone and went crashing to the floor. But even on the floor, Linley was still continuing to watch that battle in the eastern sky. "What sort of armor is that? How could its defensive abilities be so strong?"

"Linley, hurry! Stop daydreaming!" Seeing Linley, Hogg couldn't help but let out a furious roar.

"Yes, father!" Linley was startled awake. He immediately clambered to his feet and began running in the direction of the warehouse again.

"Rumble, rumble..." Suddenly, a terrifying sound could be heard from the heavens, followed by a terrifying screech which shook the entire Wushan township. Linley couldn't help but once again turn his head towards the eastern sky to take a look. That single glance stunned him once again.

The eastern sky had suddenly become densely filled with giant flying boulders, every single one of them the size of a house.

"Swoosh, swoosh, swoosh!"

All of those house-sized boulders were covered with flashing light, the color of yellow dirt. They flew through the air at astonishing speeds as they struck like meteors towards the green-robed man. Every single stone had to be tens of millions of pounds in weight. Each one of these boulders were uncountably times heavier and larger than the stones used by catapults in times of war.

Even the walls of a city could not resist such a powerful boulder.

A single giant boulder carried such powerful force, but now, the entire sky was filled with them, as countless boulders were arcing towards the man in green. Every single person in Wushan township was stunned by the sight.

"Crash!"

As the first boulder struck the man in green, the amount of green light covering his body suddenly increased dramatically, transforming him into a green sun, emanating piercing rays of green light in all directions.

Countless boulders converged on the green man, like drops of water in a rainstorm.

In the blink of an eye, it seemed as though he had become completely surrounded by boulders. The green light could now only be seen through tiny 'cracks' in that wall of boulders.

"Shatter!"

With a thunderous cracking sound, one boulder after another began to explode, as the boulders began to be shattered into tiny pieces by that terrifyingly powerful battle-qi. Each and every boulder, originally the size of a house, was shattered into much smaller pieces, and shot outwards in every direction.

They were hundreds of meters in the air to begin with. When shot out with the force of that battle-qi, the rubble shot out with tremendous power to an extremely far distance.

"Oh no." Hogg's face had turned white. Hillman, who was still on the streets of Wushan township, saw this and his face turned white as well. They all understood...

A catastrophe was descending upon Wushan township!

Countless rocks, ranging in size from two meters in diameter to man-sized, fell down in all directions, with no rhythm or pattern. Each boulder had produced tens, if not hundreds, of pieces, and perhaps twenty percent of them were shooting in the direction of Wushan township.

"Quick, go inside, quick!" Hogg was so agitated, he roared with fury.

At this moment, Linley was still tens of meters away from the warehouse. Hearing his father's angry roar, Linley paid attention to nothing else and ran towards the warehouse at top speed. As he did, he could hear one 'crash', 'crash', 'crash' after another. The sound of countless stones raining on Wushan township had begun.

It was like an earthquake was occurring. A picture of absolute disaster.

"Whoosh!" A boulder that must've weighed hundreds of pounds shot right past Linley, coming to a crashing rest not too far away from his feet, creating a huge crater. Linley felt cold sweat pour down his back. Just a tiny bit of a difference in trajectory, and his little life would've been over.

"Crash!" "Crash!" "Crash!" "Crash!"

The sound of stones smashing apart houses could be heard. The sound of stones colliding with the ground, the sounds of stones shattering wood, the sounds of people howling in pain...all sorts of sounds mixed together unceasingly, forming the symphony of disaster.

"Swoosh!" Another huge rock slammed into the ground in front of Linley, forcing him to rapidly jump backwards.

But if he kept on having to dodge like this, how would he manage to hide within the warehouse?

"Young master Linley, hurry!" A man came charging out from within the warehouse. It was Uncle Hiri, the housekeeper. His body was currently covered with red battle-qi, and he ran directly towards Linley.

"Big brother, hurry!"

At the door to the warehouse, four-year old Wharton stood crying as he yelled towards Linley.

"Wharton, go inside now!" Linley roared back angrily.

"WHOOSH!" A huge rock nearly two meters in diameter came flying in their direction from far away, headed directly towards the warehouse. Linley immediately realized that when this giant boulder smashed into the warehouse, Wharton would either suffer serious injury, or even die!

"Quick, Wharton, inside!" Linley's eyes were opened so wide as to appear bloodshot, and he howled angrily as he ran towards the warehouse at top speed.

He no longer paid any attention to the raining stones, nor did he try to avoid them. He ran directly towards the warehouse in a straight line.

Hiri was facing Linley, and simply couldn't see the giant boulder headed towards the warehouse. But Linley saw everything clearly. When the boulder descended and shattered the room, how could little Wharton survive?

"Young master Linley?" Seeing how Linley was acting, Hiri couldn't help but feel shocked.

Three more boulders came crashing down near Linley, but moving like a panther, Linley continued to charge forwards, his gaze fixed on little Wharton as he finally entered the warehouse. Hiri, turning around, only now became aware of that two-meter long boulder descending towards the warehouse. His face immediately turned white.

"Lie down!" Linley roared angrily, his face fierce.

Wharton had never seen his big brother look so angry before, and was so terrified that he immediately lay down. His eyes filled with tears, he looked at Linley and mumbled, "Big brother..." But with a flying hug, Linley tackled Wharton and covered him with his own body.

Almost just at that instant...

"CRASH!"

The sound of the boulder crashing into the warehouse. That enormous boulder had smashed into the warehouse roof with terrifying power. Although the stone roof of the warehouse was sturdy, when slammed into by such a huge boulder, it still broke apart. Even the floor of the warehouse was shattered apart by the vibrations from that collision.

"Young master-" Housekeeper Hiri's eyes immediately turned red. The battle-qi in his body exploded, and like a bolt of red lightning, he flew towards them. Using his own body as a protective barrier, he also used his two hands to push at a huge piece of the falling roof which was going to fall on Linley's body. Hiri and that collapsing ceiling arrived next to Linley at almost the same time.

"Rumble, rumble..."

In the blink of an eye, Wharton, Linley, and Hiri were totally trapped and pressed down under the falling rubble.

Hogg was in the courtyard, wielding an enormous sword, deflecting one boulder after another. But when he turned his head towards Linley, he saw Linley risk everything to protect Wharton, and then Housekeeper Hiri fly towards them to protect them both. His mind immediately went blank.

The warehouse collapsed, and rubble poured down into it.

"Linley!" Hogg's eyes turned red.

Right now, there was no way for Hogg to tell if Hiri had managed to position himself in front of Linley in time, or if the falling rocks had slammed into Linley first.

Book 1, Chapter 17 – Catastrophe (part 2)

“Thud! Thud! Thud!”

A few more crashing sounds continued to sound out from within Wushan township, but a short period of time later, no more stones fell from the sky. All of the boulders had been thoroughly demolished by the green-robed swordsman. But by now, no one in Wushan township had any spare energy left to pay attention to their battle.

“Lord Hogg, Wushan township is in bad shape. Just then-....Lord Hogg? What’s wrong?” Hillman rushed into the manor. Just as he was beginning to report on the town’s situation, he saw that Hogg was standing there in a daze, not making a single sound.

Hogg’s body trembled. Only then did he regain his usual faculties. “Linley.” Hogg charged violently towards the warehouse at an astonishing speed. Seeing this, Hillman guessed what had happened and immediately followed Hogg.

“Smash!” Before Hogg had arrived, the rubble covering Hiri, Linley, and Wharton had been blasted apart.

Housekeeper Hiri stood up from within the rubble.

“Uncle Hiri, what’s the situation?” Hogg’s voice was trembling. At the same time, he stared at the prone bodies. The first thing he saw was Linley, head covered with blood. The sight of the blood was so piercing to the eye that Hogg felt his head grow foggy, and his body swayed, almost falling down.

Up til now, Linley's body was still elevated from the ground, as he had been using his fists in a push-up position, so as not to crush Wharton.

"Father." A youthful voice emanated from beneath.

Wharton slowly crawled out from under Linley. His body was small, and he had been fully covered by Linley, so he didn't experience any injuries at all.

"Big brother, big brother, what's wrong?" Wharton tugged at Linley's body.

"Linley. Linley!" Hogg's voice was quavering.

Housekeeper Hiri said from off to the side, "I was still a little too slow. There was one piece of rubble that I managed to block, but before it struck young master Linley in the head. Although I believe that the strike shouldn't have been too heavy."

"I...I'm fine." A low, hoarse voice. Linley forced himself to lift up his head and stare at Hogg, managing a weak smile.

At this moment, upon seeing Linley's smile, Hogg's tears came spilling out.

Linley straightened his body and sat up. His clothes were covered with blood, as was his face and his hair. When the stone had struck him, it had caused a great deal of blood loss. At the moment, Linley also felt slightly woozy. Still staring at his father, Linley said in a weak, low voice, "Father, you are crying."

"I, I'm fine." An excited smile appeared on Hogg's face.

"Wharton? Why were you at the doorway earlier?" Linley rubbed his little brother's head and said in a reproof tone.

Wharton also knew that he had made a mistake. Lowering his head, he said, "Big brother, I'm sorry."

Housetaker Hiri, off to the side, said, "This was my fault. This disaster came too suddenly, and as soon as I had taken Wharton into the warehouse, I saw young master Linley in great danger, so I immediately rushed forward to help him. I didn't imagine that in just that instant, a huge boulder would head for the warehouse. This was my fault."

"RUMBLE!"

Suddenly, a huge tremor shook the earth.

Everyone's facial expressions changed as they stared towards the eastern sky. A giant had appeared, hovering in the sky, over ten meters tall, muscles bound tightly, with a ruthless expression on its face. Its entire body was the color of yellow earth. At the moment, this earthen giant was engaging in a fierce battle with the green robed swordsman, and their every exchange of blows created a sound like crashing lightning or roaring thunder.

The sound of the blows alone gave testament to how mighty the earthen giant was. Every single one of its blows was more powerful than the combined force of those countless boulders from earlier.

Linley stared at this battle in awe. "This earthen giant must have been conjured by the magic of the gray-robed magus." Linley could easily come to this conclusion, since the gray-robed magus was a mighty magus, after all.

"Linley, how are you feeling?" Hogg said with concern.

Linley squeezed out a smile. "I'm fine. There's just a cut on my head, is all. I just lost some blood."

"Young master Linley, you actually lost quite a bit of blood. If you lose too much, you could die." Housekeeper Hiri immediately retrieved some white gauze from within the warehouse and wrapped it around the injury on Linley's head.

Hogg took a close look at Linley. "Uncle Hiri, how does his injury look?"

Uncle Hiri smiled at Hogg. "Not bad. Linley is in excellent physical shape, and he hasn't fainted. There shouldn't be too much to worry about. In the coming days, he just needs to eat more meat to replenish his blood, and he'll be fine."

Only now did Hogg secretly let go of a breath he had been holding.

Just then, when he saw Linley charge over to protect Wharton, Hogg had truly been scared silly. He had truly been terrified that his sons would've died, just like that.

After taking a deep breath, Hogg looked at Hillman. "Right, Hillman, you were just saying that Wushan township was in bad shape. How bad of a shape is it in?"

"I can't say with exact precision as to how bad the condition is," Hillman said, his face grim. "But from what I could see, some people must have died, and many were injured or even crippled! This catastrophe came simply too quickly. Even though I shouted for everyone to hide, many people didn't have the chance to barricade themselves in their cellars."

"It really did come too fast." Hogg turned his head to stare at the eastern sky.

Saint-level combatants were on a totally different level than the people of Wushan township. A Saint-level combatant could wipe out the entire town with the wave of a hand. Earlier, the rain of boulders and the green-robed man's destruction of said boulders was nothing but the opening gambits of these two combatants.

But even the side effects of just those initial, testing blows were enough to cause an utter catastrophe to Wushan township.

"The legendary earth-style incantation of the tenth rank, a forbidden spell – the earth element 'World Protector'. The power of this 'World Protector' is extremely terrifying. It's considered the most powerful offensive spell available to an earth-style magus." Staring at the earthen giant, Hogg's face had grown cold as he spoke.

Hogg was a member of the Dragonblood Warrior clan. Although the Dragonblood Warrior clan had fallen on hard times, their five thousand years of history meant that within their family archives, there was information about all of the most powerful magical attacks used by the most powerful people in history. Hogg naturally could tell what was going on at a glance.

"An incantation of the tenth rank..." Linley took a deep breath.

Linley badly wanted to one day also ride a Black Dragon and utilize apocalyptic incantations of the tenth rank. His thoughts naturally turned to the magical testing and recruiting event. "The test will only be held in autumn in the capital. There's still half a year left..."

From the bottom of his heart, Linley was eagerly awaiting the magical ability examination in half a year.

"Hillman, in a little while, accompany me in inspecting the situation of the residents of Wushan township." Hogg said, and then looked at Hiri. "Uncle Hiri, after these two Saint-level combatants depart, take Linley home to change his clothes and make sure he gets some rest."

"Yes, lord." Hiri nodded.

Hogg turned back to look at Linley, who was enraptured watching the exciting battle between two Saint-level combatants. Laughing, he said,

“Oh, Linley, you little rascal. Even though you are injured, you still want to watch Saint-level combatants fight. Fortunately, given that the Saint-level magus has unleashed the ‘World Protector’, this battle is about to come to a close soon.”

Absorbed in the shocking battle going on off in the distant, Linley didn’t notice at all that around his chest area....

Since his head was injured, the so-called ‘Coiling Dragon’ ring he wore underneath his clothes had also been stained by blood. But the blood on the Coiling Dragon ring seemed to have disappeared, like water into an endless ocean, as the strange black material slowly absorbed it all.

And then, the Coiling Dragon ring actually began to shine with a faint, dim light.

But since it was being worn underneath his clothes, no one could possibly notice the faint light coming off from the surface of the Coiling Dragon ring.

Book 1, Chapter 18 – The Coiling Dragon Spirit (part 1)

In the eastern sky, the gray-robed man still stood on the head of the Black Dragon which lay coiled in the sky. A self-assured smile was on his face, as he watched the green-robed man battle against his earthen giant.

“Sschhhhiing!”

A piercing sound split the air as the green-robed man’s sword pierced directly into the earthen giant’s head. “Rumble!” The earthen giant’s head split apart, but the earthen giant didn’t collapse. Its boulder-like fists directly slammed onto the green-robed man’s body.

“Ah!” Then green-robed man spat out a mouthful of blood, his entire face turning ashen white.

And then, the earthen giant’s shattered head began to reform and regenerate, as though no damage had been done at all!

“Dillon, you’d best just hand it over. The World Protector that I summoned isn’t something that you can overcome.” The gray-robed man riding the Black Dragon said calmly.

The green-robed man stared coldly at the gray-robed man. He suddenly said in a fierce voice, “Rudi, if I can’t have it, then you won’t either!” A bright green light began to shine from within the green-robed man’s hands. Upon seeing this, the gray-robed man who had previously been standing so calmly on the head of the Black Dragon immediately grew startled and anxious. "Stop!"

"Splatter!"

The green-robed man's arms suddenly shone as bright as the sun. An explosive sound could be heard, and then immediately disappeared.

"Dillon, you-!" The gray-robed man pointed angrily at the green-robed man, but couldn't say anything.

The green-robed man's face was ashen white as he stared at the gray-robed man, whose face had also turned white. "Now, nobody has it. Rudi, I've been injured, but if you want to kill me, that's still going to be quite hard to accomplish!" With a cold laugh, the green-robed man transformed into a beam of green light as he flew off at a fast speed into the northeastern skies.

The gray-robed man watched him fly off. He only frowned, and did not pursue.

The earthen giant by the gray-robed man's side also slowly disappeared.

"The 'Stellar Sword Saint' Dillon? Pity. I can't kill him yet." The gray-robed man said in a low voice. And then the Black Dragon underneath his feat, as though knowing his master's wishes, flapped its enormous wings and went flying off into the southeastern direction.

In the blink of an eye, these two Saint-level combatants had disappeared.

But Wushan township was still filled with the sight of utter devastation. Nearly a thousand houses had collapsed, and screams of pain, angry curses, and sorrowful, pain-filled cries filled the air. In a short period of time, the previously peaceful township had turned into a disaster area.

.....

Within the Baruch clan manor courtyard, there was only Hogg.

Hogg was seated at a table, his forehead furrowed. As the controller of Wushan township, he absolutely had to think carefully about how to take care of his people.

Footsteps. Uncle Hiri emerged from within the living room. "Lord."

"How is Linley?" Hogg immediately turned his head and asked.

Hiri chuckled. "Lord, please be at ease. I've already washed and cleaned young master Linley's wounds, then re-bandaged them. I've made him eat a big meal, and then change his clothes and go to bed. By the time he wakes up, he'll be much better."

Only now did Hogg feel relieved, and he nodded. But his forehead was still furrowed.

"Lord, are you worrying about the people of Wushan township?" Hiri asked.

Hogg nodded. Smiling wryly, he said, "Uncle Hiri, most of the people in Wushan township aren't like us. Wushan township's men won't be too bad off, as most of them are warriors of the first or second rank, but the women aren't. For so many boulders to come raining from the skies non-stop, it would be hard for them to block any at all!"

Hiri nodded as well.

The number of people in Wushan township who were able to utilize 'battle-qi' could be counted on one hand. Just now, thousands of rocks had descended from the heavens. If people hadn't managed to hide in cellars early on, or use thick shields to block, then as soon as the stones came crashing down...

"There's nothing we can do now, aside from waiting on Hillman's report." Hogg felt extremely restless.

After a long time, urgent, rushed footsteps could be heard entering the manor.

Hogg's eyes brightened. Turning, he saw Hillman striding quickly into the manor.

"Hillman, what's the situation in Wushan township?" Hogg quickly asked.

Hillman let out a pain-filled sigh. "We just ran some calculations. Over three hundred people died, and a thousand were injured." The entire township only had a population of five thousand. This meant the casualty ratio was about 20%! And this was for those who lived in stone houses. This really was a diaster.

"So many casualties?" Hogg couldn't help but begin to grow worried.

Food was the lifesblood of any nation, and a small town was the same. For their workforce to suddenly decrease dramatically, but the number of injured and crippled to skyrocket...the economic situation of the town was going to worsen even further.

"Ugh!" Hogg let out a long sigh.

He wanted to lower their taxes, but Wushan townships tax rate was already very low. Right now, his own clan's survival had already become a problem. How could he assist the commoners of the town? The situation was different from those other towns, where taxes were so high that many commoners died of exhaustion and misery.

"Lord Hogg, all the commoners in Wushan township greatly appreciate your kindness and generosity. Everybody knows how much you have done for us. Please don't be too vexed." Hillman said from the side.

Hillman himself was born in Wushan township.

Based on his status as a warrior of the sixth rank, even in the capital, he could be the guard captain for a noble family. But because Hillman felt gratitude towards the Baruch clan due to their kindness and generosity, after Hillman retired from his army career, he directly became the captain of the guard for this decaying old noble Baruch clan.

"Hillman, lead the guard squad to do some more scouting about the township. Uncle Hiri, go and get some rest." Hogg directly instructed.

"Yes, lord." Hillman said.

Housekeeper Hiri also bowed respectfully and departed. After Hillman also left the pavilion, once again, the only person left remaining was Hogg.

....

Within Linley's bedroom.

Due to Linley's head injury, Hiri had instructed everybody not to bother Linley and to let him get some rest. While Wushan township was a whirlwind of activity, Linley's bedroom was peaceful and quiet. Linley himself had been drawn deeply into a world of dreams.

"Ding!"

A gentle, chime-like sound could be heard as rays of light began to leak out from Linley's chest area. And then, a cage of light surrounded the pitch-black Coiling Dragon ring, which slowly flew out from under Linley's pajamas and began to hover roughly ten centimeters away from him.

The ring began trembling more strongly, and the glow from the Coiling Dragon ring began to grow as well.

Fortunately, there was no one in Linley's bedroom right now. Anyone entering the room would have been stunned. Linley, however, was still blissfully asleep, and didn't notice at all that the Coiling Dragon ring was now floating.

"Ting!" The glow surrounding the Coiling Dragon ring suddenly began to contract rapidly, and then a single ray of hazy light flew out from within the ring. Descending next to Linley's bed, it transformed into a person's image.

The image was of an amiable looking old gentleman with moon-white robes and a long white beard.

At this point in time, the Coiling Dragon ring directly fell back onto Linley's chest, powerless. Linley's eyelids flickered, and then slowly opened. Upon seeing an old man whom he had never met before at the head of his bed, he couldn't help but feel shocked. "You...who are you?!"

"Hello, kiddo. My name is Doehring Cowart [De'lin Ke'wo'te]. I am a Saint-level Grand Magus of the Pouant [Pu'ang] Empire!" The amiable looking old man said with a smile.

Linley's eyes suddenly turned round. "You...you are a Saint-level magus instructor?"

The white-haired old man nodded confidently.

“No way. Gramps, you just said you are from the Pouant Empire. The Pouant Empire that was eradicated over five thousand years ago?” Linley was quite familiar with the history of the world, and he knew very well that the Pouant Empire had ceased to exist before his own clan had even came to be. In the modern era, the Pouant Empire was not one of the four great empires of the world.

Book 1, Chapter 19 – The Coiling Dragon Spirit (part 2)

The Pouant Empire had lasted for an extremely long period of time, and had been erected over eight thousand years ago. The entire Pouant Empire had lasted for three thousand years, but in the end, it was still destroyed. The domain which the Pouant Empire had previously held sway over was approximately the combined borders of the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance.

In other words...

The entire Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the twelve kingdoms, and the thirty-two duchies all once belonged to the Pouant Empire. From this alone, one could tell what a vast empire it had been.

But the Pouant Empire had been destroyed long ago!

"Over five thousand years ago?" The white-haired old man was momentarily stunned, and then let out a sigh. "There's no way for me to sense the passing of time from within the Worldring. I didn't expect that by the time I left the Worldring, over five thousand years would have passed since the destruction of my country."

"Gramps, what are you talking about? I'm confused."

Linley felt as though his entire mind had been turned muddy. This old grandpa had suddenly appeared out of nowhere, and claimed that he was a Grand Magus from the era of the Pouant Empire, which had been destroyed five thousand years ago. What could be more ridiculous than this?

Linley even wondered if he was in a dream!

"Kid." The white-haired old man looked at Linley. Smiling, he said, "The ring you wear next to your chest is the Divine artifact I once used – the Worldring!"

"Wait, wait, wait!"

Linley immediately peered up at him and said, "What 'Worldring'? This ring around my chest was left behind by elders of my ancestral clan. Its name is the 'Coiling Dragon Ring'!"

"Coiling Dragon Ring? It was originally named the Coiling Dragon Ring?" The old man said in surprise.

Linley was stunned.

"Original name? What do you mean, original name?" Linley looked questioningly at the old man.

Only now did the old man begin to laugh. "Oh, 'Coiling Dragon Ring' must be the name you gave it. Or perhaps the name an elder of yours gave it. When I originally discovered this ring, I searched through all sorts of documents but couldn't find any information about it. Thus I gave myself the authority to title it the Worldring. But as to what it was originally called, even I have no idea."

"Oh, gramps, you chose the name for it yourself as well. But now it belongs to me, and I named it the Coiling Dragon Ring." Linley was quite stubborn.

"Fine, fine, call it the Coiling Dragon Ring if you wish." The old man chuckled, not wanting to debate with Linley.

"Gramps, can you tell me why you just appeared from within the Coiling Dragon Ring?" Linley questioned.

The old man smiled. "In year 4280 of the Yulan calendar, I-"

Upon hearing this, Linley was secretly shocked. "Year 4280? This year is year 9990!"

"In year 4280 of the Yulan calendar, I encountered an old foe of mine, a Saint-level Grand Magus named Hamelin [Ha'mu'lin], and the two of us began to fight. I didn't expect yet a second Saint-level combatant to ambush me and sneak attack me. In the end, I was defeated, and my body was destroyed. I didn't wish for my spirit to be captured and tortured by my enemy, Hamelin, so I sealed myself within this Worldri-, ahem, this Coiling Dragon Ring." The old man explained what had happened in the past.

"The Coiling Dragon Ring is an extremely amazing object. It doesn't appear to emanate any magical aura, but in usefulness it can even compare with Divine artifacts. When I sealed my soul within the ring, Hamelin and the other searched a long time for me, but weren't able to find me. This, too, is thanks to the Coiling Dragon Ring." The old man smiled as he spoke.

Linley secretly nodded.

The Coiling Dragon Ring, by appearances, really did look quite plain. As the member of an ancient clan, Linley had a rather appraising eye.

Normally, precious items would have at least some sort of elemental aura. But this Coiling Dragon Ring seemed like nothing more than plain, inert wood.

"Gramps, you said that five thousand years ago, you were ambushed by a Saint-level Grand Magus and a Saint-level combatant, and then you were self-sealed within this ring? And that this ring is an artifact which is comparable in power to a Divine artifact?" Linley finally said.

"Right." Seeing that Linley understood, the old man couldn't help but smile and nod.

"Then Gramps, how is it that you appeared from within the ring just now?" Linley looked doubtfully at the old man.

Laughing, the old man explained, "Actually, when I sealed my spirit within the Coiling Dragon Ring, I interwove my very existence into the Coiling Dragon Ring. Only when a person becomes the new owner of the ring would I be allowed to depart it."

"Becomes the new owner of the ring?"

"Right. Through dripping blood onto the Coiling Dragon Ring." The old man laughed.

Linley frowned while mumbling, "Dripping blood onto the ring?" Frowning as he tried to recollect when that had happened, Linley suddenly remembered that when the rock had cut his head open, fresh blood had suffused his clothes and his chest. Most likely, it was around then that the blood had dripped onto the ring.

"Oh. Then that makes me the owner of the Coiling Dragon Ring." Linley nodded.

"Right. Only now, after you became the owner of the Coiling Dragon Ring, am I able to depart the ring and once more experience the air of the Yulan continent." A hint of a smile was on the old man's face. "Right. Kid. I just told you my name, but what is yours?"

Linley smiled brightly. "My name is Linley! Linley Baruch!"

"Linley, a fine name." The old man smiled.

"Gramps, are you going to be forever bound to the ring and unable to ever regain your freedom?" Linley felt rather bad for him.

The old man smiled and nodded. "Linley, you must know that when most people die, their spirits will enter the Nether Realm! But because I was a Saint-level Grand Magus at the time of my death, my mental energy had obtained physical form. That was the only reason why I could temporarily resist the call of the Nether Realm and seal myself within the Coiling Dragon Ring. Right now, there is only one way for me to leave this ring – exhaust all of my remaining mental energy.”

“Exhaust all your remaining mental energy?” Linley didn’t quite understand.

“What men called mental energy, ghosts might call ‘spiritual energy’. When a person’s mental energy was utterly exhausted, his soul would naturally dissipate. In other words...when my soul dissipates, it will leave the confines of this Coiling Dragon Ring.” The old man said calmly. “But the current situation is fine also. Although I am confined by the Coiling Dragon Ring, preventing me from ranging more than three meters away from it, this isn’t too bad.”

Linley’s heart trembled.

Suddenly, in his heart, Linley felt some pity for this old man.

“Heh heh, Linley, I’m already very satisfied. You don’t know this, but...if my spirit had been captured by Hamelin, it would have been a fate worse than death.” The old man sighed.

“Gramps, you said your name is Doehring Cowart? Can I address you as Grandpa Doehring?” Linley suddenly said.

Doehring Cowart was a mighty Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire, and thus had an extremely high personal status. Back then, he would have ranked amongst the top five personages in the Yulan continent. He fell only because he had been despicably ambushed by Grand Magus Hamelin and another Saint-level combatant.

However...

Doehring Cowart had never had a child, nor grandchildren. Upon hearing Linley address him as Grandpa Doehring, Doehring Cowart's heart, which had been lonely for thousands of years, suddenly felt warm.

"Yes, yes." Doehring Cowart felt extremely happy.

A look of excitement suddenly appeared in Linley's eyes. "Grandpa Doehring, just now, you said that you are a Saint-level Grand Magus. Then, can you teach me how to use magic?" Linley's heart was frantically pounding. The person in front of him was a five thousand year old Saint-level Grand Magus.

In Linley's mind, the huge body of the Velocidragon, the terrifying spectacle of the Dance of the Fire Serpents, and the countless boulders falling from the sky began to play over and over again, along with the spectacle of that proud man who stood on top of the Black Dragon.

He deeply desired that one day...

He, too, would step on top of the head of a Black Dragon and make the heavens tremble.

Doehring Cowart stroked his white beard. His eyes shining, he said, "Of course I can! Your Grandpa Doehring is a Saint-level Grand Magus of the almighty earth style...and amongst all of the elements, the element of earth is the mightiest of them all!" As he began to discuss magic, Doebling Cowart began to get excited.

Book 1, Chapter 20 – Earth-Style Magic (part 1)

Linley's anticipation was about to erupt like a volcano as he immediately became suffused with excitement.

"Grandpa Doebling, can you really teach me to become a magus?" Linley excitedly looked up at old man Doebling.

Doebling Cowart, seeing the state Linley was in, stroked his white beard. "Linley, your Grandpa Doebling is a Saint-level Grand Magus. Even if you don't have much natural talent, I can still teach you magic. Of course...if your talent is low, your accomplishments will be low as well."

If any other magus had been present and heard his words, they would have been astonished.

Amongst the society of magi, the most important thing is talent. No talent meant no possibility of becoming a magus. Many people believed this!

But Doebling Cowart dared to claim that even if his student's talent was poor, he still had the ability to make a magus out of the student. If anyone else had made this claim, they would be viewed as just wildly boasting... but the man who said these words was a five-thousand year old Saint-level Grand Magus!

"Low talent, low accomplishments?" Linley felt his heart tremble.

The reason he wanted to become a magus was because he wanted to restore glory to the Baruch clan. Even if he couldn't accomplish this, he hoped to at least accomplish the one task which generations of clan elders had strove to achieve for centuries – reclaiming their ancestral heirloom. If he could accomplish this, it would be enough.

But to do so, power was an important component.

"Linley, don't be worried. Your aptitude for magic hasn't even been assessed yet. Who knows if it will be high or low? Perhaps you will have a tremendous talent for magic." Doebling Cowart stroked his white beard as he smiled.

Grandpa Doebling's tranquility brought calm to Linley as well.

"Grandpa Doebling, how does one test for magical aptitude?" Linley couldn't help but grow eager.

"It is actually quite easy to test for magical aptitude." Just as Doebling Cowart spoke, suddenly –

Footsteps could be heard from outside the door. Hearing them, Linley immediately grew nervous. He quickly said to Doebling Cowart, "Grandpa Doebling, quick, hide. Someone is coming." If this five-thousand year old Saint-level Grand Magus of the bygone Pouant Empire was discovered, it could be disastrous.

Doebling Cowart only smiled, not moving at all.

"Grandpa Doebling!" Linley was beginning to grow impatient.

"Creaaak." The bedroom door swung open, and Housekeeper Hiri stuck his head inside. Seeing that Linley was awake, he couldn't help but smile. "Young master Linley, I didn't expect that you would have already awoken. How do you feel, young master?"

Linley immediately forced out a smile. Nodding, he said, "Thank you for asking, Uncle Hiri. I'm much better now."

Linley felt extremely agitated. He couldn't help but turn to look in the direction of Doebling Cowart, but Doebling Cowart was still standing there, grinning. "What's going on with Grandpa Doebling? Ugh. We're about to get discovered. It's going to be so annoying to have to explain."

"Young master Linley, it's time for dinner. Since you are already awake, come eat dinner with us." Uncle Hiri smiled as he spoke.

"Oh. Got it." Linley snuck another peek at Doebling Cowart, his heart filled with questions. "What's going on. From Uncle Hiri's expression, it seems as though he can't see Grandpa Doebling at all."

Seeing Linley constantly glance at the corner of his bed, Uncle Hiri asked curiously, "Young master Linley, why are you staring at the side of your bed? Did you drop something? I can help you look for it."

"No-, nothing." Linley immediately crawled out of bed. "Uncle Hiri, let's go eat dinner."

Although he found Linley's reaction to be a bit odd, Uncle Hiri didn't think too much of it, just nodding and smiling. Linley dressed himself, but still couldn't help but sneak a peek at Doehring Cowart. But just as he did so, Doehring Cowart, who was still grinning at him, suddenly disappeared from Linley's field of vision.

"He entered the Coiling Dragon Ring." Linley could now clearly feel that a spirit was now residing within the Coiling Dragon Ring.

Unlike in the past, Linley had now soulbound the ring with his own blood, giving him a deeper level of understanding.

"Linley, no need to speak aloud. Just speak to me mentally. As the master of the Coiling Dragon Ring, you can directly engage in spiritual communication with me, as I am a spirit within the ring." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

This greatly surprised Linley.

"Grandpa Doehring?" Linley tested the mental link.

"I hear you." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind as well.

Linley's heart was immediately filled with joy. But as he engaged in conversation with Doehring Cowart, he didn't pay attention to where he walked, and he tripped over the doorway. Uncle Hiri, walking ahead of him, turned and laughed. "Young master Linley, watch where you walk."

"Got it, Uncle Hiri," Linley laughed in reply.

While excitedly engaging in mental conversation with Doehring Cowart, Linley entered the dining room and sat down. Today's dinner was actually quite sumptuous, including a fragrant smelling roasted sheep. Hogg glanced at Linley. Smiling, he said, "Linley, have some." As he spoke, Hogg personally tore off a strip of meat from the sheep's lower hindlegs for Linley.

"Thank you, father."

Linley felt quite surprised. His family was in poor economic straits, so normally their dinner was quite spartan. But today, they even had roast sheep?

What Linley didn't know was...when the rain of stones descended on the town, aside from men and women, even many animals were killed. The Baruch clan aside, even some poor families who rarely ate meat were enjoying an extravagant meal today.

"Grandpa Doehring, why didn't Uncle Hiri see you just then?" Linley mentally asked Doehring Cowart.

"Linley, I must inform you that aside from you, nobody can see me. Because right now, I'm just a spiritual projection, which has no matter. I'm invisible to the eye. Only you, as the master of the Coiling Dragon Ring, can see me." Doehring Cowart explained in detail.

Linley suddenly understood.

Previously, Grandpa Doebling had said that he had died long ago, and only his spirit now remained.

"Grandpa Doebling, in the future, doesn't that mean you can always appear by my side?" Linley felt extremely happy.

Just as Linley spoke, he saw that next to him, a white-haired old man suddenly appeared out of nowhere. It was Doebling Cowart. But Hogg, Housekeeper Hiri, and his younger brother Wharton still continued to eat and chat, not noticing Doebling Cowart's existence in the slightest.

"Wow..."

Hearing and seeing were two different things. When he personally witnessed all the other people at the dinner table be unaware of Grandpa Doebling's presence, Linley felt deeply astonished.

"There's still some people who can sense my presence. Those whose spiritual presence are on par with me can feel my presence. But naturally...if I hide within the Coiling Dragon Ring, they definitely won't be able to sense me." Doebling Cowart's voice sounded within Linley's head.

"On the same spiritual level as Grandpa Doebling?" Linley chewed and thought at Doebling Cowart at the same time.

"Those who have the same spiritual power as me are most likely Saint-level combatants. Only Saint-level combatants can sense my presence, if barely. But of course, the prerequisite is that I appear outside the Coiling Dragon Ring. Once I enter the ring, there is no way they can find me.” Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke.

Linley mentally nodded as he grabbed a roasted leg of mutton and chewed on it.

“Linley, eat more slowly.” Hogg saw how fast Linley was eating and couldn’t help but laugh.

Linley grinned at his father, but continued to devour his food with haste. In the twinkling of an eye, he had stripped the leg of mutton of all flesh. Linley let out a comfortable burp, then used the napkin to wipe his lips. Standing, he said, “Father, Uncle Hiri, I’m done eating. I feel like my head is still a bit dizzy, so I’m going to go and get some more rest. Wharton, see ya.” Linley was the first to finish eating.

“Still feeling dizzy? Then go and get some rest.” Hogg hurriedly said.

The earlier events of the morning had left a lasting impression on Hogg. There was a moment when he even thought Linley had been crushed to death. After experiencing such an event, Hogg’s attitude towards Linley clearly had improved substantially.

“Big brother, see ya.” Chubby little Wharton waved at Linley with a grease-covered hand.

Book 1, Chapter 21 – Earth-Style Magic (part 2)

Linley ran directly back to his room, and then tightly shut the door behind him.

He quickly removed his shoes, then jumped onto the bed and sat down. "Grandpa Doebling, come out now. Help me test my magical aptitude." Linley was extremely impatient. When he was eating dinner just now, all of his thoughts were turned towards this.

A misty ray of light shot out from within the ring, falling onto the floor and transforming into Doebling Cowart.

Grinning, Doebling Cowart said, "Linley, don't be so impatient. First, I must tell you that because I don't have any specialized magical aptitude testing equipment with me, I can only test whether or not you have any talent for earth-style magic. Since I have no tools, there's no way for me to test and see if you have aptitude for any other magic."

"You can only test for my aptitude for earth element magic?" Linley felt a little disappointed.

He had also heard that in order to test for magical aptitude, special tools were needed, but since Grandpa Doebling was a Saint-level Grand Magus, Linley had been hoping Doebling might have some special methods.

"What's wrong with the earth style? Linley, let me tell you, amongst the elements of earth, fire, water, wind, thunder, light, and darkness, earth is the mightiest style of them all." A look of pride was on Doehring Cowart's face. Clearly, he was filled with confidence. After all, he was a Saint-level Grand Magus of the earth element style.

Linley found this somewhat hard to believe.

Each style should be equal. How could the earth style be the mightiest?

"Grandpa Doehring, I heard that fire-style elemental attacks are the most powerful? And that darkness-style elemental attacks are the most unpredictable? How could the earth style be the mightiest?" Linley frowned.

The formerly amiable Grandpa Doehring suddenly turned angry as he grumbled, "Linley, let me tell you that when it comes to attack power, each elemental style has its strengths!"

"For example, the forbidden fire-style spell of 'Heavenly Fire Burning the Fields, Earthly Fire Burning the Cities' can burn an entire city to ashes, true. But the water-style has the forbidden spell of 'Absolute Zero', which when unleashed can freeze to death hundreds of thousands of people. Thunder-style's 'Heavenly Lightning of Absolute Destruction' can unleash tens of thousands of lightning bolts, which no one can survive. Wind-style's forbidden spell, 'Annihilating Tempest', can fill the entire sky with blade-like gusts of wind..."

Doehring Cowart let out a long sigh.

Linley's heart was trembling.

He had thought that the fire-style's attacks were the most powerful, but from the sound of it, that was an absolute joke. Every single elemental style, at the level of forbidden spells, contained astonishing destructive power.

"And earth-style?" Linley didn't forget about the earth-style elemental magic.

Doehring Cowart self-confidently said, "How could the earth-style be weak? When the earth-style's forbidden spell, 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent', is executed, countless enormous boulders will rain from the sky and reduce a city to rubble in the twinkling of an eye. It also has the forbidden spell, 'Heaven Collapses, Earth Shatters'. When this spell is used, the earth itself will begin to roil about like waves in the ocean. Houses will collapse, the earth itself will split apart, and magma will spew out from the cracks, killing countless people."

Linley didn't dare to even breathe.

"Simultaneously, the earth-style also has the wide-ranging protective spell, 'Pulsating Guard'. Once the Pulsating Guard is used, the area above, below, and around an entire city will become protected from all attacks. Even if an opponent uses the 'Heavenly Lightning of Absolute Destruction', this spell can fend it off."

Doehring Cowart began to speak faster and faster while laughing. "But of course, I'm just speaking of wide-range destructive spells, and not one-on-one battle magic."

Linley nodded.

He could tell that Grandpa Doehring was exclusively talking about wide-range, castastrophe-level magic.

"Grandpa Doehring, it seems like the earth-style has lots more forbidden spells? Why is that?" Linley said curiously.

Doehring Cowart said confidently, "Linley, there's something you aren't understanding. Actually, each elemental style is roughly balanced, but in different environments they will have different effects. For example, in the water-rich environment of the ocean, water-style magic will be extremely strong. In some places where the wind blows powerfully, wind-style magic will be very powerful as well."

Linley began to understand.

"Linley...in the entire world, isn't it true that most battles and most magi are on the earth? And when used while standing on the earth, earth-style magic is extremely effective." A smile was on Doehring Cowart's face. "As you stand firmly on the boundless earth, an earth-style magus will have an extremely effective assistant."

Linley now understood!

Each elemental style of magic was more effective in certain places.

But the battles fought by the magi of the Yulan continent were virtually all on land, meaning that earth-style magi were almost always at an advantage.

"Amongst all the styles of magic, as the earth-style allows us to absorb earth elemental essence into our bodies, earth-style has the most benefit for improving your physical form. Mother Earth is most benevolent towards us." A look of veneration was on Doehring Cowart's face. "When we earth-style magi sit upon the ground, we can feel the vastness of the earth, feel its pulse, and feel Mother Earth's love for us."

"When it comes to attacks, earth-style magic has the one-on-one 'World Protector' forbidden battle spell, and also the destructive spells of 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent' and 'Heaven Collapses, Earth Shatters'. When it comes to defense, amongst the forbidden spells, there is the wide-ranging protective spell, 'Pulsating Guard', as well as the personal protective spell, 'Earthguard'. When it comes to personal protection, nothing beats earth-style elemental spells!"

Doehring Cowart appeared very confident.

"Personal protection? Grandpa Doehring, you're saying that the earth-style has the strongest personal protection spells?" Linley looked questioningly at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart laughed as he said, "At the earliest levels, earth-style magi have access to simple spells such as a shield of earth, or a wall of earth. Upon becoming a magus of the fifth rank, you will gain access to the 'Earthguard' spell, which will continuously grow in power along with you."

"When utilized by a magus of the fifth or sixth rank, it will cover your entire body with a layer of stone armor. But upon reaching the seventh rank, it will transform into an armor of jadeite. Upon reaching the eighth rank, this Earthguard armor will be made up of crystal jade. And upon reaching the ninth rank, it will be composed of platinum. Finally, when a Saint-level magus executes the Earthguard spell, the protective armor will be made out of diamonds. The defensive power of this spell..." as he spoke, a smile appeared on Doehring Cowart's face.

Linley couldn't help but sigh inwardly.

This earth-style element really was a mighty one. When the Earthguard spell reached the Saint-level of power, it was composed entirely of diamonds! Linley knew that diamonds were an extremely hard and unyielding substance. And the 'diamonds' composing the Earthguard were no ordinary diamonds, but ones formed from magic, making them even tougher than real diamonds.

"Oh, right..."

Linley suddenly remembered the two Saint-level combatants who were fighting in the sky. He remembered how the green-robed man had landed that huge hazy sword-tip attack on the gray-robed man, whose robe shattered and revealed a diamond-like armor beneath it.

That Saint-level magus named 'Rudi' had relied on that diamond armor to block the attack by Dillon.

"That must have been a Saint-level Earthguard spell." Linley felt secretly shocked.

It was powerful enough to take a direct blow from a Saint-level combatant. From this, one could tell how powerful it was, defensively.

“This is why I told you that earth-style magic is the mightiest elemental style of them all.” Doebling Cowart’s white beard fluttered about, making him look all the more self-satisfied.

After all, all men survived by living on the earth. They lived on the earth, and they made war while on the earth. Naturally, earth-style magi would always have an advantage.

Book 1, Chapter 22 – Spring Ends, Autumn Comes (part 1)

Actually, all of the elemental styles, including earth-style, had their own particular strengths. But as a Saint-level Grand Magus of the earth-style, it was only natural that Doehring Cowart would strongly praise the earth-style. The eight year old Linley, upon hearing Doehring's words, was filled with eagerness.

"Grandpa Doehring, hurry up and test me and see if I have any aptitude for becoming an earth-style magus." Linley was feeling extremely anxious.

Doehring Cowart began to laugh. "Fine, I'll test you right away."

"First, let me tell you that the test for magical aptitude is a two-part test, so the test I am administering will also have two parts." Doehring Cowart was behaving in an unusually generous manner. After having been trapped along in the Coiling Dragon Ring for five thousand years, of course he was now in a wonderful mood when faced with such a cute little child.

"Magical aptitude is divided into two parts – the strength of one's magical affinity for certain elements, and the strength of one's mental energy." Doehring Cowart began to explain the basics of the test.

"What are these two parts good for?" Linley asked curiously.

Doehring Cowart said in a kindly voice, "Linley, before answering this, let me ask you, if a magus is about to cast a spell, what does he rely upon?"

"Magical incantations!" Linley immediately said.

Linley had seen how the magus who rode the Velocidragon first mumbled many magical words before casting his spell.

"Wrong."

"I've seen magi cast spells. All of them recited magical incantations first." Linley immediately argued.

Doehring Cowart stroked his white beard, and contentedly said, "When casting spells, the most important thing for a magus is his 'mageforce' and his 'mental energy'. If his mental energy is sufficiently powerful, he can even instacast spells, without need for any incantations. Magical incantations only serve a supplemental function."

"Oh? Instacast?" Linley looked questioningly at Doehring Cowart. Linley felt as though suddenly, the huge world of sorcery was slowly opening up before his very eyes, but still remained hazy and indistinct. Doehring Cowart, however, was dissipating the mysterious façade behind this world of magic.

Smiling, Doehring Cowart nodded. "Right. To cast a spell, your body must be able to provide a sufficient amount of mageforce, and then use mental energy to control that mageforce to summon sufficient elemental essence to form it into a spell!"

"Elemental essence?" Linley was surprised. "Grandpa Doebling, are you saying that in order to cast magical spells, we need to draw upon external elemental essences?"

"Haha. Of course. Linley, did you think that a powerful magus could simply rely on the elemental essence already in his body? Impossible! Let's look at forbidden-level magical spells. The mageforce in the body of a Saint-level magus can only provide 1% of the amount of essence needed. The other 99% can only be provided by natural, elemental essence."

"Let me put it to you like this...a magus' so-called 'mageforce' is really just pure, highly-refined elemental essence. Mageforce can be described as a 'general', whereas nature's elemental essence is the soldiers. A magus summons his mageforce and uses it to direct nature's elemental essence to form amazing spells. Understood?" Doebling Cowart smiled as he looked at Linley.

Linley couldn't help but frown.

"Oh...I understand." Linley laughed and nodded. "The 'mageforce' inside a magus is kinda like Uncle Hillman, while elemental essence is like our group of kids. Uncle Hillman, all by himself, directs our entire group in training, or in attacking, or engaging in battle!"

Doebling Cowart smiled and nodded. "Right. Therefore, the 'mageforce' of a magus is extremely important. If he doesn't have enough mageforce, he will not be able to cast a spell."

Linley nodded.

“Compared to mageforce, however, mental energy is even more important!” Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke. “By now, you should have realized that so-called mental energy is really spiritual energy, a form of controlling energy!”

“Linley, a large amount of mageforce draws out an even larger amount of elemental essence. If such a huge amount of force is not controlled by spiritual energy...what do you think the end result would be?” Doehring Cowart stroked his white beard as he quietly watched Linley.

Linley frowned, pondering.

“Grandpa Doehring.” Linley said in a low voice as he frowned. “In some books, I read about some military tactics. In it, one of the things it said was...to subdue an enemy, first subdue their king. For example, bandits. If you first kill the bandit leader, the bandit army will naturally crumble to pieces and fall apart. So spiritual energy should serve a similar purpose as the ‘controlling energy’ which the bandit leader exerts on his subordinates. Without spiritual energy to control a large amount of mageforce and elemental essence, this power would run wild.”

Doehring Cowart laughed.

“Haha, Linley, you are very smart.” Doehring Cowart was laughing happily.

“Right, a large amount of mageforce and elemental essence, when controlled by spiritual energy, can be formed into a spell! Sometimes, in order to execute a particularly powerful spell, too high of a demand is placed upon one's spiritual energy. Thus, the assistance of magical incantations is needed." Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke.

Linley felt as though a huge, important principle of magic had suddenly become crystal clear to him.

Smiling at Linley, Doehring Cowart continued, "Of course, that's just the basic theory. The world of magic is far more complicated than you can imagine! The question of exactly how one uses mageforce and elemental essence to form 'magic', now that's the real issue!"

"What's the point of having mageforce, if you don't know exactly how to shape it into a magical spell?" Doehring Cowart let out a long sigh. "The world of magic is an extremely complicated one. Magical research is very difficult and dangerous. But due to intra-empire struggles, countless magi engage in the research of new types of spells."

"Actually, every single empire researches new ways of using different matrices of mageforce and elemental essence to produce different spells! But magical research is extremely dangerous. The more destructive a spell potentially is, the harder it is to research. Sometimes, it can even catastrophically backlash upon the researchers."

Doehring Cowart laughed as he spoke. "In most magus academies, you can only study spells up to the sixth rank. Spells of the seventh, eighth, and ninth ranks, as well as Saint-level spells, are considered secrets. Only if you join a kingdom will you gain access to those special spells."

Linley had read many books and therefore understood this principle.

"If you have no instructor? No matter how much mageforce you have or how high your spiritual energy is, you won't be able to execute a single spell!" Doehring Cowart smiled faintly. "The profound secrets of every magical spell lies in how to control mageforce and elemental essence to form the spell."

"After countless years of magical experimentation, the magical system has essentially been perfected." Stroking his white beard, Doehring Cowart laughed loudly. "Linley, don't worry. In the future, there's no need for you to bend the knee to any kingdom or any lord, because...I can teach you seventh, eighth, ninth, and even Saint-level spells!"

Linley took a deep breath.

He could feel himself embarking on a new path.

Under the guidance of Grandpa Doehring, he had no need to continue to follow the path of the warrior. He would now embark on the more mysterious, more powerful way of the magus.

"Come, let's begin the test of the strength of your elemental affinities. Sit down with legs crossed, close your eyes, and enter a meditative state." Doehring Cowart said gently.

"Meditative state?" Linley felt his heartbeat quicken.

How would his affinity rate?

"Don't worry. Just carefully try and see what you can sense, and whenever you sense something, just tell me.” Doehring Cowart smiled encouragingly towards Linley. Linley immediately closed his eyes and tried to force himself to calm down.

“Don’t worry. Just do as I instruct.” Doehring Cowart said in a gentle voice.

.....

Meditation was one of the basic underpinnings of all magus’. It was needed for both absorbing elemental essence to transform it into mageforce, and for improving one’s spiritual energy. The first time entering a meditative state was the most difficult and dangerous one, but of course, under the guidance of a Saint-level Grand Magus, Linley wouldn’t find it too difficult.

After half an hour of instruction, Linley finally entered the meditative state for the first time.

Seeing Linley in a meditative state, Doehring Cowart let out a faint smile, then waved his hand.

Immediately...

A large amount of earth essence began to swirl around Linley. Normally, most places only had an ordinary density of earth essence, but right now, Doehring Cowart was using his powerful spiritual energy to increase the density of earth essence near Linley by a hundredfold.

"If he still can't sense any earth essence around him even under these conditions, then there's no hope for him at all." Doehring Cowart said to himself.

Even a totally ordinary person should sense something, given that the density of earth essence was a hundred times greater than normal.

Right now, Linley, still in a meditative state, felt extremely happy and excited. He had never realized...that around him, there were so many amazing things. Countless earth-colored specks of light were floating around him, in such a high density as to be shocking.

Book 1, Chapter 23 – Spring Ends, Autumn Comes (part 2)

“Linley, can you feel it?” Doehring Cowart’s voice gently sounded in Linley’s mind.

“Grandpa Doehring, I can feel it. There’s so many specks of earth-colored light. So many...too many. They are clustered so densely, thousands, no, tens of thousands. A hundred earth-colored specks of light just floated past my hand. There’s too many.” Feeling the large amount of earth-colored specks of light floating around him, Linley felt extremely happy.

Hearing this news, Doehring Cowart was immediately ecstatic.

“Very good. Now, slowly, do as I say. Don’t think about anything. Quietly...” Doehring Cowart droned almost hypnotically, helping Linley to depart the meditative state. At the same time, he released the control he was exerting over the earth essence. Immediately, the earth essence density around them returned to normal.

After awakening from the meditative state, Linley felt as though he was full of energy, totally different from before. Even while fully awake, Linley felt as though he could still sense some of the oscillations from the nearby earth essences, even though he couldn’t sense them as clearly as when he was in the meditative state.

“Grandpa Doehring, I can still feel the movements of those earth-colored specks of light. Really! Even though it’s not as clear now, I can still somewhat feel them.” Linley was feeling extremely excited.

This was his first step into the world of magic. Linley was filled with amazement.

"What did you say? You can still sense it?" Doebling Cowart was very astonished, because the nearby density of earth essence had returned to normal now, and Linley was no longer in a meditative state. If he could still sense the nearby earth essence, even while awake...then his affinity for earth essence...

"Grandpa Doebling, why aren't you talking? How is the strength of my affinity for earth elemental essence?" Linley said nervously.

Linley didn't know if he had done well or poorly.

"Good. Extremely good. Your affinity for earth elemental essence is extremely high." Doebling Cowart's face was wreathed in smiles. "Based on what I know, only perhaps one in a thousand magi would have as strong an affinity for earth elemental essence as you. Truly."

Linley felt his heart began thumping frantically. He was so excited he didn't know what to say.

"But naturally, elemental affinity is just one part. Spiritual energy is the most important of all! After all, given enough time, mageforce will naturally strengthen. But it's extremely difficult to improve the spiritual energy of a magus." Doebling Cowart said solemnly.

Linley took a deep breath and nodded.

"Now, it's time for the second test, to test your spiritual energy." Doehring Cowart looked at Linley solemnly.

Linley also knew that this test of spiritual energy was an extremely important one.

"Grandpa Doehring, what do I need to do?" Linley stared at Doehring Cowart, mentally preparing himself.

"Nothing at all." Doehring Cowart laughed.

"Uh..." Linley was startled.

"I am the spirit of the Coiling Dragon Ring, while you are the master of the Coiling Dragon Ring. I am totally capable of sensing the strength of your spirit! There's no need to test it at all. I can tell you right now!" Doehring Cowart smiled at Linley.

"I...how is my spiritual energy?" Linley held his breath.

The strength or weakness of a person's spiritual energy determined one's destiny.

"Your spiritual energy is ten times stronger than the average person of your age." Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke.

Linley felt a sense of excitement in his heart. Ten times!

That wasn't a small number.

But Doehring Cowart continued, "Generally speaking, only one in ten thousand can become a magus, principally because there's a high requirement when it comes to spiritual energy. The absolute minimum requirement for a magus is having five times more spiritual energy than someone of the same age. Ten times puts you roughly in the middle of the pack, as far as the average magus goes."

Linley's earlier excitement was immediately dampened.

"If it was anyone else instructing you, at most you could become a magus of the fifth or sixth rank. However...since the person instructing you is me, the situation is now different." Doehring Cowart stroked his beard contentedly, a look of self-confidence in his eyes.

Linley suddenly came to the same realization.

Right. Doehring Cowart was a Saint-level Grand Magus!

"As long as you work hard, Linley, I am fully confident that you can reach the eighth rank. But as to whether or not you can become a magus of the ninth rank, or even a Saint-level magus? That will depend on your own comprehension and your experiences." Doehring Cowart said seriously. "If you do not work hard, I'm afraid you might not even become a magus of the sixth rank. At that point in time, you'll have no one else to blame."

A good instructor in magic was just one part of the equation.

The most important part was still one's own effort.

"Grandpa Doehring, please don't worry. I won't disappoint you, or my father, or the Baruch clan." At this moment, Linley's mind was filled with the image of the spirit tablet in front of the ancestral hall, and those illustrious names and stories engraved on the back.

To renew the former glory of the Baruch clan!

Linley's chest was filled with boiling heat!

"Good. Starting tomorrow, I will begin to instruct you." Doehring Cowart looked at Linley, his eyes gleaming. Right now, Doehring Cowart's body was once more emanating the self-confidence and pride which a Saint-level Grand Magus possessed!

....

Starting the very next day, Linley began to live an extremely tough, arduous life.

He couldn't reveal the existence of Doehring Cowart to his father. Every morning and evening, he still needed to attend physical training, while later in the morning, he would have his lessons with his father on politics, religion, religious rites, warfare, geography, art...and all sorts of other lessons.

Only in the afternoon, during his previously spare time, would Linley run towards Mt. Wushan, east of the township, hide in a quiet place, and begin to learn the basics of magic under the guidance of Doehring Cowart. He studied hard, while entering the meditative state to absorb and process mageforce.

In addition, each day, after eating dinner, Linley would spend a large amount of time in the meditative state.

Every day, Linley would spend only six hours sleeping. All of his other time was spent in physical training, intellectual studies, magical instruction, and meditation. Six hours of sleep a day, frankly speaking, was simply not enough. In truth, entering the meditative state was extremely taxing, far more tiring than most people's lives. Every day, Linley entered a very deep sleep for those six hours.

Filled. His time was absolute filled.

With each day passing like this, day after day, Linley's improvement was very evident, to the point where it wasn't just improvement, but a form of transformation!

As he was hard at work training...

He experienced, for the first time, the joy of absorbing elemental essence into his body, and then transforming it into mageforce.

He experienced, for the first time, entering so deeply into the meditative state that he almost became unconscious.

And he experienced, for the first time, the excitement of performing earth-style magic, even if it was nothing more than generating a tiny 'Earth Spike' that was only twenty centimeters high.

.....

Hard work, day after day...

Linley's effort and the speed of his improvement caused even Doehring Cowart, that five-thousand year old Saint-level Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire, to sigh with amazement.

Due to his daily physical training exercises, Linley's body was growing sturdier and sturdier. Because he often entered the meditative state and absorbed earth essence, Linley became calmer and more tranquil. Linley's transformation caused his father Hogg and Hillman to both be amazed and overjoyed.

....

Spring ended, and autumn came. In the blink of an eye, it was now autumn.

There was only one month remaining before the magus affinity testing and recruitment event.

In the ancestral hall within the Baruch clan manor.

"Whew. All done cleaning. Time to go do some more magical training. Yesterday I actually managed to successfully execute the 'Earth Tremor' technique. That was wonderful." Right now, Linley was in an extremely good mood. He quickly strode out of the ancestral hall and closed the door.

Walking on the blue tiled steps of the stone walkway, Linley's footsteps were firm and swift, but made little sound.

This was an ability that virtually all earth-style magi possessed. Because their power was derived from the earth itself, they could mask virtually all sound from their footsteps.

"Eh?" Linley frowned.

His ears twitched as he turned and stared towards a far-off building. "I heard something?" He immediately stealthily walked in that direction. His footsteps made almost no sound. Normally, just while walking ordinarily, he could mask his footsteps. Now that he was intentionally trying to hide them, he made even less noise.

He crept closer, step by step.

When Linley reached the door to the building and took a peek inside...

"What's that?" Linley's eyes widened.

He saw a 20-centimeter long black mouse chewing on a piece of stone rubble. And then, in the blink of an eye, the black mouse appeared tens of meters away in a different direction, and began to nibble on a piece of blue tile. The black mouse's fur appeared very soft. Its eyes were guileless, and its paws were furry. In a word, it looked very cute.

It even hopped around just on its two hind legs for fun.

"What an adorable little mouse. And how amazingly fast!" Hiding by the doorway, Linley exclaimed silently.

Most mice wouldn't reach such a size, and most mice were loathsome creatures, but this mouse seemed particularly adorable. Its eyes seemed to be full of meaning, as though they could speak. Most importantly of all...it was astonishingly fast.

"Such speed...I bet even Uncle Hillman, a warrior of the sixth rank, can't catch it. How can it be so fast?" Seeing the cute mouse move tens of meters in just the blink of an eye, Linley felt astonished.

Doehring Cowart flew out from within the Coiling Dragon Ring. Standing next to Linley, he looked at the black mouse with some surprise. "A magical beast, a Shadowmouse? And judging by its size, a Shadowmouse infant."

"A magical beast? Shadowmouse? It is so big! How can it be an infant?" Linley stared at Doehring Cowart in surprise.

Aside from the Vampiric Iron Bull, the Griffin, the Velocidragon, and the Black Dragon magical beasts he had seen, this was the first time Linley had seen any other magical beasts. This adorable black mouse was actually a magical beast? A magical beast, with magical abilities?

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 1 – Magical Beast, Shadowmouse

“Magical beast ‘Shadowmouse’? Grandpa Doebling, what special qualities does a Shadowmouse possess, and what rank does it have amongst magical beasts?” Linley and Doebling Cowart were mentally communicating, but at the same time, Linley was staring excitedly at him.

Doebling Cowart smiled. He pretended to hem and haw for a few seconds, then slowly said, “The magical beast ‘Shadowmouse’ cannot easily be hemmed into a particular rank. This is because it represents an entire race of mice. Amongst rat-type creatures, there’s two major types; the Stoneater Rat, and the Shadowmouse. But both the Stoneater Rat and the Shadowmouse are omnivores. They can eat anything, whether it is stones, bones, or even meat.”

Linley mentally nodded.

Just now, he had seen that black Shadowmouse nibbling on a rock.

“Magical beasts are divided into nine ranks. Magical beasts of the first rank are the weakest. And of course, above the ninth rank are magical beasts at the Saint-level!” Doebling Cowart smiled at Linley. “Linley, the weakest type of Stoneater Rat is the Grey Stoneater Rat. Stoneater Rats of the first to third ranks are all grey in color, with some minor shading differences. A Stoneater Rat, upon reaching the fourth rank, will see its fur turn pure silver. Upon reaching the seventh rank, its fur will turn gold! A gold-colored Stoneater Rat will at least be a magical beast of the seventh rank, and at most a magical beast of the eighth rank.”

“Linley, the Stoneater Rat race is an extremely terrifying race, primarily because they have huge numbers, and extremely sharp teeth, far sharper than the Shadowmouse race. When large numbers of Stoneater Rats appear, even an army of a hundred thousand people cannot hope to withstand them." Doehring Cowart sighed as he spoke.

Doehring Cowart was recalling a catastrophe he had witnessed long ago.

The Stoneater Rat was not as fast as the Shadowmouse, but its body was as tough and durable as steel. The higher ranked a Stoneater Rat was, the tougher its body would become, and the sharper its teeth would become. Its body seemed small, but that was deceptive; in large numbers, they were absolutely terrifying.

"The weapons used by most armies cannot kill a Stoneater Rat, but a Stoneater Rat can easily kill and devour a soldier." Doehring Cowart sighed again.

In Linley's imagination, there appeared the image of a vast, endless flood of Stoneater Rats descending from the wilderness or mountains and attacking an army of men. Imagining that flood of Stoneater Rats devouring the entire army, Linley's heart shivered.

Absolutely terrifying.

"Amongst the two races of rat-type creatures, the Stoneater Rat has an extremely tough defense, sharp teeth, and huge numbers. But Shadowmice? There are quite a large number of Shadowmice as well, but their numbers are far less than Stoneater Rats." Doehring Cowart seemed like an encyclopedia, all-wise and all-knowing.

"And Shadowmice? How powerful is a Shadowmouse?" Linley asked.

There was a Shadowmouse not too far from him. Naturally, Linley wanted to know more about how powerful they were.

"The weakest Stoneater Rat is a beast of the first rank. But the Shadowmouse is different! The weakest Shadowmouse is a magical beast of the third rank, with jet black fur. When its entire body turns blue in color, that is a sign that it has reached the fifth rank. And when all of its fur has turned violet, that means it has at least reached the seventh rank, and at most the eighth rank." Doehring Cowart's words were clear and precise.

Linley nodded inwardly.

Based on potential power, a Shadowmouse was not inferior at all to a Stoneater Rat.

"Grandpa Doehring, based on what you just said, a Shadowmouse of the third or fourth rank would have pure black fur. Only upon reaching the fifth rank would its fur turn blue. So are you saying that little guy there is a magical beast of the third or fourth rank?" Linley followed up with more questions.

"This black colored Shadowmouse is not ordinary."

Doehring Cowart frowned as he spoke. "The Stoneater Rat is famed for its toughness and its sharp teeth, while the Shadowmouse is famed for its speed and its sharp teeth! Speed is thus a very good way to determine the strength of any particular Shadowmouse."

"It moved really fast, tens of meters in the blink of an eye. But since it is a Shadowmouse, I guess that isn't out of the ordinary." Linley still remembered its earlier movements clearly.

Doehring Cowart nodded. "Shadowmice are indeed very fast, but for an infant Shadowmouse to already have reached the speed of an adult Shadowmouse is definitely out of the ordinary." A hint of a smile was on Doehring Cowart's face.

"Out of the ordinary?" Linley looked at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart continued, "Right. For an infant Shadowmouse to have reached the speed of an adult Shadowmouse of the fourth rank means that when it grows up, it has the possibility of becoming a violet-colored Shadowmouse of the seventh rank. I suspect...that it is the child of a Violet Shadowmouse."

"The child of a Violet Shadowmouse?" Linley said questioningly. "But its fur is black."

Doehring Cowart laughed. "Linley, Violet Shadowmice and Blue Shadowmice, when born, all start off with black fur. Only as their strength grows will the color of their fur slowly change! The color of their fur is proof of their power!"

Linley suddenly understood. "So that is how it is!"

“Grandpa Doebling, then based on your words, this Shadowmouse is really amazingly fast. The Shadowmouse in front of me is slightly faster than even Uncle Hillman, but you are telling me that it is comparable to a Shadowmouse of the fourth rank. For a magical beast of the fourth rank to be faster than a warrior of the sixth rank...” Linley couldn’t help but sigh in amazement.

Doebling Cowart laughed. “Linley, if they weren’t so fast, why would they be called Shadowmice?”

At the same rank of power, a Shadowmouse, when running, was far, far faster than a human warrior.

“A Shadowmouse is a rare prize as magical beasts go, especially the seventh-ranked Violet Shadowmouse. Many a magus would want a Violet Shadowmouse, but they are simply too fast. An adult Violet Shadowmouse is valuable, but extremely hard to catch and tame. It is much easier to catch and tame an infant Violet Shadowmouse, but it is extremely rare for one to be able to meet an infant Violet Shadowmouse by itself.” Doebling Cowart smiled as he looked at Linley.

Linley could imagine it as well.

A Violet Shadowmouse was a magical beast of the seventh rank at least, which meant that at the very least, they had a Velocidragon’s level of power.

“Linley, a Violet Shadowmouse is considered a king amongst rats, and can command a large swarm of Shadowmice. Although Shadowmice are not as numerous as Stoneater Rats, they are still quite numerous. An infant Violet Shadowmouse would therefore be protected by many adult Shadowmice."

Doehring Cowart glanced sideways at that distant black Shadowmouse, still chewing some rocks.

"To be so powerful when still so young, eight or nine times out of ten, means that it is the infant of a Violet Shadowmouse. I really wonder how he managed to make his way to your clan's manor, without a single adult Shadowmouse guard." Doehring Cowart said with an air of amazement.

Linley also agreed with Doehring Cowart's words.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart suddenly looked at Linley with a strange look in his eyes. His voice carrying a hint of enticement he said, "Regardless of why the the infant Violet Shadowmouse is here...would you want to collect it as a companion? Shadowmice grow very rapidly, especially Violet Shadowmice. In ten years or so, it will finish its growth cycle. By that time, you would have a magical beast companion of at least the seventh, and possibly even the eighth rank."

Hearing his words, Linley's heart fluttered.

Taming a magical beast of the seventh or eighth rank is extremely difficult. But taming them when they are in the infant stage is far easier.

In addition, not all infant magical beasts are the same. Some grow up very quickly, while some grow up very slowly. Amongst the 'dragon' type magical beasts, some can take a thousand years to mature. Most humans simply don't have the ability to wait so long. Shadowmice were one of the types of magical beasts that grow up fairly quickly.

But encountering an infant Violet Shadowmouse is simply too rare of an occasion.

After all, the more powerful a magical beast is, the more importance it attaches to protecting its young. Although it wasn't too clear why this young Shadowmouse had appeared within his manor, it was an indisputable fact that it was indeed here, alone.

"Linley, possessing a Violet Shadowmouse is equivalent to possessing an entire Shadowmouse army!" Doehring Cowart smiled at Linley. "This is why the Violet Shadowmouse is a far more precious magical beast than many other beasts of the seventh or eighth rank."

Doehring Cowart continued to try and entice Linley.

How could a seven or eight year old Linley resist?

"Grandpa Doehring, how would I tame this Violet Shadowmouse?" Linley looked excitedly at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart felt very happy. "If little Linley really can tame this Shadowmouse, in the future, I can be a bit more at ease." Doehring Cowart knew very well that as a spirit, he had no mageforce of his own at all. A Saint-level Grand Magus without mageforce really didn't have many attacking abilities.

There was no way for him to protect Linley.

But after the past half year, he had already begun to consider this pure, hard-working child as his own grandson. Naturally, he wanted to come up with ways to improve Linley's strength.

"Linley, you must be calm." Doebling Cowart said solemnly. "Even if this is just a Violet Shadowmouse infant, his speed is comparable to a mature Shadowmouse of the fourth rank. Even your Uncle Hillman won't be able to catch him. You simply don't have the ability to forcibly subdue him, and you also are not able to utilize a soul-binding magical formation.

Linley was startled.

His overheated mind suddenly calmed down. Laughing bitterly, he said, "Now I remember. To tame a magical beast, the first way is to forcibly subdue him, and the second way is to use a soul-binding magical formation, which can only be utilized by a magus of the seventh rank, at least.

Linley couldn't help but feel a bit disappointed.

Alas, he was too weak. Even though he had the good fortune to encounter a Violet Shadowmouse infant, he didn't have the ability to tame it.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 2 – A Clumsy Method (Part 1)

“Linley, don’t be discouraged. I only meant to say that there is no way for you to forcibly subdue him, I didn’t say that it is impossible to tame him at all.” Doehring Cowart laughed self-indulgently. “If he was an adult Shadowmouse, I probably wouldn’t be able to help, but...he’s just a baby Shadowmouse. As a Saint-level Grand Magus, I have some methods which can be effective in dealing with a baby Shadowmouse. In addition, there is no need for a soul-binding magical formation.”

Linley’s calm mind immediately grew agitated again, and he turned to look at Doehring Cowart with shining eyes.

“Grandpa Doehring, quick, tell me, what’s your plan?” Linley excitedly spoke to him mentally.

Doehring Cowart said with a self-satisfied smile, “It’s simple. The ‘soul-binding’ technique used by the soul-binding magical formation creates a master-servant bond. And naturally, if one can subdue a magical beast, one is qualified to become its master. Right now, there’s no way for us to initiate a ‘master-servant bond’, so we can only take a step back...and initiate a ‘bond of equals’ with the Shadowmouse.”

“Bond of equals?” Linley said curiously. “What is that? I’ve never heard of it.”

“It’s normal for you not to have heard of it. Even five thousand years ago, during the era in which I lived, very few people know about the ‘bond of equals’.” Doehring Cowart’s eyes crinkled as he smiled. “A bond of equals represents that you and the magical beast share the same status in the relationship, with no one being the master or being the servant. As a matter of fact, a 'bond of equals' will give you a more intimate relationship with your magical beast, and your magical beast will more whole-heartedly assist you, giving the two of you superior teamwork."

Linley now understood.

"Oh? Grandpa Doebling, from your words, it sounds like there's a lot of advantages to this 'bond of equals'. Why don't most people use it?" Linley queried.

Doebling Cowart laughed loudly. "Because, the 'bond of equals' is not initiated by people. Rather, it is initiated by the magical beast."

"Initiated by the magical beast?!" Linley was stunned.

No wonder there was no need for setting up a soul-binding magical formation. This bond was initiated by the magical beast itself. Doebling Cowart continued, "Every single magical beast, upon birth, has the ability to initiate a 'bond of equals', but in their entire life, a magical beast may only enter this bond a single time. It isn't like the soul-binding master-servant relationship, where once the master dissolves the relationship, someone else can use another soul-binding technique to tame the beast again."

Linley nodded.

"But it is extremely difficult to convince a magical beast to willingly initiate the 'bond of equals,'" Doehring Cowart continued more seriously. "You need to convince a magical beast that you are like family and make it decide that it cannot bear to part from you. Only then would it willingly enter a 'bond of equals' with you."

Linley slightly nodded.

"Adult magical beasts have very high intelligence, so if you want to move the heart of an adult magical beast and make it view you as family, it is almost impossible." Doehring Cowart sighed. "But juveniles are different. It is much like how human babies have low intelligence and can easily be tricked into liking you by, say, giving them some tasty food. The intelligence of magical beast babies is even lower. As long as you often feed him, he will like you. Then, spend some time playing with him. In a short period of time, this magical beast will come to adore you. This is especially true for an infant magical beast who has been separated from his community. Those are even easier to tame."

Hearing Doehring Cowart's words, Linley felt as though a great weight had been lifted from him.

"So it's just a matter of coaxing a little kid." Linley laughed.

He was extremely experienced in this. Ever since he was young, he accompanied his younger brother, Wharton, playing with him and coaxing him. Linley was very much a master in the art.

"Linley, don't be too cocky. If you want to coax an infant magical beast, you have to pay attention to many details. If you aren't careful, this little Shadowmouse might just give you a bite." Doehring Cowart reminded.

"Give me a bite?"

Linley looked at the far-off Shadowmouse. The sound of it crunching through rocks could be heard from afar. The Shadowmouse was chewing through it as easily as he normally would've chewn through bread. Linley didn't question the sharpness of the teeth of this Shadowmouse in the slightest.

"Then what should I do?" Linley immediately lost his confidence.

"Relax. Based on my method, you won't have any problems at all. Based on this 'clumsy idea' that I have, all you need is time and patience. Don't get agitated or impatient." Doehring Cowart slowly began to explain his 'clumsy idea'. "Linley, a Shadowmouse is an omnivore; it will eat anything. Bones, rocks, meat. But its favorite food is still meat, especially roasted meat. This is based on the experience of elders."

"Therefore, just go up Mt. Wushan to kill some beasts, then place the cooked meat far away from him on the ground. Remember. Do not try to get near him. Each time he eats, wait for him to approach you." Doehring Cowart laughed. "If you try to approach him, it might cause him to attack you out of fear! But if he approaches you, then there won't be any danger at all."

"This method is clumsy, but very safe." Doehring Cowart said with a smile.

Linley understood.

This method really was a bit clumsy, but it was also simple and direct.

“Grandpa Doebling, won’t this Shadowmouse run all over the place?” Linley was worried that if he went and got some roasted meat, he might come back to find the Shadowmouse had gone. There would be nothing he could do then.

“Who can say? It all comes down to your luck. But I believe that in a short period of time, it won’t go anywhere.” Doebling Cowart said.

“Fine, I’ll go kill some wild beasts.” Linley nodded, then quickly ran towards Mt. Wushan. His footsteps were very sure, but strangely made no sound at all. This was the proof of one’s ability as a earth-style magus.

After departing from the back gate of the manor, Linley began to run at a normal pace, and his footsteps began to sound again.

“Young master Linley, headed to the back mountain again?” Uncle Hiri, broom in hand, was dusting the floor. He saw Linley and smiled at him.

“Yup.” Linley assented as he sped up his pace.

Over the past half year, Linley had been going to Mt. Wushan to train in magecraft almost every afternoon. No one else knew that he was training in magecraft, of course. But they all knew that in the afternoons, Linley liked to spend his spare time playing in the mountains.

.....

Autumn. Most of the trees on Mt. Wushan had shed their leaves, but there were still many evergreen trees, as well as some maple trees covered in deep red leaves.

A vigorous, nimble shadow could be seen piercing through the mountain forests. Linley ran silently but nimbly and fast. After having absorbed earth essence for half a year, Linley didn't just possess mageforce; his physical strength had been raised as well.

By this point in time, Linley's body was comparable to the average 15-16 year old in Wushan township, and possessed the strength of a warrior of the first rank.

There were many squirrels and rabbits on Mt. Wushan, while there weren't many fierce beasts. This was the reason why most adults didn't worry too much about their children playing in the mountain. After all, Mt. Wushan was a fairly small mountain, with very few large animals, much less magical beasts.

Linley's footsteps suddenly halted, as he saw up ahead a dull-yellow colored rabbit eating grass.

Even a very cautious wild rabbit wasn't able to detect Linley in the slightest.

"Wild rabbits have a fast reaction time, and run fast also. Best if I use magic." Linley immediately began to chant the words to a magical incantation.

Linley felt that in the center of his chest, a small gust of earth-style mageforce began to throb. Most warriors stored their battle-qi approximately 10 centimeters below their navel, but magi stored their mageforce directly in the middle of their chests, at the middle of a line between their nipples. But spiritual energy, of course, was stored in their head.

It didn't make much of a difference if a magical incantation was mumbled or shouted. The only thing that mattered was making sure one's spiritual energy was guided by the energies released by the incantation.

In scant seconds, Linley finished his incantation, and his eyes lit up as he stared at the hare.

Earth-style, magic of the first rank – Earth Spike!

Poof!

A sharp spike of earth erupted from directly beneath the wild hare, piercing directly into its chest. Scarlet blood flowed out, dying its soft fur. Shocked at the ambush, the hare immediately began to struggle, but all it succeeded in doing was make itself lose blood even faster.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 3 – A Clumsy Method (Part 2)

Linley immediately ran over and grabbed the rabbit by the throat with one hand. CRACK! The rabbit, previously struggling in agony, twitched twice, then went still. Ever since watching those two battles half a year ago, the 'bloodthirsty' nature of the Dragonblood in Linley's veins had been in full sway.

"I am both a warrior of the first rank and a magus of the first rank, but in terms of attack power, my magic is stronger." Grabbing the wild rabbit, Linley couldn't help but laugh and sigh.

Magi were divided into nine ranks, and becoming a magus of the first rank was easy. But later on, it would become much harder, and take more time to attain each new rank! Many powerful magi of the seventh or eighth ranks would spend hundreds of years and still find it hard to attain a higher rank.

But for the first rank, half a year would be enough for someone talented. Even if one didn't have much talent, as long as they met the basic requirements for becoming a magus, two to three years would be sufficient for them to become a magus.

The rabbit in his clutches, Linley immediately began running down the mountain.

"Linley, why aren't you cooking it? Although the Shadowmouse will eat raw meat, his favorite is cooked meat." Doehring Cowart's voice sounded in Linley's mind.

"Grandpa Doehring, I bet you never coaxed any kids before." While running, Linley replied in a teasing voice.

Doehring Cowart was startled. He had never had any grandchildren, and why would a revered Saint-level Grand Magus like himself stoop to coaxing other kids?

"Um, no, I haven't." Doehring Cowart was forced to admit.

Linley self-confidently said, "I often have to coax little Wharton. Lemme tell ya, if you want to give a kid something, you can't give them something too good, right off the bat. Otherwise, in the future, they'll expect something really good every single time, or something even better. Right now, the Shadowmouse is chewing on rocks. If I give him some raw meat, he'll be really happy. I'll give him raw meat for seven or eight days, and then I'll give him cooked meat. That will make him even happier."

Doehring Cowart immediately understood.

The older one got, the craftier one got. How could he fail to understand this logic? It was the same method he had used in dealing with subordinates. First, giving them just a little taste, and then giving them more later. If you gave them too much too early, it would be hard to satisfy their urges in the future.

"I read about this as well in a book regarding raising monkeys. 'Saying three in the morning and then raising to four in the afternoon' is much more effective than 'saying four in the morning and then lowering to three in the afternoon'. Linley grinned.

Doehring Cowart suddenly felt that although Linley was only eight, he wasn't any inferior to many young adults.

"Looks like the educational methods of the Baruch clan are rather effective after all." Doehring Cowart silently sighed with praise. Education can raise a person's intelligence, but most commoners didn't have access to education. Most commoners could not meet either the entry requirements or the fee requirements for good magus academies or warrior academies.

.....

None of the people of Mt. Wushan found it strange for Linley to be running home with a wild hare in hand. In truth, ever since Linley had learned the 'Earth Spike' spell, he often brought wild hares home.

"Young master Linley is so formidable. He caught another wild hare." The commoners in the town grinned as they watched him pass by.

Linley also politely smiled back at them as he walked past them on the street.

"I wonder if the Shadowmouse will eat something which is provided by another."

Taking a deep breath, Linley entered his family's manor and went to the back courtyard, and one careful step at a time, approached the location where the Shadowmouse had appeared, his footsteps not making a single sound. In a short period of time, Linley returned to his earlier position.

"Where's the Shadowmouse?" Linley stared at the ancient building, but aside from some rubble and rotting leaves, he didn't see anything.

Some of the stones still showed signs of being chewed on, but despite scanning inside the entire building, he couldn't see even the shadow of the Shadowmouse. Linley couldn't help but feel despondent and miserable. "Grandpa Doebling, the Shadowmouse isn't here anymore. It was just an hour. Did it leave already?"

A ray of light shot out of the Coiling Dragon Ring and transformed into the white-robed Doebling Cowart.

Doebling Cowart also frowned in confusion. "That shouldn't be the case. It was just an hour. Did it really leave already?"

Suddenly!

"Crunch, crunch." That familiar, soft crunching sound could be heard once again. Linley's eyes brightened, and he immediately turned and headed towards an ancient courtyard nearby. Arriving at the entryway, he clearly saw the black Shadowmouse chewing on stones in one spot, unmoving. He seemed almost like a sculptor, as he chewed each rock into surprising, bizarre shapes.

Linley stood at the doorway.

Tap! Linley purposefully let his foot bang into the doorway and make some sound.

"Eek!"

The black Shadowmouse immediately moved and in the blink of an eye, appeared over ten meters away. His two guileless eyes stared towards the doorway, and he immediately saw Linley. His eyes were filled with caution.

"Here, this is for you to eat."

Linley smiled at the Shadowmouse, then tossed the wild hare in front of the doorway. Perhaps the Shadowmouse couldn't understand human speech, but Linley understood that an intelligent magical beast should be able to understand the meaning of a smile.

After all, magical beasts weren't like wild beasts. Their intelligence levels were only slightly lower than humans, and some powerful magical beasts were incredibly crafty.

"Don't rush it, don't rush it." Linley kept on telling himself, and then forced himself to slowly walk away.

The Shadowmouse saw Linley depart, and then looked at the wild hare. He only managed to resist for a short period of time, then he scurried like a flash to the doorway while still staring at the now-distant Linley. Only then did he look at the dead hare. The Shadowmouse immediately grew ecstatic and was so happy that he began to hop about.

"Squeak, squeak!" The Shadowmouse began to make a happy sound.

And then he immediately began to eat the wild hare. His sharp teeth chewed at an incredibly fast rate. Although the Shadowmouse had a small body, this wild hare which was physically larger than the Shadowmouse was fully devoured by it, aside from the fur. Even the bones weren't spared.

"Buuuurp!" The little Shadowmouse made a belching noise, and then, in a very human-like gesture, rubbed its belly, extremely content.

Compared to stones, raw meat clearly was a much tastier treat.

After finishing his meal, the Shadowmouse glanced again in the direction which Linley had departed to. The baby Shadowmouse immediately felt a degree of kinship for this young fellow. After all, he was just recently born, an infant magical beast. The baby Shadowmouse even felt a bit of anticipation. Would this young man return in the future with another wild hare?

That same day, before dinner.

"Wonder if the little Shadowmouse ate it or not." Linley was currently in the back courtyard of the manor, and walked towards the area where he had tossed the wild hare earlier.

"Linley, don't worry. That's just a baby magical beast. It's always very hungry." Doehring Cowart's laughter echoed merrily in Linley's mind.

Linley nodded slightly. He quickly arrived at the doorway, and saw that at the doorway, there was some rabbit fur splattered with blood. But the rabbit's flesh and bones were all gone. Seeing this, Linley's eyes immediately shone.

"Wonderful!" Linley clenched a fist.

The first step was a success. The only thing left to do was to persevere!

The next afternoon, Linley killed another wild hare as well as a wild chicken. He gave the wild hare to Uncle Hiri to prepare for dinner, and then tossed the wild chicken in the exact same location as he had tossed the hare; at the doorway to that courtyard.

"The Shadowmouse is actually here staring at me." Linley chuckled as he saw that Shadowmouse inside the courtyard watch him approach.

"Linley, looks like things are progressing smoothly. He didn't run away immediately upon seeing you, which means that he doesn't feel much hostility towards you." Upon seeing this, Doehring Cowart secretly felt joy for Linley. Linley really was lucky to have met such a powerful juvenile magical beast.

"I really wonder what this young fella's parents are up to." Doehring Cowart was secretly suspicious.

After placing the wild chicken at the doorway, he said a few words to the young Shadowmouse, smiled, and then retreated. But this time, he didn't depart, just standing off to the side and watched. Shortly afterwards, the young Shadowmouse scampered out. Looking around himself, when he saw Linley's far off presence, he wasn't too scared. He immediately lowered his head and began to eat the chicken.

....

Day three. Day four. Day five.

These activities continued. Day after day, Linley continued to undergo meditative training while preparing wild rabbits and other animals for the little Shadowmouse to eat. Nobody in the entire Wushan township, including Hogg and Hillman, knew that Linley was learning magic. Similarly, none of them knew that Linley was taking care of a juvenile magical beast that already possessed power of the fourth rank!

Only Doebling Cowart was aware of this all, as he watched Linley mature.

"There's no way that tiny little Wushan township is big enough for Linley." Watching Linley enter the meditative trance to practice magic, Doebling Cowart felt a hint of excitement. "Sooner or later, he will bring an adult Violet Shadowmouse and step onto the endlessly broad stage that is the world of the Yulan continent."

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 4 – The Ernst Institute

As time passed, the little Shadowmouse, which had not known much love from others, began to fear Linley less and less. By the eighth day, when Linley put down the rabbit, he moved away only two steps, and that little Shadowmouse still immediately ran over to eat, and even squeaked twice at Linley.

The tenth day!

“Right, today I’ll give the little Shadowmouse some cooked meat.” Linley covered a wild chicken with a cloth sack, and then happily went to the back of the ancient courtyard in the manor.

Doehring Cowart was walking by Linley’s side as well, but aside from Linley, no one else could see him. Doehring Cowart was smiling so widely that his white whiskers were leaning horizontal. “Linley, over these past nine days, the little Shadowmouse has lost all fear of you. Today, you are even giving him cooked meat. He’s going to be extremely excited and will become even closer to you.”

Hearing his words, Linley couldn’t help but grin as well.

Just as Linley walked into the courtyard....

“Squeak, squeak!” The little Shadowmouse immediately ran up to Linley, and began hopping up and down while squeaking at him.

"I haven't even taken the food out, and he's already run up to me. He really isn't afraid of me at all." Linley felt joy in his heart.

Next to him, Doebling Cowart smiled merrily at the little Shadowmouse, which didn't notice his presence at all. Doebling Cowart said with a smile, "Looks like he's already feeling quite close to you."

"Squeeeaaaak!" The little Shadowmouse looked at Linley with its innocent black eyes and began to squeak with impatience, as though telling Linley to hurry up and give him the food already.

"Don't be impatient." Linley took the roasted chicken out of the clothsack.

Upon smelling the roasted chicken, the little Shadowmouse's eyes shone, and then it looked at Linley pitifully. Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but laugh until his stomach hurt. In the past, when Linley gave good food to little Wharton, little Wharton would say, "Big bro, I want!" while staring at him in a pitiful manner.

Now this little Shadowmouse was doing the same!

"Hehe, all yours!" Linley gave the cooked chicken to the Shadowmouse.

The little Shadowmouse squeaked with joy, immediately seizing the roast chicken. After taking a single bite, the little Shadowmouse began to eat faster and faster. In a very short time, the roast chicken, which was about the same size as the Shadowmouse itself, had been completely devoured.

"I really don't get how his stomach can contain so much. How can he swallow that much food?" Linley laughed while sighing.

It seemed as though this time, the little Shadowmouse had enjoyed his meal very much. He was so happy that he immediately began to hop up and down while squeaking at Linley, while even hugging Linley's leg with his own front arms. Linley couldn't help but feel pleased; this was the first time that the little Shadowmouse had acted so intimately towards him, even after eating.

"Linley, try and use your hand to smooth his fur. Usually, most magical beasts like their family members to groom them and stroke their fur." Doehring Cowart advised.

Linley tentatively stretched his hand out and placed it on the little Shadowmouse's head. The little Shadowmouse didn't dodge in the slightest. Instead, it contentedly half-closed its eyes. Linley immediately felt more confident, and began to stroke his fur, causing the Shadowmouse to feel so comfortable that it began to snore.

"This little guy is so adorable." Linley was really beginning to like this little Shadowmouse more and more.

"Grandpa Doehring, magical beasts are so strange. That Velocidragon is so huge and has such tough scales, making it a magical beast of the seventh rank. But this little Shadowmouse, when he grows up, will also become a magical beast of the seventh rank. Both of them have the same rank, but why is there such a big difference between them?"

While petting the little Shadowmouse, Linley couldn't help but feel amazed.

"You can't judge them just based on their appearances. Perhaps an ordinary old geezer that you meet on the street is able to ride a flying dragon and level a mountain with the wave of a hand." Doehring Cowart laughed merrily.

Linley understood this logic.

But unconsciously, he still used appearances to judge.

For example, that Velocidragon. Seeing how huge body was and seeing how its scales gleamed with a frozen golden light, anyone could tell how powerful it was.

"I really wonder when this little Shadowmouse will initiate a 'bond of equals' with me." Linley mumbled. There was nothing he could do. The 'bond of equals' could only be initiated by magical beasts, so he could only passively wait.

Doehring Cowart laughed. "Things are progressing very well. Remember. You must have patience."

"Right. I got it." Linley laughed as well.

.....

In the blink of an eye, time passed. Linley had fed the little Shadowmouse for twenty days now, and the little Shadowmouse was behaving extremely familiarly with Linley. But for some reason, even though the two of them had become extremely close, the little Shadowmouse still had not initiated the 'bond of equals'.

Darkness covered the land, and the entire Wushan township was very quiet.

Within the Baruch clan's living room, candlelight flickered from within as Linley and his family, along with Housekeeper Hiri, were enjoying supper together on the long dining table.

"Linley, I hear that you've often been bringing roasted hares to the back courtyards?" Halfway through the meal, Hogg put down his utensils and turned to Linley.

Linley was startled.

"Looks like it is time for me to confess." Linley said to himself, then looked at Hogg and nodded. "Father, recently I discovered a cute animal living in our back courtyard, an extremely cute animal. So I often bring him some food."

"A cute animal?" Little Wharton's eyes shone.

"Oh."

Hogg nodded. "People rarely visit the back courtyard, so its normal for there to be animals there. Right. In a week or so, the Fenlai City is going to begin another round of magical aptitude testing and magus recruitment. Do you want to participate?"

"Oh, the magus testing and recruiting event?" Linley suddenly remembered this event.

The ray of light which only Linley could see shot out from within the Coiling Dragon Ring, turning into the white-bearded Doebling Cowart. Doebling Cowart laughed at Linley, "Linley, the magus testing and recruiting event is optional for you. Under my guidance, will you achieve less than at a magus academy?"

Linley agreed with this line of thought.

Doebling Cowart was a Saint-level Grand Magus. Would any magus academies require a Saint-level Grand Magus to teach there?

"What, you don't want to go?" Hogg's face, previously smiling, immediately grew cold as he frowned.

Hogg remembered clearly that ever since the battle between the dual-element magus of the eighth rank and the small party, Linley had very much wanted to become a magus. Why was he hesitating now? In Hogg's heart, he too hoped that his son could become a magus.

"Father, I..."

"No, Linley, accept your father's offer." Doebling Cowart frowned and hurriedly said.

Linley's words died unspoken on his lips. At the same time, he suspiciously asked, "Grandpa Doebling, I have you to teach me, right? With you teaching me, why would I need to go to a magus academy? Isn't that a waste of family resources?"

"No." Doebling Cowart said seriously. "I haven't interacted with the Yulan continent for over five thousand years. Five thousand years, Linley! You must understand that many magi in the world have been continuously researching and developing new spells during this time period. Who knows how many new spells have been developed in the interim."

Linley suddenly understood.

"And Linley, you must know that Wushan township is not the stage on which you will perform. You must step onto a far wider stage." Doebling Cowart said seriously.

"A far wider stage..."

Linley couldn't help but be moved.

He couldn't help but remember that huge Velocidragon, and the destructive power unleashed by the 'Dance of the Fire Serpents', as well as the Saint-level Grand Magus 'Rudi', who effortlessly controlled those countless boulders to cause an absolute calamity.

"The future..."

Linley's heart began to beat faster. If he could one day step atop the head of a dragon and control cataclysmic power, if he too could feel the power of standing at the very pinnacle of mankind, that must be an amazing feeling. When he thought of this, Linley felt his blood begin to boil.

"Linley, what are you thinking about?" Hogg was beginning to grow unhappy. When he was talking to Linley, Linley was daydreaming.

"Oh, nothing!" Linley immediately looked at Hogg and quickly nodded while saying solemnly, "Father, in my heart, I really want to become a magus. In a week, please arrange for me to go to Fenlai City to take part in the magus testing and recruiting event."

Upon hearing these words, Hogg finally smiled.

"Magus, ooo, ooo, like that fire-breathing magus?" While listening, little Wharton clapped his little hands together.

"Wharton, that was just a circus trick! Don't mix up circus tricks and real sorcery." Hogg said seriously.

"Oh." Little Wharton pouted and stopped talking.

Linley chuckled, then turned to look at Hogg. "Father, there must be many magus academies. Which ones are good? Right, are there any combined magus academy/warrior academy schools?"

Hogg laughed as well. "Actually, all four of the major empires and both the major alliances have their own elite academies. You should know that one of the four major empires, the O'Brien Empire, is the empire with the strongest military power."

Linley nodded. Everyone knew that.

"The most elite school in the O'Brien Empire is the O'Brien Academy, which is reputed to be the number one warrior academy in the entire Yulan continent. But as far as magus academies go..." Hogg chuckled. "The number one magus academy in the entire Yulan continent belongs to our Holy Union. Its name comes from a legendary Holy Emperor of the Holy Church, 'Holy Emperor Ernst'. The 'Ernst Institute'."

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 5 – ‘Bebe’ the Shadowmouse (part 1)

“The Ernst Institute is the number one magus academy in the world. All of the graduates of the Ernst Institute are at least magi of the sixth rank, and there’s even many who are of the seventh rank! If our Baruch clan was able to produce a magus of the seventh rank, we at least would stand a chance of recovering our ancestral heirloom.”

While speaking, Hogg looked at Linley eagerly.

Linley could feel the hope which Hogg was placing on him.

“Our ancestral heirloom. For our ancestral heirloom to be lost to us is a humiliation that must be washed away.” Linley could also feel his heart grow heavy.

As a scion of the ancient Dragonblood Warrior clan, he felt proud of his ancient and mighty lineage. But the mighty Dragonblood Warrior clan had lost its own ancestral heirloom. What a humiliation! Hogg and countless elders who had passed away had all felt ashamed whenever they thought about it.

Unfortunately, the type of family which could collect the warblade ‘Slaughterer’ was not an ordinary one, and the current Baruch clan was far too weak.

“Ernst? The legendary Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church?” The nearby Doebling Cowart started.

"What is it, Grandpa Doebling?" Linley asked questioningly. "I bet all of the hundreds of millions of citizens in the six kingdoms and fifteen dukedoms of the Holy Union know about the legendary Holy Emperor Ernst of the Radiant Church." Linley, also, knew much about the affairs and history of the legendary Holy Emperor Ernst.

He had dramatically raised the profile of the Radiant Church, and single-handedly created the Holy Union.

"I didn't imagine that kid, Ernst, ended up having such accomplishments. And he even became a legendary Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church!" Doebling Cowart sighed.

"Grandpa Doebling, you knew Holy Emperor Ernst?" Linley was somewhat surprised.

But then, Linley thought things through.

That's right. In the past, when the Pouant Empire was still unified, the Radiant Church, the Cult of Shadows, and even the Pavilion of Divinities all had many churches within the empire. But all of those churches were under the control of the Pouant Empire.

"Naturally. Ernst was a genius who entered the Saint-level when he was merely fifty or so years old. But in my age, he could only be considered a promising latecomer." Doebling Cowart said calmly.

When Doebling Cowart was still alive, Ernst had still been developing himself. When Ernst had finally entered the Saint-level, Doebling Cowart had already been standing at the very pinnacle of the Yulan continent for a long time. Even amongst Saint-level combatants, Doehring Cowart would have been considered one of the greatest.

Doehring Cowart had an extremely high status within the Pouant Empire, which Ernst didn't come close to matching, at the time.

If Ernst had run into him, he would have had to courteously bow and pay his respects.

"I didn't expect that after I died, Ernst would become so incredible." Doehring Cowart laughed faintly.

Linley couldn't help but feel a deep sense of veneration for Doehring Cowart from his heart. A Saint-level Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire, and one of the most powerful persons in the Yulan continent. And now, Doehring Cowart was carefully instructing himself in magic. How fortunate Linley was!

As dinner progressed, the conversation amongst the Baruch clan manors was quite cheerful.

"Linley, in a week's time, I'll arrange for Uncle Hillman to take you to Fenlai City and attend the magus testing and recruiting event." Hogg smiled towards Linley.

"Yes, father."

Linley nodded.

“Young master Linley, I’m sure that you will be able to enter the finest of magus academies.” Housekeeper Hiri chortled.

“The finest. Oh. The finest!” Little Wharton’s hands were covered in grease from eating, but still beamed as he waved his greasy hands.

Hogg smiled faintly as he said, “Becoming a magus is no easy thing. Perhaps only one in ten thousand has the talent. The requirements for entering the Ernst Institute are even higher. Only someone with an extremely high aptitude for magic will be admitted. If Linley can become a magus, I will be very satisfied, regardless of what academy he is accepted to.”

“I won’t let you down, father.” Linley’s words were filled with confidence.

Because Linley, after all, was already a magus of the first rank.

.....

As time flowed onwards, in the blink of an eye seven days had passed.

Linley was lying on the grass near the back courtyard, while the little Shadowmouse was hopping up and down around Linley. It was squeaking nonstop, but Linley paid him no mind.

The little Shadowmouse rolled its eyes, then stood up on its hind feet and placed its front feet on top of Linley’s body.

"Squeeeeeeak." The Shadowmouse called out with displeasure.

Linley rubbed the little Shadowmouse's head. "Alright, stop making a fuss. Tomorrow, I'm going to leave home and go to the capital. After the magus recruitment event is over, I'm going to be going to a magus academy. I'm afraid we won't have many chances to meet after that."

There was no way he could bring a little Shadowmouse into a magus academy.

Not a single student in a magus academy was an ordinary one, and there were many powerful magi there as well. If they found a little Shadowmouse there, they would probably immediately subdue and tame him. Even magi of the seventh and eighth ranks were present in magus academies. Catching a little Shadowmouse wouldn't be too hard.

After all, he hadn't bonded with the little Shadowmouse yet, so anybody could subdue and tame him.

"Sniff, sniff..." Hearing Linley speak, the little Shadowmouse also began to sniff in a low tone.

"You don't even know what I'm saying," Linley shook his head helplessly.

"I don't know how much time I will have to spend in a magus academy, or how many years I will be there for. Will we ever meet again?" Linley stroked the little Shadowmouse's fur, somewhat unwilling to part from it. After playing with the little Shadowmouse for the past month, he had really come to care for the cute little Shadowmouse.

The little Shadowmouse enjoyed the petting so much that its eyes grew half-lidded as it squeaked quietly in contentment.

.....

The next day, after lunch. The Baruch family's front courtyard.

Hogg stood there, straight as a ramrod. Staring directly at Linley, he said, "Linley, Wushan township is located fairly close to the capital, just ninety or so kilometers away. You should be able to make it to the capital before nightfall. Remember, when you reach the capital, don't cause any trouble. There are too many rich and powerful people in the capital."

"Yes, father." Linley bowed as he said.

"Hillman, I entrust Linley to you." Hogg looked at the nearby Hillman.

Hillman smiled as he said, "Lord Hogg, please set your mind at ease."

"Alright, you can go now." Hogg laughed.

"Farewell, father." Linley said respectfully, and then smiled at little Wharton. "Wharton, your big brother is gonna leave now."

Little Wharton immediately squinted towards Linley. In a sad voice, he said, "Big brother, bye bye!"

Linley glanced at the back courtyard, thinking to himself, "I'm afraid no one is going to come bring meat to the little Shadowmouse in the next few days." Hillman, who was next to him, said to Linley, "Linley, let's go!"

"Yes, Uncle Hillman."

Linley didn't think about it anymore, and immediately followed Uncle Hillman as they departed from the manor.

"Squeak." On the rooftops above the living room of the Baruch clan manor, the little Shadowmouse watched Linley and Hillman depart. The little Shadowmouse's mind was filled with questions. In his eyes, this was the time when Linley should be going off to kill a wild hare. Why had he taken up a bag and headed off with someone else?

The little Shadowmouse really liked Linley.

Over the past month, the friendless little Shadowmouse had really come to view Linley as family.

"Squeak!"

The little Shadowmouse's body flickered and in the blink of an eye, disappeared from atop the eaves of the Baruch clan's manor. In two or three movements, it moved, reappearing on top of a nearby peasant's house, still watching Linley and Hillman. As it followed behind Linley, the little Shadowmouse soon had left Wushan township.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 6 – ‘Bebe’ the Shadowmouse (part 2)

The little Shadowmouse had previously watched Linley go hunting rabbits in the mountain, but this time, Linley wasn't headed for the mountain. He was headed off in a totally different direction, traveling on a road. The little Shadowmouse immediately panicked.

"Squeak, squeak!"

The little Shadowmouse suddenly rushed in Linley's direction.

Just as Linley was walking, he suddenly discovered that his legs had been hugged from behind. Lowering his head, he saw that it was the little Shadowmouse. The little Shadowmouse was standing up on his hind legs, his two forelegs tightly clenched around Linley. He stared at Linley with two quavering, pitiable eyes, as though he were about to cry.

"Uh, what's the little Shadowmouse doing here?!" Linley was somewhat surprised.

Next to them, Hillman turned his head towards them. Upon seeing the little Shadowmouse, he was shocked. "A magical beast! Is it a Stoneater Rat?" Hillman didn't know too much about the various types of magical beasts, but there once was an entire army which had been devoured by Stoneater Rats, so most soldiers knew and feared rat-type magical beasts.

"Linley, be careful!" Hillman immediately rushed towards them. Linley only saw a blur, and then Hillman was there, right next to the little Shadowmouse.

But the little Shadowmouse was even faster, and in the blink of an eye, scurried on top of Linley's shoulder.

"Uncle Hillman, hold it!" Linley finally managed to react.

Hillman was startled.

"Uncle Hillman, he's the pet that I've been feeding and raising in the back courtyard." Linley hurriedly said. "Little Shadowmouse, isn't that right?"

The little Shadowmouse seemed to understand Linley's words, and his small head nodded.

Hillman looked at Linley with shock. "Linley, are you saying that you've been raising, raising a magical beast?"

"Uncle Hillman, wait a sec. Lemme tell him to go home." Linley cupped the little Shadowmouse in his hands and said to it, "Little Shadowmouse, I am going to leave with Uncle Hillman to the capital. You cannot go to the capital. Understood?"

The little Shadowmouse just stared at Linley with pitiable sad eyes, as though he were about to cry Linley placed the little Shadowmouse on the floor, then waved his hand at it. "Go back." And then he pointed to the road. "I'm going that way. To the capital.”

After waving his arm, Linley began to continue going forward.

“Squeak. Squeaaaaak!” The little Shadowmouse stood there, watching Linley.

“Uncle Hillman, let’s go. Hehe, the little Shadowmouse is smart. He knows what I’m saying.” Linley said to Hillman. Hillman, who had been watching this spectacle with amazement, chuckled and then continued walking forward with Linley.

Seeing Linley and Hillman slowly disappear, the little Shadowmouse still stayed there, unmoving.

“Squeak squeak....”

The little Shadowmouse suddenly gave out a loud squeak, and then turned into a black blur, traveling twenty or thirty meters in the blink of an eye. His speed was absolutely shocking, as was his agility. Linley and Hillman were chatting while walking on the road, but Hillman suddenly felt something was quickly charging them from behind and couldn’t help but look back.

“Whooosh!”

Hillman wasn’t even given enough time to react. That blur suddenly landed next to Linley’s legs, and immediately chomped down on Linley’s right leg.

"OW!" Feeling the sudden, fierce pain, Linley immediately jumped up in the air.

Looking down, he saw that it was actually the little Shadowmouse. At the moment, the little Shadowmouse was staring up at Linley with its pitiable, sad little eyes. Linley rubbed his leg, and noticed that he was actually bleeding. He couldn't help but grow unhappy. But seeing how sad the little Shadowmouse was, he couldn't grow angry at him.

"Linley, are you okay?" Hillman said.

"I'm fine," Linley chuckled.

Suddenly –

A thick, dense black light began to emanate from the little Shadowmouse's body. A droplet of fresh blood suddenly flew out from the corner of its mouth. That droplet of fresh blood had both Linley's blood as well as the little Shadowmouse's blood. That blood suddenly, bizarrely transformed into two opposite, interlocking black triangles, which the thick black light merged with, forming a strange magical formation which gave off a dark aura.

Linley and Hillman watched, stunned.

"Is this..can this be?" Linley had a wild guess in his heart.

From within the Coiling Dragon Ring, Doebling Cowart flew out. His white beard fluttering happily, he said, "Linley, the little guy is setting up a 'bond of equals' formation."

"It really is the 'bond of equals'?" Linley's heart clenched. Even though he had guessed as much, he still felt stunned and excited.

The strange black magical formation separated into two, with one of the three black triangles flying into Linley's body, and the other one flying into the little Shadowmouse's body. Upon seeing this, the nearby Hillman was filled with shock and fear.

"Linley, are you okay?" Hillman was starting to fear for Linley.

"I'm fine. I'm wonderful!" Linley could feel his spirit and the little Shadowmouse's spirit interlinking.

Standing on this quiet road leading out of Wushan township, Linley and the little Shadowmouse stared at each other, engaging in their first communication.

"Little Shadowmouse, what is your name?" Linley mentally asked him.

The little Shadowmouse said, somewhat excitedly, "Bei....bei...."

Linley stared at the little Shadowmouse.

"What's the little Shadowmouse saying?" Linley didn't really understand.

His white beard flowing, Doebling Cowart floated next to him and mentally said, "Linley, this little Shadowmouse is still an infant. He can't form precise sounds yet. Even when engaging in mental communication with you, for now, he can only communicate simple intentions."

Due to their spiritual link, Linley could feel the little Shadowmouse's excitement, but the little Shadowmouse simply couldn't speak at all.

"Okay. You were saying 'Bei'....'Bei'....then I'm going to call you 'Bebe'. How's that?" Linley grinned as he watched the little Shadowmouse.

The little Shadowmouse seemed to ponder for a while, and then happily nodded.

"Bebe." Linley was grinning so widely, his face was about to split.

"Squeak squeak." The little Shadowmouse immediately began to jump up and down.

"Bebe!"

"Squeak squeak."

"Bebe!"

"Squeak squeak."

....

An eight year old child and a little Shadowmouse were both excitedly shouting.

"Linley, this...what...what is this?" Only now did Hillman recover from his stupor. His eyes couldn't help but grow round with shock. "Linley, what was that black magical formation just now? What just happened? Are you okay?"

Hillman had heard that for darkness-style magic, there were many curses and hexes involved.

Could it be that Linley had just been hexed?

Hillman, who only knew an inkling about magic, couldn't help but feel shock and fear.

"Haha, I'm fine. It's just that Bebe has become my magical beast, now." Linley was extremely happy. "Come, Bebe, hop onto my shoulder." Immediately, the little Shadowmouse let out a happy squeal, then scurried onto Linley's shoulder.

"You...tamed him?" Hillman was stunned.

Hillman was a worldly man, and of course he knew that taming a magical beast was an extremely difficult, extremely arduous matter. But just now, Linley had actually subdued a magical beast.

Hillman felt totally bewildered. "You...you don't have a soul-binding scroll, how...how did you?"

"That's enough, Uncle Hillman," Linley chortled. "Let's hurry, we have a lot of road to make up. The capital is still really far away." As he spoke, Linley pulled Hillman by the hand, not allowing him to speak as they continued heading towards the capital.

And the little Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', stood happily on Linley's shoulders and squeaked.

And with his squeaks to accompany them, Linley, Hillman, and the Shadowmouse disappeared off into the distance.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 7 – Fenlai City

Next to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance. And the capital kingdom of the Holy Union was the kingdom of Fenlai!

Fenlai City, in turn, was the capital of the kingdom of Fenlai.

In addition, it also served as the 'Holy Capital' of the Holy Union, because the Radiant Church itself was headquartered in the western part of Fenlai City.

The entire city of Fenlai was divided into two parts; East Fenlai City, and West Fenlai City. East Fenlai City was governed by the King of Fenlai, while West Fenlai City was managed by the Radiant Church. Because Fenlai City was both the kingdom's capital as well as the Holy Capital, the opulence of Fenlai City could be matched by extremely few cities in the entire Yulan continent.

Fenlai City took up a huge amount of space, and had more than a million denizens living within its area. In the entire Yulan continent, it could be considered one of the top five megacities.

As nightfall came, Linley and Hillman entered the Fenlai City.

"Wow."

As they walked on Fragrant Pavilion Road, the primary road of East

Fenlai City, Linley felt as though his eyes were dazzled. The little Shadowmouse Bebe had been instructed by Linley to hide within his clothes, but he also took a sneak peek at the surroundings, and then began to squeak in shared excitement.

Fortunately, the entire road was filled with all sorts of noises and gaudy things, so nobody noticed the sound.

“Quiet!” Linley gently tapped the little Shadowmouse, which obediently went silent. But through its shared mental connection with Linley, it continued to express its excitement.

The entire Fragrant Pavilion Road was constructed from symmetrical limestone tiles, wide enough to allow multiple horse carriages to cross simultaneously. On each side of the tiles were hotels, clothing stores, weapon stores, nightclubs, and all sorts of other places. In addition, both sides of the Fragrant Pavilion Road were lined with pine and cypress trees.

Rich madames and young ladies, all wearing fashionable new clothes, were chatting and smiling as they walked along the road.

Seeing Linley’s reaction, some of the nearby noble ladies began to titter quietly amongst themselves while pointing at Linley. Clearly, Linley’s reaction was that of a ‘country bumpkin entering the city’. The nobility of the capital had a clear sense of innate superiority towards those country bumpkins.

“Hmph. How uncultured.” Linley frowned, feeling very unsatisfied by the pointing and laughing of those noble ladies.

Having been nurtured and educated by the clan since his earliest days, Linley quickly managed to subdue his sense of excitement, making the expression on his face much more tranquil, at least superficially.

“Linley, how do you feel about Fenlai City? This is the largest city in our entire Holy Union.” Hillman walked alongside Linley, occasionally seeing some warriors and even one or two magi pass by. He couldn’t help but sigh, “Linley, in Fenlai City, mighty warriors and mighty magi are a very common sight.”

Linley laughed while nodding. “In the books, it is said that Fenlai City is the political, economic, and cultural capital of the entire Holy Union.”

“This is heaven for rich people or people with status.” Hillman nodded and sighed.

The Fragrant Pavilion Road, bustling with activity, often had many opulent carriages pass through it. After wandering the Fragrant Pavilion Road for a time, Hillman and Linley headed directly for an ordinary guesthouse to settle down.

There was a small restaurant near the guesthouse, so Linley and Hillman decided to have dinner there.

That night, within the guesthouse.

Linley and Hillman were staying in the same room. There were two beds in this room. Immediately upon entering, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, leapt out from within Linley's clothes and immediately began circling around Linley while squeaking loudly.

"I know, I know, you're hungry. Eat up." Linley threw the roast duck he had brought back from the restaurant onto the floor, and Bebe immediately excitedly ran to it and began chewing.

"Linley, get an early night's rest. Tomorrow morning, you will participate in the magus assessment and recruitment event." Hillman instructed.

"Understood, Uncle Hillman." Even as he spoke, Linley walked to a nearby window and pulled it open.

The guesthouse was three stories tall, and Linley was staying on the third floor. There were no three story high buildings in Wushan township at all, but in the capital city of Fenlai, they were a common sight. The capital even had seven or eight story tall buildings.

Peering out through the window, Linley saw that the streets were still filled with people.

"Whew. It's been quite a while since I've been in a large city." A hazy white light shone out from the Coiling Dragon Ring, transforming into a white-bearded old man. Doehring Cowart and Linley stood side by side as they stared at the street below.

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley immediately greeted him.

"Linley, how does it feel to be in a big city?" Doehring Cowart laughed as he spoke.

"No big deal." Linley quirked his mouth.

Doehring Cowart sighed emotionally, "You haven't been here very long. You don't know much about how large cities like this work. This place will have countless lavish places to spend money, like large auctions, where some magnates would spend even hundreds of thousands of gold coins, or perhaps even millions of gold coins to purchase just a single item."

"A million gold coins?" Linley felt his throat go dry.

How enormous a sum was that? His own family's possessions, all added together, probably wouldn't even total a million gold coins.

"There's many rich families here. Money, power, beauties...the fight for these things is fierce. Every day, someone dies here. The poor ditch-diggers of Fenlai City will often find buried bodies, which perhaps used to belong to a noble family."

Doehring Cowart chuckled calmly. "But in order to stand up in that sort of world, you must have some sort of personal power."

"Don't hope to be able to rely on the benevolence of others. Everything will rely on yourself, and yourself alone." Doehring Cowart looked at Linley.

In truth, the Dragonblood flowing through Linley's veins also made him thirst for battle and blood.

"If anyone threatens me or my family, I will kill them." Linley said resolutely. After having read many history books about the rise and fall of noble families, Linley knew very clearly that showing mercy to enemies was the same as being merciless to oneself.

If you let an enemy off the hook, they might one day murder your family.

"However, right now my power is very weak." Linley couldn't help but recollect how, when he had first entered Fenlai City, those noble ladies had looked down upon him. In the eyes of those upper class people, he was nothing more than an impoverished little country bumpkin.

With a calm smile, Linley sat down on the bed and entered the meditative trance, beginning to gather energy.

The meditative trance was a good way to train one's spiritual energy. The way it worked was, it used all sorts of methods to exhaust one's spiritual energy to a bare minimum, and then allow rest to recover it!

Within the dantian in the chest...

A misty earth-colored haze billowed about within the dantian. This misty haze was the mageforce which had been derived from natural earth elemental essence. Based on Doehring Cowart's teachings, from the first to sixth ranks, mageforce appeared as a haze. As a magus continued to progress, the quality of the mageforce would rise, and so too would its density.

Upon reaching the seventh rank, the mageforce of a magus would condense into a liquid.

Thus, between the sixth rank and the seventh rank, there was a major leap to be made!

“This kid, Linley, is so hard working. Even at night, he is training his mental energy.” Seeing Linley seated cross-legged with his eyes closed, Hillman couldn’t help but silently praise him. Mental energy was extremely important to both magi and warriors!

.....

Early next morning, on East Fenlai City’s Greenleaf Road. One of Fenlai City’s principal roads, the buildings constructed on each side of Greenleaf Road were lavishly made and decorated. Some of those buildings were actually owned by the kingdom. And the tallest building of them all? It was the Cathedral of the Radiant Church.

The Radiant Church controlled the entire Holy Union, which comprised of the six kingdoms and the fifteen dukedoms.

The Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church had an extremely high status. He had the authority to depose any of the kings of the various kingdoms! This is why in Fenlai City, the tallest building was the Cathedral of the Radiant Church.

This morning, many people were gathered around the entrance to the Cathedral of the Radiant Church. The vast majority of the people there were richly dressed noblemen. Countless carriages filled up the space in front of the Radiant Cathedral, and the various nobles chatted to each other.

Linley and Hillman had arrived here as well.

“Uncle Hillman, there’s so many people here today. Many nobles brought their children here.” Linley laughed towards Hillman. At this time, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was hiding within Linley’s clothes, occasionally peeking out to see his surroundings.

Hillman laughed calmly, “Nobles? Every single student of the Ernst Institute can easily become an earl in any kingdom.”

“An earl in any kingdom?” Linley immediately understood.

It wasn’t hard to be conferred a noble title in any kingdom, but to become an imperial noble would be extremely difficult. After all, any of the four great empires were a match for the entire Holy Union. The kingdom of Fenlai couldn’t come close to comparing to them.

“Oh, Lord Doyle [Dao’er], you came as well?”

“Eber [Xi’bo], I’m here because of my child, of course. Hess [He’si], come pay your respects to Uncle Eber.”

Not too far away, a group of nobles were chatting amongst themselves. The testing fee alone at this magus testing and recruiting event was ten gold coins. And if a student was accepted to a magus academy, then the school fees would be even higher. Most magus academies charged hundreds of gold coins each year! Ordinary families simply couldn't afford the fees. But if their children were selected, naturally they would be able to find a noble patron to pay for them.

However, not all magus academies had expensive tuition fees.

For example, the number one magus academy, the Ernst Institute. Because it admitted so few students, any students who hailed from the Holy Union did not have to pay any fees at all! After all, everyone who could be admitted to the Ernst Institute had to be genius-level. In the future, their possibilities were limitless.

"Hmph. Those commoners and country bumpkins have also come. Aren't they just dreaming?" A far-away noble laughed.

There were some commoners amongst the hundreds of people crowding the square, and some countryside nobles such as Linley. Usually, those nobles from small countryside noble families were also looked down upon. The nobles of the capital were an arrogant lot who generally looked down on people.

"Linley, don't pay any attention to the likes of them." Hillman said in a low voice.

Glancing at the group of nobles, Linley chuckled quietly. "Uncle Hillman, I won't pay any mind to their likes." Under the tutelage of his father Hogg, Linley wouldn't pay too much heed to that group of self-centered, arrogant nobles.

The entire square was clearly delineated into two camps. A circle of nobles who conversed casually, and another with commoners or countryside nobles.

At the moment, two armor-clad warriors were standing in front of the Radiant Cathedral, barring all entry.

After a while, a black-robed official stepped forth from the cathedral doors. Stopping in front of the doors, he smiled and said in a bright voice, "The magical assessment ceremony is about to commence. All of the recruiters for the various major magus academies are ready as well. Everyone who is here for the test, please follow me into the main hall."

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 8 – The Magical Aptitude Test (part 1)

Under the guidance of the church official, all of the people in the square were walked into the main hall of the cathedral.

Within the cathedral.

The great hall of the cathedral had a floor paved with marble, and hanging above was a massive crystal chandelier. It could easily fit the hundreds of people who entered yet still feel spacious.

In the very front of the great hall, there were a line of chairs, seated upon which were representatives and recruiters of each of the great magus academies. Directly in the middle of the great hall was the testing location.

The black robed church official smiled and said in a clear voice, "The testing location is right in the center. All testees, please come one at a time. No one else can enter the circle in the center. All testees, please get in line. Family and friends, please step to one side."

"Linley, here is the examination fee. Here is your proof of identification. Go quickly. Oh, and right, let the little Shadowmouse stay with me. It will be difficult to have the little Shadowmouse with you as you take the test." Hillman said.

"Bebe, stick with Uncle Hillman for now. I'm going to take the test." Linley mentally instructed the little Shadowmouse, who somewhat unwillingly shuffled around a bit under Linley's clothes. But after multiple requests from Linley, the little Shadowmouse directly scurried into Hillman's clothes.

Linley then accepted the ten gold coins and headed towards the line. The youths there ranged in age from six or seven years old to seventeen years old. These children organized themselves into two long lines, while the cathedral pursers collected the fees from each of them.

The central circle was ten or so meters wide, and there were three adults within it. Two of them were responsible for administering the test, while one was responsible for recording the results. The testing equipment consisted of a crystal sphere and a complicated, six-sided magical formation.

"First."

The bald old man pointed at the crystal ball and said, "Place your hand atop the crystal ball. We will test your elemental essence affinities."

The first tester was a twelve or thirteen year old young man. That young man nervously placed his right hand atop the crystal ball. Immediately, the entire crystal ball began to emanate a hazy, light red glow, with the occasional hint of green mixed in.

The bald elder glanced at the scrap of paper in his hands, and emotionlessly said, "Age, twelve. Elemental essence affinities – Fire, average affinity. Wind, low affinity.

"Now, step into the magical formation. Time to test your spiritual essence. Remember, stand there. Don't kneel or fall down. Let's see how long you can take it." The bald elder remained as cold as ever. The young man nodded, then stepped into the six-cornered magical formation. A holy white aura immediately emanated from the bald elder, which shot into the middle of the magical formation.

Light-style elemental magic – Overawe!

"Looks like the testing procedures in this era is the same as it was in the past." Doehring Cowart flew out of the ring and appeared next to Linley.

"Grandpa Doehring." Seeing Doehring Cowart, Linley felt himself calm down.

"In the magical aptitude test, the elemental essence affinity test is secondary. The spiritual essence test is the main one. After half a year of meditation, your spiritual essence should be sixteen or seventeen times that of most people your age." Doehring Cowart chuckled at Linley. "For you, this test will be extremely easy."

In a short period of time, the youth in the middle of the magical formation could no longer hold on.

"Spiritual essence, two times stronger than the average person of the same age. Not qualified to become a magus." The bald elder coldly announced as the magical formation deactivated, and the youngster quietly departed.

A burst of noise from nearby.

"Silence." The bald elder coldly said, and immediately a large group of nobles no longer dared to speak. "Next."

Doehring Cowart watched with interest from the side.

One after another youngster was tested. Of the first ten, none met the requirements. Right now, there was a young lady in the magical formation, who had been able to hold out for longer than any of the ten before her.

"Hrm?" The bald elder's eyes shone, and he immediately increased the power of the magical formation.

After a long period of time, the young lady finally dropped down to one knee.

The bald elder nodded in a satisfied manner. A hint of a smile on his face, he said, "Spiritual essence, eight times stronger than most people your age. The minimum qualifications for becoming a magus have been met. You also possess average elemental essence affinity. You can become a magus!" The judgment of the bald elder had just determined the fate of this young woman.

"Oh, how wonderful!" The first person to shout with joy was not the young woman. Rather, it was the young woman's father, a bald, middle aged, gentlemanly looking person.

"Quiet!" The bald elder snapped in a cold, unhappy voice.

Immediately, the ushers came and escorted the girl and her father to where the line of magus academies recruiters sat.

Many envious eyes were cast towards the young woman.

As time went on, the people in the main hall grew more and more numerous. The magical testing event would go on for seven days, so most people didn't see the urge to come right away at the beginning. When Linley's turn came, the line of test-takers had already stretched out the main doors of the cathedral.

"Next." The bald elder said again.

Linley calmly walked into the center, with Doebling Cowart remaining by his side. In Doebling Cowart's eyes, only a Saint-level combatant could, just barely, detect his presence. These ordinary magi definitely couldn't detect him.

Linley placed his right hand on the crystal ball.

Instantly!

The crystal ball suddenly burst forth with light, as though it were the sun! Earthen rays of light intersected with green rays of light, and there were even some thin lines of red spaced in between. That eye-piercing brightness forced even the people nearby to squint their eyes.

Seeing the sun-like brightness emanating forth from the crystal globe, everyone in the great hall was stunned.

The bald elder quivered as he stared at the piece of paper in his hands. It was written clearly on top that Linley was eight years old.

"Age, eight. Elemental essence affinities – Earth and Wind, affinity level of exceptional for both! Fire affinity, average." That bald elder felt his heart thumping wildly. Most magi had average elemental essence affinity. Even high elemental essence affinities were quite rare, and as for exceptional affinity...exceptional affinity was ridiculously rare!

By way of explaining, an ordinary magus might take ten hours to produce a certain amount of mageforce, but Linley would only require a single hour to get the same result.

"Ooooooooo."

The entire hall was shocked. Not only was the kid's elemental essence affinity of the exceptional level, it was for two different elements! This was simply too terrifying.

"Exceptional affinity for the wind element?" The nearby Doebling Cowart was shocked.

"Whoah, I, I have affinity for the wind-style as well?" Linley was stunned. He couldn't help but turn to look at Doebling Cowart.

Doebling Cowart squeezed out a smile. "Linley, I did tell you early on that I could only test for the earth elemental essence affinity. Right. When you absorbed natural elemental essence, did you never sense any wind essence?"

"Wind elemental essence?" Linley was stunned. "The first time you taught me to process elemental essence, you told me to not be distracted, so although I did notice some green-colored specks of light around me, I didn't pay any attention to them. But later on, when I began to absorb earth elemental essence, I would be surrounded by earth essence and the green specks would no longer appear.

Doehring Cowart now understood.

When training mageforce, especially dual-element mageforce, if one only focused on training one element such as earth, all the nearby earth elemental essence would be drawn near while all other essences, including wind, were pushed aside.

"Afterwards, whenever I trained, I only sensed earth elemental essence nearby. I didn't think about those green specks of light." Linley was feeling extremely happy as well.

Because he knew how powerful a dual-element magus was; far more powerful than a single-element magus.

After the elemental essence affinity test, the spiritual essence test!

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 9 – The Magical Aptitude Test (part 2)

“Remember, when engaging in the spiritual essence test, you must hold strong. Resist for as long as you can.” Doehring Cowart said solemnly. “I don’t know much about the wind-style, so you absolutely must go to a magus academy. With such strong elemental essence affinities, it would be an absolute waste for you not to train in the wind-style.”

Linley understood this as well.

“Please enter the magical formation.” The bald elder actually used the word ‘please’ in addressing Linley.

Even the nearby nobles began to look at Linley with a new light in their eyes. For a person to have exceptional elemental affinity meant that they could generate mageforce in an extremely short period of time. The rest of the time could be spent on cultivating spiritual energy. His future prospects would therefore be unlimited.

Linley stepped into the magical formation.

The magical formation immediately glowed with a white aura, and then a sense of pressure immediately flooded into Linley’s spirit.

Light-style elemental magic – Overawe!

“How weak. Compared to the overawing presence of the Black Dragon from half a year ago, it simply isn’t even close to being on the same level.”

Linley was relaxed enough to even think about that.

As time went on, the aura of the magical formation grew stronger and stronger, and the overawing presence grew stronger and stronger as well. Everyone in the great hall held their breaths, as everyone watching knew very clearly that in the future, this plainly dressed youngster would definitely become a powerful magus.

"Does anyone know that youngster? What clan does he belong to?" The nobles in front were all whispering to each other.

If they had made friends with this youngster of amazing potential, they would have acquired, in the future, an extremely formidable ally.

"His name is Linley?" Some of the magus academy recruiters learned his name from the test administrators.

The entire group of magus academy recruiters, who had previously been sitting there, smiling, all ran over enmasse to watch. Which magus academy would not want to recruit a genius such as this?

Standing alone in the magical formation, Linley continued to resist the overawing presence.

Linley was breathing heavily, and at the moment, his entire mind felt hazy. That powerful spiritual pressure was pressing down on him like a mountain, and the strength of the pressure was continuing to rise. But Linley was continuing to persevere....

"The longer I can hold on, the better an academy I can enter." Linley gritted his teeth.

And then, when the pressure had reached a certain height, Linley finally could no longer resist. He dropped to one knee, his hands clenching into fists on the floor.

Everyone's gaze turned to the bald elder.

His face suffused with happy red glow, the bald elder announced in a clear voice, "Spiritual essence, eighteen times that of his peers, high-level. High spiritual essence, exceptional elemental affinity."

At this point in time, all of the magus recruiters charged forth. "Hello, Linley. I come from the Lander [Lan'de] Magus Academy. Our Lander Magus Academy sincerely would like to admit you into our school. As long as you enroll with us, your entire tuition will be free, and every year we will even provide you with a thousand gold coins for living expenses. We will also invite an especially skilled magus teacher to personally train you."

"Linley, I come from the Welling [We'lin] Magus Academy. We..."

.....

Seeing the swarm of people around him and how warmly they were treating him, Linley was stunned for a long moment, while in his heart, he sighed with amazement. In the blink of an eye, so many recruiters had learned his name. This was really too amazing.

"Hey, everyone, please return to your seats. We need to continue the test." The bald elder said in a kind voice.

He could be arrogant towards those common folk, but he had to be courteous to the representatives of mighty magus academies.

"Linley. Our Ernst Institute would sincerely like to invite you to become one of our students." From far away, another voice sounded out, and when it did, the entire hall went silent. Even the bald elder stopped speaking.

Linley turned around.

A white-robed middle-aged man walked over. Smiling, he said, "Exceptional elemental affinity, high spiritual essence, and dual-element. Linley, our Ernst Institute would very much welcome you to join us. I don't know if you would be willing to enter our Ernst Institute?"

Hillman, nearby, had been staring in stunned silence. He immediately ran over next to Linley, so excited that his hands were quivering.

The Ernst Institute?

Enter the Yulan continent's number one magus academy, the Ernst Institute? What did that represent?

That represented that immediately upon graduation, even if he was just an average student, he could easily become an earl in any of the nearby kingdoms. If he was a superior student, even the four great empires would sincerely welcome him to join them.

Across the entire massive Yulan continent, each year the Ernst Institute only enrolled a scant hundred students!

A hundred students a year. What did this mean?

Every single student who enrolled into the Ernst Institute could be described as a genius!

"Linley, agree to him." Hillman excitedly said.

Linley also felt extremely excited, but his head was extremely clear, and he also looked very calm on the outside. Linley knew very well that upon becoming a member of the Ernst Institute, and with the guidance of Doehring Cowart, in just a few decades, it would not be too difficult to become a magus of the seventh or eighth ranks.

His clan would once again flourish.

"Sir, it would be my honor to enroll within the Ernst Institute." Linley said courteously.

Surprised at Linley's equanimity, the white robed man still smiled. "Linley, I will inform the Institute of your biographical details. When the time comes, just bring your proof of identity to the Institute and take a second, correlating test. Then, you will become an official student of our Institute.”

It was pointless to try and get someone else to take the test for you, because each school would do a backup test as well.

“Each academic year is divided into two semesters, with the first semester beginning in February 9th. As long as you arrive by February 9th, you will be fine. This is your proof of identity. It can also be considered your proof of admission.” The white robed man withdrew a sealed red envelope from within his sleeves.

In fact, immediately upon knowing Linley’s test results, he had recorded Linley’s details into the paperwork in the envelope. Because the white robed man believed without a doubt – no one would refuse an offer from the Ernst Institute!

“Thank you.” Linley accepted the envelope.

Linley didn’t look too excited on the outside, but Hillman was uncontrollably excited. A student at the Ernst Institute. Who amongst them were not venerated? Linley’s future accomplishments could already be predicted.

“Uncle Hillman, let’s go.” Linley placed the red envelope into his clothes, and then left the main hall with Hillman.

Despite being packed, everyone in the main hall, from the commoners to the nobles, all discreetly made way for him to move through. Even those nobles who had previously scorned Linley as a country bumpkin were all now smiling at him in a friendly manner. Their attitudes were amazingly good.

This was a simple demonstration of the status which an Ernst Institute student held!

Watched by a crowd of nobles, commoners, and church officials, Linley and Hillman departed the cathedral.

"Squeaaaaak!" After exiting the cathedral, the little Shadowmouse shouted out, sensing Linley's excitement.

Only now did Linley let the excitement he felt show on his face. His hands suddenly clenching into fists, his eyes shone with energy. Turning to look at Hillman, he rapidly said, "Uncle Hillman, let's go, let's go back! Back to Wushan township! I've gotta let my father know the news!"

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 10 – The Secret Dragonblood Training Tome (part 1)

Wushan township. The Baruch clan manor.

Hogg had just finished lunch not too long ago, and was currently sitting down, relaxed, on a sofa, while leisurely reading a book.

Two shadowy blurs suddenly entered the manor. It was Linley and Hillman, who had rushed the entire way back from Fenlai City. At the moment, both their faces contained uncontrollable excitement, and Linley began to shout from far away, "Father, I've returned!"

"Lord Hogg." Hillman was very excited as well.

Hogg raised his head. Seeing the wild excitement on the faces of Linley and Hillman, he had a positive premonition. He immediately stood up. Staring at Linley and Hillman, his voice quavered as he said, "How did the magus assessment test go?"

The Baruch clan had been in a downward spiral for too long. This ancient clan needed a mighty personage to restore it to its former glories!

"Lord Hogg, the Ernst Institute! It's the Ernst Institute! Linley was accepted by the Ernst Institute!" Hillman said excitedly.

Hogg seemed to have turned into a statue. At the moment, Hogg felt as though his brain had suddenly been deprived off oxygen, as everything went blank for a moment.

"Ernst...lord? Lord?" Hillman called out twice.

Hogg, slowly regaining his mental faculties, suddenly hurried walked towards Linley and Hillman. In a disbelieving tone, he said, "Ernst, did you just say, Ernst Institute?" Right now, Hogg's eyes were bulging and round.

"Father, here's the acceptance letter from the Ernst Institute." Linley directly handed the admissions envelope to his father. Hogg was stunned for a moment, then quickly accepted the red envelope and removed the letter from within it. He carefully scanned the letter.

Several names in bright red particularly stood out – "Ernst Institute" "Linley".

"Haha, hahahahaha! Elders of the Baruch clan, there is hope for our clan again!" Hogg suddenly lifted his head to the sky and laughed wildly, so hard that his entire body was trembling, so hard that tears began to flow. "There is hope for our Baruch clan again!"

That wild laughter and those coursing tears absolutely stunned Linley.

"Father..." Linley said in a soft voice, as though afraid to disturb his father.

Linley had never seen his father act so wildly before, and his father's tears made Linley's heart quaver as well.

Housekeeper Hiri came over as well. He was also stunned by Hogg's reaction. Hiri had no idea what had just happened.

Hogg took a deep breath, then looked at Linley, his eyes filled with boundless excitement. "Good, good."

"Hillman, Uncle Hiri!" Hogg looked at the two of them. "Tonight, I am going to host a banquet. Quick, make the arrangements! Tonight, I am very happy, extremely happy. To have such a son, even if I die, I will be able to proudly face the elders of the Baruch clan."

"Yes, Lord Hogg," Hillman and Hiri responded.

"Squeak squeak!" Suddenly, the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' scurried out from within Linley's clothes. He hopped onto Linley's shoulders to stare at Hogg, his little eyes filled with anger.

Mentally sensing the little Shadowmouse's emotions, Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

As it turned out, the little Shadowmouse had fallen asleep next to Linley's chest, but Hogg's explosive laughter startled him awake. An infant Shadowmouse spent a great deal of time napping, and hated being awakened. At this moment, naturally he was extremely furious.

"Shadowmouse. A magical beast, Shadowmouse?" Upon seeing the little Shadowmouse with Linley, Hogg's facial expressions changed dramatically.

"Father." Linley was afraid that his father would strike, so he hurriedly said, "The little Shadowmouse and I have already entered a soulbinding pact."

Hogg seemed to have been thunderstruck. He stared dumbly for a long moment. "You, you subdued and tamed this magical beast Shadowmouse?"

The two ways to tame a magical beast were 1) Subduing it by force, and 2) Setting up a soulbinding magic formation.

Hogg naturally knew very well that Linley's physical strength was very weak. And even the weakest Shadowmouse was of the third rank of power. And in addition, there was no way for Linley to set up a soulbinding magical formation, so that couldn't have happened at all.

"Yes, father, I've tamed him." Linley said seriously.

Hogg only felt that his own son seemed to have dramatically changed, totally changed!

"Lord Hogg, Linley really did tame this Shadowmouse. I personally witnessed it. This little Shadowmouse is also the reason why in recent days, Linley has often caught wild animals to feed to the 'adorable pet' he had behind the back courtyard." Hillman explained.

"He was feeding this 'pet'?" Hogg thought for a moment, then stared at Linley disbelievingly. "Magical beast Shadowmouse. This is the 'cute animal' you told me you were feeding in the back courtyard?"

Linley nodded honestly.

Hogg didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. The 'cute pet' was actually a magical beast?

Although he had many questions about how Linley might have entered a soulbinding pact with the little Shadowmouse, Hogg didn't worry too much about it. Right now, he was in a wonderful mood.

"Fine, enough of that topic. Uncle Hiri, Hillman, lead the guards to make the arrangements right away. Tonight, I am going to host a magnificent banquet." Hogg laughed loudly. Right now, his laughter was extremely full and carefree.

Linley stared at his father. From as far back as he could remember, he had never seen his father so happy.

.....

That very night.

It was extremely noisy inside the Baruch clan manor. Even the ten-plus bodyguards and their families had all been invited. There were five full tables placed in the main courtyard of the manor, and the entire Baruch manor was filled with laughter and joy.

"Yummy, yummy." Little Wharton first grabbed this, then grabbed that, eating excitedly.

"Young master Linley, congratulations on being admitted to the Ernst Institute. In the future, young master Linley will no doubt become a mighty, powerful magus." A clan guard laughed as he toasted Linley politely.

During this banquet, Linley was the main attraction.

Upon hearing that Linley had been admitted to the Ernst Institute, everyone present had become excited. One could easily understand that entering the Ernst Institute meant entering a certain destiny. In the future, Linley definitely would not be constrained by tiny little Wushan township.

"Big brother, all of them are toasting you. I want to also." Little Wharton grabbed his juice cup.

Seeing little Wharton's greasy hands, Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. But he still raised his own glass of juice and tapped it against little Wharton's cup.

"Come, we're brothers." Linley grinned as he lifted his cup as well.

....

Late night, the Baruch family ancestral hall. Only Linley and his father were present.

The door to the ancestral hall was closed, and a row of candles was lit in the entire hall, making it quite warm. At this moment, Hogg was staring at the spirit tablet in the middle of the hall. His voice low, he said, "Linley, after the fifth Dragonblood Warrior was born, our Baruch clan began to weaken, generation by generation, to the point where even our hereditary, ancestral heirloom was lost. Every time I think of this, I can't help but feel absolutely ashamed. We're supposed to be the noble Dragonblood Clan!"

Linley stood behind him without making a sound.

He felt the shame as well.

An ancient clan which had lasted five thousand years. The Dragonblood Warrior clan. Linley felt pride in his heart. But their ancestral heirloom had been lost.

"Linley." Hogg suddenly turned and looked at Linley solemnly. "From today forward, I will no longer treat you as a child. I will view you as the sturdiest pillar in the future of our Baruch clan! Our clan's hopes for the future will all rely on you, now."

"Yes, father." Linley resolutely nodded.

"Wait a moment. I am going to get something." Hogg suddenly turned and entered a hidden room next to the ancestral hall. Shortly afterwards, he returned with a thick book in hand. "Linley, take this and give it a good read. Memorize everything."

"This is?..."

Linley looked suspiciously at the thick book he had just accepted. There were no words on the cover, but when he opened it, there were four big words printed on the first page – Secret Dragonblood Training Tome.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 11 – The Secret Dragonblood Training Tome (part 2)

“The Secret Dragonblood Training Method?” Linley couldn’t help but look strangely at his father.

Hogg smiled. “Not only is it the Secret Dragonblood Training Method. This tome also discusses many things related to our Baruch clan. The Secret Dragonblood Training Tome is included within, as well as the method to create and control the Dragonblood Needles, as well as the history of some of the elders of our clan.”

Linley carefully flipped through it.

Indeed, the tome was divided into four sections. The first part was regarding the ‘Secret Dragonblood Training Tome’, while the rest were regarding other matters pertaining to the clan.

“Linley, even if this tome falls into the hands of outsiders, it would be useless to them, as there is simply no way an outsider can train in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Training Method. As for our family history, so what if someone learns about it? What’s more, we have multiple copies of this tome as well. This one is also just a copy. After so many years have passed, the original has long since turned to dust.” Hogg laughed as he spoke.

Linley immediately laughed as well.

“Makes sense. Even if someone acquires it, it would be useless.” Linley immediately began to more curiously flip through the pages of the tome and read through each section.

Secret Dragonblood Training Tome, Chapter 1.

“If one wants to utilize the Secret Dragonblood Training Method, one must be able to call forth the blood of the Dragonblood Warriors flowing through their veins. There are two ways of calling forth the Dragonblood. The first method requires the density of the Dragonblood having reached a certain level. But if the density is insufficient, there is still a second method...”

Reading this, Linley was stunned.

Aside from a high density of Dragonblood, there was another method? Why hadn't anyone in the family succeeded in all these years, then?

“The second method is to take a deep drink of the blood of a living dragon, or of the blood of a dragon that just died a few minutes ago. The longer a dragon has been dead, the lower the chance of awakening the Dragonblood! A deep drink of dragon's blood can activate the inherent Dragonblood flowing in each member of our clan's veins. For the best results, drink the blood of a Saint-level dragon. If one only drinks the blood of a dragon of the ninth rank, the chances of activating one's Dragonblood is rather low.”

Reading through this, Linley was stunned.

“Our clan elders really were formidable. They actually came up with the idea of drinking the blood of a living dragon in order to utilize the Secret Dragonblood Training Method.” Linley didn’t know whether to laugh or to cry.

“Drink the blood of a living dragon, and a Saint-level one at that? Linley, your ancestors really were extremely formidable.” Doehring Cowart had appeared by Linley’s side and was reading the Tome as well. Seeing the introductory paragraphs, he couldn’t help but feel shocked as well.

Hogg, of course, couldn’t discover Doehring Cowart’s existence at all. Hogg laughed bitterly at Linley. “Linley, did you see that? Based on our ancestor’s method, the Dragonblood is lurking hidden within all of our veins. To call it forth, there are just two methods. But the second method requires one to drink the blood of a living dragon. How can that be an easy task? What’s more...Linley, flip to the back and take a look.”

Linley flipped the page.

“However, this second method of drinking live dragon’s blood is extremely risky. Dragon’s blood is extremely forceful. When it is rubbed on one’s body, it has the effect of improving the quality of one’s body, rapidly increasing one’s strength. However, it will also cause pain comparable to one’s skin being peeled off. And this is just a topical application. If one actually drinks dragon’s blood, then one’s body will feel as though it is being scorched, to the point where one can actually be burned to death, with veins exploding, causing immediate death.”

Upon seeing this part, Linley was utterly speechless.

“Father, who wrote this Secret Dragonblood Training Tome? Since it is so dangerous, why did he even include it?" Linley didn't know what to say.

Hogg said with a solemn face, "Linley, this Secret Dragonblood Training Tome was written by our founder and first ancestor, the very first Dragonblood Warrior to appear in the Yulan continent, Baruch! He naturally must have had his own reasons for writing this down. Nonetheless, in our family history, there have been two descendants who drank the blood of a Saint-level dragon, and in the end, both of their veins erupted and they died."

"There's been people who have actually drank the blood of a Saint-level dragon?" Linley was somewhat shocked.

But actually, it was quite normal.

In the past, when the first, second, and third generation of Baruch clan members were all Dragonblood Warriors, the clan was in its glorious ascendancy. At that period in time, it wasn't impossible to procure the blood of a Saint-level dragon.

"The events of the past happened too long ago. The real secrets of that era, this book has not revealed. All I know is that because of this, the dragon race sent representatives to engage in discussions with our Baruch clan's clanlord. After this, our descendants no longer attempted this method. Later on, when our family line weakened, even when we wanted to drink dragon's blood, we no longer were able to." Hogg shook his head and sighed.

Linley nodded.

The arrogance of the dragon race was something discussed in many books.

Capturing a live Saint-level dragon to engage in bloodletting? How great a humiliation would this be for the dragon race? It was quite lucky for the Baruch clan that the dragon race didn't exterminate them in a fiery rage. However, from this, one can imagine how powerful the Baruch clan was at that time.

"This can't be right, father. If no one has ever successfully become a Dragonblood Warrior as a result of drinking dragon's blood, then why did our ancestor write that it is possible to use dragon's blood to refine our own? And even say that the blood of a dragon of the ninth rank would also have some effect?" Linley was really puzzled.

Hogg was startled.

"Linley, don't ask too much. Honestly, I only know a little bit about our family history as well. As far as what happened four thousand years ago, there's no way we can clearly know what happened." Hogg laughed towards Linley.

Linley nodded.

But in his heart, Linley was still suspicious. If no one in history had ever successfully become a Dragonblood Warrior by drinking dragon's blood, then why would this method be written down in the Secret Dragonblood Training Tome?

"Linley, it's getting late. You should go back and get some rest." Hogg laughed.

Linley nodded.

Night.

Linley had returned to his own bedroom and was reading the tome, but his heart was still full of questions.

"Grandpa Doehring, what do you think. If no one has ever succeeded using this method, how could it have been discovered?" Linley simply couldn't understand the logic.

Doehring Cowart was so old that he had become as crafty as a fox. Stroking his white beard, he said in a self-satisfied manner, "Linley, the answer is simple. Based on what I know, the dragon race is extremely proud, and also extremely large and powerful! I wager that drinking the blood of a live dragon is probably an effective method, but your clan came under tremendous pressure from the dragon clan, and therefore altered the contents of this book."

Linley immediately understood.

This was very possible.

Under pressure from the dragon race, the Dragonblood Warriors of the Baruch clan were undoubtedly forced to stop catching live dragons for bloodletting.

“But of course, that’s just my conjecture.” Doehring Cowart said placidly. “And Linley, based on what I know, drinking the blood of a live dragon is not necessarily a road to death. As long as you combine it with some Blueheart Grass, the negative effects of dragon’s blood will be negated. But I bet there’s very few people nowadays who know this secret.”

Linley was stunned.

And then, he was wildly overjoyed. “Grandpa Doehring, are you saying that fresh dragon’s blood, when mixed with Blueheart Grass, is safe to drink?”

Doehring Cowart confidently nodded. “Of course. In the past, in the Pouant Empire, when a princess acquired a serious disease, in the end, the only method of curing her was a medicine that included a mixture of fresh dragon’s blood and Blueheart Grass. As a matter of fact, I was the one who personally caught a Saint-level dragon.”

“I remember the master physician who provided the prescription saying that everything in this world has its equal and opposite. For every single ingredient, there was another that would match with it. In that era, the only person who knew how to mix fresh dragon’s blood with Blueheart Grass was that old physician. Since six thousand years have gone by, no doubt no one knows it any longer.” Doehring Cowart said calmly.

Linley nodded.

“Fresh dragon’s blood and Blueheart Grass...” Linley’s eyes shone with excitement. “In the future, when I am powerful enough and become a magus of the ninth rank or even higher, I will use fresh dragon's blood and Blueheart Grass to let little Wharton become a Dragonblood Warrior."

Linley even hoped that...

If he had the chance, he himself would use this recipe.

If he could become both a Saint-level magus and a Dragonblood Warrior....but of course, that was just a dream. To even be able to catch a Saint-level dragon was a distant, untouchable dream.

"The road ahead is still long. Time to sleep, time to sleep. I need to train tomorrow."

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 12 – Instructions

Time flowed on, and in the blink of an eye, months had passed. Many new trees had begun to sprout on Wushan township, filling the area with a feeling of spring.

Beneath a pine tree.

Linley was seated cross-legged in a meditative trance, generating mageforce.

After having entered the meditative trance, Linley could clearly sense large amounts of earthen specks of light and green specks of light. These countless specks of lights continuously swirled into his body, and through his limbs and his bones, were purified and stored within the central dantian in his chest.

Within his central dantian, there was a smoky earthen mist intermingled with a smoky green mist.

The earthen mist was his earth element mageforce, while the green mist was his wind element mageforce.

“Whew.” Slowly releasing a breath, Linley exited his meditative trance.

Doehring Cowart, wearing a moon-white robe, was seated cross-legged next to him, a smile on his face as he enjoyed the surrounding scenery. Seeing Linley awaken, he laughed. “Linley, tomorrow you are heading to the Ernst Institute, yet you are still hard at work today?"

Linley's lips curved up in a smile. "Grandpa Doebling, I believe you were the one who said that strong combatants must work hard every single day, and not relax for even an instant. Only long term training will produce astonishing power."

"Little punk, so now you are going to give me instructions?" Doebling Cowart laughed while 'grumbling'.

"Hehe," Linley chortled.

"Woosh!" A black shadow from far away came flashing towards them, appearing on Linley's shoulders in the blink of an eye. It was the Shadowmouse, 'Bebe'. Young Bebe leaned towards Linley, making a chewing motion with his mouth, while pointing at a nearby dead hare.

Just from the look on Bebe's face, Linley knew what was up.

"You want me to cook it?" Linley laughed as he spoke.

Bebe nodded repeatedly.

"Linley." The nearby Doebling Cowart mentally spoke to him. "This little Shadowmouse is really quite strange. It's been months, but judging from his size, it's almost as though he hasn't grown at all. For an infant Shadowmouse, the early childhood growth rate should be quite noticeable."

"I have no idea either." Linley shook his head.

Although Shadowmouse 'Bebe' did not increase in size, his speed was improving quite remarkably.

"It really is bizarre." Doehring Cowart looked at Bebe. Right now, Bebe didn't have any idea that a spirit was mentally weighing him.

"It's getting late. I'll need to start warrior training soon." Linley stood up and grabbed the dead hare as he began heading down the mountain. Doehring Cowart flew by his side, unhappily saying, "Linley, in the future, you will be a magus. Why are you still engaging in warrior training?"

Linley laughed, "Grandpa Doehring, I've discovered that warrior training can increase my endurance, and with increased endurance, my spiritual essence can increase as well."

"I know that, of course." Doehring Cowart said, dissatisfied. "But how could those basic training methods compare to the meditative trance in terms of how fast one's spiritual essence increases?"

Linley shut his mouth and no longer spoke.

While it was true that fighter training allowed one to improve one's spiritual essence, that wasn't the real reason.

The real reason that Linley continued his fighter training was this. "In the future, if I have the chance to drink fresh dragon's blood, I will be able to practice according to the Secret Dragonblood Training Tome. I have to keep up my physical training. The body is like a vessel, while battle-qi is like wine. The body is extremely important. The earlier I begin building my fundamentals, the faster my improvement will be when I study the Secret Dragonblood Training Tome in the future."

Actually, based on Linley's affinity for elemental essences, each day, he didn't have to spend too much time or effort to gather and generate mageforce.

Most of his time was spent in the meditative trance, training his spiritual essence.

But spending significant amounts of time training spiritual essence was exhausting. Warrior training served as a form of rest and alternative exercise.

.....

The next morning, all of the commoners of Wushan township gathered on the main road in town, all for the purpose of sending off Linley. It was definitely an incredibly glorious thing for Wushan township to be able to produce a magus who would attend the Ernst Institute.

Each year, the Ernst Institute only accepted a hundred students from across the entire Yulan continent.

At the moment, Linley was still within the Baruch clan manor, while Hillman and the others were all outside. The only people within the manor were Hogg, Linley, little Wharton, and Housekeeper Hiri.

“Linley, today you are going to go to the Ernst Institute and formally become an Ernst Institute student. When you graduate from the Ernst Institute, you will be a powerful magus! Before you depart, as your father, I want to say to you...” On this last day, Hogg had a belly full of things he wanted to speak to Linley.

But after pausing for a long time, Hogg only said a few simple sentences. “Linley, remember the ardent desire that the elders of the Baruch clan have held for centuries, and remember the humiliation of the Baruch clan!”

Hogg’s face was turning slightly green.

“When you graduate, you will be at least a magus of the sixth rank. If you work hard and train hard, it won’t be too hard to become a magus of the seventh rank. And in addition, you are a dual-element magus! A dual-element magus of the seventh rank would definitely be a major force in the Kingdom of Fenlai. In the future, you will definitely be capable of retrieving our clan’s ancestral heirloom. If you do not, even if I die, I will not forgive you!” Hogg fixed a deathly stare on Linley.

“Even if I die, I will not forgive you!”

These words made Linley’s heart tremble.

These were the instructions his father gave to him upon their parting.

"Father, don't worry. So long as I live, I will ensure that the ancestral heirloom of our Baruch clan is restored to us. I so swear!" Linley promised, meeting his father's steely gaze, his own eyes filled with resolve as well.

Hogg's eyes began to shine, and he patted Linley on the shoulder with a mighty clap.

"I believe in you, son!"

....

On the road headed east of Wushan township, Linley turned his head saw the hundreds of familiar faces which had come to send him off, with his father, Hogg, and his younger brother Wharton standing in the lead.

"Big brother, bye bye!" Little Wharton waved mightily.

Seeing his father and his younger brother, Linley also waved, his eyes turning red.

"Father. Wharton." Linley's heart was filled with longing.

Ever since he was born, Linley had never left home for an extended period of time, but this time, he would be gone for extremely long. At this moment, the little Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', was obediently perched on Linley's shoulders, not making a sound, as if he sensed Linley's thoughts. The nearby Doehring Cowart, in spirit form, also looked encouragingly at Linley.

"Linley, let's go." Hillman said. Hillman was escorting Linley to the Institute, acting as his bodyguard in the event they met with any bandits.

Linley unwillingly took one last glance at his family, and then finally forced himself to turn away and begin traveling in the direction of the Ernst Institute.

"Farewell, my family. Farewell, my home."

Yulan calendar, year 9991. The nine year old Linley, accompanied by the young Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', and the Baruch clan's guard captain, Hillman, departed from Wushan township.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 13 – A Congregation of Talents

Ernst Institute. The finest magus academy in the entire Yulan continent.

The Ernst Institutewas located in a rustic area approximately twenty kilometers south of the Holy Capital of Fenlai City. The Ernst Institute was founded and financially supported by the Radiant Church. Naturally, it was wealthy and knew how to throw around money. They took up a very large space, with a circumference of ten kilometers. Such a huge academy was nearly the size of a city.

Outside of the Ernst Institute, few visible signs of human presence could be seen, just an empty mountain range.

Restaurants, clothing stores, bars, and other sorts of service industries were all located on the campus itself. It could be said that the students of the Ernst Institute spent their entire lives within the campus.

“What an imposing style.” Linley stood at the gateway to the Ernst Institute. He couldn’t help but sigh with emotion.

The main gate of the Ernst Institute was fully fifty meters wide. Above the great gate was an enormous, crescent moon shaped construct, covered with all sorts of magical scripts which one could tell at a glance were amazingly complicated. Just from seeing how complicated the scripts were, one could imagine how powerful and mighty the magical formation protecting the Ernst Institute was.

Right now, the main gate of the Ernst Institute was a very lively place.

There was an row of academic staff, and a single youth who had brought his admission letter and his proof of identity and had begun to be processed for intake. Linley immediately grabbed his own documents and headed in for processing as well.

“School officially starts February 9th. Today is February 8th. Based on the notification, students must arrive before February 9th. Since the young man in front of me is also just arriving today, no doubt he also lives rather close to the Institute.” Linley thought to himself.

The young man in front of Linley could actually be more precisely be described as a child. He was half a head shorter than Linley, and there was an old man by his side.

“Hi there. I’m from the O’Brien Empire, and my name is Reynolds [Lei’nuo].” The student being processed for intake in front of Linley suddenly turned his head and warmly greeted Linley.

Hearing that he came from the O’Brien Empire, Linley was startled. “The O’Brien Empire?”

The O’Brien Empire, one of the Four Great Empires, was located to the east of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, while the Ernst Institute was located west of it. In order to reach the Ernst Institute, one had to circle around the entire Mountain Range of Magical Beasts from the north or the south. After all, aside from combatants of the ninth rank or Saint-level combatants, no one dared to directly cross that mountain range.

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was over ten thousand kilometers long.

For someone to come from the O'Brien Empire, the entire trip would have consisted of at least twenty thousand kilometers worth of travel. If they came from the eastern part of the Empire, the journey would have been even longer.

It probably would've taken about a year or so to travel twenty thousand kilometers.

"My name is Linley. I'm from Fenlai Kingdom." Linley courteously said to the boy called Reynolds.

Reynolds blinked, and sighed emotionally. "Fenlai Kingdom? Then you had it nice and cushy. It took me a full year just to get to Fenlai Kingdom from my home. It didn't take you too much time."

"Right. From my home to here, I travelled for about half a day." Linley honestly replied.

"Whoah..." The expression on Reynolds face was priceless.

One of them travelled for over a year. The other, for just half a day.

"Students, hurry up." One of the test administrators nearby urged.

One of the intake processes for new students was to retake the magus test. After all, the Ernst Institute was afraid that someone might steal an admissions letter and falsely enroll.

"Coming." Reynolds went to take the test.

Upon seeing the results, Linley couldn't help but feel shocked.

This boy named Reynolds had high elemental essence affinity...and as for his spiritual essence...

"Reynolds, eight years old. Spiritual essence, thirty two times higher than students his own age. Exceptional level."

Hearing these numbers, Linley's eyes briefly bulged. But the test administrator seemed to be very calm, and not the least bit surprised.

"Linley, what is it? Amazed just by this?" Reynolds said dismissively. "This is the Ernst Institute. Each year, they accept only a hundred students from across the entire Yulan continent. Which one of them is not an amazing talent? My results can only be considered average, across the student base."

"But the Ernst Institute does show some favoritism to the Holy Union. They accept fifty students from the Holy Union, and only fifty more total from the other Four Great Empires. It is so unfair." Reynolds sighed.

Linley chuckled when he heard this.

The Ernst Institute was founded by the Radiant Church. Of course it would show favoritism towards the Holy Union.

"My turn." Linley ran towards the test giver as well.

Reynolds wrinkled his little nose. "This fellow called Linley is from the Holy Union. He no doubt had a much easier time being accepted than me. I bet he isn't as talented as I am." Reynolds was extremely confident.

But when the test administrator reported Linley's results, Reynolds was shocked.

"High spiritual essence, exceptional elemental essence affinity? And dual-element affinity for earth and wind?" Reynolds was totally speechless.

Exceptional elemental essence affinity was already extremely rare, but Linley was not only dual-element, but had exceptional affinity for both the wind and the earth elemental essences. This was a true talent, one rather more formidable than even himself. After all...dual-element magi were extremely powerful.

"Reynolds, don't just stand there looking silly. Let's go." Linley laughed.

"Oh." Reynolds was a year younger than Linley, but judging from appearances, seemed three years younger.

Linley and Reynolds accepted their Ernst Institute student ID's, then acquired their residence keys. At the Ernst Institute, all students, regardless of wealth and economic background, had to live together.

Tuition fees and residence fees were totally waived.

However...

"Hey, you have to pay tuition?" When Linley saw the old man accompanying Reynolds pull out the tuition money, he couldn't help but feel shocked.

Hillman, besides Linley, laughed. "Linley, the tuition waiver and rent waiver provided by the Ernst Institute is only for members of the Holy Union. All others have to pay an extremely high fee."

Reynolds nodded also.

The old man next to him smiled at Linley. "That's right. This isn't just the rule for the Ernst Institute; the number one warrior academy in the Yulan continent, the O'Brien Academy, does the same. They provide a full tuition waiver for their own Empire's students, but charge an astronomical fee for students coming from other places."

Linley wasn't stupid. He immediately understood.

"Linley, my young master has the same residence key as you. The two of you should be living in the same residence. I hope that in the future, the two of you can help each other out." The old man said.

Reynolds said unhappily, "Okay, Grandpa Lomu [Lu'mu], you can go back now. I've already arrived at the Ernst Institute."

“Uncle Hillman, you can go back as well. I can take care of myself.” Linley smiled as he spoke to Hillman, and Hillman nodded back, satisfied. “Linley, then I’ll go back now. Work hard.” Hillman encouraged.

Linley smiled and nodded.

“Linley, let’s go.” Reynolds warmly grabbed Linley by the hand, and began to run into the Institute.

“Farewell, Uncle Hillman.”

Hillman and the old man both watched the children enter the Institute. Only after a long time did they depart.

After saying his farewells to Uncle Hillman, Linley and Reynolds entered the Ernst Institute together. The Ernst Institute was filled with shady groves, lakes, stone bridges, ancient buildings...an ancient aura permeated the entire place. Just from the size of the giant trees, which seven people would have to surround in order to hold hands, one could imagine how old the place was.

“It really is something. It isn’t nearly as gaudy as some of the newer institutes. This is what is known as ‘sophistication’.” Reynolds curious eyes took in their surroundings while he spoke.

Within the Ernst Institute, as a one-time event, there were many instructional signs telling students where each location was. Clearly, this was intended to help assist the new students.

"Linley, let's go find our dorm." Reynolds, pulling Linley's hand, began hurrying in the direction of the dormitories.

Dorm number 1987.

Linley and Reynolds had completed their intake processes at the same time, one after another. Most dorms held four students. When Linley and Reynolds arrived at the dormitory area, they couldn't help but sigh in amazement. At first glance, there appeared to be thousands of stand-alone dormitories.

Amongst the thousands of dormitories, there were even a few two-story apartment style dorms.

"1987, 1987..." Linley and Reynolds inspected the dorm numbers, running south nonstop.

The dorm area was numbered very logically, beginning from 0001, with each row housing 100 individual dorms. When Linley arrived at row 20, he saw dorm 1901. And then, as they continued running east, Reynolds began to pant for breath, until finally, they arrived at dorm 1987.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 14 – The Bros of Dorm 1987 (part 1)

“Whew, I’m exhausted. Linley, how come you are in such good shape?” Reynolds was panting for breath, but Linley didn’t feel anything.

“What, you are tired already?” Linley started to laugh. How short a distance had they just run?

He didn’t even feel too tired after running from Wushan township to the Ernst Institute.

“Hey, just put it down there. Right. Put the box down there. Put it down carefully. If you break it, there’s no way you can afford to compensate for it!” From within dorm 1987, the clear voice of another youth could be heard. Linley and Reynolds glanced at each other, then entered curiously. Immediately upon entering, they saw several muscular men busily moving things about.

A gaudily-dressed youth was standing in the center of the room, directing their moves.

Immediately upon seeing Linley and Reynolds, the young man’s eyes brightened, and he excitedly ran over. “Haha, you guys are my dormmates, right? I’ve waited so long for you guys. Up til now, it’s just been me here. Lemme introduce myself. My name is Yale [Ye’lu], and I suppose I just barely qualify as a member of the Holy Union.”

“What do you mean, you just barely qualify as a member of the Holy Union?” Reynolds mumbled, and then said, “My name is Reynolds. I’m from the O'Brien Empire."

"My name is Linley. I'm from the Holy Union's Kingdom of Fenlai." Linley smiled as well.

As long term dormmates, in the future, they would be together for a long period of time.

"Oh, Reynolds, Linley, I am so happy to see you fellows. Hey, where did my exercise equipment go?" Yale turned his head and stared at his servants.

"Exercise equipment?" Reynolds blinked at Yale. "Yale, what do you have those for? Are you going to be a warrior?"

Yale wrinkled his nose as he chortled. "Although I am a dignified magus, I still need to work out and have a good physique. Otherwise, how will I be able to seduce beautiful women? There's many beautiful women amongst the ranks of the magi. And the female magi of the Ernst Institute are not only pretty; they are also very classy. Plus, there's a lot of face to be gained by being able to brag to others that I have an Ernst Institute student as my girlfriend."

"Uh..." Reynolds was speechless.

Linley didn't know what to say either. Seeing the exercise equipment, Linley wanted to go work out, but he didn't expect that these were the tools which Yale planned to use to do bodybuilding to seduce pretty girls.

"I'm eight years old. How about you, Yale?" Reynolds clearly was very open-minded.

Yale was extremely tall. The nine-year old Linley was already 1.5 meters tall, but Yale was half a head taller than even Linley.

"Me? I'm ten. Haha, but I'm not getting any younger. My elder brother lost his virginity at age twelve. I've got to do some advance preparations as well." Yale's eyes shone.

"What does 'losing virginity' mean?" Reynolds looked questioningly at Yale.

"Yeah, what's 'losing virginity'?" Linley also looked curiously at Yale.

Staring at his two dormmates, Yale became momentarily speechless as well. Besides Linley, the ghostly form of Doebling Cowart was holding his belly as he laughed uproariously. This made Linley ask him curiously, "Grandpa Doebling, why are you laughing?"

"Young master, we've arranged everything." An extremely muscular man said respectfully.

"Mm. You can leave now. Go back and tell my father that in the future, if there isn't something urgent, not to bother me. Oh, right. Remember... every year, he can't forget to transfer money into my magicite card. He should know very well that a magus needs a lot of money for his magistaff and socketable gems." Yale said loudly and casually.

"Yes, young master." The man said respectfully.

Yale nodded, satisfied, then dismissed the men with a wave of his hand, as though he were a general.

"Magiccrystal card?" Reynolds stared at him in amazement. "The magiccrystal card is only offered by the 'Golden Bank of the Four Empires', which all four of the great empires established together. I heard that the processing fees for requesting a card totals a hundred gold coins."

"Right on." Yale was quite knowledgeable about this. "The minimum starting balance for a magiccrystal card is at least a thousand gold coins. But I'm afraid that a thousand coins wouldn't be enough to even sustain a month's worth of expenditures for me."

Linley, upon hearing these words...

"Rich guy." Linley sighed to himself.

His own father gave him only a hundred gold coins each year for living costs. In fact, in Linley's eyes, a hundred gold coins was more than enough. After all, most commoners would only make twenty or thirty gold coins in wages after a year of hard labor.

"You really are a rich guy. My dad only gives me two hundred gold coins a year." Reynolds mumbled. "And he even said that he wants me to spend my time focused on studying magic."

"Just a hundred for me," Linley laughed. "But for a simple life, it's enough."

"Bah, bros, my money is your money. If you run out, just come find me! In the future, we'll probably be living together for decades. We'll be bros for decades. Why quibble about 'yours' and 'mine'?" Yale was extremely expansive, but just as he finished speaking...

Linley and Reynolds both started.

"Decades?" Linley stared at Yale in shock.

Yale said casually and naturally, "Linley, you can only graduate from the Ernst Institute if you reach the rank of a magus of the sixth rank. For a magus, the higher you progress, the harder it becomes. For most people, it takes a couple decades to become a magus of the sixth rank."

Linley frowned.

Decades? He was going to be a fiscal burden to his father for decades?

"Grandpa Doehring, why didn't you tell me this?"

Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in his mind. "Linley, relax. For most people, decades will be needed to reach the sixth rank, yes. Under my tutelage, I can let you become a magus of the sixth rank in just ten years."

Ten years.

In ten years, Linley would only be nineteen years old. Only now did Linley relax.

"Is everyone here already?" A clear voice rang out, as a child walked into the room. Approximately the same height as Reynolds, this child looked a bit more mature. "Hello, everyone. My name is George [Qiao'zhi]. I'm ten, and I'm from the Yulan Empire."

Yale, Reynolds, and Linley all gave basic introductions about themselves to the newcomer.

"The Yulan Empire?" Linley was startled.

The Yulan Empire. The most ancient of the empires of the Yulan continent. When the Yulan calendar was first started, ten thousand years ago, the Yulan Empire controlled the entire Yulan continent. And then, as time passed, the Yulan continent began to fall into war, causing the Yulan Empire to fragment as well.

By this era, the Yulan Empire had become just one of the Four Great Empires.

But despite this, the Yulan Empire was still the most economically powerful of the empires, and it was also filled with magi. The magus academy of the Yulan Empire was second only to the Ernst Institute.

"George, the magus academies of the Yulan Empire aren't that bad. Why did you rush all the way here?" Yale said in amazement.

George smiled. "Although the magus academies of the Yulan Empire are very good, they are still a bit weaker than the Ernst Institute. If you're going to go to school, you should go to the best. Although the journey was a bit long, it could be considered a form of training as well."

"George, you are ten? But you look the same as me." Reynolds said to the side.

George immediately began to laugh.

The eight-year old Reynolds and the ten-year old George were of the same height. Both were the shortest in the group. Linley was half a head taller than them, while Yale was the tallest of them all.

"Enough of that topic. I just found out from the admissions office that every one of the hundred new students have at least high levels in both elemental affinity and spiritual essence. I even discovered guys who have 'exceptional' levels in both elemental affinity and spiritual essence. What monsters." George seemed to have good inside information.

Yale pursed his lips. "That's very normal. Which student in the Ernst Institute is weak? Myself, my elemental affinity and spiritual essence are both high level, putting me towards the bottom of the pack of our one hundred. If it wasn't for the fact that my old man has a special relationship with the Radiant Church, I probably wouldn't even be able to make it in."

Linley couldn't help but stare at Yale in shock.

This Yale fellow's dad surely was something quite amazing, to have a special relationship with the Radiant Church.

"The person in our dorm with the highest natural talent is Linley. But have you guys heard of the unmatched talent who is studying at the Ernst Institute?" Yale glanced at the other three.

Linley and Reynolds both shook their heads.

But George smiled as he nodded. "I've heard of him. The number one genius of the Ernst Institute, 'Dixie' [Di'ke'xi], a talent that appears once in a century. He is a dual-element magus, and has exceptional levels of elemental affinity and spiritual essence. But his spiritual essence is especially amazing; 62 times that of others his age. Usually, reaching 30 times is considered 'exceptional' level, so his precise level should be 'super exceptional', but since the highest level is 'exceptional', that's what he is classified as."

Linley understood.

Dual-element. Exceptional elemental affinity and spiritual essence.

"I'm just ten-something times that of other people my age, but that genius has 68 times the spiritual essence of people his age." Linley sighed in amazement.

The Ernst Institute really did have as many talents as there were clouds in the sky. It could also be said to have congregated all of the magical geniuses of the Yulan continent. Here, Linley could only be considered above average. However...behind Linley, there was a five-thousand year old Saint-level Grand Magus!

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 15 – The Bros of Dorm 1987 (part 2)

Most of the students of the Ernst Academy would stay at the Institute for decades, so usually by the time of graduation, fellow dormmates would be extremely close friends. Although Yale, Reynolds, Linley and George were all more mature than most others their age, at heart, they were still children.

After just chatting for a short period of time, the four of them immediately grew very close.

“Everyone, let’s spend the day getting to know our campus better. Tonight, I’ll treat you all to dinner! Haha.” Yale slapped his chest and said enthusiastically.

“This guy even has a magicrystal card. If we don’t take advantage of him, who else would we take advantage of?” Reynolds laughed.

George and Linley were both still children, and they immediately grinned evilly.

“Squeak squeak!” At this moment, the little Shadowmouse, ‘Bebe’, suddenly popped his head out from within Linley’s clothes. Having just woken up, the little Shadowmouse was feeling lonely, so he popped his head out.

“Whoah, what’s that?” Reynolds was so startled he jumped.

"Bebe, you woke up?" Linley laughed as he stroked Bebe's little head. Bebe closed his eyes in contentment, and then opened his little eyes and peered at Reynolds, Yale, and George. His little nose snorted three times, as though he looked down at them.

"Magical beast, it's a magical beast! I've seen them in books." Yale suddenly shouted.

"Linley, you have a magical beast companion?" Reynolds and George were also shocked.

They were all children. How could one of them make a magical beast submit to them?

"Bebe is just a baby magical beast. I just gave him some food, which made him like me. So I entered a soulbinding contract with him." Linley laughed.

"Good heavens, that's a magical beast! Linley, you are really formidable. I've dreamed of having one since I was young." Yale stared at Bebe, his eyes shining. "Although I have access to soulbinding formation scrolls, I don't have the ability to force a magical beast to submit to me."

Yale said in a depressed voice.

"You aren't able to subdue a magical beast? Not even an infant?" Linley laughed.

Yale shook his head. "I'm not even a magus of the first rank yet. Based on my strength, maybe I could train a magical beast of the first or second rank, but what would I do with such a weak critter? And the infants of magical beasts of the seventh or eighth ranks are extremely hard to acquire. What's more, the infants of those beasts are more powerful than me, even as babies."

Linley agreed with him silently.

The little Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', currently was as strong as a magical beast of the fifth rank. He was far stronger than Linley. But having been together with Bebe for half a year, he could tell that Bebe didn't grow larger at all. This was what confused both Linley and Doehring Cowart.

"Linley, this little Shadowmouse is named Bebe? Can you have Bebe allow me to cuddle him?" Reynolds gaze was glued to the little Shadowmouse.

"Bebe?"

Linley immediately asked Bebe through their soul link.

"No, no way." Bebe could also express some simple intentions to Linley through their soul link. At the same time, Bebe flashed his fangs towards Reynolds. "Squeak squeak!" He squeaked loudly, clearly very angry.

Reynolds couldn't help but pucker his lips in disappointment.

"Reynolds, I'll tell you a secret. Bebe loves to eat roast meat. If in the future, you can feed him some roast ducks or roast chickens, I believe that he won't be very hostile to you." Linley laughed upon seeing Reynolds eyes shine.

"Can do."

Reynolds suddenly frowned as he turned to Yale. "Yale, if in the future I run out of money, you've got to lend me some. When Grandpa Lomu comes, I'll pay you back."

"No problem." Yale said magnanimously.

"I bet everyone hasn't had a chance to get a good look at the campus yet, right? Let's go for a stroll and familiarize ourselves, shall we?" George smiled as he spoke.

Of the four bros, George was the most amiable and steadiest boy. Reynolds was the most childish one of them. Yale...was the playboy type. As for Linley, in the eyes of the other three boys, he was the most mysterious.

Dual-element magus, exceptional affinity, and a magical beast companion.

He really was mysterious.

The ancient Ernst Institute was filled with countless buildings which were thousands of years old. In front of some of them, there were even introductory placards.

The youngest of them eight, the oldest of them ten. The children stared worshipfully at each famous name, especially at the histories of the Saint-level combatants, which caused their hearts to beat faster. All of them dreamed of one day becoming a Saint-level combatant.

But a voice right next to Linley's ear kept on grumbling. "Nothing more than some promising latter-day youths. This guy is actually bragging about killing a Violet-Tattooed Black Bear? A Saint-level combatant who can only kill ninth level magical beasts and not Saint-level magical beasts can only be considered a newbie Saint-level."

Many famous graduates of the Ernst Institute were bashed by Doebling Cowart as not worth mentioning.

....

The four bros of dorm 1987, along with the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe', strolled about the entire campus, gaining a basic level of familiarization. That very night, the four of them went to a lavishly decorated hotel next to the dormitory area and had themselves a feast. But of course, all they drank was juice.

The next day. February 9th. School started.

There were no classes this day; those would start on February 10th. February 9th was meant to go and listen to the exhortations of school management to work hard. This group of six-to-twelve year olds filled the auditorium. They didn't know exactly who the people speaking to them were, so many of the children began to daydream. When the ceremony concluded, all of them happily departed.

After dinner, the four bros of dormitory 1987 were all seated on chairs inside the dorm and discussing their classes.

"It's so easy here. Just one class a day. Oh, Linley is dual-element, so he has two." Yale sighed. "But the Ernst Institute is really relaxed. If you want to attend class, you can. If you don't want to, you can skip."

George calmly smiled. "Yale, don't grow complacent. Although there aren't formal requirements for students, every year, there will be an ability test. Only if you advance a rank in power can you advance a grade. If you don't work hard, do you plan to stay here for a century? What's more, the Ernst Institute has a rule that if one does not become a magus of the sixth rank in sixty years, one will be expelled, no exceptions."

Reading the various regulations of the Institute written on the introductory packet, Linley nodded silently.

Although the school had lax supervision, allowing one to not study at all for sixty years, once you reached the end of those sixty years, if you still had not become a magus of the sixth rank, you would be directly expelled.

"Expelled?" Yale stared. "If I really were to be expelled, my old man would probably kill me." Expulsion by the Ernst Institute would result in an unbearably humiliating reputation. No one would be willing to shoulder it. After all, to have been accepted meant they were all talented people.

"Class starts tomorrow. I wonder how the teachers are. If they aren't even as good as my Grandpa Lomu, I'll have come for nothing." Reynolds mumbled.

"Reynolds, your Grandpa Lomu is a magus?" Linley asked, somewhat surprised.

"Of course. On the long road from the O'Brien Empire to the Ernst Institute, Grandpa Lomu had already begun to teach me magic." Reynolds said proudly.

When Linley and the other three were chatting with each other, they all felt very excited.

"The earth element class isn't that important. In terms of understanding the earth element, how could any of the teachers at the Ernst Institute compare with Grandpa Doebling? The most important class is the wind element class. I wonder what wind magic is like?"

The day had already begun to grow dark, but the sounds of laughter and chatter continued to sound out from the four children within dormitory 1987.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 16 – Wind-Style Magic

For the academic calendar of the Ernst Institute, every month, the first twenty eight days had classes. Only the last two days were free.

Earth magic classes were taught from 8:00 AM to 10:00 AM in the morning, fire magic was taught from 10:30 AM to 12:30 PM in the afternoon, water magic from 2:00 PM to 4:00 PM in the afternoon, wind magic from 4:30 PM to 6:30 PM in the afternoon, lightning magic from 7:00 PM to 9:00 PM at night, and light magic from 9:30 PM to 11:30 PM at night.

But since the majority of students were single element, they only had to take two hours of classes a day. Linley was dual-element, which meant each day he had just four hours of classes. But because these classes were on a voluntary basis, if you didn't want to go, no one would force you.

The school of earth magic was divided into six classes, with each class having its own building. New students and first rank magi attended the first grade class, magi of the second rank attended the second grade class, magi of the third rank attended the third grade class...and so on, up until the sixth rank who attended the sixth grade class.

Magi of the sixth rank could choose to graduate at any point in time. But naturally, if they elected not to, they could continue to study.

February 10. Within the classroom of first grade classes.

The classroom for first grade earth magic was extremely large, and was capable of seating hundreds of students. Twenty students had already arrived, and Linley selected a seat located relatively in front, sitting down. At 8:00 AM, there were around fifty students present.

"I expect only part of the students present are new. I wonder how long the others have spent here." Linley wondered to himself.

After all, for a new student to reach the second rank, usually they would need to train for several years.

"Greetings, everyone." An amiable, kindly looking brown-haired middle aged man stood in front of the class. "My name is Wendi [Wen'di], and I will be your instructor in earth magic. Today, we have approximately twenty new students. So, same as always, first we are going to have our new students introduce themselves, so that we can all get to know each other."

Immediately, one new student after another began to introduce themselves.

"My name is Gerhans [Ge'er'han]. I come from the great grasslands to the far east."

Upon hearing Gerhan's self-introduction, Linley was shocked. "The students here really do come from all over the Yulan continent. There's even someone from the great grasslands in the far eastern part of the Yulan continent."

In the great map of the Yulan continent...

The Holy Union and the Dark Alliance were located west of the Yulan continent's Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. East of the range were the Four Great Empires, but even further east of the empires was a vast grassland, which contained three kingdoms of its own. The distance between the great grasslands and the Ernst Institute was unbelievably great. A one way trip alone would take at least three years!

"My name is Linley. I'm from the Holy Union." Linley as well walked to the front of the classroom and gave a basic introduction of himself.

After the self-introductions were complete, the earth-style magus Wendi began to brag about earth-style magic's power. Only in the second hour of the class did he actually begin to instruct in earth-style magic.

Linley and the group of students just listened quietly. Next to Linley, Doehring Cowart appeared as well.

"This fellow has a very solid foundation. Although he isn't very strong, in terms of teaching magi of the first rank, not even magi of the eighth or ninth rank would necessarily be a better teacher." Doehring Cowart nodded as he sighed in praise.

Linley knew a great deal about earth-style magic by now, so listening to the lecture was very easy for him.

"But Grandpa Doehring, although his foundation is solid, he isn't able to distill the profound into simple words like you. He seems to make it more complicated." Linley said.

Doehring Cowart laughed self-confidently. Stroking his white beard, he said, "Naturally. A Saint-level Grand Magus' understanding of magic is far greater than that of a magus of the eighth or ninth rank. The Saint-level is a totally new realm of existence. Naturally, my teachings regarding magic are more profound and point more directly to the underlying nature of magic."

After listening to this class, Linley made a decision.

"From today forward, I will only attend the earth magic class once a month." Linley didn't want to waste his time.

Linley had it all planned out. Every day, he would spend some time outside training in magic. As for the place he would do the training... Linley had already chosen a place, a mountain located right behind the Ernst Institute. Being located near a mountain range, naturally there were many mountains near the Institute.

Four in the afternoon.

Linley was intently listening to the teachings being given in the wind-style magic class.

"Greetings, everyone," a handsome, yellow-haired youngster said with a smile. "I am a sixth grade student, Trey [Te'lei]. From today onwards, I will be responsible for teaching you wind-style magic. I live in dorm 0298, so if you have any questions after class ends, you can come find me there."

Sixth grade students, being magi of the sixth rank who could apply for graduation at any time, were fully qualified to teach students of the first or second grades.

"Before this, let's all first introduce ourselves." Trey smiled.

This was a basic rule to start off every class for the first time. All of the students gave self-introductions.

"Hey, Linley, have you noticed? There's lots of cute girls amongst the wind-style students. Check it. That little blonde girl just smiled at you." Doehring Cowart, next to Linley, pointed as he spoke. "Based on what that little blonde girl just said, her name seems to be Delia [Di'li'ya]. Delia. Such a cute name. Based on my 1300 years of experience, when this little girl grows up, she'll be a beauty for sure. Linley, smile at her and build a good foundation. That way, in the future, you'll be able to advance the relationship."

Right now, Linley was totally ignoring Doehring Cowart.

Linley was focused on the wind-style magus instructor 'Trey', and closely listening to Trey's teachings.

"Wind-style magi are the fastest, most nimble magi in the world. In addition, we are the only magi who can fly before reaching the Saint-level!" Trey's words and mannerisms all conveyed the love which he felt towards wind magic. "Do you wish to use your own power to fly above the skies? To soar in the air and gaze down upon countless mountains? How wonderful the feeling is, and how many people desire it!"

The eyes of many of the children who were seated below, listening, began to shine.

Fly?

Who wouldn't want to?

"A Saint-level magus can fly, yes, but the Ernst Institute can perhaps produce just one, at most, in a century! But we magi of the wind-style can, upon attaining the fifth rank, immediately execute the 'Floating Technique'." Trey said confidently, "And wind-style magi are extremely fast. When they execute the 'Supersonic' technique, they can dramatically increase their speed."

"But of course, those are just common techniques. The legendary forbidden technique, 'Annihilating Tempest', is the most powerful destructive technique of them all. There's also the legendary forbidden technique, 'Dimensional Edge', which is the most powerful one-on-one attacking technique." Trey's voice was filled with reverence.

Many of the youths stared wide-eyed.

"Hmph, how can the Annihilating Tempest be considered the most powerful destructive technique? What about my earth-style's 'Heaven Collapses, Earth Shatters' and 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent'?" Doehring Cowart, upon hearing these words, was somewhat unhappy.

"Grandpa Doehring, what is this 'Dimensional Edge' technique?" Linley

asked.

Given that Grandpa Doehring had not mentioned the 'Dimensional Edge' spell, Linley believed that perhaps it really was the most powerful one-on-one attacking technique of them all.

"The Dimensional Edge spell? It can slice through the dimensional walls which separates matter itself. Of course it is powerful. But although it is ridiculously strong in one-on-one combat, it's still only a one shot spell. How can it compare to our earth-style's 'World Protector', which can battle nonstop with the enemy?" Doehring Cowart was quibbling and equivocating.

But Linley could tell.

This Dimensional Edge spell clearly possessed a terrifying power. And most likely, it wasn't as simple as Grandpa Doehring made it out to be. A one-shot technique? Even a one-shot technique could be enough, if the opponent couldn't dodge.

"If I can become both a Dragonblood Warrior as well as utilize wind-style magic, then..." Linley's heart was moved.

And then, he just continued to listen to the class. Linley became more and more intrigued by wind-style magic. Of the four elements of earth, fire, water and wind, each contained profound mysteries which were as deep as the sea. The ocean of magical knowledge was an endless one. And now, Linley had begun to wade into its depths.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 17 – A Learning Period (part 1)

Spring left and autumn came. In the blink of an eye, Linley had spent half a year at the Ernst Institute.

During those days in school, Linley was like a thirsty man of the desert, frantically drinking up the basic fundamentals to magic. With regards to wind-style magic, Linley's knowledge and strength continued to rise as well, and Doehring Cowart would give him pointers every so often as well.

Today, the sunlight was bright and beautiful.

The four bros of dorm 1987 had just finished lunch. They were wearing a set of sky-blue robes, the school uniform of the Institute. Because of constant physical training, Linley appeared all the more mesmerizing, with his elegant form covered by the sky-blue robes. This was why quite a few of the young girls in the wind magic class liked to chat with Linley.

At this moment, the four bros were walking while chatting idly.

"Right, Linley, today the rest of us are going to attend the new students fellowship. Are you going?" George chortled.

George loved to participate in student unions and fellowships, and he was excellent in ferreting out news and making new friends. Although he had only been in school for half a year, amongst the first grade students of the Ernst Institute, George had become a mover and a shaker.

"Nope." Linley's answer was succinct and direct.

"Haha, I knew Linley definitely wouldn't go." Reynolds laughed loudly.

Putting his arm around Linley's shoulders, Yale sighed, "Linley, my man, there's no need to be this diligent when it comes to studying. Based on your talent, if you just expend a bit of effort, in thirty years you can easily become a magus of the sixth rank. Why do you have to work so crazy hard? You should learn to relax and enjoy life. There's a lot of cute girls who will be at the fellowship, you know."

"Right. Really cute girls." Reynolds opened his eyes wide and nodded.

Linley could only sigh helplessly.

Under the guidance of the Yale, that innocent youngster, Reynolds, had begun to go astray.

"Yale, you pervert, stop tugging at me. Alright, time for me to go train. Tomorrow is the end of the month, I'll hang out with you guys then." Linley laughed. The last two days of each month, Linley let himself take two days break.

Knowing Linley's temperament, Yale, Reynolds, and George all nodded.

Linley immediately walked off, quietly but quickly heading towards the mountains behind the school. There were thousands of students at the Ernst Institute, and there were also many magi who were researching new spells here. There were also many servers. In short, the Ernst Institute was a well-populated place.

On the road to the mountains, many students wearing blue gowns could be seen as well.

"Growl..." A low roar sounded.

Linley turned aside to look, and his eyes brightened. "A magical beast!"

A flowing mane, slick cyan fur, and four thick, forceful limbs. A pair of eyes filled with wildness, viciousness, and a cold fierceness. Those coldly flashing golden claws made onlookers' hearts tremble.

The magical beast, 'Windwolf'.

A terrifying magical beast that moved as fast as the wind itself.

The most terrifying thing one could encounter in a forest of magical beasts was a pack of Windwolves. If you encountered them, based on their speed, there was no way you could escape.

A handsome, black-haired man was seated atop the Windwolf. The young man was staring delightedly around him, seeming to be very proud of having such a fine magical beast.

"This should be a magical beast of the fifth or sixth rank," Linley decided.

At the Ernst Institute, there were indeed quite a few people who had magical beasts. Aside from the magi who had been invited to come to the Institute, some fifth and sixth grade students were able to buy soulbinding formation scrolls and had managed to tame some magical beasts to serve as their mounts.

"It's just a magical beast. Why be so cocky about it?" Linley looked somewhat contemptuously at the self-pleased youngster.

After departing from the school, Linley entered the mountain in the rear.

The mountain behind the Ernst Institute was an extremely wide ranging one. Long, long ago, magical beasts used to live in this mountain, but as time went on, all of the magical beasts were exterminated by the magi of the Institute. By now, there were only a few normal beasts still living here.

Upon entering the mountain, Linley's speed increased dramatically.

He naturally began to use the wind-style 'Supersonic' spell, turning his entire body as light as a leaf. Like a spirit, he wound his way through the mountains. After running for several kilometers, Linley reached his target destination, an empty area next to some flowing water.

"Squeak squeak." Bebe chirped at Linley.

Linley chuckled and said, "You want to go out and play again? Fine, but don't run off too far." Linley had a lot of faith in Bebe. A year had passed since he had met the little guy, but although Bebe still hadn't grown larger, and was still just twenty centimeters long, his speed had dramatically improved.

“Magi? Perhaps a warrior of the eighth rank would be able to catch the little Shadowmouse, but only a Saint-level magus would be able to do the same.” Linley knew very well how strong the bodies of most magi were.

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, scurried into the mountain forests.

“Grandpa Doebling, please come out and instruct me.” Linley immediately said mentally.

A mist flew out, transforming into Doebling Cowart. Doebling Cowart blinked and glanced at Linley. “Linley, what’s going on? In the past, haven’t you always ignored this old fellow and entered the meditative trance first? Why are you calling me out now? I was having a wonderful nap just now, hmph. You ruined my beautiful dream.”

Linley quirked his lips.

Although Grandpa Doebling was a Saint-level Grand Magus, after getting to know him, Linley realized that although he looked kindly and amiable on the outside, on the inside, he was a playful scamp.

“Grandpa Doebling, I feel like I have reached the level of a magus of the second rank. I want you to take a look and see for yourself.” Linley finally said.

"A magus of the second rank?"

Intrigued, Doebling Cowart ran some calculations. "Hmm, right, about a year has passed since you started learning with me. Right, first, perform the introductory spell of 'Shattered Rocks'. Do your absolute best, understood?"

'Shattered Rocks' could be considered a spell which scaled.

There was a 'Shattered Rocks' spell of the first rank, but there was also a Saint-level spell for the 'Shattered Rocks'; only, the name for it was called 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent'. Naturally, when the strength of an earth-style magus increased, his power in using the 'Shattered Rocks' would also increase.

"Yes, Grandpa Doebling."

Linley immediately began to quietly mouth the words to a spell. The words had long since been memorized by Linley to the point where he could recite them without thinking. As the words to the spell continued, Linley could feel his entire spirit enter a special mode.

The earth-style mageforce in his chest began to roil about, and natural elemental essence began to gather there as well.

Suddenly, the nearby earth began to crack and shatter.

Five skull-sized pieces of rock flew up and began to circle around Linley's head. These five rocks were all covered with earthen specks of light, and as Linley's eyes began to shine, he let out a deep shout. The five rocks rapidly shot off to a far distance, carrying a gust of wind with them.

"SMASH!"

The five stones covered in earthen light smashed into a thick tree trunk. The tree swayed, but its trunk did not shatter. In the end, the five stones still came tumbling down to the ground.

"Yeah, not bad." Doehring Cowart's eyes lit up. "To be able to control five stones at once with such impressive speed shows that you do, in fact, have the power of a magus of the second rank." Doehring Cowart was very much satisfied with Linley's performance.

Linley couldn't help but reveal a hint of a smile on his face as well.

He had just taken another step towards his goals.

Linley would never be able to forget the words his father had said to him when he left. "If you cannot bring it back, even when I die, I won't forgive you!" These words had pierced Linley's heart like a sharp knife, and he was constantly reminded of them.

Right now, Doehring Cowart was chortling happily. "But Linley, you must understand that a magus of the second rank counts for little. Based on our ranking systems, magi of the first and second rank are all considered 'entry-level magi'. Magi of the third and fourth ranks are considered 'mid-level magi', and fifth and sixth ranks are 'high-level magi'. A magus of the seventh rank is called a 'senior magus', a magus of the eighth rank is a 'master magus', and a magus of the ninth rank is a 'arch magus'. These ranks of seven through nine are the highest. The road you have to travel is a long way."

"I know." Linley nodded.

"Good. Train hard." Doehring Cowart once more entered the Coiling Dragon Ring.

Linley collected himself, suppressing his excitement at becoming a magus of the second rank. He once more tranquillised sat and entered the meditative trance. The strong became strong one step at a time and through achieving many accomplishments.

Approximately three kilometers away from Linley.

Linley's wind-style magus instructor, the sixth-ranked magus Trey, frowned. "Hmm, the earth magic spell, 'Shattered Stones'? Based on its power, it should be of the second rank. An entry-level magus has come to the mountain to train? Who is it?"

Just then, Trey had utilized the 'Windscout' spell, and had sensed the earth-style magic which Linley had just cast.

Based on the magic vibrations, Trey was able to determine what spell it was.

Trey curiously walked in that direction. Based on his prowess as a magus of the sixth rank, his execution of the 'Supersonic' spell was far stronger than that of Linley's. Like a passing fog or cloud, Trey easily and tranquilly flowed through the mountain.

In the blink of an eye, Trey had reached a spot two hundred meters next to Linley.

Standing next to a large tree, Trey saw Linley from afar.

"It's him?"

Naturally, Trey recognized his own student. "This kid called Linley never talks in class. Even when experimenting in new spells, others will try them out, but he will just stand and watch from afar, never showing his strength. It seems...this kid called Linley is already a magus of the second rank. I remember him being one of our new students. Didn't expect him to be so talented."

Linley already knew how to cast spells, so of course when the instructors told the other students to give it a try, he would just stand and watch.

Never participating in any group activities, Linley's secretiveness was acknowledged by everyone who knew him.

"Hehe, looks like I have a genius amongst my students. Mm. Looks like this year, I should receive a reward when the first grade student competition commences." A brilliant smile was on Trey's face. As for Linley, right now, being in a meditative trance, he couldn't sense anything more than a hundred meters away from him.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 18 – A Learning Period (part 2)

A month had passed after Linley had become a magus of the second rank.

Within the first grade wind magic classroom.

Linley would only go to the earth magic class once every month or so, but he attended every single wind magic class. Today, Linley was seated in his usual spot.

“Linley, you came.” Just as Linley sat down, a very adorable young lady sat down next to him.

Seeing the girl, Linley smiled. “Delia, you came pretty early. There’s still quite some time before the next class starts.” Sitting together with a beautiful girl was of course something enjoyable. Naturally, Linley wouldn’t push her away.

Delia was no ordinary person.

Her brother, Dixie, was the number one genius of the entire Ernst Institute, and described as a talent which would be found once in a century at most. He, too, was a dual element mage, and his elemental essence affinity was exceptional. But what’s more, he was a supreme talent with 68 times the spiritual essence of an ordinary person.

As the sister of Dixie, Delia naturally was pretty exceptional as well.

"It's because I know you always come early." Delia beamed, her eyes crinkling.

The two sat together and chatted. Time passed quite quickly, and before they realized it, class had started. Instructor Trey energetically explained in front, and Linley sat beneath him, listening intently. But Delia, every so often, would sneak a peek at Linley.

"Alright, today's class is over for now. But before class ends, there's something I must inform you all about." Instructor Trey smiled as he spoke.

All of the students immediately began to buzz.

"The older students all know that our Ernst Institute has a tradition. At the last two months of every year, a yearly tournament will be held. The yearly tournament is always the most noisy, energetic time at the Ernst Institute. The students who achieve victory in the yearly tournament will likely have a higher chance of being rated 'superior' upon their graduation. When they graduate, most likely they will be invited by the Four Great Empires." Instructor Trey laughed.

All of the students below immediately began to grow excited.

At the Ernst Institute, talents were as common as the clouds. And the number one problem that all talents shared was that they didn't like to admit inferiority to others!

Thus, the yearly tournament had become a way for talents to become famous. Close to 90% of the students would pay attention to the tournament, and everyone with some ability would participate.

"Naturally, we wind magic practitioners will also do battle. Everyone interested in enrolling, please speak to me." Instructor Trey smiled as he spoke, but his gaze drifted towards Linley.

"Instructor, I wish to enroll." Many students below immediately began to clamor to enroll.

"Great." Instructor Trey took out a duck feather quill pen and began to record down names, but after taking down ten or so names, he realized that Linley was busy chatting with Delia, apparently not interested in enrolling at all.

Trey walked over.

Linley involuntarily glanced up and immediately called out respectfully, "Instructor Trey." The nearby Delia also paid her respects.

Trey smiled and nodded. "Linley, this yearly tournament is an excellent opportunity to train one's self. I expect all of the elites of the first grade students will attend. Why aren't you enrolling? This is a rare opportunity."

"I'm not interested." Linley said directly.

Instructor Trey couldn't help but start.

"Linley, you no doubt are unaware that the victors of the tournament will receive some rewards." Instructor Trey said enticingly.

"Rewards?" Linley was in desperate need of money.

His clan's economic situation was in such terrible shape. If he could win some money, he wouldn't mind attending the yearly tournament.

"Right. You should know that most students live in ordinary dorms, those single unit ones. But the top three victors of the tournament are all qualified to live in those two-story high buildings for a year. That's a proof of status. The rooms are much more comfortable as well." Instructor Trey continued.

Linley understood.

There weren't many two-floor dorms, and most of those belonged to powerful magi of the seventh or eighth ranks. From what he was now hearing, the top three students in each grade also were allowed to live in them.

Housing conditions?

Linley didn't care about it at all.

"I'm not attending." Linley still said.

Instructor Trey grew somewhat impatient. As a sixth grade student, if one of Trey's student became one of the top three in his grade, not only would he be rewarded, he would also gain a lot of face. Young people all cared about face.

Instructor Trey leaned in towards Linley, saying in a low voice, "Linley, are you concerned about revealing your ability? I know that you are a magus of the second rank."

Hearing these words, Linley couldn't help but look up at Trey in surprise.

How did Instructor Trey learn about his current level of power? After all, it was hard to judge one's abilities from external appearances.

Seeing the expression on Linley's face, Instructor Trey thought that he had hit the mark. Laughing, he said, "Linley, if you have ability, you shouldn't hide it. Even if you decide not to attend the competition for fear of revealing your ability, I might just decide to expose you myself."

"Whatever. Still not going."

Linley stood up unhappily, and then politely paid his respects. "Farewell, instructor."

And then, ignoring the stupefied look on Trey's face, he immediately left.

"Bah. This kid." After recovering, Trey couldn't help but laugh. The nearby Delia couldn't help but cover her mouth and giggle as well.

.....

By the time the wind magic class had ended, it was almost six at night. The sky was growing dark. Linley ran back towards his dorm. The bros of dorm 1987 shared strong affection towards each other, and at night they always ate together.

"Linley, you're back." A curly haired youngster from dorm 1986 said warmly to Linley.

"Harry [Ha'li], have you eaten dinner?" Linley smiled back in response.

Linley was on excellent relations with most of the nearby neighbors. Harry laughed and nodded. "Of course I have. Your three bros are all waiting for you inside."

"Linley's back. Let's go, everyone, time to eat!" Yale's voice sounded out.

Clearly, from inside their dorm, Yale had heard Linley's voice. Yale, Reynolds, and George all walked out and waved to Linley. The four bros proceeded towards the dining areas. The Ernst Institute contained some luxurious restaurants, but after being persuaded by Linley, Reynolds, and George, Yale no longer took them to those places.

The dishes in the small dining hall were simple and fresh, very pleasing to eat.

After ordering some food, the four bros began to chat amongst themselves.

Linley got most of his news regarding the Institute's going-ons from his three bros, as Linley, who spent all his time training in the mountain, probably would be totally in the dark otherwise.

"Man, in about a month, the school year is coming to an end. The last two months of each year, the entire Institute will engage in the yearly tournament. The top three students in each grade are all allowed to live in those two-story dorms for a year." Yale said.

"The yearly tournaments?" Linley began to laugh. He had just heard about this from the classroom.

"Haha, I'm definitely attending," Reynolds said confidently.

Yale pursed his lips. "Punk, you became a magus of the first rank on the road from the O'Brien Empire to the Ernst Institute. I wager that by now, you aren't too off from becoming the magus of the second rank. That really is unfair."

Reynolds spent a full year traveling from his home to come here.

On the entire journey, Reynolds' family housekeeper had been teaching him magic, which is why he had become a magus of the first rank even before the journey ended.

George smiled towards Linley. "Hah, you are forgetting about Linley. Linley was a magus of the first rank by the time he entered the Institute as well. What's more, he's crazy about training, and he's a dual-element magus. I think he's probably the strongest person in our dorm."

Linley quirked his lips in a smile. "George, don't flatter me."

"Linley, have you gained your second rank yet? Be honest?" George stared at Linley.

"How could he gain his second rank so quickly? From an introductory student to the first rank, based on our talent, a year is necessary. But from the first rank to the second rank, at least two years is needed." The nearby Reynolds frowned as he spoke.

"Not necessarily. I also feel Linley's been really sneaky." Yale also looked at Linley. "Linley, have you become a magus of the second rank?"

Linley casually nodded.

What was the big deal about becoming a magus of the second rank? Even before the magus testing event, he had already become a magus of the first rank. A full year had passed since then. If he still had not become a magus of the second rank, then all his hard work would've been totally pointless.

"You really reached it?" Yale, Reynolds, and George's eyes all bulged out. None of them expected it to be true.

"Go enlist in the yearly tournament, Linley. You've gotta take part. Give those guys a good trampling and gain some prestige for dorm 1987." Yale immediately said.

By now, the servers had brought the dishes they ordered.

"Eat, eat! I'm not interested in the yearly tournament." Linley had no interest in competing with those weaker than himself. Those tournament battles were nothing more than exercises in showing off!

Yale and the other three traded glances.

They all knew how hard Linley trained. Although in their year, there were geniuses who had exceptional levels of elemental affinity and spiritual essence, in terms of being hard-working, none of them could match Linley. And with Linley being dual-element...in their hearts, all of them believed that Linley was most likely the most powerful amongst the first grade students.

"It would be such a waste if you didn't participate. Someone else is going to get the glory, once again, in the yearly tournament." Yale mumbled. "Too bad I'm not strong enough. If I had your strength, Linley, I would've given a dazzling display long ago. Then, I would be able to seduce some pretty girls."

Linley laughed. "That's enough. Let's eat. Stop fantasizing."

Linley really didn't care about the yearly tournament in the slightest. But the vast majority of the students at the Ernst Institute were extremely excited about it. And not just the students. Even some of the full magi residing at the Ernst Institute would pay close attention to the tournament results.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 19 – Who is Number One? (part 1)

The mountain behind the Ernst Institute, a place of tranquility.

Linley sat cross-legged next to flowing water. Listening to the murmurs of the water, he naturally entered the meditative trance, and all the nearby earth essence and wind essence immediately began to shine. Everything within ten or so meters around Linley became extremely clear to behold.

Earth and wind essence entered his body through his four limbs, as his flesh, bones, and organs all slowly absorbed nourishment from the essences. Slowly but resolutely, the strength of his body was continuing to climb.

Additionally, a large portion of the wind and earth essences, after purification, came to rest with the 'central dantian' in the middle of his chest.

"Splash, splash." The flowing water murmured unceasingly.

Next to him, the little Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', was chewing on a wild duck. The scene was as peaceful as a painting, as though it had come out of a painting.

But while it was peaceful here, the Ernst Institute was extremely rowdy. All of the thousands of students, as well as many of the magi, and even many important people from the outside world were all at the Ernst Institute, watching the various battles.

The yearly tournament.

All of the students of the Ernst Institute were prideful heaven-blessed talents!

Each and every single battle was amazing to behold. Amongst the first grade students, balls of earth, flashes of lightning, and blades of wind flew hither and to. But the battles of the third and fourth grade students were really astounding. Various supportive spells and area of effect spells were used. Spells such as 'Shattered Rocks' now caused dozens, approaching a hundred, of large stones to smash upon the heads of the opponents, and lightning forked down without stopping.

And the fifth and sixth graders? That was all the more terrifying.

All sorts of astounding spells continuously flashed, filling the compound with unending sounds of explosions. The watching students all were all roaring nonstop, as the energy was reaching a crescendo. Virtually all of the people in the Institute were here.

.....

The yearly tournament went on for a bit over a month, which naturally was the wildest, most rowdy month each year at the Ernst Institute. During this frenetic period, Linley would only occasionally watch the battles of the fifth and sixth grade students. All of the rest of his time, he would quietly train by himself.

“This tournament actually requires one to not intentionally try and kill one’s opponent. How can this sort of competition be considered a real competition, when one’s hands and feet are tied?”

Under the influence of Doebling Cowart, Linley, too, began to view the competition with disdain.

“Linley, your current assignment is to train hard and build up your strength. As far as combat experience goes, when you become a magus of the fifth rank, you should enter the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and enter a series of genuine life-and-death experiences.” Doebling Cowart persuaded Linley.

.....

The Huadeli Hotel, the most expensive hotel and restaurant within the Ernst Institute. Tonight, Yale was hosting the four bros of dorm 1987 to a lavish meal at the Huadeli Hotel.

On the first floor of the Huadeli hotel.

The floor of the hotel was as slick as a mirror. A row of beautiful waitresses stood there politely, ready to answer at a moment’s notice.

There were many men and women dressed in student attire at the Huadeli Hotel. Those who were able to afford this place were generally those who had strong economic backgrounds. A casual table of dishes might cost a few dozen gold coins. If Linley had come by himself, he definitely wouldn’t be able to afford it.

The yearly tournament had just ended, and all of the students at the hotel were discussing it. Most of the people here were youngsters, but one table was filled with four children.

"I'm pissed just thinking about this year's competition. It was so close! I was so close to entering the semifinals. Maybe I would've been able to enter the top three." Reynolds was extremely dissatisfied. Reynolds was the youngest of the four, and also the proudest of them.

Yale laughed. "It really was a shame. I didn't expect Rand [Lan'de] to become number one in the end."

George chuckled but didn't speak.

George was a friendly fellow and offended almost nobody.

"Rand? Right. I've heard you guys discuss him before. He was one of the new students who had exceptional elemental affinity and spiritual essence, right?" Linley remembered the name 'Rand'.

George laughed and nodded. "Right, him. He has very high talent. Even before training, his spiritual essence had reached the level of a magus of the second rank. All he did this year was accumulate sufficient mageforce. It isn't too hard for someone with the power of a magus of the second rank to become number one in the tournament amongst first grade students."

"Relying on his talent alone? When it comes to talent, can he compare to our Institute's number one genius, Dixie?" Yale quirked his lips. "I look down upon Rand. He won the first grade tournament, so what. Linley, you didn't see how self-satisfied he looked upon winning. I really can't imagine how he would look if he actually were to win the fifth or sixth grade tournaments in the future."

The stronger a magus became, the harder it was to progress even further.

This was why the large majority of students at the Ernst Institute were high-level magi. The higher one's grade was, the more fierce the competition was.

Reynolds nodded as well. "I also don't like him. Our school's number one genius, the third grader Dixie, won the third grade tournament. Look at how composed he was! The difference between the two is too huge. What's more, the strongest amongst us first graders isn't Rand."

"Right. Third bro, you didn't participate. If you had, hmph..." Yale harrumphed.

Based on age and seniority, the four of them had begun to address each other as 'second bro', 'third bro', and so on.

"Hey, what are you guys saying?"

Linley and Yale turned their heads. Four youths in the same hotel were making their way down from the second floor. Their leader, a golden-haired youth, stared at Linley's group coldly.

Yale said loudly, "Oh, so it's Rand. What, didn't you hear what we were saying?"

Linley couldn't help but laugh helplessly to himself.

Yale feared neither heaven nor hell, and cared tremendously about face.

"Hmph, don't think I didn't hear," Rand said coldly.

The brown-haired youth next to Rand sneered as well. He arrogantly said, "Rand, don't quibble with these four useless things. It's not worth your time. Reynolds, what do you think you are looking at? What, you aren't satisfied with the way you lost in the tournament?"

Reynolds stared at the brown-haired youth, his mouth quirking in disdain. "And what do you think you are? You just got lucky and beat me once. Why so cocky?"

The brown-haired youth's face grew cold.

George smiled at everyone. "Rand, enough. It was wrong of us to so casually discuss you. Let's just forget about it."

"Shut your mouth, George. This is none of your business." Rand stared at Yale. "Yale, last time I saw you at the Fragrant Elm bar, your arrogant manner pissed me off. And now, this time, you dare to be so arrogant in front of me. If you have the ability, come and fight me. Why don't you have the balls to fight?"

After speaking, Rand intentionally laughed mockingly a few times.

Although Yale was somewhat furious, he knew that he wasn't as strong as the opponent.

Immediately, many gazes from all over the hotel focused on this altercation. Many of the high-level students of the Ernst Institute stood up and stared at the two parties with curiosity. Clearly, both parties were just ten year olds.

"I know that golden-haired kid. His name is Rand. He won the yearly tournament amongst first graders. I expect in the future, he'll have some accomplishments."

"The brown-haired kid next to him is called Rickson [Rui'sen]. He was number three amongst the first graders. I know him. In terms of strength, Rand's party is stronger than their opponents. This should be fun."

The group of magi of the fifth and sixth ranks all chatted and laughed, watching the two parties.

Seeing others notice him, and hearing them praise him as the winner of the first grade tournament, Rand's face became even more arrogant, and he looked at Linley and the others even more contemptuously.

"Hmph." Rand glanced at the table where Linley and the others were sitting. "Juice? You guys are still drinking juice? Oh, Yale, I really feel embarrassed for you. The four bros of my dorm are all drinking victory wine. You guys are drinking juice?"

Seeing how Rand went on endlessly, Linley couldn't help but begin to frown.

"Rand, we four bros are eating here. Get the hell out." Linley's face sank down, and he stared coldly at the four of them.

If he was training and was disturbed by beasts, he would immediately kill them.

"Oh, and this one." Rand's eyes shone as he stared at Linley. "How come I never knew that in Yale's dorm, there was someone such as you?"

Linleys' gaze grew cold.

Like a wild rabbit, he shot forward with incredible speed. Rand's eyes only had time to widen. "You-!" Before he could even react, Linley grabbed Rand by the chest and, just based on physical strength, hoisted him in the air.

"Wha, uh, uh..." Rand couldn't make any noises come from his throat, and his eyes were filled with fear.

Linley stared coldly at Rand. Rand, heart filled with fear, felt as though he would be killed at any moment.

At this moment, Linley felt the Dragonblood in his veins begin to blaze, as his bloodthirsty nature began to awaken. Linley couldn't help but frown as he tried to calm down. "This is the Ernst Institute. I can't kill someone for no reason."

The three students next to Rand were all stupefied and frightened as well.

"fk off!"

With the wave of an arm, Linley slammed Rand to the floor, as though he were nothing more than a beanbag.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 20 – Who is Number One? (part 2)

By now, Linley had nearly reached the peak of the second rank for warriors. Given that the strength of an ordinary warrior of the first rank was enough to raise a hundred pounds, a warrior of the second rank could casually throw about hundred pound objects.

"You...cough...cough..." Holding his throat, Rand coughed a few times, and then stared furiously at Linley. "You...you actually..."

"Yeah!" Yale suddenly shouted loudly, his face filled with excitement. "That felt so good. Third bro, I didn't expect you to be as strong as that!"

"That kid is pretty small, but he is so strong..."

Those magi of the fifth and sixth ranks were all astonished. There were some magus instructors in the hotel as well, and all of them were staring at Linley with surprise.

A kid who appeared to be perhaps twelve or thirteen years old was able to casually toss a 90 pound person with one hand.

And this youth was a magus!

"Hey, Rand, weren't you bragging about how you were number one amongst the first graders?" Yale mocked.

Rand's face went red, as his heart was filled with fury and shame.

Staring at Linley, he shouted fiercely, "You, are you a magus? If you have the skills, compete with me using magic. What sort of behavior was that? A noble magus actually used the lowly skills of a warrior." Rand was filled with anger and humiliation. He had just won the yearly tournament for the first graders, but just now, when Linley seized him by the throat and hoisted him up, he had been filled with the terrifying sense that his life was in the hands of another.

"Right, if you have the skills, compete using magic! Are you even a student of the Ernst Institute?" Rand's nearby friends immediately called out in support.

But towards Linley, the four of them felt some dread in their hearts. Linley's astonishing display of strength just now had shocked them.

"Magic?"

Reynolds immediately began to laugh loudly, as he said arrogantly, "Rand, do you actually believe that just because you won the first grade tournament, you really are the strongest amongst the first graders? Dream on. The number one first grader is our dorm's third bro. You? Step off to the side."

"Third bro, show'm a bit of your power." Yale urged as well.

George had just been yelled at by Rand, so right now, he was in no mood to give Rand any face either. "Rand, let me tell you something. Know your own limits. Many of the experts in our school simply don't deign to participate in the yearly tournament. Don't really believe that you are something special."

Rand's face grew uglier and uglier.

"You'll know the truth upon dueling. Rand, compete with them." Those fifth and sixth grade students called out laughingly. They viewed the struggles of the first graders as nothing more than an amusing diversion.

Rand was just ten years old, after all, and had been called a genius since he was little.

Even at the Ernst Institute, he was amongst the top tier. When had he ever suffered such humiliation?

"Number one?" Rand ground out. "Number one isn't something that is simply proclaimed. It comes through competition. If you have the ability, then come duel with me." Rand was very confident in his magical ability. After all, he had won the yearly tournament for first graders."

"Hey, why isn't the manager of this hotel coming in to calm things down?" Some of the onlookers felt surprised and curious about this.

In fact, the Huadeli hotel manager was standing far away, but he didn't want to interfere.

Because he recognized these students.

Even aside from the fact that these were students from the Ernst Institute, based on the status of these students, he didn't want to anger them. Especially...Yale.

"Young master Yale is here? Ugh. Forget it. He can do as he wishes. Even if he smashes the entire hotel, it's none of my business." The hotel manager rubbed and shook his head helplessly. He couldn't dare to offend young master Yale.

And upon entering the Ernst Institute, Yale's status amongst his family had only increased even more.

"Well spoken. Number one isn't self-proclaimed. It's won." Linley stood up as well, his face cold as he stared at Rand. "Rand, if we are going to engage in a magical duel, let's make it exciting. If you win, when I see you in the future, I'll have to take the long way and avoid crossing paths with you. If I win, you need to do the same."

Rand couldn't help but sneer, "You call that exciting? When the loser meets the winner, not only does he have to take the long way around, he also has to give a hundred gold coins. How about that?"

Linley frowned.

A hundred gold coins?

He only had a hundred gold coins each year for living expenses. He wasn't rich like some people.

"Haha! Rand, just a hundred gold coins? Aren't you embarrassed, saying such a number? How about this. Loser pays ten thousand gold. Deal?"

The nearby Yale said loudly.

"Ten thousand gold?"

Upon hearing these words, many students in the hotel sucked in a cold breath. Ten thousand gold coins was not a small sum. There were perhaps only a very few number of students in the hotel who could so casually, calmly bring out such a large sum.

"Ten thousand gold?" Rand couldn't help but feel his heart shake.

Although his clan was a large one, each year, he only received three thousand gold in living expenses. He didn't come spend money at the Huadeli Hotel every day. Today, he only came to celebrate him and Rickson becoming the number one and number three victors of the tournament.

"Haha, don't have the balls?" Yale pulled out a magicard, waving it around as he spoke.

"Rand, agree to him." Rickson said. "We four bros should be able to pool together ten thousand gold coins. I refuse to believe that this little punk who came out of nowhere can be a match for you."

Rand and his three bros glanced at each other.

"Fine! Ten thousand gold it is!"

Rand said loudly, and then sneered towards Linley, "Let's go. This place is too small. We'll go to the arena where the tournament was held. If you have courage, follow me!" After speaking, Rand arrogantly left the hotel, and his three bros followed him.

"Let's go." Yale's eyes were shining.

Reynolds and George were also excited. Linley nodded as well as he calmly chuckled, "Someone wants to give us ten thousand gold? How can we refuse?"

Linley, Yale, Reynolds, and George all left the hotel as well, directly heading for the arena.

The entire hotel was now in an uproar. A duel with a ten thousand gold coin wager on it was rarely seen, even by sixth grade students. And what's more, of the duelists, one was the person who had just won the yearly tournament for first graders, Rand, and one was a mysterious kid that no one knew.

Immediately, many people paid their tabs and headed off in that direction as well.

....

The arena floor was made of limestone and extremely sturdy.

Right now, Rand and Linley were each standing on a separate side of an arena dueling area.

Beneath the upraised dueling area was a large group of people. After all, this was dinnertime, so on the way here from the Huadeli Hotel, one person became ten, and ten became a hundred. In a short period of time, a large group of people had been gathered. This exciting duel with a ten thousand gold wager was more than enough to attract many onlookers.

Seeing how many people had come and how noisy it had become, a look of confidence appeared on Rand's face.

"Today, I am going to engage in a magical duel with this kid Linley, with the loser paying ten thousand gold coins and having to avoid the other in the future. Everyone, please be my witnesses." Rand said. He enjoyed the feeling of being watched by many. He didn't suffer from any stage fright at all.

Immediately, many cheers exploded from below. During the yearly tournament, Rand had many supporters, while in contrast, very few people were supporting Linley.

But Linley just stood there on the dueling area quietly.

"Said enough?" Linley said calmly.

Rand smiled arrogantly. "Let's go."

Rand and Linley almost simultaneously began to chant the words to a spell. As both were magi of the second rank, the spells they used were all of the first and second rank and were easy to cast, requiring just a word or two.

“Whoosh!”

Seven sharp blades of wind sprang into existence, slicing directly towards Rand.

“A magus of the second rank?” The experienced onlookers could immediately tell.

But Rand had released a spell at the same time, and five balls of dull red flame shot towards Linley as well. The blades of wind were much faster than the fireballs, however, and Rand was forced to dodge in a rather sorry fashion. But Linley casually and effectively sidestepped the fireballs. And, while doing so, Linley’s lips continued to move as he executed his second spell.

Earth style magic – Earth Tremor!

“Rumble....”

Rand felt the limestone beneath his feet begin to tremble violently. Under these circumstances, Rand couldn’t focus enough to chant any spells. Immediately afterwards, Linley released his third spell, and five fists of earthen-colored stone shot out rapidly towards him.

Rand couldn’t even maintain his footing on the shaking earth. He just barely dodged two of the stones.

"Thud."

One stone smashed into Rand's stomach, immediately causing him to vomit fresh blood. Rand hurriedly used his arms to cover his chest. Two more striking sounds were heard, and Rand was directly thrown off the dueling area, his entire body covered with dust.

Magic duel, Linley, victorious!

Linley calmly glanced at Rand once. Linley was very clear about the attack he had just used. With just a month's recovery time at most, Rand would be fine. If he, Linley, had decided to be merciless, he could have directed the stones at Rand's head and most likely finished him.

"A dual-element magus of the second rank. We have such an expert amongst us first graders?"

The onlooking first graders called out, astonished. For a second rank magus to appear amongst the first graders was a rare event, much less a dual-element magus, who would be the absolute strongest amongst them.

"This kid controlled his mageforce very precisely, and his body movements were very nimble."

Some of the fifth and sixth graders were a bit surprised. Just now, when facing the fireballs, Linley had been able to dodge while continuing to chant the words to a spell. From this one could tell how agile Linley was.

"Haha, Rand, did you really think you were number one? Our dorm's third bro, just using magic, is still able to easily trample you." Yale laughed loudly.

"Cough, cough." Rand stood up, clutching his chest.

Rand knew in his heart that just then, Linley had shown mercy.

"Yale, tomorrow, bring Linley. I'll go with you to the Golden Bank of the Four Empires local branch to transfer money. Ten thousand golds. I'll keep my word." Rand took a long look at the distant Linley. This defeat at Linley's hands had totally woken Rand up from the arrogant haze of being a genius.

Even if one was talented, if one wasn't strong enough, he would still be defeated by others!

"Linley, thank you!" Rand said, bowing, causing Yale and others to be startled. And then, Rand stared at Linley and said resolutely, "But there will come a day when I will defeat you."

And then Rand, still clutching his chest, left with the help of his bros, returning to his own residence.

"Linley, you are too awesome. You won your bros a lot of face!" Reynolds immediately ran over and embraced Linley, who had stepped down.

Linley glanced around.

Many people were now staring at him and discussing him. Most of the talented people at the Ernst Institute had become well-known already. Nobody expected such an individual to appear out of nowhere amongst the first graders and easily defeat Rand, the tournament champion.

"Hi Linley, my name is Danni [Dan'ni], a water magus of the first rank. I'm glad to meet you." Immediately, a golden-haired girl with a tall, slender figure walked over and said to Linley with a smile.

"Hi, my name is Linley." Linley didn't have the habit of talking to strangers much. "Sorry, I'm going to go train and enter the meditative trance now."

After speaking, Linley glanced expressively at his three bros. Yale and the others knew what he was thinking, and immediately, the four bros ignored everyone around them and departed, leaving behind that young lady, Danni, who frowned unhappily.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 21 – The Proulx Gallery (part 1)

The Golden Bank of the Four Empires was a bank that had been jointly established by the Yulan continent's Four Great Empires. People who were capable of opening a magicrystal card account with the bank were undoubtedly people of great wealth. Given that the card itself cost a hundred gold coins, normal people wouldn't be willing to part with such a high sum.

Ten thousand gold coins, if divided into hand-sized pouches, would fill a hundred pouches. Even a burlap rice sack would be half-filled and very heavy.

"A hundred gold coins, gone like that." Walking out from the local branch of the Golden Bank of the Four Empires within the Ernst Institute, Linley couldn't help but sigh to himself. Now, next to his chest, was a magicrystal card of his own.

Linley knew that while he continued to live at the Ernst Institute, if he put a huge pile of gold coins in his dorm, it wouldn't be safe. The safest option was to put them all in a magicrystal card.

It must be known that the cost to create the card was not low. It had taken master goldsmiths centuries to develop, and each card responded to the fingerprints of its owner alone. Thus, every single magicrystal card could only be used by its original owner.

This was the reason why magicrystal cards cost a hundred gold coins.

“With these ten thousand gold coins, my living expenses at the Ernst Institute will be more than sufficiently covered, with lots left over. I can help father as well.” Linley felt very happy.

Yale’s arm was around Linley’s shoulders, and he whistled a little tune while delightedly peering at the nearby Rand and his bros.

Rand and the other three had taken out their living expenses money, and the four of them had perhaps only a thousand gold coins left. But fortunately, the school year was about to end.

Reynolds and George were both calmly smiling as well, and were joking with Linley to the side.

But in truth, neither Reynolds nor George had suffered much in the past.

“Second bro, third bro, fourth bro, tomorrow, at the end of the month, my father will come over. At that time, I will arrange for carriages and guardsmen to be brought over. Where should we four bros travel to?” Yale suggested.

“The Holy Capital?”

Reynolds, George, and Linley’s eyes all shone.

Fenlai City, the Holy Capital, was no ordinary city.

"The Holy Capital is a great idea. On the way here from the O'Brien Empire, I stayed at Fenlai City for two days. I haven't had a chance to visit many places yet." Reynolds hurriedly said.

George and Linley both nodded.

"The Holy Capital has lots of places to visit. Tomorrow, I'll take you guys out and expand your horizons." Yale said mysteriously.

.....

At dawn the next day, Yale and the others all had breakfast together, and then directly went to the Ernst Institute's main gate and began waiting for Yale's escorted carriage.

After waiting for two hours, the carriage still had not arrived.

"Squeak squeak." Bebe, perched on Linley's shoulder, began to squeak.

"Bebe is getting impatient. Yale, you pulled us all here early in the morning, but the carriage still hasn't come." Reynolds said unhappily, while Yale laughed apologetically. "I don't know either, they should be here by now." Linley just stroked Bebe's little head.

"There they are." Yale suddenly shouted loudly.

George, Reynolds, and Linley, all of whom had almost fallen asleep, turned to look. From afar, there really was four carriages and hundreds of mounted guardsmen hurrying towards them en masse. Above the formation, there were even seven or eight Griffons, and of the hundreds of riders, over ten were riding magical beasts such as the Vampiric Iron Bull or Windwolves.

“So Yale’s clanguard divisions are so formidable,” Linley couldn’t help but feel shocked. The eyes of Reynolds and George also shone.

Doehring Cowart was seated next to Linley, enjoying the sun. Upon seeing the cavalry division, his eyes lit up as well. Very shortly, the four carriages and hundreds of riders arrived at the main gate. Three magi came out to greet them at the gate.

A middle aged man stepped forward in front of the four carriages. Before even speaking to the three magi, he strode towards Yale.

“Second Uncle, what took you guys so long?” Yale said unhappily.

This ‘Second Uncle’ of Yale’s immediately laughed and said, “Haha, did you grow impatient? Alright, your carriages are all ready. The last one is filled with some goods, I’ll have them clear them out so you have a place to sit. You are going to the Holy Capital, right?”

“Cass [Ka’qi], take three others with you. You are responsible for protecting young master Yale.” This ‘Second Uncle’ ordered.

Off in the distance, a bald rider immediately dismounted, walked in front of Yale, and bowed. “Cass pays his respects to young master Yale.”

Next to Linley, Doehring Cowart's eyes lit up and he said to him, "Linley, this brother of yours definitely is extraordinary. Based on how he dismounted and his eyes, I can feel that this Cass is an expert who is a good deal stronger than even your Uncle Hillman. In addition, that hawk on his shoulder should be a magical beast of the seventh rank – the "Blue-eyed Thunderhawk."

For Cass to be praised by Doehring Cowart as an 'expert' meant that he definitely was out of the ordinary.

"Linley, let's go. Enter the carriage quickly. Let's go to the Holy Capital." Yale beckoned.

Linley and the other three entered the carriage together. The interior was very spacious, and the four of them weren't cramped at all. Immediately, the carriage driver began heading towards the direction of the Fenlai City, the Holy Capital.

Cass and the other three riders all followed from behind.

In the cabinets within the carriage, there were actually fruits, honey, and wine. The four bros began to eat and drink and chat within the carriage. The Ernst Institute was only twenty kilometers away from Fenlai City, so after about half an hour or so, they arrived.

They left the carriage.

Under the protection of Cass and the other three, Linley's group began to roam Fenlai City.

“Hey, where is everyone going? Fenlai City has an incredible amount of places to have fun. East Fenlai City has lots of luxurious places to spend money with lots of beautiful waitresses, while West Fenlai City has many art museums, such as the famous Proulx Gallery.” Yale was very familiar with Fenlai City.

“Beautiful waitresses? Okay okay, let’s go to East Fenlai City.” The eyes of that mischievous scamp Reynolds had begun to shine.

“It’s only the afternoon. Those places are only fun in the evening. But of course, we can go now as well.” Yale said laughingly.

Linley felt some reservations about those types of places, and so he said, “Yale, forget it, what’s the point of us kids going to those places? Just now, you mentioned the Proulx Gallery? Since the Proulx Gallery names itself after the famous Grandmaster Proulx, it must be extraordinary. Let’s go check it out.”

Proulx, the number one sculptor in the history of the Yulan continent.

“Grandmaster Proulx? I’ve heard of him as well. In the past, one of his sculptures was sold for the price of several million gold coins. The name of that sculpture was ‘Hope’. Millions of gold coins, my god. So rich.” Reynolds sighed.

George laughed confidently. “In the history of sculpture, from the beginning til now, there have been countless stone sculptures made. Of the top ten sculptures, any one of them would be worth a million gold coins. And of those top ten sculptures, three were made by Grandmaster Proulx. He can be considered the number one person in the history of stonesculpting!"

Linley sucked in a breath of cold air.

Millions of gold coins?

What an enormous sum that was. Even if his clan sold off their ancestral home, they most likely would only be able to scrape up a hundred thousand gold coins.

"Let's go check it out." Linley immediately said.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 22 – The Proulx Gallery (part 2)

The Proulx Gallery.

The number one art gallery for sculptures, each of the largest cities in the Yulan continent had a Proulx Gallery branch. The Proulx Gallery took up an extremely large space, and a great majority of those entering the gallery were people of culture and breeding.

Within the Proulx Gallery, if you had too many ostentatious magic rings on your hands, the likely result would just be you being mocked and derided for having no class.

Art, sophistication!

This place valued these things the most.

The entry fee to the Proulx Gallery was one gold coin per person.

A ding-dong sound, as clear as the sound of a mountain spring, rang out from within the Proulx Gallery. The sound of it made listeners feel at peace. Countless people traversed the gateway, with many noblemen, noblewoman, and beautiful young girls, all dressed very tastefully.

And commoners, in front of the Proulx Gallery, would almost unconsciously comport themselves.

When Linley and his bros, along with Cass and the three guardsmen, arrived at the Proulx Gallery, anyone who was a decent judge of character could recognize the Ernst Institute clothing that they wore. Upon seeing the Blue-eyed Thunderhawk on Cass' shoulders, they naturally would become very courteous and polite.

"Uncle Cass, come in along with us. The other three can wait for us outside." Yale instructed.

Linley, his three bros, and Cass thus entered the gallery. In the main hall of the Proulx Gallery, there was a large, man-shaped sculpture. This sculpture was precisely that of the number one grandmaster sculptor, Proulx.

The entire Proulx Gallery was extremely quiet.

Virtually everyone, regardless of status, spoke in hushed tones, so as to avoid bothering anyone else.

Yale, Reynolds, George, and Linley viewed one stone sculpture after another, and in their hearts they felt as though these sculptures truly were incomparably beautiful.

"The Proulx Gallery's exhibits are divided into three halls; the main hall, the experts' hall, and the masters' hall. This main hall is filled with sculptures that some sculptors arranged to be placed here, to be valued and bought by others as they see fit. Each work is exhibited for a month, and after a month, the highest bid wins the sculpture. These ordinary sculptures are mostly just worth a few gold coins, with particularly good ones worth a few dozen coins."

Yale laughed as he explained. "But the experts' hall is different. The experts' exhibition is divided up into many individual rooms, with each sculpture in a room by itself. Generally speaking, an 'expert' is someone whose sculpting ability has received general acclaim, and most expert sculptures are worth around a thousand gold coins or so."

"As for the masters' hall, that's even more amazing. In the innermost sanctum of the gallery, there are a very small number of masters' sculptures. The price of these sculptures is frighteningly high. Any of them are easily worth tens of thousands of gold, and some of the masterpieces which first brought fame to their master sculptors are easily worth hundreds of thousands of gold pieces." Yale explained to his three bros in detail.

Linley's breath stopped.

Any masterpiece by a master sculptor was worth tens of thousands of gold coins. To a master sculptor, money really meant nothing at all.

"But it is quite difficult for a master sculptor to produce a masterpiece, since they naturally don't want to make any mistakes at all." Yale sighed as he spoke. "A masterpiece that is worthy of being venerated throughout the ages, requires talent, ability, and sometimes a sudden spark of genius."

"The works in this main hall are just a bit pleasing to the eye, is all. Let's go inside." Yale led them deeper within.

Walking within the quiet Proulx Gallery, and listening to that peaceful music, Linley felt as though he were swimming in a sea of culture. And just at this time, Doebling Cowart flew out from within the Coiling Dragon Ring and began to appraise the art nearby.

"Terrible, terrible. How can people have the face to bring out artwork of this quality to show others?" Doebling Cowart said unhappily.

"Grandpa Doebling," Linley turned to look at Doebling Cowart. "This is just the main hall of the Proulx Gallery. There is an experts' hall up front, as well as a masters' hall."

"Proulx Gallery?" Doebling Cowart started, and then actually stopped talking.

"Grandpa Doebling, Grandpa Doebling?" Linley mentally called out a few times. But seeing that Doebling Cowart was still lost in his thoughts, Linley no longer tried to call to him. He followed Yale, Reynolds, and George to the experts' hall. This hall really was different, as within the center of the main hall, each and every artist had their information recorded and the location of their displays recorded.

Yale, Linley, and the others began to enter the individual display rooms.

Although he didn't know much about sculpture, Linley could still clearly feel that the sculptures of the experts were clearly different than those in the main hall. They seemed to carry within them some sort of ineffable grace and culture.

Just as Linley was falling into a reverie while enjoying the sculptures, Doebling Cowart's voice sounded out in his mind once again.

“Not bad. These at least can be considered accomplished.” Doehring Cowart sighed with praise. “But compared to the works of Proulx, there’s still quite a way to go.”

Linley was speechless.

“Doehring Cowart, how can these people possibly compare to Grandmaster Proulx?” Linley shook his head and laughed helplessly. Proulx was the number one sculptor in the entire history of the Yulan continent.

Doehring Cowart frowned. Stroking his beard unhappily, he said, “What is it? Do you think that Proulx was a grandmaster from birth? He, too, started as an ordinary sculptor and worked his way up, and becoming a true grandmaster sculptor in the end.”

Linley was stunned.

There was some logic to Grandpa Doehring’s words.

After finishing inspecting the experts’ hall, Linley and the other three headed for the innermost masters’ hall.

“Everyone, remember, while within the masters’ hall, don’t touch anything. If you break anything, it would be disastrous.” Yale reminded them.

Entering the masters' hall. Silence.

The masters' hall was extremely large, but there were only very few sculptures inside. After all, only so many masters had ever existed, and each master had only four or five works of art on display. In the entire hall, there were only twenty or thirty works on display.

But although there were very few sculptures, when Linley and the others saw these sculptures, they felt a spirit emanating from them, as though these sculptures had life.

"Oh, not bad, not bad. I didn't expect that in five thousand years, the art of stone-sculpting would reach such a height." Doebling Cowart said in amazement. "If these can improve a bit more, they will be able to approximate Proulx's level."

Silently mesmerized within the art gallery, Linley and the others felt their spirits be uplifted.

.....

Night. The Ernst Institute's main gate. Linley and other three dismounted the carriage.

"Second bro, third bro, the two of you, ugh. I planned for us to have a good time tonight in Fenlai City, but you...ugh, you guys are so thin-skinned. I started having fun in those places when I was six years old." Yale was still unhappily grumbling nonstop.

"Right on, right on," Reynolds said from the side.

George and Linley glanced at each other, and couldn't help but chuckle bitterly.

"Quick, open the gate!" A furious, urgent shout rang out.

Linley and the others couldn't help but swivel to take a look. They saw a curly-haired youth carrying another bloody youth, with a pretty girl by his side. The bloody youth's face was ashen white. His left arm was broken, with white bones sticking out, and chest covered with claw marks.

"Looks like some of the trainees who went to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were wounded. What group is this? We haven't even been at the Ernst Institute for a year, but we've seen so many high level students who were injured outside." Yale said casually.

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was east of the Holy Union.

As a matter of fact, it was quite close to the Ernst Institute, perhaps just a hundred kilometers away. Generally speaking, those in good shape would be able to jog from the mountain range to the Ernst Institute in about half a day.

"Here at the Ernst Institute, I've seen so many magical beasts. Wow, man, there are flying beasts, running beasts, and all sorts of beasts. But most of the people who have magical beast companions at the Ernst Institute are magus instructors, and a few high level students." George sighed in admiration.

Just as the four bros arrived at the main gate, suddenly –

“Linley.”

A familiar voice sounded out. Turning his head to look, surprised joy appeared on Linley’s face. “Uncle Hillman.”

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 23 – A Wonderful Surprise

Hillman was standing in a corner near the gate. Smiling, he walked over. "The Ernst Institute has extremely strict management. They actually denied me entrance and just had a guard go looking for you. I didn't expect you would actually be outside."

"Yale, you guys go on ahead, I'll join you later." Linley turned his head and said.

Yale, George, and Reynolds all smiled at Hillman, then entered the Ernst Institute.

"Uncle Hillman, why are you here? I thought you would only come here to pick me up after the semester ends?" Linley said questioningly.

"Let's talk over here." Hillman pulled Linley off to a side, a look of irrepressible excitement appearing on his face. "Linley, I have wonderful news for you, extremely wonderful news."

Linley's eyes shone.

"What news?" Linley urged him.

Hillman smiled. "Linley, do you remember little Wharton's date of birth?"

"Of course. January 3rd. What, does this have something to do with his birthday?" Linley questioned.

Hillman laughed. "It is December right now, so little Wharton is almost six years old. Just last night, your father tested little Wharton for the density of Dragonblood in his veins in the ancestral hall. And the test result was...haha..." Hillman once again began to laugh.

Linley's heart rate sped up dramatically.

The Dragonblood density test result was...

Could it be...

Linley asked, "Did the Dragonblood density in little Wharton's veins reach the cutoff?"

Hillman laughed loudly and nodded. "Right. Your father was absolutely ecstatic. He excitedly drank wine with me until midnight. Your father said that his two sons are the absolute prides of his life. One is a mighty magus, and the other is a Dragonblood Warrior. Haha..."

"Wonderful."

Linley's heart was full of excitement.

The five-millennium old legendary Dragonblood Warrior clan's prospects, prior to Wharton being tested for the Dragonblood density, had previously been carried on Linley's shoulders alone. The greater their former glory was, the heavier the burden Linley had been carrying.

But now....

His own little brother's Dragonblood density was sufficiently high that with just a few decades of hard work, he could become a world-renowned Dragonblood Warrior.

"I came here today to tell you this wonderful news. Your father said to me that right now, the strongest people in Wushan township are myself and him. We are both warriors of the sixth rank! Our level of expertise isn't enough to provide good tutelage for your little brother, and the training methods of your clan are written down but unclear." Hillman's face grew solemn. "Thus your father has decided to send your little brother to the O'Brien Empire's "O'Brien Academy" to study. In that mighty military Empire, in the finest military academy, your little brother will receive the best tutelage available."

Linley agreed as well.

A person who only had tremendous brute strength but lacked in technique and experience could only be considered a big, dumb ape.

"Wait." Linley frowned as he looked at Hillman. "Uncle Hillman, that O'Brien Academy's tuition must be extremely high. Although they will allow their own students to study free of charge, no doubt they are extremely merciless in charging out-of-empire students." Linley clearly remembered how much Reynolds had paid to be admitted to the Ernst Institute.

Hillman nodded. "The O'Brien Academy's yearly tuition is approximately five thousand gold coins. Your father intends to have Housekeeper Hiri escort Wharton there and take care of him. The tuition fee really is high. In ten years, it'll be fifty thousand gold coins."

Fifty thousand gold coins would approximately equate to the entire value of all of the Baruch clan's possessions, if sold off.

"Right! Uncle Hillman."

Hillman looked questioningly at Linley as he watched Linley withdraw a magicrystal card from his pockets. Hillman was shocked. "A magicrystal card?" Previously, when he was a soldier, he had seen magicrystal cards before.

"Linley, how do you have a magicrystal card? Not even your father has one." Hillman looked at Linley with surprise.

Linley tugged Hillman and said, "I won this magicrystal card from a rich kid who lost a magic duel with me. Let's go to the Golden Bank of the Four Empires." Right now, the guards at the Ernst Institute's entrance no longer attempted to bar Hillman's passage, because they recognized Linley, who had left earlier this morning.

To Linley, this extra money didn't have too much usage. If he could use it to help his family, that would be enough.

....

Wushan township, within the Baruch clan manor's main hall.

Hogg was pondering.

Since his clan had produced a descendant with the requisite density of Dragonblood, he must be given the best upbringing. Even if they had to beggar themselves, it would be worth it. This was without question!

"Who should I sell the stone carving screen in the bedroom to? Philip is too stingy, he won't give a good price." Hogg was pondering nonstop.

The tuition needed to send little Wharton to the O'Brien Academy was astonishingly high. The question in Hogg's mind right now was how to sell his clan's possessions for a sufficiently high price.

Suddenly, footsteps sound out.

Turning his head, Hogg said, "Hillman, you are back. Uh, what's that on your shoulders?"

Hillman tossed the bag across his shoulders onto the floor. The bag collided into the floor with a heavy thud sound. Clearly, it was very heavy.

"Lord Hogg, Linley asked me to bring this to you." Hillman opened the bag and then poured everything out. One small, gold-colored sack after another formed a small mound on the floor, and the sound of gold coins clinking within the gold-colored sacks was very clear and crisp.

These gold-colored sacks were used solely by the Golden Bank of the Four Empires. Each bag generally contained a hundred gold coins.

"Gold coins? So much gold. There must be at least ten thousand gold coins here." Hogg stared at Hillman, astonished. "Hillman, you say that Linley asked you to bring this here?"

Hillman said solemnly, "In total, nine thousand, nine hundred gold coins. Linley asked me to bring this to you. At the Ernst Institute, a rich young fellow engaged in a magical duel with Linley, and in losing, also lost ten thousand gold coins. Linley stored them into a magic crystal card, and now, has withdrawn the entire balance."

Hillman still remembered the words that Linley had said to the attendant at the Golden Bank of the Four Empires. "Withdraw everything!"

"9900 gold coins? Linley's?"

Staring at the mound of gold-colored sacks, Hogg immediately grew silent.

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 24 – The Straight Chisel School

Many days later, at the Ernst Institute.

It was morning. Linley had eaten breakfast, and was now headed to the back mountains, preparing to begin training.

While walking on the road out of the Institute, the little Shadowmouse was on Linley's shoulders, scanning about in all directions. There were quite a few people at the Ernst Institute who had magical beast companions, and thus no one cared at all that Linley had a little Shadowmouse as a companion. But just at that moment...

"That guy is Linley, the number one magus amongst us first graders." A clear voice rang out from not too far up ahead.

Linley couldn't help but stare at the direction of the voice, and saw two cute girls chatting to each other while staring at him. When Linley glanced at them, the two girls began to titter in a quiet voice.

"I've become famous." Linley mocked himself.

Over the past few days, he would often run into people discussing him. Since he had defeated Rand, the victor of the first grade tournament, everyone had tacitly agreed that he was the number one expert amongst first graders.

"Oh, in front is?" Linley suddenly saw a slender, small frame up ahead.

Short golden hair, with a body as slender as that of Reynolds. A cold aura emanated from him as he calmly walked along the road.

"Dixie?" Linley's pupils contracted.

Dixie was nine years old as well, and in fact was actually a month younger than Linley. But this nine year old child had already become a magus of the third rank. Although it became harder and harder to progress in the higher ranks, a nine-year old magus of the third rank was still very astonishing.

"It's Dixie. I heard that yesterday at the annual magus assessment test, Dixie showed that he had already reached the requirements for the fourth rank." A number of seventeen and eighteen year old girls said from the side.

Most of the students in the third grade were more than sixteen years old, with only the genius Dixie as a clear exception!

"A magus of the fourth rank!"

Linley felt his heart violently shudder. They were both nine years old, and Dixie was even a month younger than him. But he had already become a magus of the fourth rank, while Linley was only of the second rank.

Demeanor as cold as ice, Dixie walked past Linley.

The absolute genius, Dixie. No one his age could come close to matching him.

A white line shone out of the Coiling Dragon Ring, and Doebling Cowart appeared besides Linley, smiling. "Linley, there actually isn't a huge difference between you two. When Dixie enrolled, his spiritual essence was 68 times that of his peers. This means that even before training, his spiritual essence had reached the level of a magus of the third rank. That's why in his first year, all he had to do was accumulate sufficient mageforce for him to become a magus of the third rank. By now, he's been at the Ernst Institute for almost two more years, so it is very normal for him to become a magus of the fourth rank."

Linley understood this in his heart.

This person simply had too much natural talent. He was born with tremendous spiritual essence, and he had exceptional elemental affinity as well. Clearly, he must have accumulated mageforce very quickly as well.

"Although his training speed right now is fast, I expect him to need another three or four years to advance from the fourth rank to the fifth rank. And to go from the fifth rank to the sixth rank, he will need four or five years."

"Right now, you are a magus of the second rank, while he is of the fourth rank. But I am confident that in ten years, you will catch up to him." Doebling Cowart said confidently.

But Linley didn't believe it.

“Grandpa Doebling, the more natural talent one has, the faster one will progress. He has much more talent than I do, and holds two more ranks than I do. How could I possibly catch up to him in ten short years?” Linley was no fool. His studies at the Ernst Institute had made him aware of how difficult it was for a magus to advance a rank.

In the past, Doebling Cowart had told Linley that he would become a magus of the sixth rank in ten years, but Linley had always had reservations about that claim. After all, to date, his rate of improvement was clearly insufficient.

As he said these words, Linley had already left the gates of the Ernst Institute and entered the back mountains. As he passed through the mountain forests, Doebling Cowart suddenly said, “Linley, go to a place next to the mountainside.”

“Next to a mountainside?” Linley was confused.

“Don’t ask too many questions. When you arrive, I’ll explain.” Doebling Cowart laughed.

Most of the back mountain was covered with wild grass and many different large trees. But after a while, Linley found a place that satisfied Doebling Cowart’s requirements. The place was a mountain peak that rose hundreds of meters into the air. At the base of the peak, Linley stood.

“Grandpa Doebling, what do you want me to do here?” Linley said questioningly.

Laughing, Doebling Cowart said, "Linley, do you disbelieve my claim that I can let you reach his level in ten short years? Haha...Linley, as a mighty Saint-level Grand Magus, I in fact am in possession of a method to improve one's spiritual essence."

"A method to improve one's spiritual essence? Isn't the meditative trance enough for that?" Linley stared at Doebling Cowart questioningly.

Doebling Cowart smiled calmly. "Linley, I will admit that the meditative trance has very good results. But after meditating, one will feel extremely tired."

"Of course I would feel tired. The meditative trance involves me using my spiritual essence non-stop. After totally exhausting my spiritual essence, I would then allow it to recover. It'd be strange if it wasn't exhausting." Linley frowned.

Doebling Cowart proudly said, "But my method is different. It doesn't cost spiritual essence at all. In fact, it is a form of entertainment."

"Entertainment?" Linley was dazed.

"Right. This form of entertainment is – stonesculpting!" A prideful look appeared on Doebling Cowart's face.

"Stonesculpting?" Linley said, astonished. "Like the sculptures in the Proulx Gallery?"

Doehring Cowart smiled and said, "Right. When others sculpt stone, they will exert a lot of energy and exhaust themselves. But my stonesculpting method is different. Although it is also tiring when you first begin to train in it, towards the end, it will have extremely good results."

"Are you serious?" Linley couldn't quite believe it.

Doehring Cowart stared at him. "Linley, you don't believe me? As a venerable Saint-level Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire, in the past, there were several sculptures I made which nobles offered a million gold coins to purchase. But how could I, a Saint-level Grand Magus, be willing to give the sculptures which I was the most proud of to others?"

"You were that good? How come I've never heard of your name amongst the other grandmaster sculptors, then, Grandpa Doehring?" Linley said suspiciously.

Doehring Cowart said awkwardly, "Well, I hid all of my works in an underground vault which no one knew about. After five thousand years, I'm no longer even sure where it is located." Five thousand years is enough for a sea to turn into farmland. The entire Pouant Empire had been eliminated. Who knew where the vault was now?

"Oh ho, so no one's ever heard of you?" Linley began to chortle.

"You don't believe me?" Doehring Cowart stared at him. "Back in the day, when Proulx was just a young kid, he came to me and earnestly begged me to allow him to view my sculptures. After analyzing my sculptures, that kid Proulx had a mental breakthrough which in the end allowed him to become a grandmaster sculptor. As a matter of fact, he can even be considered a student of mine.”

Linley was stunned.

“Proulx?” Linley was truly terrified now.

Proulx, the man who had been acclaimed throughout the ages at the finest sculptor in history, could be considered a student of Doehring Cowart.

“Of course, if one can describe Proulx’s works as being in pursuit of perfection, my works are in pursuit of a different extreme. I named my sculpting method the ‘Straight Chisel School’. The Straight Chisel School is totally different from all other sculpting methods. It pursues a totally different extreme. This method, in the beginning, is very exhausting, but as one masters it, you will realize its true fruits.” A look of absolute confidence was on Doehring Cowart’s face.

Glancing at Linley, a smile appeared on Doehring Cowart’s face. “ But of course, in the past, I was the only member of the Straight Chisel School. From today forward, you will be a second member.”

In his heart, Linley had total confidence in Grandpa Doehring, so of course he had decided to study sculpting with him.

And what’s more...

If Grandpa Doehring’s words were true, and he could grow stronger while also becoming a master sculptor, just based on his sculpting skills alone, he would be able to support his little brother's tuition.

"Written, recorded history goes back only a few tens of thousands of years at most. In the long ages before then, before the writing system had even been invented, stonesculpting had already existed." Doehring Cowart said with a sigh. "Hundreds of thousands of years, or even millions of years ago, our ancestors would record their memories and their visions in sculptures. This is the most ancient method of recording culture and history."

Linley nodded as well.

There was no form of culture at all which was older than stonesculpting.

"Throughout the ages, sculpting has always been very hard to do. And creating a sculpture with a unique aura is even harder. The harder something is to do, the more valuable a success would be." Doehring Cowart sighed emotionally.

Linley agreed in his heart.

If you wanted to paint a single stroke, you could easily do so. But if you wanted to carve out a paint-stroke, it would be extremely difficult, because stone is too unyielding.

"A stone's appearance, quality, grains, and coloration impact not only its appearance, but its entire potential and true form. We use chisels to remove the excess parts and allow its natural beauty to be revealed. This is stonesculpting.”

“The stonesculpting way is really a way of controlling space and appearance. When stonesculpting, one must carve from the outside to the inside, one step at a time, slowly drawing out a ‘form’ from within. And then, slowly, one would remove the excess parts, allowing the form to become more and more clear. This will allow the sculptor to naturally feel as though his work of art is ‘evolving’ beautifully.

....

Once he started, Doebling Cowart couldn’t stop talking about carving.

But Linley could clearly tell how much Doebling Cowart revered this art.

“Most stonesculpting methods use many tools, such as the butterfly chisel, a straight chisel, a skew chisel, a triangular chisel, a jade bowl knife, hammers, saws, and more. The reason there are so many tools is because stone is very firm and hard. Thus, they will use a butterfly chisel to draw the form, the straight chisel for the initial cuts, the triangular chisel....”

Listening to him speak, Linley began to understand more about the basics of stonesculpting.

Doebling Cowart suddenly laughed. “But my stonesculpting method is totally different from that of others. This is because my stonesculpting method uses only a single tool – the straight chisel! This is why I have named my sculpting method, the ‘Straight Chisel School’!”

"How is that possible? You carve just using a straight chisel?" Linley immediately argued. "You just said yourself that more tools are needed. For example, the scales of a fish. How would you use a straight chisel to carve that? Isn't that totally impossible?"

"Wrong. Although others cannot, we earth-style magi can!"

Doehring Cowart said confidently, "Earth-style magi can totally sense the entirety of a rock's form. With sufficient wrist strength, we can sculpt stone using just a straight chisel. But of course, the 'Straight Chisel School' is not a simple one to enter. Today, your mission is to go purchase a sufficiently sharp straight chisel. From today onwards, every day, I will spend three hours guiding you in learning how to sculpt stone."

Book 2, Growing Up, Chapter 25 – Six Years

The flowing water continued to swirl as Linley sat cross legged next to it. In his hands, he held a straight chisel and a rock the size of his palm.

“Begin with the basics. I’ll start with this little rock as I begin my training...”

Linley sat there alone in the mountains behind the Ernst Institute. Under the tutelage of Doehring Cowart, he began to study the art of stonesculpting. As he began to understand more and more about this art, Linley also began to understand why in the later stages, the Straight Chisel School could assist in improving one’s spiritual essence.

When others carved, they needed to use a large pile of tools.

They had to spend a huge amount of time and mental energy just considering what tools to use where. Naturally, this would be exhausting. Every single work of art represented their blood and painstaking effort.

But the Straight Chisel School was different.

The only tool used was a straight chisel, so there was no need to consider what tool should be used for what. Naturally, the difficulty level was greatly heightened due to the use of just one tool. For example, using the straight chisel to carve out the parts normally reserved for the jade bowl knife required an extremely perfect understanding and grasp of the basic form of a stone.

In addition, great strength was needed.

If one tried to use just a straight chisel on some larger pieces which normally would require a saw to cut through, one would need sufficient strength.

One could use an earth-style magus' unique connection to the earth to understand a stone's essence. But wrist strength had to be trained. As a magus of the second rank, Linley's wrist strength was not bad, but it was only enough to carve some smaller pieces. If he wanted to carve anything large, his wrist strength would not be enough.

However...

Right now, Linley was just working on the basics.

.....

When the school year came to an end, Linley returned to Wushan township.

After the New Year, little Wharton and his older brother, Linley, had only a few days to spend in each other's company. And then, under the auspices of Housekeeper Hiri, Wharton headed towards the O'Brien Empire. Linley had no choice but to wistfully watch little Wharton depart. Crying nonstop, six year old Wharton parted from ten year old Linley and headed off.

Time passed.

Linley continued to be a solitary figure at the Ernst Institute. The vast majority of his time each day was spend in arduous training at the back mountains.

Entering a young adult's growth period, Linley's appetite increased enormously, and he began to grow taller as well. Naturally, his physical strength and musculature also improved rapidly. In the art of stonesculpting, with Doehring Cowart's guidance and his own hard work, Linley continued to make progress.

.....

Spring went, autumn came. Flowers blossomed, flowers withered. In the blink of an eye, three years passed.

At a waterfall in the mountains behind the Ernst Institute.

"Roar, roar." Like a solid sheet of water, the waterfall poured down in torrents, smashing into the deep pool of water.

Linley was right next to the waterfall, wielding a thirty-centimeter straight chisel in his hand as he constantly chipped away at a man-sized block of stone. The straight chisel in his hands danced in an almost illusionary fashion. Every place the straight chisel passed saw scraps of stone detach and fall down. An embryo of a statue was beginning to take shape from the stone.

He continued from morning until evening, and the statue's form began to grow clearer and clearer.

Linley's gaze was totally fixed upon the stone. At this moment, his entire being was focused on the stone and permeated it, as his heart had become one with the inside of the stone. This marvelous feeling caused Linley not to even notice the passage of time. This sensation of being totally one with nature actually caused Linley's spiritual energy to begin to regenerate, and even grow organically.

But Linley himself did not notice this, as he continued to wield the straight chisel and unceasingly work on the statue.

Pieces of excess stone continued to fall down, causing each detail of the statue to grow more pronounced. By the time the sun had set, the straight chisel in Linley's hands finally came to a halt.

"Whew!"

Linley let out a soft breath and brushed away some small pieces of excess stone still remaining. The entire statue had taken shape. A half-meter long lively-looking mouse stood in front of Linley. At a glance, one might mistake it for a real mouse. This caused the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, to begin squeaking wildly.

From start to finish, this was done at one go!

"What an amazing feeling." Only now did Linley realize that his spiritual essence had improved dramatically.

A white-robed Doehring Cowart smiled at him cheerily from the side. "Linley, starting today, you can just barely be considered to have mastered the basics. Have you felt that special feeling yet? But your work can only be considered to be a superficial pseudo-artwork. It's only worthy of being placed in the standard hall at the Proulx Institute. If you show it off there, I would be humiliated. Destroy it."

"Yes, Grandpa Doehring."

The straight chisel in Linley's hand flashed many times, and the statue suddenly became divided into more than ten pieces. This year, Linley finally had mastered the basics of stonesculpting!

And this year, Linley was thirteen years old!

Day after day, year after year.

After mastering the basics of stonesculpting, Linley's spiritual essence began to improve at a much more rapid pace. Specifically, when Linley was nine and a half, he had become a magus of the second rank, and when he was eleven, he had become a magus of the third rank. And when he was thirteen, he had become a magus of the fourth rank!

Magi found it harder and harder to advance in ranks as they grew more powerful. Logically speaking, from the fourth to the fifth rank, it should have taken Linley at least three years.

But in reality...

In year 9996 of the Yulan calendar, when Linley was fourteen and a half, he reached the rank of a magus of the fifth rank. From the fourth rank to the fifth rank, he only spent a year and a half. It was even faster than when he advanced from the third to the fourth rank.

This was the benefit of entering the Straight Chisel School!

.....

Year 9997 of the Yulan calendar was the seventh year Linley had spent at the Ernst Institute. This year, Linley was fifteen years old.

Wearing a sky-blue robe, Linley was walking on a road within the Ernst Institute. On Linley's shoulders, the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' continued to stand. Although six or seven years had passed, Bebe's body hadn't changed in the slightest.

By now, Linley was 1.8 meters tall and gave off a very steady, stable air. Earth and wind elemental essences had continuously nourished his body. Combined with Linley's nonstop training, and the advantages provided by his Dragonblood Warrior heritage, Linley had already become a warrior of the fourth rank.

He could easily lift boulders which weighed hundreds of pounds, and shatter rocks with his punches.

His study of the Straight Chisel School of stonesculpting had also caused Linley's spiritual essence to constantly improve ever since he was thirteen.

At the start of year 9997 of the Yulan calendar, Linley entered the fifth grade class at the Ernst Institute, the same grade as the Ernst Institute's number one genius, Dixie. It had taken Dixie three years to advance from the fourth rank to the fifth rank, but up until now, he still had not been able to advance from the fifth rank to the sixth.

Fifteen years old. A magus of the fifth rank!

Linley and Dixie both could definitely be considered freaks of nature. But in the hearts of the vast majority, Linley was even more of a freak, because since the day he took the ability assessment for the fourth rank, he had spent only a year and a half before attaining the fifth rank.

Linley's astonishing rate of improvement had shocked everyone.

Now, Linley was ranked along with Dixie as being the publicly acknowledged 'Two Ultimate Geniuses' of the Ernst Institute.

"Look, it is Linley. Two years ago, he became a magus of the fourth rank, and just last year, he became a magus of the fifth rank in just one year! Too amazing. I predict that Linley will become a magus of the sixth rank before Dixie does."

"Linley spends every day training in the back mountains. I hear that recently, Dixie has also begun to train hard at the rear mountains. Most likely, he's being influenced by Linley."

"Very possible. Given Linley's astonishing rate of improvement, very possibly he will supplant Dixie and become the number one genius of the Ernst Institute."

.....

On the street, there were many people who, upon seeing Linley, began to discuss him amongst themselves. As the acknowledged genius of the Ernst Institute, no matter where he went, people would discuss him. But although Linley's strength continued to increase, he still refused to participate in the yearly tournaments.

"Genius?" Linley mocked himself.

Linley had never considered himself a genius. His strength came from intensive training every single day. For six years, he had been as steadfast as he was the first day. And that, combined with guidance from Grandpa Doehring, was what gave him his current accomplishments.

"But right now, my strength is actually less than that of Bebe's." Linley glanced at Bebe on his shoulders. "Bebe, what rank of power have you reached?"

"Squeak squeak." Bebe smirked at Linley, then said to him mentally, "I don't know either, since I've never competed against any other magical beasts. But you definitely aren't a match for me, hehe." Bebe was extremely self-satisfied.

Totally ignoring the worshipful gazes aimed at him by bystanders, Linley calmly left the Ernst Institute by the back gate and entered the mountains, once more beginning his solitary training. Those six years which went by like one day were the reason for his success.

Linley quickly and casually floated through the forests, while the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' continued to chat with him nonstop through their mental link. "Boss, when are we gonna go to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts to test our strength? You are already a magus of the fifth rank. You can begin to test yourself. And I, Bebe, will finally be able to show my awesome abilities."

"No rush." Linley's reply was very short.

"You are breaking my heart, man. I'm a magical beast, but I haven't gone to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts a single time. What a tragedy!" After six years, Bebe's abilities at self-expression had improved dramatically.

"Quiet. If you keep on making a fuss, then today I won't help you cook meat." As soon as Linley spoke these words, Bebe immediately shut his mouth and didn't make a sound.

After entering the mountains, Doehring Cowart appeared by his side. Watching Linley, Doehring Cowart felt extremely gratified in his heart.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart suddenly said.

Linley turned his head and smiled at Doehring Cowart as he engaged in mental conversation. "Grandpa Doehring, is something the matter?"

Doehring Cowart smiled. "Based on your last few works of art, I can formally inform you that your abilities in stonesculpting have met the threshold."

Linley's eyes involuntarily shone.

His Grandpa Doehring had an eccentric temperament. Any works of art which didn't reach his exacting standards had to be destroyed immediately. Per his words, "If these works of art were to appear in the world, they would lose face for my Straight Chisel School, and lose face for me, an honorable Saint-level Grand Magus."

Thus, Linley had been forced to destroy every single sculpture he had made, even though they could have been sold for some money.

"Met the threshold? Grandpa Doehring, do you mean?..." Linley stared at Doehring Cowart in amazement.

Doehring Cowart happily nodded. "Right. Starting today, after you finish a stone sculpture, you don't need to destroy it. They are worthy of remaining in this world. Naturally, if you wish, you can deliver your sculptures to the Proulx Gallery to sell them and thus begin to build up a reputation for our Straight Chisel School. At the same time, you can make a bit of gold for yourself."

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 1, Stone Sculpting (part 1)

The warm, comfortable rays of the spring sun shone down upon the bros of dorm 1987, who were resting in their backyard.

Yale, George, and Reynolds were all engaged in idle conversation. By now, Yale and George were both 16 years old, while Reynolds was now 14. The three of them had quickly gained in height, and even the shortest Reynolds was now 1.6 meters tall. The tallest of them was Yale, at an astonishing 1.9 meters.

“George, stop faking in front of the two of us. Even fourth bro has lost his virginity. Why are you and third bro still faking? How about this, at the end of this month, why don’t you and third bro both go to Fenlai City’s “Jade Water Paradise”. I’ll handle the expenses. I guarantee that both of you will be extremely comfortable, and I’ll also guarantee that the girl will also be a virgin. Deal?” Holding two small stone weights, Yale was doing a chest workout while laughing as he spoke.

Those two stone weights each most likely weighed around 20-30 pounds. Linley generally disdained such light weights.

George laughed as well. “Boss Yale, stop trying to force us. Why don’t you guys go to the Jade Water Heaven while third bro and I go drinking. Isn’t that a better idea?”

Reynolds mocked from the side, “George, you, simply aren’t a man at all.”

George could only laugh helplessly.

Suddenly, footsteps could be heard from outside the courtyard. Yale put down the two stone weights and headed towards the courtyard exit while saying, "I bet it is third bro. C'mon, time to eat..." Before he finished his words, Yale suddenly went silent.

He saw Linley stride forward, carrying a huge rock on his shoulders, at least three feet high and a hundred pounds heavy.

But Linley clearly was carrying this boulder into the dorm with ease. Yale, George, and Reynolds all stared, slack-jawed. Linley casually set down the giant rock in a corner of the courtyard, and the weighty sound of the rock slamming into the ground made all their hearts tremble.

"What the hell? Third bro, I know you are strong, but how are you this strong?" Yale stared at the boulder. "Is the boulder hollow or something?" As he spoke, Yale moved forward and stretched out his hands, giving the boulder a test.

"Hrrrrrngh!"

Yale used all of his strength, and his entire face flushed dark red, but that giant boulder seemed to be rooted into the earth as it didn't budge at all.

"Boss Yale, stop wasting your energy. There's no way you can move it." Linley laughed.

Yale's physical strength was weaker than that of even a warrior of the first rank. How could he lift it?

Reynolds stared at the boulder with round eyes. Letting out a few surprised breaths, he suddenly turned his head and stared at Linley questioningly. "Hey, Linley, why did you bring such a huge boulder into our dorm? Oh, I know!" Reynolds eyes lit up. "I've seen powerful warriors use their hands to lift up giant boulders as a form of weight training. Are you preparing to start weight lifting, Linley?"

"Such a huge boulder could smash me into meat paste." George stared at the boulder, also letting out a few surprised breaths before turning to look questioningly at Linley. "Third bro, why did you bring this giant boulder into our apartment?"

Linley smiled at his three bros, and he said two words: "Stone sculpting!"

Based on what Doehring Cowart had said, his sculptures were now qualified to be placed within the standard hall. But it took a lot of time to carve each piece, and usually a day wasn't enough. In the past, he could casually carve at the rear mountains without worrying about making mistakes, but now things were different.

"Stone sculpting?"

Reynolds, George, and Yale all stared at Linley, shock in their eyes.

“What, is this really shocking?” Linley looked back at his three bros.

Reynolds hurriedly said, “It isn’t shocking, no. It is extremely shocking! We four bros have lived together for six or seven years now, but I’ve never seen you sculpt stone before. Are you planning to start training today?”

Linley laughed, “Who says I’ve never been trained before? I’ve been practicing stone sculpting in the rear mountains for over five years now, but this time, after I finish this piece, I plan to take it to the Proulx Gallery and display it there and see if it can be sold for any money.”

In order to come up with a sufficient amount of money to allow his little brother, Wharton, have sufficient funds to go with Housekeeper Hiri to the O’Brien Empire to request admittance and training, the Baruch clan had virtually exhausted all of its funds.

But despite this, Hogg was still very happy.

So what if his family had bankrupted itself? His elder son, Linley, was a student at the Ernst Institute, and upon graduation would definitely become a powerful magus. And his younger son, Wharton, had the possibility of becoming a Dragonblood Warrior.

Hogg could already foresee the dawning splendor of the Baruch clan!

“The Proulx Gallery?” Upon hearing this, Yale and the other two looked at Linley in shock.

Linley was the pride of their dorm, dorm 1987. Despite being just fifteen years old, he had entered the fifth grade at the Ernst Institute, and had been acclaimed alongside Dixie as one of the 'Two Ultimate Geniuses of the Ernst Institute'. Yale and the others all acknowledged Linley as being a genius, but...

Stonesculpting was an extremely profound art form.

Many people would painstakingly train for decades, but still only be considered ordinary sculptors. As an extremely ancient and long-lived art form, how could it be easy for stonesculpting to be mastered? How did Linley dare to dream that his artworks would be exhibited in the most venerated of art galleries, the Proulx Gallery?

"Third bro, don't get too carried away." George joked in a consoling manner.

"Linley, I'm worried...your sculpture, will anyone actually buy it?" Reynolds frowned, a look of disbelief on his face.

Yale laughed loudly. "Why are you guys acting like this? Third bro, go ahead and put on an exhibit. As long as you have an exhibit, I'll spend ten thousand gold to buy it and help spread your fame."

"I'm telling the truth." Linley retrieved a straight chisel from his clothes.

"Straight chisel?" Reynolds said in surprise. "Linley, looks like you've made some preparations. But in the past, I was also prepared to learn stonesculpting, so I know that lots of tools are needed, including the straight chisel, the butterfly chisel, the triangular chisel, the jade bowl knife, and tools like saws. What, did you only prepare a single tool?"

George, Reynolds, and Yale all knew at least some rudiments about art.

Linley didn't say too much.

Wielding his straight chisel, Linley naturally entered a tranquil mental state. His spirit could feel the earth essence flowing through the boulder in front of him, and could even sense, just barely, the veins in it. Smiling, Linley began to use the chisel.

The flashing chisel reflected the light of the sun, causing the nearby Reynolds and the others to squint. But all of them continued to stare at the boulder.

"Whoooooosh!"

Wherever the shadow of the chisel fell, large pieces of stone began to fall as well.

"How is this possible?" Yale watched in astonishment. "To remove such a large piece of rock, a saw should be used to chop it. He actually removed it with just a straight chisel. How astonishing must his wrist strength be?" Next to him, Reynolds and George both fell totally silent.

Wrist strength?

To do this in such a manner as casually as Linley did, with every cut being perfectly even, was not something which could be accomplished just with strong wrists.

Linley was as tranquil as a pond of still water. The straight chisel in his left hand stretched out, quickly carving through all parts of the boulder, and pieces of excess stone continuously rained down. The natural, elegant manner in which Linley carved was a treat to watch.

“Third bro, he....”

Yale, George, and Reynolds exchanged glances. At this moment, they all felt in their hearts that perhaps Linley truly was an expert stone sculptor.

Tranquil. Natural. Peaceful.

Linley very much enjoyed the feeling of stone sculpting. At his current level, Linley didn't have to consider how much effort or strength should be used in any particular place. The straight chisel in his hands would naturally attain the most perfect usage of force. This was a subconscious effect.

Compared to the 'Straight Chisel School'?

None of the other schools of stone sculpting could be so effortless. All the experts of the other schools had to consider which of the many various types of tools should be used for each part of the sculpture. This alone was exhausting.

In this natural, unrestrained manner, Linley's stonesculpting led his spiritual essence to rapidly grow, like the grass after a rain. That sensation of natural growth was extremely wondrous to Linley, making him feel comfortable from his very core.

Linley's right hand suddenly halted.

The flying dust and specks of stone took a bit longer to settle, but the outline of a crawling creature could be seen from the boulder.

"Why are you guys standing there in a daze? All shocked?" Linley laughed as he turned to look at Yale and the others. "I've just made a simple outline. There's a lot more time and effort I'll have to spend later. Come on, let's get lunch."

Yale, George, and Reynolds all glanced at each other.

Just based on what Linley had just shown them, all three of them were sure of one thing:

"Genius." Yale said admiringly.

"A genius amongst experts." George added.

Even amongst stone sculptors, for someone to be able to reach Linley's level of proficiency in just five or six years was an event which occurred perhaps once in a century.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 2, Stone Sculpting (part 2)

Within the Huadeli Hotel.

Per Yale, "Since we just found out today that Third Bro is an expert stonecarver, we absolutely must go out and celebrate. Let's go to the Huadeli Hotel." And just like that, the four of them had gone to the Huadeli Hotel. As soon as they stepped foot within, many students patronizing the hotel turned to stare at them.

The vast majority of the students' gazes were focused on Linley.

Dixie, Linley!

The most prominent, standout geniuses of the Ernst Institute. Any place they went became a focal point of attention. From far away, many students began to chat amongst themselves in lowered voices.

The four bros were seated, now, and the dishes had just arrived.

"Squeak squeak." Bebe, who had been napping lazily this entire time, stuck his little head from out of Linley's robes. His pair of slick, devilish little eyes stared at a gleaming roasted chicken on the table. Reynolds immediately grabbed the chicken and offered it to Bebe. "Bebe, c'mere."

"Boss Linley, I'm gonna go eat." Bebe immediately said mentally to Linley.

Before Linley even had the chance to reply, Bebe leaped onto the table, grabbed the chicken, and began to chomp down on it. In less than ten seconds, the entire roasted chicken had been totally devoured by a little Shadowmouse that was a full size smaller than it.

"Third bro, each time when I see how fast Bebe eats, my heart can't help but shudder." Yale laughed.

After eating, Bebe turned around to look at Linley. Seeing grease cover Bebe's paws, Linley couldn't help but frown.

"Squeak squeak."

Bebe intentionally chirped out twice towards Linley, and then half-closed his eyes in a very self-delighted manner, while at the same time, his entire body radiated a black glow. The black aura expanded, and then, in the blink of an eye, disappeared. But Bebe's two previously oily paws as well as tail was now absolutely clean.

Rubbing his small face, Bebe stared at Linley and chirped once, while saying mentally, "Boss Linley, clean enough for ya?"

Linley couldn't help but laugh.

"Whoosh." With a flicker, Bebe once more burrowed his way into Linley's clothes.

And then, the four bros began to chat and eat.

“Right, third bro, if you intend to deliver your sculptures to the Proulx Gallery, there’s a few things you need to keep in mind.” Yale reminded Linley.

“Oh, what do I need to remember?” Linley asked.

Linley didn’t know a single thing about the system through which the Proulx Gallery accepted new sculptures.

Yale smiled. “For most sculptures, on the lower left corner, the artist must leave an inscription of his name or pseudonym, signifying that this is your art. That’s the first thing. The second thing is that when the sculpture is delivered to the Proulx Gallery, it must be totally sealed and boxed. This is to prevent the sculpture from being damaged while being delivered to the gallery. When the sealed sculpture is delivered to the Proulx Gallery’s warehouse, there will be people who will inspect it to see if it is in good condition, as well as take down a detailed recording of your own information. Usually, within three days or so, your artwork will be ready to be displayed at the standard display hall within the Proulx Gallery.”

Linley nodded.

Leaving behind one’s name on one’s artwork was done in order to prevent others from falsely claiming the work was their’s.

Linley could also understand the reasoning for requiring the sculpture be boxed and sealed. "Some sculptures are carved very exquisitely and delicately. In the shipping process, it is entirely possible that the sculpture might be damaged. If I totally seal it off, and also add lots of paper and cloth padding, it should be much safer."

"What about pricing and bidding? How does the Proulx Gallery handle this?" Linley asked.

The whole point of delivering the sculpture to the Proulx Gallery was for the sake of making money, so as to improve his family's economic situation.

Yale said delightedly, "The sculptures are placed within the standard hall, and potential buyers are allowed to set any price they want. After a month, the highest bidder will receive the sculpture, while you will get your compensation. Naturally, the Proulx Gallery will receive a 1% transactional commission, with a hard limit of ten gold coins. If your sculpture exceeds a thousand gold coins in price, the commission of the gallery will still remain just ten gold coins."

Linley understood now.

"Third bro, don't worry. I'll arrange for some people in Fenlai City to take care of everything. I guarantee it'll all be to your satisfaction." Yale smiled towards Linley as he spoke. "If the third bro of our dorm delivers a sculpture to the Proulx Gallery and it sells well, I'll gain a lot of face as well."

Off on the side, George couldn't help but sigh with praise. "Third bro, by now, you are a fifth grade student. In the future, you'll no doubt also be a master sculptor. Your future is boundless. You'll no doubt do much better than us."

"A master sculptor? Don't flatter me." Linley laughed at himself.

The four bros chatted as they continued to drink and eat.

"Living in the Ernst Institute really is comfortable," Yale suddenly sighed, putting down his wine cup. "I remember when I was young and I lived at home, our family rules were extremely severe."

Reynolds quirked his lips as well. "We are all students of the Ernst Institute. According to Grandpa Lomu, right now, the world is very chaotic. In the outside world, there is constant warfare and slaughter. The Ernst Institute is backed by the Radiant Church, so no one dares offend it. That's the reason why our lives are so comfortable. In the future, when we go out and train in the real world, we'll see how cruel the world can be."

"Absolutely correct."

Linley nodded and sighed. "I'm a fifth grade student now. Many of my fellow classmates have already gone training in the real world. From what they say, some students die in battle outside, and many are crippled or wounded. Without experiencing real life-and-death battles, it will be hard for us to grow."

"We are just like the pets of the noble families. Our lives might be easy, but how can they compare to the viciousness of the real world?" George also sighed. "I really look forward to the bloody life and death battles which the high level students will engage in. Those exciting, blood-boiling lifestyles must be extremely stimulating.”

George, Yale, Reynolds, and Linley were now all fifteen years old. In all of their hearts, there was a thirst for the exciting events of the outside world.

But Yale and the others were far too weak. If they embarked now on that lifestyle of life-and-death battles, their chance of death was far too high.

“Linley, you are a fifth grade student now, yes?” Reynolds suddenly said.

Yale and George also looked at Linley, their eyes gleaming.

Linley took a deep breath, and nodded. “Right. I am now a magus of the fifth rank. I can be considered a high level magus now. In June, I plan to embark on a two month trip to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, returning only in August.” Linley had decided long ago.

“The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?”

Yale, George, and Reynolds all sucked in a cold breath.

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the largest mountain range in the Yulan continent, lay less than hundred kilometers east of the Ernst Institute. Many high level students did indeed venture there for their second or third training missions. But most students, for their first training expedition, would select some more ordinary locales.

For example, they might take on some low-risk assignments like being a bodyguard or escorting a caravan.

“Linley, you plan to go to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for your very first training expedition?” Reynolds couldn’t help but ask. George and Yale were also worried.

“Relax. I have full confidence.”

Linley was rather confident in himself. As a magus of the fifth rank and a warrior of the fourth rank, he possessed great speed as a warrior which could be further supported by the wind-style spell, ‘Supersonic’. Based on his current speed, when combining his speed with this spell, Linley could reach the speed of a warrior of the sixth rank.

And even more importantly...

Linley could utilize the high-level wind spell, “Floating Technique.”

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 3, A Night at the Jade Water Paradise

Time flowed on, and in the blink of an eye, it was now the end of May.

During the past two months, every day, Linley spent part of his free time in the meditative state, and the rest either practicing stonecarving or reading. The Ernst Institute's library held an enormous amount of books within it, and through reading these books, Linley was able to increase the breadth of his knowledge.

May 29th. Morning.

Linley, Yale, George, and Reynolds stood in the square in front of the Proulx Gallery. A nearby carriage contained within it three wooden crates. During these past two months, Linley had actually managed to produce nine new sculptures, but since this was his first time delivering art to the gallery, Linley just wanted to get a taste of how it all worked and thus only brought three.

"Carry those three boxes," Yale directed.

Some servants from Yale's clan began to lift and move the crates.

"Third bro, come with me." Yale clearly was quite familiar with this road, and he headed directly towards the side of the Proulx Gallery. The Proulx Gallery took up a very large amount of space, and off to the side of the main entrance, a few hundred meters away, there was an unremarkable door, with a middle-aged man dressed in warrior attire standing in front of it.

When the middle-aged man saw Yale stride towards him, his eyes lit up and he immediately hurried over. Smiling, he paid his respects and said, "Young master Yale, welcome!"

Yale smiled and nodded. "I imagine you already know why I am here. This is my good friend, Linley. These three sculptures are his. Where are your servants? Have them carry the sculptures inside."

"Please wait." The middle aged man smiled and nodded.

Very soon, several movers emerged from the corridor, and the middle aged man smiled towards Linley. "Young master Linley, per the rules of our Proulx Gallery, you need to leave behind your proof of identification. All you need to do is let us take down the details of your Ernst Institute student identification."

The student identification of the Ernst Institute was more than enough proof.

Linley withdrew his student identification.

Accepting the identification papers from Linley, the middle aged man glanced through them, and his eyes immediately lit up. Shocked, he raised his gaze back to Linley. "Fifth grade?" Linley's grade was very visible on the identification papers. For someone so young to reach the rank of a magus of the fifth rank was quite surprising indeed.

Yale couldn't help but say proudly, "This brother of mine is one of the two ultimate geniuses of the Ernst Institute. Last year, when he was only fourteen years old, at the end-of-year exams, he reached the title of magus of the fifth rank."

One of the two ultimate geniuses of the Ernst Institute?

In his heart, the middle-aged man knew quite clearly that the future prospects for this young man standing in front of him, Linley, were boundless. His attitude immediately became much more obsequious. After recording down Linley's biographical details, he made a mark on each of the three crates.

"Young master Linley, everything is handled. All you have to do, young master, is to come back in a month and collect your remuneration." The middle aged man smiled.

"In a month? I don't have any time next month. Can we delay it to three months hence?" Linley asked. Linley was planning to head to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts in a week or two, and on this trip, he was planning on spending two months or so there.

"No rush. As long as your sculptures find buyers, you can come back at any time to collect your fee." The middle aged man nodded.

Yale frowned. "Hrm? What's going on. I remember that in the past, before accepting sculptures, you would first inspect the contents of the crate. Why aren't you doing an inspection this time?"

The middle aged man said, "The reason we inspect the insides of the crates is to prevent unscrupulous people from sending us some already-damaged sculptures. If we are unable to detect the damage, they might claim that the damage was caused by the gallery and try to extort us. But since these three particular sculptures have been delivered by young master Linley and you, young master Yale, I have no concerns. I am confident that someone like you, young master Yale, would not stoop to such actions."

The middle aged man knew exactly what he was doing.

What sort of person was Yale?

Extort the Proulx Gallery? The amount of money that he might be able to extort probably wouldn't even be enough to count as pocket change for him. And the creator of these sculptures, Linley, was known as one of the two ultimate geniuses of the Ernst Institute. How could people like them lower themselves to such base actions?

.....

Day turned to night. On East Fenlai City's main road, the Fragrant Pavilion Avenue. The third floor of the Jade Water Paradise. Linley and the other three had a room of their own.

The nights at Fenlai City were always quite busy.

But the nights within the Jade Water Paradise were even more bustling, having reached a peak of busy-ness. The coquettish laughs of women could be heard nonstop, while the roaring, heroic laughter of men also constantly sounded out. Within the private room, the four bros drank while making idle conversation, and by each of their sides was a delicate and pretty girl.

“Second bro, third bro, I’m going to go to bed, and fourth bro is as well. The two of you...” His arm draped around a girl with long, green hair, Yale’s breath smelled strongly of liquor.

“That’s enough, boss Yale. Stop talking, alright?” Linley interrupted Yale’s words.

Yale and Reynolds exchanged glances, then looked at Linley and George with contemptuous gazes. And then Yale and Reynolds, each of them with an arm around the waist of their respective companions, left the private room. For two years now, Linley and the gang had often come here.

Generally, Yale and Reynolds would go off to have fun, while Linley and George would at most drink a little and chat with the girls.

“Young master Linley, we’ve known each other for two years now, but you....” The green-haired girl seated next to Linley said in an unhappy voice.

Linley couldn’t help but feel a headache coming.

“Ira [Ai’la], if you are tired, you can go back and get some rest. I guarantee that when the time comes, you won’t receive a single copper coin less than you deserve." Linley had no choice but to say coldly, causing the girl named Ira to no longer dare speak. It really was quite rare to see someone come to the Jade Water Paradise but only drink.

A white light shone forth from the Coiling Dragon Ring, and transformed itself into Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart, face wreathed in smiles, looked at Linley. Jestingly, he said, 'Hey, Linley. Why do you have such a foul look on your face with such a girl in front of you? Alas, I, a venerable Saint-level Grand Magus, am now just a bodiless spirit. I can't touch a woman, even if I want to. And you, you punk, act in such a way?"

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley frowned unhappily as he said mentally to Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart pursed his lips. "You've never gotten a taste of a woman. If you had, you wouldn't be acting in such a way."

Linley raised his head and stared outside the window, no longer paying any attention to that lecherous old Doehring Cowart. The cold outside air blew on his face, helping Linley to calm down.

"The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. What is it like, inside it?"

In one or two weeks, Linley was going to head off on his journey. Within the Ernst Institute, Linley had heard many legends regarding the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and had also heard much from Doehring Cowart. However, Linley had never gone himself. Thus, Linley had only his own imagination to rely on when trying to picture the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"In a week, let's go."

Staring outside the window, seeing the boundless night sky, Linley made up his mind.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 4, The Price (part 1)

Within the Proulx Gallery. Elegant music wafted over everyone present, as all of the visitors silently inspected one sculpture after another.

The gallery was divided into the main gallery, the expert's gallery, and the master's gallery.

The main gallery took up an enormous amount of space, and also contained the most works of art. Towards the northeast corner of the gallery, there were three works of art, all of which emanated a very unique aura. Anyone who had spent time studying the art of sculpting would immediately sense the aura.

But there were more than ten thousand works of art in the gallery, and these three sculptures were thus like needles hidden within an ocean. It was quite difficult for anyone to pay them any mind.

"Most of these sculptures feel hollow. They have a shape but no soul."

The 180-year old Count Juneau [Zhunuo] was slowly making his way through the main hall, his gaze flickering past one work of art after another. Count Juneau didn't have any other hobbies; the only thing he liked was sculptures. Every day, he would spend his morning strolling through the Proulx Gallery.

But within the main gallery, there were very few sculptures capable of attracting Count Juneau's interest.

"Milord Count, have any sculptures struck your fancy?" A beautiful attendant by his side said to him. Because Count Juneau came here every morning, all of the attendants working at the Proulx Gallery had become quite familiar with him.

Count Juneau shook his head and laughed. "Haven't found any yet."

"Milord Count, the quality of the sculptures here is much inferior than that of the sculptures in the hall of experts and the hall of the masters. Why do you spend every morning here?" The female attendant said curiously.

Count Juneau intentionally let out a mysterious laugh. "You don't understand. There are countless sculptures within this main hall. Perhaps hidden within there are some good works. The feeling of panning for gold by sifting through mud is quite marvelous."

"Oh?" The attendant looked at Count Juneau questioningly.

Count Juneau didn't explain any further. He continued to appraise one sculpture after another without stopping, but when he reached those three works of art sculpted by Linley, his eyes lit up. Having appraised sculptures for over a century, he could immediately discern that these three sculptures were special.

"Cool, natural, proud and aloof..."

Count Juneau couldn't help but praise.

The word was 'essence'. For a work of art to be termed a 'good' work of art, it had to have that certain special essence to it. At a single glance, Count Juneau could tell that these three works of art emanated a cool, proud, and aloof aura. It was this unique aura which had stopped Count Juneau in his tracks.

"Come over here and help me place a bid. For these three sculptures, I am willing to bid a hundred gold coins each." Count Juneau said to the female attendant.

The female attendant beamed and immediately pulled out a records book. After recording down the registration number of each sculpture, she took out three pieces of paper and placed them next to the sculptures, with each piece of paper bearing the words 'hundred gold coins' on them.

While the female attendant was doing her administrative work, Count Juneau continued to savor these three sculptures.

"Wait a second!" Juneau's shadowy eyes suddenly lit up again as he stared fixedly at the sculpture of the 'Velocidragon'. "How is it possible that the scaly armor on the back of the Velocidragon shares the same outline and line with the leg, as though it were all done as part of one series? Logically speaking, the scaly carapace should have been carved by a butterfly chisel, while the leg should have been carved using the straight chisel. No matter how careful one is, a sculptor can't possibly make the lines flow together 100% perfectly!"

Count Juneau had studied sculpture for over a century.

Originally, he wasn't a particularly wealthy noble, but based on his keen sight, he had collected many sculptures at a low price which he would later sell at a much higher price. This was how Count Juneau had become one of the wealthy nobles of Fenlai City.

"Can it be that it was carved using a single tool? Impossible, aside from the butterfly chisel, what tool could possibly have been used to carve out such perfect, exquisite details in each protruding scale?" Count Juneau frowned, concentrating fiercely. He had never seen something so queer.

"Milord Count?" Seeing him in a daze, the female attendant couldn't help but call out to him softly.

Count Juneau's eyes flickered. He said to himself, "I didn't expect that I would encounter such a unique work of art in the main hall of the Proulx Gallery. I can't let others notice it. If I bid a hundred gold coins, some people will take special notice of it. It might cause the price to dramatically increase."

Count Juneau immediately made his decision.

He would leave these sculptures alone for a few days, and come back later to bid on it during the final two days.

"Help assist me in cancelling my offer." Count Juneau directly said to the woman next to him.

"Cancel?" The female attendant was startled. Based on their normal rules, once a bid was made, it could not be retracted. But Count Juneau was a very old, longstanding customer of the Proulx Gallery, and so the female attendant very matter-of-factly removed the three bidding stickers.

"Might I ask milord Count why you have retracted your bid?" The female attendant asked.

Count Juneau smiled mysteriously. "No need for you to ask. Oh, right, I want to ask you, how many days have these three sculptures been on display?"

The female attendant flipped through her records, then smiled. "These three sculptures will be on display until June 30th. They were just brought here to the main hall yesterday."

Count Juneau nodded fractionally.

"Alright, I'll wander around a bit. You can go ahead and do what you need to do." Count Juneau smiled.

But in his heart, Count Juneau secretly rejoiced. In his appraisal, the true valuation of these three sculptures should be in the range of three thousand gold pieces. An ordinary sculpture by an expert was worth around a thousand gold pieces, and these three sculptures were all carved in a very unique manner. Just based on that alone, the actual valuation would be doubled.

.....

Count Juneau continued to visit the gallery every day. Indeed, just as he had expected, because the Proulx Gallery had so many sculptures, nobody else had managed to discover these three sculptures. Even if someone had, they only felt that the sculptures looked nice, and couldn't see the true value of these sculptures.

June 10th.

Count Juneau once more arrived at the Proulx Gallery. Casually strolling about the main hall, he browsed through the selections. But once he reached the three sculptures, his face tightened. Next to each of the sculptures, there was a bidding slip.

Three stone sculptures, each one with a bid for three hundred gold coins.

Seeing this bid, Count Juneau inwardly seethed. "Fool! Even if you saw the true value of the sculptures, why would you bid such a high price right off the bat? This will just draw more attention to it." Count Juneau's heart was filled with rage, but there was nothing he could do. He didn't have the authority to retract someone else's bid.

Everything unfolded just as he predicted and feared.

June 12th. Count Juneau once again reached the three sculptures. By now, the price had changed once again.

"Five hundred gold coins?" Count Juneau's eyes narrowed to slits.

“Seems like there’s quite a few people who know quality when they see it.”

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 5, The Price (part 2)

Count Juneau still refused to make a bid. He planned to make his bid on June 30th. As time flowed past, the valuation of the three sculptures continued to rise, but because even an expert crafter's work was valued at around a thousand gold, the price rose rather slowly.

500 gold coins. 510 gold coins. 515 gold coins.

The bids continued to rise slowly. By June 29th, they had only risen to 625 gold coins.

June 30th.

Count Juneau actually did not appear this morning, which was quite a rare occasion. He waited until nightfall, because the Proulx Gallery did not close until midnight. Linley's three sculptures would also be removed from the gallery at midnight.

"The price yesterday was 625 gold coins. I'll make my bid at the end." Count Juneau smiled as he walked towards the three sculptures.

"900 gold coins? What idiot made this bid?" Upon seeing the highest bid, Count Juneau's heart exploded with fury.

The price yesterday was just 625 gold coins, but in a day, the price had risen so dramatically. Although Count Juneau was furious, there was nothing he could do. He decided to wait patiently, and after a long period of time, he finally looked up to see the clock up above.

"It's already 11 PM. In an hour, the place will close." Count Juneau revealed a hint of a smile.

In Fenlai City, Count Juneau could be considered a middle-class noble. When he was young, Count Juneau was actually quite poor. Later, it was due to his shrewd investment in and collecting of sculptures that helped him slowly gain wealth. His current net worth was in the hundreds of thousands of gold coins. He could be considered a rather well off noble.

"Count Juneau, you are here as well?" A whiskered middle-aged man in a swallow shirt smiled as he walked over.

Upon seeing this person, Count Juneau's countenance changed, but he still was able to smile calmly. "Count Demme [De'mu]! It's almost eleven. Why are you here?" But in his heart, Count Juneau felt that things had just taken a turn for the worse.

Count Juneau and Count Demme were both considered rather famous collectors of sculpture within the noble circles of Fenlai City.

"Me? For these three sculptures, of course." Count Demme stroked his whiskers, then said contentedly, "Count Juneau, take a look. The lines and aura of these three sculptures are so very mesmerizing. The expert who was able to produce such a unique aura must surely also be a unique person."

Count Juneau's heart trembled.

Indeed...

This Count Demme had also seen the value of these three sculptures. For him to arrive at eleven o'clock most likely meant he had the same idea as Count Juneau.

"Miss, come over here, please." Count Demme said quite courteously to a nearby female attendant, who walked towards them with a smile. Count Demme pointed at Linley's three sculptures. "I'm willing to pay a thousand gold coins for each one of these sculptures."

The attendant said courteously, "Just a moment."

She took out a record book and made some notations before placing the bidding slips next to the sculptures.

"A thousand gold coins?" The facial muscles on Count Juneau's face twitched.

Count Demme said to him with a smile, "Count Juneau, these three sculptures really are exceptional. Right, what brings you out here so late at night, rather than resting at home? Are you here for these three sculptures as well?"

Count Juneau let out a light hum.

"I didn't expect that Count Demme would be so interested in these three sculptures. Honestly, I hadn't paid them much attention yet. Let me take a good look first." Count Juneau smiled, then turned and began intensely studying the three sculptures, totally ignoring Count Demme.

Seeing the scene before him, Count Demme sneered mentally. "Old fellow, do you really think you can hide your thoughts from me?"

Like the murmurs of a river, the music continued to play in the main hall of the Proulx Gallery. Count Juneau and Count Demme both quietly viewed various sculptures. The gallery remained as quiet as ever.

"Dong. Dong." The clocks on the walls began to chime.

It was now midnight.

"Miss, please come here." Count Juneau said to the attendant, who immediately ran over.

"These three sculptures, I am willing to buy for 1010 gold pieces." Count Juneau made his bid at the last moment.

The attendant saw that the current bid on the sculptures was 1000 gold pieces. She couldn't help but glance sideways at Count Juneau. It was quite fortunate that Count Juneau had added ten pieces, and not just one.

"Please wait a moment." The attendant took out her record book.

"Count Juneau, you actually just overbid by ten gold pieces? I'll offer 1100 gold pieces!" Count Demme's voice rang out. Count Juneau frowned as he turned to stare at Count Demme, who was casually striding over with a jocular air, an arrogant look in his eyes.

As it turned out, Count Demme had been paying attention to Count Juneau this entire time, and as soon as Count Juneau made his bid, he came over.

"I bid 1200." Count Juneau said in a low voice, his fury clearly visible. Seeing the oncoming struggle between the two nobles, the attendant closed her record book and stood off to the side, happily watching the battle. The attendants of the Proulx Gallery loved to see customers enter bidding wars.

Count Demme glanced at Count Juneau with 'astonishment'. "Count Juneau, even the sculptures in the hall of the experts is worth only around a thousand gold coins. How could a frugal man such as you be willing to pay 1200 gold?"

Frugal?

Miserly was the word! Count Juneau was notorious for his miserliness.

"Count Juneau, if even you are willing to bid 1200, then I can't be stingy either. 1300 gold pieces!"

Count Juneau's gaze was ice cold. "The only reason why I am willing to offer a high price for these three sculptures is because I am fond of them. Their real value is only around a thousand gold or so. 1500 gold pieces! If you, Count Demme, are willing to make a higher bid, then you can take them." Count Juneau made his final offer.

In all honesty, Count Demme was not as insightful as Count Juneau. He didn't discover the unique, strange aura to these statues.

In Count Demme's eyes, these statues didn't hold any secrets. They were just three good pieces of art, worth a thousand gold or so. If he raised the price any further, there wouldn't be much point.

"Haha." Count Demme laughed. "It's so rare for Count Juneau to be so refreshingly magnanimous in his bidding. In honor of this occasion, I certainly can't rob a man of his beloved possessions. These three sculptures are all yours, Count Juneau."

Only now did the attendant step forward again and begin recording the bid into her book.

"Milord Counts, it is already midnight. The gallery is about to close. Count Juneau, tomorrow I will arrange for people to deliver the sculptures to you." The attendant smiled. Only now did Count Juneau also smile.

Count Juneau flicked a glance at Count Demme, feeling scornful. "Kid. How many years have I spent analyzing stonesculpting? You don't have any insight, and you still want to bid against me?"

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 6, The Invitation

“Hrm, there were three sculptures in the main hall which sold for 1500 gold pieces each?” Austoni [Ao'Si'Tuo'Ni], a manager at the Proulx Gallery, stared at the records in astonishment. After flipping through the biographical details of the sculptor, Linley, he couldn't help but be even more amazed. “These three are all made by Linley, and he's only fifteen?”

The world of sculpture was definitely that of a pyramid.

The entire Holy Alliance had only five or six master level sculptors who stood at the peak of this field, and perhaps a hundred or so expert sculptors. From this, one could imagine how rare these experts were. Usually, someone who could be termed a 'expert sculptor' was someone who had an understanding of life and whose skill in this art was such that he could infuse this understanding into his sculptures. Only then would their sculptures have special auras.

A fifteen year old expert sculptor?

All but unheard of!

“And this Linley fellow is a student at the Ernst Institute?” Austoni was growing more and more shocked. The Ernst Institute was the number one magus academy in the entire Yulan continent. “And he is a student of the fifth class? A fifteen year old student of the fifth class?”

Austoni sucked in a cold breath.

Genius!

“Even if these three sculptures were only worth a thousand gold apiece, based on the age of the sculptor alone, the true value of these sculptures would definitely be several times greater.” Austoni became absolutely convinced of this.

For a fifteen year old sculptor to be able to produce sculpture at this level meant that the value of his artwork would be exponentially greater.

For this fifteen year old sculptor to also be a student at the Ernst Institute meant that he was a genius amongst geniuses. Once again, this would multiply the value of his sculptures.

“This afternoon, I am going to the Ernst Institute. It has been quite some time since the Proulx Gallery has enrolled a new expert sculptor amongst our ranks.” Austoni made his decision. By virtue of the fact that all three of his sculptures had fetched a high price, Linley clearly had proved his worth.

He was fully qualified to be invited to have his sculptures displayed in a private booth in the hall of experts.

That very afternoon.

A horse carriage drew up outside the main gates of the Ernst Institute. It was Austoni and two guards. Arriving at the main gate, Austoni took out his identification showing himself to be a manager at the Proulx Gallery. The Ernst Institute actually deployed one of their own guards to escort him.

At the instructional areas for the fifth grade students at the Ernst Institute.

"Mr. Austoni, this is where most of the instructors for the magi of the fifth rank congregate." Smiling, the escort pushed the door open. Currently, around ten or so magi were here, chatting and laughing. To be qualified to instruct magi of the fifth rank, one would be a magi of the seventh or perhaps even the eighth rank."

As the door opened, these magi of exalted rank all turned to look.

"Milords, this is Mr. Austoni of the Proulx Gallery. He has some business which he would like to beseech your aid for." The escort said respectfully.

The magi all nodded calmly.

The Proulx Gallery had multiple branches in all of the kingdoms and empires in the Yulan continent, and it possessed astonishing power and influence. Thus, even proud, arrogant magi would be fairly cordial when dealing with the Proulx Gallery.

"Milords magi." Austoni said with a smile. "I'm here in search of a student named Linley?"

"Linley?"

All of the magi laughed. Amongst them, a purple robed magi said with a smile, "Linley? That's one of the two utmost geniuses of the Ernst Institute. He is a dual-element magus, wielding earth and wind. Go speak with his wind-element instructor. He might know."

"You can forget about the earth element instructor. This Linley fellow, in the past three months, has only shown his face twice in our earth element classes." A whiskered old man said unhappily. "But Linley attends virtually every single wind element class."

Another bearded elder said with a smile, "I am Linley's wind element instructor. I'm fairly knowledgeable about him. If you have any questions, you can ask me."

Austoni nodded. "A month ago, Linley brought three sculptures over to the Proulx Gallery. His sculptures already possess the grandeur of a expert. Based on the price it fetched this month, we have determined that Linley is qualified to have his sculptures displayed in a private booth in the hall of the experts. Thus, I have come to gift him with a silver magicard."

"A private booth?"

Those magi were all amazed.

These proud, lofty magi were all fairly knowledgeable when it came to sculptures. They all knew that it was extremely hard to even carve a physically perfect sculpture, much less one with a special aura or essence. To have a private booth at the Proulx Gallery was the dream of countless sculptors.

"Are you sure it was Linley? This Linley fellow is normally quite diligent and hardworking in his studies. And he is only fifteen years old." Linley's wind element instructor, that silver haired, white robed old man said disbelievingly.

Austoni smiled. "This is beyond any question. At the Proulx Gallery, we recorded down all of Linley's biographical data. And, based on our data, he came to the Proulx Gallery in the company of young master Yale."

Those magi all nodded.

And then, they all began to talk amongst themselves animatedly. One of the two utmost geniuses of the Ernst Institute was actually a expert sculptor as well. For a genius magus to be able to secure a private booth at the Proulx Gallery was something which would rarely occur even a single time over the course of a thousand years.

Naturally, these magi were all amazed.

"Milords magi, can any of you inform me where Linley is residing?" Austoni asked.

That silver haired, white robed elder said, "Linley resides in dorm 1987."

"Dorm 1987?" Hearing this, Austoni was about to head there right away.

The silver haired, white robed elder continued, "But please wait.

Although Linley lives in dorm 1987, I happen to know that three weeks ago, he departed from the school to engage in training. Thus, unfortunately, I'm afraid you came here for nothing."

"Training?" Austoni started.

Austoni knew quite well that magi of the fifth and sixth ranks were qualified to engage in real world field training. The Ernst Institute also strongly encouraged this practice.

Austoni couldn't help but sigh.

He didn't expect that despite rushing to the Ernst Institute so enthusiastically, this would be the end result.

"Then milords magi, I will take my leave." Austoni bowed respectfully. Those magi all nodded casually towards him, signifying acceptance, and no longer paid him any heed. All of them began to excitedly chat amongst themselves.

"I didn't imagine that this kid Linley is so formidable..."

All of these magi instructors were unable to stop praising Linley who, without anyone knowing, was able to qualify to have a private booth at the Proulx Gallery.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 7, The Journey (part 1)

Let us go back in time a few weeks, to June 5th.

This afternoon, Linley bid farewell to his three bros. Carrying a leather sack on his back, Linley headed on the road to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

“Squeak squeak!” The little Shadowmouse squeaked happily from his perch on Linley’s shoulders.

“Boss, we’re finally headed to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Wow, I’m so excited!” The little Shadowmouse’s voice rang out in Linley’s head. Linley just smiled. At this time, a white ray of light shone out and transformed into Doebling Cowart.

Doebling Cowart instructed, “Linley, when travelling alone, you must be careful. Perhaps you will meet with bandits.”

“I know, Grandpa Doebling.” Linley laughed.

Grandpa Doebling had already repeated his warnings over and over about the dangers of traveling solo. Right now, Linley was dressed in sturdy cloth slacks and a sleeveless shirt. Just judging from his bulging alone, anyone would definitely be certain that he was a warrior.

Per Grandpa Doebling, in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, a mage's robes would be rather unwieldy and get in the way.

Linley moved very quickly. Although the road from the Ernst Institute to the mountain range was rather rough, based on Linley's stamina as a warrior of the fourth rank, in a single hour he easily traversed forty kilometers. Just at this time, he suddenly saw three people up ahead.

"Hrm?" Linley's gaze focused on one person in particular.

That person was actually dressed in the robes of a student of the Ernst Institute. Of the other two, one was extremely muscular and bore a giant warblade on his back. The other man was extremely skinny, and had a shortsword sheathed by his side. That skinny man alertly turned his head and stared at Linley.

Linley couldn't be bothered to pay attention to them, and just sped up, preparing to pass them by.

"Linley, is that you?" A voice suddenly said.

Linley turned his head questioningly. That man dressed in the robes of a magus of the Ernst Institute smiled and called out, "Linley, I'm Delsarte [De'sha'te], remember me?"

"Oh, Delsarte, it's you!" Linley came to a halt.

Linley actually knew this Delsarte.

Delsarte, like him, was a wind magus of the fifth grade class. Although they couldn't be considered to have a deep friendship, they were classmates after all.

Delsarte brought the two warriors over, smiling as he warmly said, "Linley, I didn't expect that you, a magus, would be dressed like this. I barely recognized you. Only when I saw that little Shadowmouse on your shoulder did I realize it was you."

"Kava [Ka'wa], Matt [Ma'te], let me introduce you. This is Linley, one of the two ultimate geniuses of our Ernst Institute. He's only fifteen years old, but he is already a magus of the fifth rank." Delsarte enthusiastically introduced.

Kava was that muscularly built warrior, while Matt was the skinny warrior.

"I've long heard Delsarte talk about the two ultimate geniuses of the Ernst Institute. I didn't expect that today we would have the good fortune to meet you." Matt said courteously, while Kava's eyes widened as round as an ox. "You are a magus? Why do you look like a warrior to me?"

Linley didn't explain. "All of you are heading to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?"

Delsarte nodded. "Right. Kava and Matt travelled with me last year for field training. We have good teamwork. This year, we plan to do some exploration around the borders of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Linley, you should come with us. In a group, we'll all be safer."

Linley nodded.

"I'll travel with them for now. Delsarte is a classmate of mine, so he should be trustworthy. When we reach the mountains, we'll split up." After making his decision, Linley and Delsarte's trio all headed towards the mountains together.

The four of them travelled at very high speed.

Even the physically weak Delsarte was able to move rapidly through usage of the wind-style spell 'Supersonic'. Thus, their group moved quickly through the barren roads.

Kava's loud voice rumbled, "Linley, if you join with us, then we would have two magi of the fifth rank. When the four of us work together, we might even be able to kill a magical beast of the sixth rank. The magicite cores of magical beasts of the sixth rank are worth around a thousand gold apiece. If we kill a few of them, we won't have to worry about our living expenses for a century."

For most people, in a year, ten gold pieces was more than enough for living expenses.

A thousand gold coins was an enormous sum.

Linley's heart was swayed. In the back of his mind, he suddenly was reminded of the books regarding magical beasts he had read. These books had discussed the energy core all magical beasts had within them; the magicite cores.

“These magicite cores will solidify in the bodies of beasts of the third rank and higher. But for beasts which have not reached the sixth rank, the value of the cores is not high. They probably aren’t even worth as much as one of my sculptures.” Linley thought to himself.

However, the magicite cores of magical beasts of the sixth rank were still only worth about a thousand gold.

Based on Doebling Cowart’s calculations, Linley’s sculptures were definitely qualified to be displayed in the hall of the masters, with a valuation of around a thousand gold or so each. Killing a magical beast of the sixth rank, in terms of difficulty and danger, was something that was far deadlier than sculpting.

“At the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, my primary goal is to train myself. Acquiring magicite crystals? That’s just a side benefit.” Linley said to himself as he looked at the other three.

Delsarte and the others were engaged in enthusiastic speculation. Clearly, they were very excited about acquiring magicite cores.

“The magicite cores of magical beasts of the third, fourth, and fifth ranks aren’t worth much. Even cores from beasts of the sixth rank are just worth a thousand or so.” Delsarte said, shaking his head unconcernedly. “If we can kill a magical beast of the seventh rank, then we will be rich.” When he said these words, Delsarte’s eyes gleamed.

Just like humans, where between magi of the sixth rank to the seventh rank was a huge gap, magical beasts of the sixth rank had a huge gap in power compared to magical beasts of the seventh rank.

The magicite cores of a magical beast of the seventh rank were worth tens of thousands of gold pieces.

If they could kill just one, in the countryside, they would be considered extremely wealthy and not have to worry about money for the rest of their lives.

"A magical beast of the seventh rank? Based on our ability, that would be a deathwish." Linley said casually.

Linley had witnessed the power of the Velocidragon, a magical beast of the seventh rank. Linley, at his current rank, probably couldn't even break through the Velocidragon's terrifyingly protective scales. If he couldn't even pierce its defense, how could he possibly try to kill a magical beast of the seventh rank? How was that possible?

That sly-looking fellow, Matt, nodded. "It's hard to say if the four of us would even be able to defeat a magical beast of the sixth rank. Fighting with a magical beast of the seventh rank is suicide."

"I'm just making small talk." Delsarte rubbed his head as he pursed his lips.

Just as the four of them were talking and laughing, in a mountain forest a hundred meters behind them, a man wearing green clothes and with leaves covered all over his face was staring coldly at them.

This man's mouth was moving nonstop, apparently mumbling the words to a magical spell.

At the same time, the longbow in his hands had been pulled to the limit. Suddenly, the arrow shot out, flashing with a cold blue light. It tore through the air at a terrifyingly rapid speed, traversing the hundred meters in the blink of an eye.

Linley, who was engaging in idle talk with the group, suddenly felt all the hairs on his body stand up. His heart immediately reached a maximum level of tension.

"Danger!"

Linley quickly dodged to the side. "Whooosh!" That high speed arrow shot past him like a bolt of lightning, piercing through the body of the robed Delsarte. It pierced through his torso, leaving behind a gaping hole as it flew another few dozen meters before halting.

Clutching his throat, Delsarte's eyes turned round. Some indistinct words gargled in his mouth as fresh blood spewed forth from the wound in his chest.

"Urg...urg..." Delsarte's eyes were filled with a longing for life. They were filled with horror and fear, but as the blood continued to pour out from the gaping hole in his chest, quite quickly, all life fled from Delsarte's eyes, and he collapsed.

Linley, Kava, and Matt all quickly flattened themselves against the grass as they alertly looked behind them.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 8, The Journey
(part 2)

"A wind-element magus-archer. Based on how that arrow of his melded both the 'Supersonic' and 'Precision' spells, this wind-element magus-archer must have at least reached the fifth rank." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind. "Based on this fellow's prowess, if he gets within fifty meters of you, even if you are able to dodge, you will still suffer a severe injury. Flee!"

Linley's heart trembled.

"Give up all your valuables, and I'll spare your lives." A cold voice rang out, and then over ten men dressed in dark green burst out of the forest. All of them were wielding longbows, with shortswords at their waists. These ten people stared coldly at Linley and the other two while pressing closer and closer.

But the speaker did not appear.

Linley and the others glanced at each other. They didn't hand over their valuables. They only watched warily as the archers approached.

"Fire!" That cold voice rang out again. The wind-element magus behind them was quite decisive. Since Linley and the other two didn't immediately surrender, he immediately issued the order to kill.

"Twang" "twang" "twang" "twang".

With abruptness, the archers all shot their arrows, and the arrows soared towards Linley's group, who hurriedly dodged. In addition to dodging, Kava also used the huge warblade in his hands to block some arrows.

Linley executed the wind-style spell 'Supersonic', allowing himself to dodge aside easily while still maintaining enough presence of mind to watch the other two. Matt was dodging nonstop, quite precise and quite careful, while also using his shortsword to deflect arrows.

But Kava was not as agile. While wielding a giant warblade, he clearly could not move very quickly. He was primarily using his giant warblade as well as a thin layer of battle-qi to defend himself. And indeed, the threat of those arrows was not too high; a warrior of the fifth rank could withstand them.

"Raaawr, die!" Kava roared furiously, charging forward towards the archers with his warblade in hand.

Seeing this, a killing gaze appeared in the eyes of the wind-style magus-archer hiding in the forest. He once more drew the bowstring to his longbow and began to chant the words to the 'Supersonic' and 'Precision' spells, causing his longbow and arrow to glitter with gold and blue light.

Roaring furiously, Kava continued charging towards the archers, but halfway there, he suddenly sensed a blue gleam flash before him. Before he was able to react, the arrow was right there, in front of him, terrifying him to the point that cold sweat instantly drenched his clothes. He immediately lifted up his giant warblade to block. But however...

"Argh!"

The arrow pierced straight into his skull.

"Ah..." Kava stood there stupidly, his eyes filled with disbelief. He clearly had been able to use his warblade to block the arrow. How did it kill him? His eyes filled with disbelief and questions, all the light faded from his gaze and he toppled down, like a collapsing mountain.

The far away Linley felt his heart tremble.

"The wind-style supportive spell, 'Precision'. It really is precise!" As a wind-style magus, Linley knew very well that this supportive spell, 'Precision', when used to support an archer, could cause the archer's arrows to undergo minute course corrections enroute to its target.

For example, just now, Kava did indeed get his warblade up in time to block, but just by adjusting its direction slightly, the arrow went straight through Kava's skull.

"Wind-style magic, when paired with a longbow, really is terrifying." Linley felt secretly shocked, but in the next instant, he immediately began to chant the words to a magical spell.

"The two of you had best surrender obediently." That cold voice rang out once more from the forest, and the ten or so archers also laughed arrogantly. A wind-style magus-archer required both powerful magical abilities as well as sufficient physical strength to utilize a longbow properly.

A wind-style magus-archer was an extremely terrifying long-range attacker.

A murderous gaze flashing through Linley's eyes, as he stared at those ten archers as though they were just corpses.

"Crack!" "Crack!" "Crack!" "Crack!"

Suddenly, the earth trembled, and one earthen spear after another erupted from beneath the ten archers. One sharp, gleaming stone spear after another pierced into the legs and chests of the archers, filling the ground with fresh blood and the air with their screams.

Earth-style spell of the fifth rank – Earthen Spear Array!

"Ahhh!" Miserable cries split the air.

Dozens of earthen spears had erupted simultaneously from beneath them, each spear over a meter high. In the blink of an eye, the troop was pierced by the dense array of spears, which had caught them unawares, like a devastating ambush. All of the ten archers entered a state of pain and despair.

"Leader, save us, save us!" A man who had been impaled in the stomach cried out miserably.

"Ah, ah!" Another archer who had been pierced through in his thighs also cried out with pain.

Of the troop of archers, four died on the spot, while nearly ten of them were severely injured. Their combat ability had essentially been destroyed.

"An earth-style magus!"

The archer hidden in the woods felt greatly shocked. Him and his men had been hidden here, on the outskirts of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, for quite some time now, ambushing and killing travelers, and had accumulated quite a bit of treasure.

Generally, when he launched his ambush, he would first kill the enemy's magus!

An enemy magus, after all, could also launch long range attacks. Therefore, they posed the greatest risk. He didn't expect that after killing one magus, another one would show himself.

"Let's go."

Taking advantage of his opponent's being caught off guard, Linley immediately utilized the 'Supersonic' spell to increase his speed to its maximum limits, hurriedly scurrying away and disappearing off into the distance. Linley knew quite well that he had no way to attack the magus-archer hiding in the woods.

Their distance was too great, and even magic had range limitations. But if he closed in on the magus-archer, he perhaps wouldn't be able to block the assault of a wind-element magus-archer.

Running away at maximum speed, Linley fled nearly thirty kilometers.

"Boss, why'd you run away? That magus-archer might've posed some risk to you, but if I were to attack, I would've killed his  easy. Why didn't you let me kill'm?" The little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' mentally grumbled angrily to Linley.

Linley knew quite well how powerful the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' had become.

When Linley was just eight years old, the little Shadowmouse already had a speed surpassing that of a warrior of the sixth rank. But seven years later, with Linley fifteen years of age, although Bebe's physical size had not changed, his speed was almost on par with that of a warrior of the ninth rank!

Based on the little Shadowmouse's speed, that magus-archer probably wouldn't even be able to aim at him.

"This is my training excursion. I should try to resolve everything based on my own ability." Linley explained.

Jumping onto Linley's shoulders, the little Shadowmouse scratched at Linley as angry squeaking sounds came from his sharp teeth. Mentally, he was angrily shouting at Linley, "Boss, you are going too far! I also need to train, I also need to fight!"

Looking at the little Shadowmouse, Linley couldn't help but laugh. "Fine, when we reach the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, if we run into any powerful monsters, I'll let you fight them, deal?"

"That's more like it." The little Shadowmouse sat up, folding his little paws over his chest. His little nose wrinkled as he beamed happily.

Just at this moment, the dark, grim sky was shattered with a 'crash' as bolts of lightning lit up the world, followed by the echoing thunder.

"Looks like it's going to storm hard soon." Linley frowned.

Linley immediately sped up, hastening towards the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. By the time Linley was just ten or so kilometers away from the mountains, the first drops rain began to fall, followed by torrential showers which flooded the land.

"Rumble..."

The sound of thunder sounded out again and again, while the torrential rain continued to cover the lands with water. It felt as though the entire world had been flooded.

But not much rain fell on Linley, who continued to forge ahead with rapid speed. This was because ten centimeters above Linley, there was a 'wind shield' of approximately one meter in diameter. The defensive ability of the 'wind shield' spell was quite high. Linley only had to use a tiny bit of mageforce in order to allow it to block the rain constantly.

As the wind itself was formless, the wind shield, as well, appeared like just a translucent, faint blue streak.

From far away, one simply couldn't tell that there was a wind shield there. Thus, using this wind shield, Linley rapidly forged ahead. After a bit of time, Linley saw a long, sinuous range of mountains, running north to south with no end in sight. This mountain range, which virtually split the Yulan continent into two halves, was the number one mountain range in the world – the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Seeing the titanic mountains just a few kilometers away, Linley couldn't help but hold his breath.

"What a huge mountain range..."

This mountain range was simply too enormous. Based on the naked eye, as far as one could tell, the mountains were limitless, and as far north and as far south as one could see, there were mountains. Seeing the boundless mountains in this mountain range was like seeing the boundless water in the sea.

It stretched into infinity!

"This is the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the number one mountain range in the continent. How many magical beasts does it hold? How many Saint-level magical beasts, for that matter?" At this moment, Doebling Cowart appeared by Linley's side, his gaze distant and lofty. "It has been a long time since I have come to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.”

A look of excitement shone from Linley’s eyes.

“Let’s go!”

Filled with a heroic air, Linley charged through the all-encompassing rainstorm towards the mountain range, while the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, squeaked excitedly from Linley’s shoulders. Under the cover of the rainstorm, Linley quickly entered the endless mountains.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 9, The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts (part 1)

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was vast and boundless.

Within it, Linley could see ancient pines that were centuries or millennia old, blotting out the landscape. All sorts of various grasses filled the land, and thistles and thorns were equally commonplace. Dry leaves covered the land, with each step, they crackled and popped. Ancient vines and weeds could be seen everywhere.

“With all of these weeds, dense vines, and trees which have been around for who-knows-how-long, even if a magical beast were just ten meters away from me, I still probably wouldn’t sense it.” Linley grew apprehensive.

Grandpa Doehring appeared by his side as well.

“Ten meters? Linley, even in the grass right in front of you, there could be a magical beast in wait, such as a giant snake.” Doehring Cowart laughed as he spoke.

Linley involuntarily glanced at the grassy area in front of him, which was almost half as tall as him. Such thick, tall grass really could hide a snake. Taking a deep breath, Linley stood there as he began to mumble the words to a spell.

Suddenly, a gentle gust of wind emanated from Linley, spreading about in all directions before finally dissipating.

Wind-style magic – Windscout!

Generally speaking, a magus of the third rank would be able to execute the Windscout spell. But of course, the more powerful a magus was, the wider an area the Windscout spell could cover. The Windscout spell of a magus of the third rank would only affect an area of around ten or so meters around him, but the Windscout of a magus of the fifth rank had a diameter of over a hundred meters.

“Within a hundred meters, the only magical beasts around are a magical beast of the first rank, a Bubblerat, and a few magical beasts of the second rank, ‘Earth Scorpions’.” Linley said confidently.

The Windscout spell could discern the aura and lifestone of any living creature.

“Don’t be too cocky. A powerful magical beast could burrow under the earth, and some Saint-level magical beasts can even disguise their power level.” Doehring Cowart reminded, but then he chuckled. “But of course, if they wanted to deal with a little fellow like you, would a Saint-level magical beast bother to hide its power?”

But upon hearing these words, Linley grew all the more cautious.

“Ambush through disguising power levels? In some books, it was said that the intelligence of magical beasts rivals that of man’s. Looks like it’s true.” Linley said to himself. Glancing at the little Shadowmouse, ‘Bebe’, on his shoulders, he thought, “This little fella, Bebe, already has a really high level of intelligence. I can’t let my guard down.”

Air swirled around Linley's feet. This was part of the byproduct of Linley's 'Supersonic' spell.

Linley quietly passed into the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. He carefully surveyed his surroundings, while on his shoulders, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, also perked up and stared in all four directions, his beady little black eyes peering about him. Slowly, the two of them travelled deeper and deeper into the mountains.

"The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is over ten thousand kilometers long, with an average width of seven or eight hundred kilometers. In the outermost hundred kilometer region, the magical beasts are mostly of low rank. If we go more than a hundred kilometers deep, we'll meet lots of magical beasts of the fifth and sixth ranks. If we go still deeper inside, we will see many beasts of the seventh, eighth, and ninth ranks, and perhaps even Saint-level magical beasts."

Doehring Cowart once more began to lecture Linley about the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"But of course, nothing is absolute. Perhaps a magical beast of the ninth rank might be bored and go for a stroll in the outer territories." Doehring Cowart said. "And perhaps you might be so unlucky as to meet with a huge, ten-thousand unit strong pack of wolf monsters. If that happens, all I can say is, you have terrible karma."

Hearing Doehring Cowart's words, Linley's lips pursed.

That went without saying!

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was enormous. How could he be so unlucky? But if he was, Doehring Cowart, who survived only as a spirit, would not be able to assist him in any way. A Saint-level Grand Magus without mageforce had no way to attack.

"Grandpa Doehring, I know this already. Be quiet and don't distract me." Linley said discontentedly.

Doehring Cowart immediately chuckled. Stroking his white beard, he no longer spoke.

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was a place of deep mountains and ancient trees. The trees were so thickly clustered that virtually all of the rain was blocked, with just a few drops occasionally sprinkling down. After walking for a period of time, he realized that this outer region was indeed not that dangerous.

Linley exerted some strength with his legs, and almost as if he were floating, leapt up on top of a seven or eight meter high tree branch as he carefully scanned about.

"Boss, far away to the right, there's a wild pig." Bebe's voice sounded out in Linley's mind.

Hearing these words, Linley couldn't help but turn and look. Indeed, approximately a hundred meters away, a wild boar with a single horn was carefully scanning his surroundings. If Linley didn't have such a high vantage point, Linley perhaps wouldn't have been able to see this Unicorn Boar.

“Unicorn Boar, a magical beast of the third rank, an earth-element creature. The only technique it has is that of the ‘Earth Spear’ technique.” Some information regarding the Unicorn Boar came to Linley’s mind.

“Even though it’s just a beast of the third rank, at least it will serve for dinner. Boar flesh is quite tasty.” Nimbly and vigorously, Linley crept through the trees as he stealthily approached the boar. Due to the density of the local flora, the boar had not noticed Linley either.

When he got within ten meters of the boar, Linley lay down flat in the grass. Peering through the dense grass, he could still make out the outline of the Unicorn Boar.

Whoosh!

Like a serpentine dragon leaving its lair, Linley leapt out from the grass. When the Unicorn Boar turned his head and stared in shock, Linley fell down upon it like a gust of wind. The Unicorn Boar let out an indignant roar, and thrust its long, thick horn straight at Linley.

“Hrrg!” Linley reached out with his left hand and grabbed the horn and gave a tremendous tug.

That huge Unicorn Boar, weighing several hundred kilograms, was tossed up seven or eight meters up into the air by Linley, who then began to fiercely kick at it with his left leg, using it like a giant claymore and slamming it into the boar’s head with thunderous power and speed.

“Thud.” With a sickening, bone-crunching sound, the Unicorn Boar was kicked into a tree. When it fell down to the ground, the very earth shook. The bones of the Unicorn Boar had already been shattered, and brain matter had already begun leaking out from its shattered skull. A trail of fresh blood streamed forth from its mouth. Its four limbs quivered momentarily, then grew still.

Just based on his prowess as a warrior, killing a Unicorn Boar was not a tough feat for Linley.

“Although the magicite core of a magical beast of the third rank is only worth ten or so gold coins, I can’t let it go to waste.” Linley withdrew the straight chisel from his backpack, and with just two or three simple slices, he cut the boar open. An entirely unremarkable earth-colored magicite crystal rolled out. Linley wiped it off on the grass, then placed it in his backpack.

And then, with practiced ease, Linley skinned the boar and cut off the boar’s legs.

After casually chopping down a few branches, with a flick of his wrist, Linley summoned forth a small flame. As the fire began to grow, Linley began to roast the boar legs.

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, began to drool. His eyes were fixed on the boar legs. “Boar legs are delicious. Boss, hurry up, hurry up. Why don’t you just directly use your fire-element magic to roast the boar, wouldn’t that be faster?”

“Fire-element magic? I only have a bit of fire element mageforce. And what's more, when it comes to cooking, using higher temperatures isn't necessarily superior." Linley smirked as he spoke, withdrawing some coarse salt and other ingredients from his backpack.

When Linley had originally tested for magical aptitude, he had exceptional affinity for both earth and wind elemental essence, but just average affinity for fire elemental essence. Honestly speaking, for an ordinary person, average affinity for an elemental essence was quite good. But for someone like Linley, he couldn't be bothered to spend time and energy working on his fire magic.

After all, if he wanted his abilities in fire magic to match his abilities in wind and earth, he would probably have to spend ten times as much time.

Thus, Linley would usually just casually refine a little bit of fire element mageforce. He did, however, definitely have enough to generate some fireballs without any problems.

After finishing roasting two boar legs, Linley and Bebe each shared one while Linley began to work on roasting the other two.

"Wow. Delicious." Bebe chatted while eating enthusiastically. "This wild boar tastes so much better than those farm-grown hogs. It tastes so fragrant. But naturally, your roasting abilities also played a big role, boss." Bebe was so happy that he even began flattering Linley a bit.

Linley couldn't help but start to laugh.

"Boss, I want more." After finishing one leg, Bebe looked at Linley with a pitiful expression.

Seeing Bebe's sad gaze, Linley didn't feel sorry for him in the slightest. He sternly lectured, "This boar leg is way larger than a roast duck. One leg is more than enough for you. The other two legs will be dinner." After speaking, Linley turned away and ignored Bebe's pitiable face.

After finishing roasting the two legs, Linley used two large leaves to wrap them up, and then placed them within his backpack and began hurrying along the road with Bebe.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 10, The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts (part 2)

Within the countless peaks of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were innumerable ageless trees and forests that made travel through the range very difficult. What made it even more difficult was the constant need to pass through one peak and ravine after another, or perhaps take a circular path.

“When traveling within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, don’t carve out a path through the pre-existing thorns and brush. It’s best to take an alternate path.” Doehring Cowart continued to provide the benefit of his experience to Linley.

Linley listened carefully as he proceeded forward.

“Remember, the biggest mistake you can make in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is to constantly make noise. This will cause many magical beasts to pay attention to you. Even if you are forced to make some noise, you need to immediately leave the nearby area.” Doehring Cowart continued. “Remember, if you are injured, you must immediately do your best to staunch any loss of blood. The stench of blood will attract beasts as well. The noses of magical beasts are far more sensitive than we humans.”

Linley nodded.

The massive crowns of countless trees covered the entire sky. Looking at them, Linley was reminded of some information that he had gleaned from books at the Ernst Institute. In a place like this, where even the sun was all but blocked out, one had to learn how to distinguish north, south, east, and west.

As agile as a monkey, Linley leapt past a series of disorderly tree roots and vine growths, but just as he walked past...

"Whoah." Linley sucked in a cold breath as he saw something not too far away.

The corpses of three men and two women were a few dozen meters away from him. The five corpses had not yet rotted much, but the bite marks on them were very visible. The corpses had all been dismembered. A male corpse had half its leg eaten, and a giant hole ripped in its belly, with his severed intestines laying strewn about. Half of a female corpse's head had been eaten, leaving behind a single eyeball and a white skull bone with a few strands of hair attached.

Linley's face turned pale, and he forgot to breathe.

"They should've died three or four days ago." Doehring Cowart appeared next to Linley, carefully inspecting the corpses. His face was still quite calm. "Linley, take a close look. On the chest of every single person, there are some similar, unremarkable wounds. If my guess is correct, these five should've been killed by humans, and most likely, by a single person."

Linley started.

"Doehring Cowart, you're saying that a person killed them?" Linley looked at Doehring Cowart, shocked.

Doehring Cowart smiled calmly. "Linley, this is your first visit to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Once you've been here a bit longer, you will come to realize that in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, in addition to dealing with the attacks of local beasts, you also have to guard against the attacks of other humans."

"The attacks of humans? Why would other humans attack?" Linley felt a bit of rage beginning to grow in his heart.

In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the local monsters already held a huge advantage by virtue of their countless numbers. He didn't expect that the humans here would fight amongst themselves as well, instead of helping each other.

"This is very normal. Why do humans venture into this mountain range? The vast majority come here in the hopes of acquiring magicite cores. If they kill a magical beast, they will only acquire a single core, but if they kill a human being, that person might have several magicite cores in their backpack, or even more." Doehring Cowart stroked his white beard.

Linley finally understood.

Greed!

It was all due to greed. Some people here wanted to easily acquire a large number of magicite cores, and indeed, killing the other human beings here was a good way to do so.

“Linley, you must be careful. Based on what I’m seeing, the person who killed these five must possess astounding ability. If you look closely at these people’s clothing, you can see that four of them should be warriors, while one of them was a magus. But all five of them were killed at about the same time by a clean blow through the heart. The ruthless precision of this assault is chilling. However, since we don’t know how strong these five people were, it’s hard to estimate the strength of their killer.”

Doehring Cowart frowned. “But for these five to be willing and able to brave the dangers of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts suggests that they were not weak. From this alone, we can safely say that the person who killed them is, at the very least, no weaker than you.”

Linley stepped forward to take a closer look, then nodded in agreement.

The killing blows were very clean and direct.

“This is still just the outer perimeter of the mountain range. Hurry on in.” Doehring Cowart laughed.

Linley nodded, then continued on his journey deeper into the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. On his journey, the sight of corpses of both men and monsters became quite common, as well as many rusted weapons. Linley also occasionally ran into a few weak monsters.

Nightfall. Linley and the little Shadowmouse were resting while each munched on a leg of boar. Linley was seated on the ground, while the little Shadowmouse was seated on his shoulder.

"At night, one cannot light a fire in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts." Doehring Cowart once again instructed.

"Understood, Grandpa Doehring." Linley knew quite a bit about the basics of survival here. This place was no ordinary wilderness, and the beasts here would not be afraid of fire.

Seated on the ground, Linley calmed himself down and closed his eyes, while beginning to sense the flow of earth essence and wind essence around him. The feeling of elemental essence around him was akin to the feeling of being in one's parents' embrace.

Due to his exceptional affinity with earth essence and wind essence, Linley could sense them quite clearly.

"The Pulse of the Earth. The Flow of the Wind." A peaceful smile was on Linley's face, as he began to drift off into sleep. Linley had total confidence that any tremors on the ground caused by something approaching, or any disturbances in the wind caused by something moving rapidly to him, would immediately awaken him.

These were the abilities possessed by earth magi and wind magi.

The night slowly grew deeper. Curled in front of Linley, the little Shadowmouse 'Bebe' also began to emit extremely light, quiet snoring sounds. The night wind grew cool as well, but right now, it was summer in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Only at night would it feel cool and refreshing. In the day, it felt stiflingly hot.

Late at night. All was dark.

"Rustle, rustle." The soft sounds of something rustling against the grass could be heard.

A pair of powerfully built Windwolves with gleaming blue fur were pacing about within the forest. Their green-tinted eyes were carefully inspecting their surroundings as their powerful limbs silently stalked through the area.

Their cruel white fangs gleamed with a cold light in the night.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 11, Wolf Pack (part 1)

Still seated cross-legged, Linley's eyes suddenly snapped open and he immediately stared southwards. But there was nothing to the south aside from a mass of vines and rattan growth. This was one of the reasons why Linley selected this location for resting. With so much forest growth, even if a magical beast neared Linley, they might not notice him.

"Two magical beasts are nearing me, and right now they are around forty meters or so away." Based on the vibrations from the disturbances in the local air elemental essences, Linley was certain that there were two beasts.

Linley silently walked to the edge of the mass of vines. Peering through the vines, he saw that thirty meters away, a pair of powerfully built Windwolves were slowly pawing towards him. Based on their route, they would come very close to him. Suddenly, Linley felt a weight settle on his shoulders, and he knew that Bebe had already arrived on his shoulders.

"Boss, it's just a pair of Windwolves. We've seen them several times at the Ernst Institute." Not worried in the slightest, Bebe chatted casually with Linley.

Linley's gaze was fixed on the two Windwolves. "Yes, they are Windwolves. Amongst the wolf packs, there are three major types: Fangwolves, Windwolves, and Frostwolves. Frostwolf packs are the strongest type, while Fangwolves are the weakest. Windwolves are squarely in the middle. In a pack of Windwolves, even the weakest will be a magical beast of the fourth rank, while elites might be of the fifth or sixth rank. Supposedly, the strongest a Windwolf can be is a magical beast of the eighth rank.”

Even an ordinary Windwolf was of the fourth rank. A Unicorn Boar simply wasn’t on the same level.

My power as a warrior is just of the fourth rank. Based on physical skills alone, I can’t overcome these two Windwolves.” Linley was feeling a bit excited. “But this will make it a challenge.”

Watching the two Windwolves draw nearer, Linley’s lips began to mumble the words to a magic spell as his eyes grew cold.

“Shrrrk! Shrrk! Shrrrrk! Shrrrk!”

A deep roar noise could be heard as within the dark night, ten or so large rocks, each at least one meter long and earthen-colored, suddenly flew towards the Windwolves, smashing at them. But the Windwolves quickly raised their head. Seeing the danger, they immediately began to flee at high speed.

The low thud of an impact.

In the short period of time before the rocks struck, the Windwolves were able to respond with uncanny swiftness. Of the two Windwolves, one had a back leg smashed, while the other managed to adroitly dodge every single rock.

“They live up to the name of ‘Windwolves’. They are so fast!”

Linley thought to himself, even as he began mumbling the words to another spell, the wind-style 'Supersonic' spell. Simultaneously, he pulled out his straight chisel blade, then charged directly forward at high speed at that injured, retreating Windwolf.

A warrior of the fourth rank, aided by the Supersonic spell, had roughly the same level of speed as the uninjured Windwolf. Naturally, the injured one was much slower than Linley. The injured wolf frantically fled in terror while baring its fangs.

"Swish! Swish! Swish!"

A string of knives of air appeared out of nowhere and hacked at Linley.

"Hrmph, all wolves have heads as hard as copper and tails as hard as steel, but their waists are as soft as tofu."

Linley was extremely agile. With three simple motions, he dodged the wind knives and drew even closer to the injured Windwolf. Like a tornado, Linley kicked out with his left leg, snapping forward viciously like a whip onto the Windwolf's waist.

"Woooo!" The Windwolf was sent flying by the kick, and he let out an agonized howl.

With another step, Linley once again drew close to the injured Windwolf. The straight chisel in his hand flashing with a beautiful, cold, pitiless light, he chopped at the Windwolf's chest. Linley felt as though the straight chisel in his hand had struck a tough, resilient cloth. He was only able to just barely cut through, causing blood to spurt out.

“The Windwolf’s waist is fairly weak, but its fur is quite tough. Or perhaps a better way to put it is my straight chisel isn’t sharp enough. It can cut through simple stone, but the fur and skin of a magical beast of the fourth rank is a tougher matter.” Linley thought to himself as he carefully kept his gaze on the other Windwolf.

The other Windwolf didn’t actually move. It was just standing there, staring at Linley. Within its cold green eyes was a murderous aura, and low growls were constantly coming from its maw.

“If the Windwolf isn’t injured, then just based on my prowess as a warrior of the fourth rank, there’s no way I can kill him. That’s just a dream.” Linley knew quite well that Windwolves specialized in speed. If he hadn’t been assisted by a wind magic spell, he wouldn’t be able to match it in speed.

Linley immediately began to mumble the words to another spell, but halfway through, his face suddenly changed.

“Not good!”

The low howl of the Windwolf echoed in all directions, and it was matched by howls from all directions as well. Linley swept his gaze across the area, and as he did, it was met by one pair of cold green eyes after another, hidden in the darkness.

"It isn't just one Windwolf...it's a pack!"

Linley's heart immediately tightened. Even Bebe, who up til now had just been sitting off to the side and feigning boredom, sat up, all his fur straightening as well as he carefully looked in all directions.

"Boss, looks like it's getting dangerous."

"Grandpa Doehring, your prediction was way too prescient..." A bitter expression was on Linley's face.

In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, running into a pack of Windwolves was just as lethal as running into an extremely powerful magical beast.

"Prescient my . I was talking about encountering a pack of tens of thousands of Windwolves. In a situation like that, unless you can fly, there's no way you'll be able to survive. The current situation is a bit better. At most, there's twenty or thirty of them." Doehring Cowart's voice was casual, but his face was solemn. "But Linley, you must understand, I'm just a spirit without any mageforce. I can't help you. It's all up to you."

Linley felt miserable.

"Twenty or thirty Windwolves, all at least of the fourth rank. Windwolves are very fast, and they can use magical attacks. I'm just a magus of the fifth rank." Linley felt enormous pressure. Right at this moment, the howls of the surrounding Windwolves ceased.

From within the pack of Windwolves, two exceedingly powerfully built Windwolves strode out. In terms of size, they were at least one size category larger than the previous Windwolves Linley had seen. The one which had been lucky enough to survive was respectfully walking besides these two, and even whining in a low voice, saying something to them.

Their body and even their eyes were a full category larger than the others. This made Linley feel even more nervous as he began to consider what to do next.

"These are definitely elites amongst Windwolves. At the very least, they are of the fifth rank. I hope they aren't of the sixth rank!" Linley's heart was tight, and he quickly began to contemplate how to deal with these opponents.

Even if they were just of the fifth rank, a pair of Windwolves of the fifth rank, with the assistance of a pack of magical beasts of the fourth rank, all attacking Linley...Linley didn't feel too confident. Even a Windwolf of the fourth rank had the same speed as Linley's absolute maximum. Most likely, even using the Supersonic spell, Linley would not be able to match a Windwolf of the fifth rank in speed.

The two leading Windwolves stared at Linley with their cold eyes, a murderous intent emanating from them.

"Looks like I'll have to go all out this time." Surrounded by a pack of wolves, Linley's forehead and back were all drenched with cold sweat. His heart tight in his chest, he began to chant a magical spell with even greater speed.

"Hooooowl!"

Of the two clear leaders of the pack, one of them suddenly let out a low howl. Immediately, the twenty or thirty powerful Windwolves charged forward, as fast as the wind. Their white fangs bared, they snarled at Linley as they ran. At the same time, over a hundred deep green blades of wind appeared out of nowhere, carrying great power within each blade.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 12, Wolf Pack
(part 2)

Linley was currently surrounded by around twenty Windwolves, and over a hundred deep green blades of air virtually locked Linley in, preventing him from fleeing.

There was no way to flee!

Linley suddenly moved. At high speed, he launched off the ground and, like an arrow, shot up in the air, aiming to land on a sturdy tree branch. But because there were simply too many wind blades, over ten of them still landed on Linley's body.

"Swish! Swish! Swish! Swish!"

The wind blades slashed at Linley's sturdy leather armor, knocking him off course midair. Linley frantically grasped at a thick tree branch, and with a somersault, flipped onto the tree and began to climb up. Only after hurriedly climbing up twenty or thirty meters did he come to a halt and look downwards.

"That was really dangerous."

Linley let out a breath. Right now, Linley's body was suffused with a layer of stone-like armor which was in turn covered by a layer of earth elemental essence emanated a faint rocky glow.

Earth-style magic: Earthguard!

The Earthguard required the user to at least be a magus of the fifth rank. When magi of the fifth and sixth ranks used this spell, they used a large amount of earth elemental essence to form a rocky armor which had fairly strong defensive abilities. It could defend against multiple attacks from an opponent of the same level.

These wind knife spells only possessed the strength of the third or fourth ranks.

“Roaaar!” A fierce howl split the air.

Linley stared downwards, and saw that the wind was beginning to gather beneath the feet of those twenty Windwolves. All of them suddenly leapt up into the air, with the two leaders managing to leap up ten meters, landing on a large branch. Their powerful talons dug into the branch, giving them a very stable footing.

Windwolves possessed a tremendous sense of balance, so climbing trees was actually not too hard for them.

“I’m not afraid of you guys climbing trees. I’m only afraid that you wouldn’t climb up.” Linley felt the blood in his veins begin to boil. The more dangerous the situation was, the more potentially lethal it was, the more excited Linley got.

In terms of climbing ability, Windwolves were somewhat inferior to humans. Linley agilely clambered from one tree to another, while the pack of Windwolves howled with fury as they gave chase.

In the outer regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, a pack of Windwolves was definitely the most powerful organization around. Even most warriors of the sixth rank, when faced with a pack of Windwolves, would elect to retreat. After all, no matter how tough they were, physically, even the body of a warrior of the sixth rank could not stand a direct blow from a Windwolf's claws.

Linley and the twenty or so Windwolves thus began a game of hide and seek on the trees. The two Windwolf leaders were faster than Linley, and so Linley had no choice but to constantly change direction to dodge. Suddenly, the leading Windwolves shot out numerous wind blades, and Linley immediately was forced to change direction to dodge.

"Crack!" A tree trunk was severed by the wind knives, and the tree began to topple.

"Crash!"

The claws of one of the leading Windwolves reached Linley, raking at his back. The Earthguard armor trembled a few times, and the elemental essence flashed and flickered.

"Crash! Crash! Crash!"

The Windwolf leaders were simply too fast, and they were also extremely agile. Their fierce claws reached Linley's back several times, as well as his head and other extremities, but fortunately, because the Earthguard armor was formed from elemental essence, it could be manipulated in terms of shape. Linley was currently using it to form a helmet as well. But under the repeated assault from the Windwolf leaders, the elemental essence on top of the armor was starting to flicker.

“These Windwolf leaders are simply too fast. The Earthguard armor won’t hold much longer.”

Grinding his teeth, Linley climbed higher and higher up. By weight, he was much lighter than the Windwolves, and his climbing abilities were also superior. By the time Linley reached the height of around eighty meters, the Windwolves could no longer climb any higher. All they could do was spit out one wind knife after another at Linley. Linley dodged the best he could; only if he absolutely couldn’t dodge did he allow his Earthguard to take the blow.

“If you fell from such a height, wouldn’t you die?” Linley was murmuring the words to a magic spell. To be able to maintain his calm under such a dangerous situation was something Linley accomplished thanks to constantly training his mental fortitude.

“Crash!”

A wind knife smashed against the Earthguard armor. Previously teetering at the edge of destruction, the Earthguard armor finally broke apart into countless specks of elemental essence, sparkling in the air. This knife was immediately followed by another one, which Linley detected right away.

“Most wind knife spells from these wolves are equivalent to a third level magus spell. They won't be able to kill me, given that I'm a warrior of the fourth rank." Linley continued to chant the words to his spell, allowing the wind knife to slash his body. "Swish, swish." Blood erupted from the slash, as a terrifying wound appeared on Linley's chest, leaking fresh blood.

Linley only frowned slightly, continuing to chant the words to his spell.

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" "Whoosh!"

Over a hundred sharp rocks coalesced, gleaming with earth elemental essence. The densely packed stones shot out at the twenty Windwolves, with thirty stones centered on the heads of the two leading Windwolves. Both of the Windwolf leaders were knocked to the ground. The stones were simply too densely packed. With one crashing sound after another, the Windwolves were knocked to the ground, one after another. Even the tree branches were smashed through as they fell.

After using this technique, the vast majority of the Windwolves were smashed to the ground. But these Windwolves were very agile, and their fur was very thick. Although they were smashed downwards, many of them managed to get a clawhold on a tree branch, while others just suffered some superficial injuries. None of them died.

"This injury looks bad, but it's actually just a skin wound. Still, I can't let it keep on bleeding like this." Linley's left hand suddenly blazed with flame, and then he pressed it against his wounds. A crackling sound could be heard, and Linley couldn't help but wince and suck in a deep breath. The smell of cooking flesh wafted out from Linley's chest. Just like that, Linley had 'sealed' the wound with flame, leaving behind a very ugly scar.

While doing the above, Linley also took the opportunity to quickly flee, jumping from one tree branch to another. In the blink of an eye, he fled very far, and then directly threw himself towards the ground. Linley directly fell around eighty or so meters, but as his body was surrounded by a flow of air, his speed of descent was not too fast. By the time he reached the ground, Linley had already finished mumbling the words to yet another spell.

That pack of Windwolves had also chased towards him, and quite soon, they drew close.

The two Windwolf leaders were the first to draw near. Howling, they stared at Linley, a look of suspicion in their ice cold eyes. Why did Linley stop fleeing? These highly intelligent magical beasts were now suspecting that Linley had prepared some trap.

"Growl..." One of the two Windwolf leaders let out a low growl. Immediately, as though responding to an order, a Windwolf of the fourth rank directly leapt towards Linley.

Linley suddenly leapt up and pointed at the distant group of Windwolves. In a low voice, Linley said, "Supergravity Field!"

Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field!

This was an extremely terrifying earth-style spell. Through controlling and utilizing a large amount of earth elemental essence, this spell allowed the user to manipulate the strength of the gravity in a localized area, causing opponents to suffer dramatically from the increased gravity.

Only a magus of the fifth rank was capable of utilizing the Supergravity Field spell.

And the more powerful an earth-style magus was, the more powerful the effect his Supergravity Field would have.

"Rumble..."

The very air trembled. With Linley at the epicenter, a circular area with a diameter of 100 meters suddenly began to glow with earth elemental essence. All of the Windwolves within this diameter suddenly felt an astonishingly powerful pull of gravity. That Windwolf which was charging Linley was also affected by it, causing him to collapse to the ground in mid-leap. All the other Windwolves felt rather shocked as well. The two Windwolf leaders let out furious howls, and ignoring everything else, directly charged towards Linley. But clearly, these two Windwolves now possessed less than half of their original strength.

"Your speed has been halved, but mine is unimpaired." Earth elemental essence was glowing and swirling around Linley as well, seemingly paired perfectly with the earth elemental essence glowing over the ground.

The earth elemental essences used by the Supergravity Field utilized certain unique vibrations. Each individual earth-style magus would utilize it in a slightly different manner, and would have different frequencies of vibrations. If one could totally control the oscillations of the earth elemental essences, one could nullify the influence of the Supergravity Field.

With the opponent's speed halved, his own speed, comparatively, was now much higher. Linley agilely dodged his enemy's attacks, while quickly beginning to mumble the words to another spell.

"Rumble! Rumble! Rumble! Rumble!"

Dozens of earthen spears erupted from the ground beneath the feet of the Windwolves. Those fiercely sharp edges directly penetrated into the chests of seven of the Windwolves, causing them to bleed profusely. Several of the other Windwolves were also seriously wounded by the earthen spears.

"Hooooowl!"

The two Windwolf leaders were growing frantic.

Within the area of effect of the Supergravity Field, they had less than half of their original speed. They simply had no way of stopping the agile, nimble Linley. If they fought him head on, they could kill Linley, but they simply couldn't get near him! Based on Linley's ability as a magus of the fifth rank, dealing with them wasn't too difficult.

"Hooooowl!" A low howl.

Without any hesitation, the two Windwolf leaders turned tail and ran. The ten or so surviving Windwolves also fled with them. Covered by darkness, in the blink of an eye, the Windwolves disappeared from Linley's field of vision. Seeing this, Linley quickly ran over and caught up to three heavily injured Windwolves that hadn't managed to flee in time.

“Crash! Crash! Crash!”

Linley landed three successive kicks on the skulls of the heavily wounded Windwolves. The sound of splintering skulls could be heard, and the three Windwolves immediately collapsed. Including the seven Windwolves that had been stabbed in the chest by the earthen spears, a total of ten Windwolves had been slain. But because Linley had just exerted himself too vigorously, the wound across his chest had split open once again, and fresh blood began to flow out again.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 13, Danger (part 1)

“Whew. They finally left.” Linley finally let out a deep breath.

Linley knew very well that he only had the prowess of a warrior of the fourth rank. Engaging in close quarters combat with Windwolves of the fifth rank was tantamount to suicide. Only by using magic could he hope to survive. But if it weren't for the fact that he had sufficient speed, how would he have the chance to cast any magic spells. Fortunately, he was quite fast, and so he managed to get this favorable result.

“Even if a magus of the sixth rank was present, he wouldn't necessarily have done better than me. A magus of the sixth rank, in terms of speed, wouldn't have been able to shake off the pursuit of those Windwolves. When surrounded and attacked by a pack of Windwolves, he might not even have the chance to cast any spells.” Linley felt all the more certain that his decision to not let up on his physical training was a very wise decision.

Linley glanced at the Coiling Dragon Ring on his left hand. Ever since he had grown up, he had begun wearing the ring on his fingers.

“And it's a good thing that I have this Coiling Dragon Ring! Otherwise, how would I have been able to utilize so many spells of the fifth rank?”

For the average magus of the fifth rank, after utilizing two spells of the fifth rank, they would most likely be out of mageforce. But Linley was different. He had just used six spells of the fifth rank; three casts of 'Shattered Rocks', one cast of 'Supergravity Field', one cast of 'Earthguard', and one cast of 'Earth Spear Array'.

The reason for this? The Coiling Dragon Ring.

In years past, Doehring Cowart had come across this ring by accident. One time, when Doehring Cowart cast a spell, he found out, to his astonishment, that a spell which was cast through the Coiling Dragon Ring would only require a sixth as much mageforce and spiritual energy to achieve the same effect.

Clearly, through the Coiling Dragon Ring, one could more clearly sense and manipulate elemental essence. Additionally, it placed a much lower demand on spiritual energy and mageforce.

A sixth. What did that represent?

A Saint-level magus could normally just utilize the terrifying 'Annihilating Tempest' spell a single time. But with the aid of the Coiling Dragon Ring, he could use the spell six times! Such a terrifyingly powerful treasure caused Doehring Cowart to be uncontrollably excited. He considered this discovery to be the blessing of the earth mother, which is why he named the ring the 'Worldring'.

The divine treasure, 'Worldring'.

This was the name which Doehring Cowart had bequeathed upon it. Based on what Doehring Cowart had said, although the Yulan continent had some exceedingly powerful treasures which could make it much easier for a magus to cast spells, there were virtually none which were had the same degree of effect as the 'Worldring'.

But after obtaining this Coiling Dragon Ring, when training with it, Linley discovered something.

"Not just earth-style magic! Wind-style magic, and even my miniscule amount of fire-style magic, when channeled through the Coiling Dragon Ring, only requires a sixth as much spiritual essence and mageforce." Looking at the ring, Linley felt happier and happier.

Doehring Cowart also chose this moment to appear besides Linley.

"Don't look at it. In my era, after obtaining this Coiling Dragon Ring, I never dared to inform anyone about it. If anyone found out about it, most likely a large number of Saint-level combatants would come to try and take it from me. But I must say, even I did not imagine that it could also assist fire-style and wind-style magic users." Doehring Cowart sighed.

Linley nodded. "In the future, I will never dare to reveal this secret either." Linley knew very well how precious this ring was. If its secret was leaked out, most likely he would be dismembered by all the Saint-level combatants of the Yulan continent.

"Boss, you done?" The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, chose to speak at this moment. He was standing atop a grassy place not far away. Just then, Bebe had not joined the battle, just watched from afar.

Linley smiled.

"Oof, that hurts." Seeing the wound on his chest and how his clothes had been torn and stained by blood, Linley began to carefully dress his wound while also using elemental essence to close the wound.

Bebe was staring at Linley's wound as well, seemingly quite concerned.

"Boss, next time something like this happens, I'm gonna take action." Bebe suddenly said to Linley mentally.

"No need, not unless you believe I'm in a situation where I am powerless to resist and am definitely going to die. Only then can you act. Otherwise...what's the point of me doing training here?" Linley's voice was firm and unyielding. Bebe immediately no longer dared to speak. Bebe had long ago wanted to engage in a slaughter, but Linley never agreed.

Right now, hiding in the grass thirty meters away from Linley, a black shadow lay in ambush.

"Just now, in that battle, from start to finish, he utilized six spells of the fifth rank. Although the spells only had the power of the fifth rank, given that he was able to cast six of them, he most likely is a magus of the sixth rank. His combat prowess should be that of a warrior of the fourth rank. Based on the fact that his movements were assisted by wind-style magic, he most likely also possesses affinity for wind magic. In summary: A dual-element magus of the sixth rank, and a warrior of the fourth rank."

The distant dark shadow was calculating.

"90% chance of killing him successfully. I can make my move." The dark shadow made his decision.

Linley had just finished with one large battle. Naturally, he would be a bit more relaxed. That dark shadow still remained unmoving. In the dark night, he was nothing more than just another shadow. Not even the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, had the slightest idea he was there, much less Linley.

The layer of glowing elemental essence on the ground had vanished.

The Supergravity Field had expired!

"Now!" The dark shadow, which had been lying in ambush this entire time, suddenly flew out silently, flying at astonishing speed towards Linley like an illusionary shadow.

Linley suddenly felt a sense of panic, and he immediately dodged at high speed while turning his head to look behind himself. He saw a dark shadow stabbing at him with a sharp knife, the knife emanating a cold light which made Linley's heart turn to ice. Those cold, callous, murderous eyes in the dark shadow also made Linley's heart tighten.

"How incredibly fast!" Linley hurriedly retreated, but clearly the shadow was even faster. The flashing black knife had almost reached his eyes.

"Clang!"

Linley wielded his straight chisel to block the opponent's knife, and the black knife of the opponent vicious collided with the straight chisel. With a cracking sound, the straight chisel was totally shattered, with some of the shards of the straight chisel cutting into Linley's face, leaving bloody lines over him.

"Whoosh! Whoosh! Whoosh! Whoosh!"

Seven or eight blades of wind suddenly appeared next to Linley and chopped at the dark shadow. Based on Linley's current level of ability, he was totally capable of subvocally casting the wind blades spell. Those seven or eight wind blades all chopped at the dark shadow, but once they came into contact with the black light emanating from the shadow, they all disappeared.

"Darkness-style battle-qi!" Linley immediately made the deduction.

Although these seven or eight blades of wind had not managed to block the dark shadow, they had managed to distract him momentarily. Linley immediately turned around and shot forward like an arrow from a bow. The dark shadow had fast reflexes, however, and chased after Linley, vaulting forward towards Linley at an even higher speed.

In midair, facing Linley, the dark shadow pierced at Linley with his knife once again, still aiming directly for Linley's heart. At this moment, in the back of Linley's mind flashed the image of those five corpses he had seen just before entering the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. All five of them had been killed by stabs to the heart.

"Die."

The dark shadow was totally confident. His knife, covered with a black glow, had already reached Linley's chest. In midair, there was no place for Linley to go or to hide. The only option he had was to instacast the most protective defensive spell available to him; the shield of earth! A small shield of earth, only a third of the size of a normal one, suddenly appeared in front of Linley's chest.

"Hrmph!"

The dark shadow sneered. The knife in his hand pierced through the shield at an even greater speed. To someone on the dark shadow's level, a shield of earth posed no barrier at all.

After having been shrunk in size, the shield of earth actually had quite respectable defensive abilities, but when faced with the attack from this knife, all it could do was slow it down and not stop it. Linley felt some pain in his chest as in just a few moments, the knife pierced all the way through his shield of earth.

"Raaaaawr!"

A terrifying, high-pitched scream could be heard as the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, suddenly appeared next to the dark shadow's wrist. The Shadowmouse's mouth was large enough to chomp down on a human hand, while his sharp teeth, were totally capable of chewing through anything. Bebe bit down hard on the dark shadow's wrist. With an anguished cry, the dark shadow lost his hand at the wrist.

All that was left was half of a hand, still grasping the dagger that had pierced through the shield of earth and penetrated Linley's chest.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 14, Danger (part 2)

“Ah....ah!!!” His wrist had been totally bitten off. The pain caused the dark shadow to scream in misery.

With a flash, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, suddenly arrived right in front of the dark shadow. The dark shadow stared with terror and amazement at the pet-sized Shadowmouse. “What...what...what freak is this?” The dark shadow definitely couldn’t believe that this was a Shadowmouse. He had seen Shadowmice before, and none were this terrifying.

The dark shadow forced himself to ignore the pain from his severed wrist as he generated a dark layer of protective battle-qi while also moving to flee.

The dark shadow only seemed to see the little Shadowmouse flicker in front of him. And then, he felt sudden, excruciating pain, as the little Shadowmouse had lunged forward and bit him directly on the throat. Even his protective layer of dark battle-qi was chewed through.

“CRUNCH!”

That person’s quavering scream suddenly cut off. Half his neck had been bitten off. His head was only attached to his body by a thin strip of flesh. The eyes of this dark shadow gradually lost all life, and his body slumped down to the ground.

At this time, Linley also landed on the ground. He immediately pulled out the dagger, blood already pouring from the wound in his chest, staining his clothes red. Seeing the wound in his chest, Linley felt his heart quiver. If his opponent's knife had went in just a few more centimeters, his heart would have been penetrated.

"So close. Just a bit further, and my life would've been gone."

After this narrow shave, Linley couldn't help but turn to look at the little Shadowmouse, Bebe. Bebe urgently said, "Boss, what's the situation?"

"Not too bad. I didn't lose my life." Linley smiled at Bebe. If it weren't for Bebe, he really would've died.

Hearing these words, Bebe's face was no longer as frantic as it was earlier. At the same time, he also began to grow cocky. The fur on his back stood up straight, and he began wagging his posterior at Linley. After wagging a few times, he delightedly said to Linley through their mental bond, "Boss, you are way too weak. You keep on saying that you want to train yourself, but look! You almost just got yourself assassinated by that guy." There was no way that the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was going to give up this opportunity to mock Linley.

Linley only chuckled.

"Bebe, thanks. You saved my life just then." Looking at the those two terrifying wounds on his chest, Linley couldn't help but sigh. "And this was just the first day!"

Doehring Cowart appeared as well, also sighing in surprise. "This assassin's subterfuge abilities were really terrifying. This time, the little Shadowmouse really saved the day. If it weren't for him, Linley, you would've been done for. As for me, this useless old fellow, all I have left is my spirit. There's no way for me to rescue you."

Linley understood that Doehring Cowart, despite being a Saint-level Grand Magus, only had his spirit left.

"Doehring Cowart, how could that assassin move so quickly? Even with the assistance of wind-style magic, I couldn't outpace him." Linley didn't really understand.

Doehring Cowart explained, "That assassin should've been a warrior of the sixth rank, but he specialized in the strange, secretive ways of darkness-element battle-qi. In addition, he should've received special training in subterfuge and concealing his aura. A warrior of the sixth rank who has received special training should have higher combat ability than the average warrior of the sixth rank. Darkness-element battle-qi is quite strange and secretive. Most likely, he specialized in a certain darkness-element technique that boosted his speed."

Linley nodded slightly.

Darkness-element magic or battle-qi was forbidden in the Holy Union. In the Four Great Empires and in the Dark Alliance, however, the darkness styles were not forbidden. Similarly, in the Dark Alliance, light-style magic and battle-qi training was forbidden.

"Boss, get over here quick!" The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, began jumping out and down next to the corpse of the assassin.

Linley glanced over questioningly. "Bebe, what is it?"

"This assassin had a pouch on his back." The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, said excitedly. Linley walked over to the assassin's corpse. The black clothes on the assassin's back had already been ripped apart. Clearly, this was the doing of the little Shadowmouse.

Beneath the torn back clothes, a backpack was tightly strapped to the assassin's back.

"Linley, I'll wager that those five we saw earlier was killed by him as well. Based on his ability, who knows how many he has killed? His pouch most likely has quite a few magicite cores." Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke.

Linley couldn't help but feel excited. Based on this assassin's prowess, he perhaps was able to kill even your average warrior of the sixth rank. Most likely, he had quite a few possessions.

"Squeak squeak!" The little Shadowmouse grabbed the backpack with his teeth, and with a bound, leapt on top of Linley's shoulder.

Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but feel secretly surprised. "Bebe's speed really is incredibly fast now. Even though that assassin was very fast as well, he was only a bit faster than me. But Bebe's speed is fast enough that I don't even have the ability to react to him. No wonder that assassin was bitten to death by Bebe without even having the chance to dodge or block.”

“Squeak! Squeak!” Holding the backpack by his teeth, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, shook it a few times. “Boss, hurry up and open it up to take a look!” He said rather urgently to Linley through their link.

Bebe was very curious as to what was inside the pouch.

Laughing, Linley accepted the pouch. This was a pitch-black backpack, also made from leather, but clearly of far higher quality than Linley’s own leather backpack. Most likely, it was made from the skin of some high-rank magical beast. He opened the backpack.

Seeing the items inside, Linley’s eyes lit up. Within the backpack, there was a set of clothes, some dried rations, and a sack of gold coins. Inside the backpack, the largest space was reserved for a large sack of items. Opening up the sack, Linley couldn’t help but suck in a cold breath of surprise.

“How many people and how many magical beasts has this assassin killed?” Linley was somewhat stunned. The contents of this large sack were all sparkling, rainbow-colored magicite cores, and even a few large magicite gems mixed in.

“So many magicite cores! There’s got to be at least a few dozen cores here.” Linley felt excited.

Linley immediately began to count the number of cores, and also differentiate them by value. Differentiating the amount of magical energy contained within a magicite core was quite easy for a magus. In a short while, Linley had completed his accounting of the various cores within the pouch.

"A total of 102 magicite cores and 7 magicite gems. For the magicite cores, there are five magicite cores of the sixth rank, 26 magicite cores of the fifth rank, and 71 magicite cores of the fourth rank. No cores of the third rank. For the magicite gems, six are medium-grade magicite gems, while one is high-grade."

Linley could feel his heart beat frantically. What Linley didn't realize yet was that this assassin had also acquired magicite cores of the third rank; he just didn't bother keeping any of them.

As for the magicite gems?

Magicite gems were usually affixed to a magestaff to help the magus rapidly recover his mageforce. All of them had been acquired after the assassin had killed a magus and torn the magicite gem from the magestaff.

"The 102 magicite cores are probably worth around 13,000-14,000 gold coins, while the seven magicite gems are worth around 1600 gold coins at least. All together, the value of these things is about 15,000 gold coins." After reaching this calculation, Linley couldn't help but feel surprised and overjoyed. In a single backpack from an assassin, he had suddenly gained so much wealth.

As for his clan?

Previously, in order to acquire the funds to send his little brother Wharton off to the O'Brien Academy, the clan had virtually exhausted all of its savings. Even if you asked the Baruch clan to produce just ten thousand gold coins, it would be extremely difficult.

"This is just my first day in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and I've already acquired so much. How much will I have gained after two months?" Linley's heart was filled with anticipation.

But Linley also knew quite well that there was no way he would constantly meet with such a 'fat sheep' for slaughtering. In addition, most 'fat sheep' were quite powerful as well. This time, Linley had nearly died. Thinking back to what had just happened, Linley couldn't help but touch the wounds on his chest as well as the wounds on his face caused by the shattered straight chisel.

Linley suddenly turned to stare at the ten dead Windwolves.

"Ten or so magicite cores of the fourth rank, combined, are worth several hundred gold coins as well. Can't let 'em go to waste." Holding the assassin's knife in his hand, Linley went over to the Windwolf corpses and began digging out the magicite cores, one after another. Upon using the knife, Linley came to the realization that it was much sharper than the one he had been using.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 15, Cruelty

Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, next to a spring, Linley dressed his wounds as he also began absorbing earth elemental essence to heal his wound. The ever-benevolent Mother Earth is always kind and selfless. Standing on the earth, Linley felt his wounds slowly heal, filling his heart with peace.

By now, Linley had already exchanged backpacks. His own backpack, in terms of both quality of leather and quality of workmanship, was far inferior to the assassin's. In addition, the assassin's backpack had an interior which was meticulously laid out. Once the lock was tightened, all of the items inside the backpack would be securely fastened, and the backpack itself would not impede movement in the slightest. And that assassin's black dagger was also extremely sharp, and Linley found that it was quite easy to wield.

"Whoosh!"

With a flicker, Linley's body moved, and he suddenly disappeared into the mountain forests. Linley didn't even bother to pay any attention to magical beasts of the first or second ranks. The most commonly seen beasts were of the third and fourth ranks. But if he ran into a magical beast of the fifth rank, Linley had confidence in at least giving them a good tussle.

As he drew deeper and deeper into the mountain ranges, Linley encountered one bloody, cruel battle after another. He experienced many ambushes and assassination attempts. After all of these battles, the wounds and scars on Linley's body grew more and more plentiful as well, while Linley's spirit grew more and more tenacious.

These life-and-death battles caused Linley's mind to become tougher, and his actions to become more merciless.

In the blink of an eye, a month had passed since Linley had entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

.....

A month later, on top of a large tree located next to a mountain spring.

There was a long scar on the left side of his face. Linley's back was arched, and he was hidden on top of the tree like a panther lying in ambush.

Right now, Linley was hidden in the middle of many leaves, staring straight down at the ground. Just a few dozen feet away from the tree which Linley was hiding in was a small creek, and drinking water from the creek was a powerfully built Bloodthirsty Warpig. A single, blood-colored horn protruded out from above the Warpig's nose, and muscles bulged throughout its body, like the gnarled roots of a tree.

Bloodthirsty Warpig, a magical beast of the fifth rank, fire-element!

"This Bloodthirsty Warpig has a tough, thick skin. Its defensive abilities are exceedingly strong. Most likely, the earthen spear techniques wouldn't be able to penetrate its skin."

Linley had a sudden insight, and began to formulate a plan. Immediately, his lips began to move silently as he soundlessly began to mouth the words to a spell. Slowly, the wind elemental essences around Linley began to swirl about him, forming into a bluish, translucent javelin in front of him. The translucent javelin's tip had gusts of wind flowing about it.

Wind-style magic of the fifth rank – Windhowl!

"Swish!"

A piercing sound could be heard as the Windhowl javelin shot downwards with terrifying speed. At the same time, Linley jumped down from the tree's crown, leaping down with as much speed as the javelin.

Upon hearing the noise, the Bloodthirsty Warpig stopped drinking water and stared up, but the Windhowl javelin was simply too fast. In the blink of an eye, it traversed the distance and was only a few meters away from the Warpig. The javelin's speed really was frighteningly fast, and its tip was covered with gusts of wind.

"Grrrr!" The Bloodthirsty Warpig let out an angry howl, and it used the horn above its snout to strike viciously at the Windhowl javelin.

"Crash!"

The javelin formed from the Windhowl spell crashed directly onto the horn of the Bloodthirsty Warpig. The Windhowl javelin immediately dissipated, but at the same time, after taking a hit from a spell of the fifth rank, the Warpig couldn't help but half-kneel from the force of the blow, with a bloody scar appearing on its forehead as well.

"Woosh!"

Before the Warpig had a chance to react, right behind the Windhowl javelin was Linley, who with all his might, struck down at the center of the head of the Warpig with his newly acquired black dagger. The dagger penetrated directly into the skull of the Warpig, and as it did, Linley immediately dodged.

"Roar!"

Having been stabbed in a vital spot, the Bloodthirsty Warpig roared furiously. Flames began to arise on its body, and it also began charging forward with no regard for anything. But after rushing a few dozen meters, it collapsed. Its four legs quivered a few times before coming to a stop, and all of the fire on its body began to die as well.

"Amongst the magical beasts of the fifth rank, much like the Vampiric Iron Bull, the Bloodthirsty Warpig is considered a beast of rather low intelligence." Linley walked to the corpse of the Warpig, pulled out his dagger, and removed the magicite core from within the Warpig's corpse.

Thinking back to his recent life in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley couldn't help but admit to himself that although he was still a magus of the fifth rank and a fighter of the fourth rank, his actual combat ability had increased tremendously compared to when he had first entered the mountains.

After multiple life-and-death struggles, his body was covered with scars which symbolized painful lessons learned over this month.

Especially...

On his chest, there was an extremely horrifying wound. That time, he really was at death's door. In the end, it was the little Shadowmouse who once again saved the day.

This wound wasn't given to him by a magical beast. It was given to him by an extremely adorable young lady.

"Back then, I really trusted her. I really believed that her friends had all been killed, and that the only one left was her, injured and alone." Thinking back to the events of two weeks prior, Linley once again felt a stab of terror. That girl had seemed so kind, so pure.

When Linley discovered her, three other men and another girl had all died. Only she was left, filled with terror.

Linley couldn't help but go comfort her, help her, take care of her. That girl had seemingly suffered a huge mental blow. Every night, she insisted that Linley hold her, as only in Linley's arms did she feel safe enough to go to sleep. Every night, upon seeing the peaceful look on her face as she went to sleep, Linley felt joy in his heart. Three days passed in such a fashion. On the fourth night, she once again was sleeping quietly in Linley's bosom.

But suddenly, this adorable girl pulled out a dagger and stabbed directly at Linley's chest, with Linley caught totally offguard.

And then, the enraged Bebe had suddenly, bizarrely, doubled in size. His enormous jaws bit off the girl's head with a single bite, immediately killing her. And then, Bebe returned to his normal size.

But Linley couldn't staunch the flow of blood from the deep wound in his chest. In the end, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was forced to use some special darkness-type magic techniques to close the wound.

"Back then, I should've listened to Grandpa Doebling's advice. I lacked experience." Linley thought to himself and sighed. Originally, Doebling Cowart had warned him several times about the girl. In the end, seeing that Linley was stubbornly set on assisting the 'helpless' little girl, there was nothing that Doebling Cowart could do. But he still tried to insist that even if Linley was going to help her, that he absolutely must not allow her to get near him.

But at the time, the girl was extremely 'terrified', and wasn't able to fall asleep without Linley holding her. In the end, in order to comfort her, Linley held her in her arms, and they both went to sleep.

"I really didn't expect that her acting abilities would be so good. I treated her so well, but she could be so merciless to me." Linley sighed again in his heart. When that girl had stabbed him in the chest, he had seen the vicious look in her eyes, and his heart had grown cold.

What had caused this girl to be so heartless and merciless?

Could it be that despite taking care of her for three full days, she hadn't been moved in the slightest?

"Fortunately, thanks to Grandpa Doebling warning me over and over again, I didn't reveal Bebe's true capabilities to her." Linley couldn't help but admit that his life had been preserved thanks to Doebling Cowart and Bebe.

"Linley, what are you thinking about? Are you thinking about that girl again?" Doebling Cowart appeared by Linley's side.

Seeing the look on Linley's face, Doebling Cowart was able to guess what he was pondering. That stab from the girl had injured Linley deeply, not just in the flesh, but also in his heart. From that day onwards, Linley no longer would easily trust others.

From the very beginning, Doebling Cowart had sensed that there were some problems with the girl. How could someone with the courage to enter the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts be so totally discombobulated by the sight of death?

Unfortunately, Linley was still totally convinced by the girl's performance, and really felt that the girl was very 'pitiable'.

"Linley, that girl's performing abilities was nothing. Back in my time, in the Pouant Empire, I saw so many plots from enemy countries, plots which involved decades of subterfuge and lies which were totally undetectable. Their acting abilities are beyond your comprehension." Doebling Cowart smiled faintly as he spoke. "Remember, don't easily lower your guard when dealing with a stranger."

Linley nodded slightly.

"Squeak, squeak!" The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, began to call out from next to Linley.

Linley looked up.

Right now, the little Shadowmouse was leaping up and down atop the Warpig's corpse.

"Boss, when are we gonna go to the central areas of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?" Bebe mentally spoke to Linley in a somewhat unhappy tone. "In this current area, the strongest creatures that we can meet are magical beasts of the sixth rank. They aren't much of a challenge. I want to challenge magical beasts of the seventh rank, boss! I want to challenge magical beasts of the seventh rank!"

Linley glanced at the little Shadowmouse. "That's enough. Don't get too cocky. You are bragging that magical beasts of the sixth rank are too easy? Do you remember that Bluewind Hawk from the other day? Was there anything you could do to him?"

"That's not my fault!" Bebe rubbed his head with his tiny paws as he said unhappily, "Boss, you saw yourself. That Bluewind Hawk stayed in the skies and refused to come down. He just kept on throwing magical wind knives at us, as though they didn't cost him any mageforce at all. I couldn't just let him attack me without end, could I?"

Linley laughed.

Over the course of the past month, Linley had become very familiar with the little Shadowmouse's abilities. In terms of speed, Bebe had reached a terrifying level indeed. But because he was physically small and only had his claws and teeth as offensive weapons, although Bebe was capable of dealing with magical beasts of the sixth rank, he most likely would find it quite hard to deal with a magical beast of the seventh rank.

Just at this moment, Linley suddenly frowned. He cautiously turned his head and saw a blurred human outline appear in the wilderness.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 16, Cruelty (part 2)

“Linley, it’s actually you! This is great!” A happy voice rang out, and a skinny young man began jogging towards them at high speed. This youth was the skinny warrior whom Linley had met on his way towards the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Of the other two people he had met, his classmate Delsarte and the big, burly Kava had both died.

Back then, when facing the wind-style magus-archer, Linley had utilized the earth-style spell ‘Earthen Spear Array’. The skinny warrior of the fifth rank, Matt, had seized the opportunity to immediately flee. But Linley didn’t really care that he had ran away. After all, him and Matt didn’t have any special relationship.

Honestly speaking, of the three people he had encountered, the only one Linley genuinely felt friendly towards was his own classmate, Delsarte. That big fellow, Kava, had also made a good impression on Linley. Linley didn’t have any special feelings for Matt.

“Oh, it’s Matt. I didn’t expect that the two of us would meet again in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts after a month had passed.” Linley was still quite calm.

Matt appeared very excited. “This is wonderful. This month, on numerous occasions, I was almost overcome by the magical beasts here. Fortunately, my luck was not too bad. Whoah – is that a Bloodthirsty Warpig? Linley, you were able to kill a Bloodthirsty Warpig? You really are formidable!”

Linley smiled.

"I'm getting a bit hungry. I've heard that the flesh of both the Bloodthirsty Warpig as well as the Vampiric Iron Bull are both extremely flavorful, and that it has a wonderfully chewy texture as well. I haven't had lunch yet. You wouldn't mind sharing some Warpig flesh with me, would you?" Matt joked.

The Bloodthirsty Warpig was huge in size, with its corpse weighing at least several hundred kilograms. Even ten people wouldn't be able to finish it all.

"Of course not." Linley withdrew his knife and began slicing off parts of the Warpig.

"Linley, no need to trouble yourself. This Bloodthirsty Warpig corpse is part of your spoils of war. How can I trouble you to butcher it as well? Let me do it. My roasting abilities are quite formidable." Matt immediately headed towards the Warpig corpse and withdrew a knife from his side.

Playing with the knife, Matt began to expertly butcher the Warpig, although he only cut off the four legs, tongue, and tail. He then began to wash these pieces in the nearby spring.

"Boss, he seems to be quite skilled. He doesn't seem to be any weaker than you in this respect." The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, leapt onto Linley's shoulders and mentally said to Linley.

Glancing at the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, on his shoulders, Linley couldn't help but sigh with gratitude. When others saw this little tiny black mouse, perhaps they would just think that it was an ordinary little Shadowmouse, of little threat. But in reality...

Linley could still recall how the terrifying sight of how the enraged Bebe so easily slaughtered that dark assassin, as well as that 'kind' young girl.

"Can't judge a person by his appearance. Same goes for magical beasts." Linley sighed to himself.

Matt quite quickly began to set up his roasting apparatus, and also withdrew some rough cooking salts and seasonings from his pouch. "Linley, these Warpig legs will definitely be very tasty. Its tongue, as well, is both soft and fragrant. The flavor of a Warpig tail is quite good as well."

As he spoke, Matt had chopped both the tail and the tongue into multiple pieces. Linley watched as Matt used flints to light a fire, not stepping in to help despite being in possession of fire-style mageforce. He watched Matt quickly and constantly roast each piece.

After a period of time.

"It's about time. Have a taste." Matt quite enthusiastically handed a large chunk of Warpig leg meat to Linley.

But in turn, Linley flipped the Warpig meat around and offered it to Bebe. Bebe immediately accepted it happily, and began to chomp away in earnest. This Warpig leg was perhaps three or four times larger than Bebe, but in a short period of time, Bebe totally devoured all of the meat.

This sight caused Matt to gape in astonishment.

"He really is a magical beast. Even a little black Shadowmouse can eat so much." Matt sighed while offering a piece of roasted Warpig tongue to Linley. "Linley, have a taste of my artisanship."

Linley smiled as he declined. "No need. I'm not used to eating tongues. Some of that leg meat will do just fine." Linley took one of the other legs and began to eat without any reservations. Next to him, Matt laughed. "Then I won't force you. If you won't eat it, I will. Haha."

As though enjoying himself very much, Matt began to eat the roasted Warpig tongue and tail.

By the time that Linley had finished eating the Warpig leg, Matt hadn't taken a single bite of it yet.

"You are done already? Haha, fine then. I'm half-full now anyhow. I'll save this Warpig leg for when I am hungry." Matt withdrew an oilcloth from his backpack and placed the Warpig leg inside it, then replaced the cloth within his backpack.

Linley glanced at Matt.

It seemed as though Matt wanted to travel alongside him.

"Matt, here in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, I'm fine training by myself. Let's part ways here." Linley said directly.

Matt immediately frowned. "Linley, this place is extremely dangerous. It'd be much safer if we travelled together. Honestly speaking, during this past month, I've been frightened during every combat encounter. I'm not even able to sleep well."

"Then do as you wish."

Linley didn't mince words. He immediately headed deeper into the mountains, while Matt, smiling, followed him. But when his gaze fell upon the backpack Linley was carrying, a slightly sinister light shone in his eyes.

"This backpack is different from the one Linley was carrying a month ago. And it seems much fuller as well." Matt sneered to himself, but he still smiled in a very friendly manner. Matt was not the same as Linley. Before entering these mountains, he had trained himself in other places for many times.

Matt sped up his pace. Smiling, he said, "Linley, you really are a wonderful fellow. Travelling with you, I feel much safer. After all, two people together are much stronger than two people separate. At night, the two of us can take turns sleeping. There's no need for us to both be on full alert at night."

Linley was silent. His gaze was always focused on his surroundings, carefully keeping an eye out for the magical beasts in these mountains.

....

They slowly made their way north, as Linley no longer dared to go further east. If they travelled further east, they would be entering the dangerous parts of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Currently, in this area, Linley would only encounter magical beasts of the fifth or sixth rank.

This entire time, Matt followed by his side, seemingly quite happy.

Two days later.

It was late at night, and the world was dark. Linley and Matt continued going forward in a single file line.

"Linley, do you think it's about time for us to go back yet? Honestly speaking, we've spent about enough time here in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts." Matt said in a soft voice as he followed Linley's trail.

Linley just calmly shook his head, not making a sound.

Matt felt a hint of anger. "Every night, this Linley fellow is extremely careful. He isn't giving me any opportunities at all." Matt didn't have any confidence in his ability to kill Linley. After all, being able to survive here for so long was a proof of Linley's abilities.

"Hrm?" Linley seemed to have noticed something special. He turned around and stared at a copse of trees not too far away. Within that copse of trees, there was a hidden, indistinct shadow lying in wait.

Matt, next to Linley, saw him turn his head, presenting his back to Matt. A look of greed appeared in Matt's eyes, as well as a look of excitement. In a practiced manner, Matt suddenly drew his dagger and without any hesitation at all, stabbed towards Linley's back....

Linley suddenly turned and grabbed Matt by the wrist of his right hand, which was holding the dagger. At the same time, he stared coldly at Matt. His voice even colder, he asked, "What do you think you are doing?"

"You!" Matt was shocked. He couldn't believe that his attempted sneak attack had apparently been noticed and blocked.

Matt immediately smiled at Linley instead. "What do I think I'm doing? O mighty genius magus, let me tell you...I am going to kill you." Matt was totally confident in himself. With the two of them in such close proximity, how could he, a warrior of the fifth rank, be unable to kill a magus of the fifth rank?

Matt suddenly exerted some strength with his right arm, and he began to blaze with battle-qi, forcibly shaking off Linley's grip.

"Die!" Matt stared at Linley as he stabbed again at Linley with his dagger.

"Rawr!!!!"

A terrifying sound! "What?!" Matt heard the noise, and he couldn't help but shudder. And then, Matt saw a very small black shadow appear in front of him.

"What...what is this?" Matt could tell that this black shadow was actually the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, which spent every day on Linley's shoulders. The little Shadowmouse opened his mouth wide, revealing a mouth filled with a horrifying number of sharp teeth, and directly chomped down towards Matt's face.

"Nooo-!"

Matt immediately tried to retreat at high speed, while also jerking his head away.

"Crunch!"

The little Shadowmouse's speed was far faster than Matt had imagined. How could Matt dodge? The little Shadowmouse reached out with his right paw, waving his sharp, knife-like talons at Matt's head. With but a single swipe, half of Matt's neck was removed from his body, and blood spurted out wildly.

"Urk...gurgle..." Clasping a hand to what remained of his neck, Matt's eyes were as wide as an ox. His disbelieving, terrified eyes were fixed upon the little Shadowmouse, and in his heart, he was utterly shocked. "Shadowmouse? Is this a Shadowmouse?"

As he fell into death and as his consciousness dissipated, Matt was still filled with terror and disbelief. He had prepared so long to make this move, but he hadn't figured the little Shadowmouse into his plans.

A dark-colored Shadowmouse was the weakest level of Shadowmouse.

But at the moment of his death, Matt finally realized that the adorable little Shadowmouse was actually a terrifying monster.

“Thud!”

Matt’s hands fell lifelessly from his throat to his sides, and then he himself collapsed as well. His fresh blood stained his clothes and stained the ground.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 17, Bebe's Prowess (part 1)

Standing in front of Matt's corpse, Linley couldn't help but heave a sigh. At the same time, he couldn't help but rub the scar on his chest.

The scar here was one which had almost taken his life.

"Compared to Nina [Ni'na], you are far too inferior." Linley shook his head and sighed. This Matt actually didn't have much of a friendship with him, and they were nothing more than temporary travel companions who met on the road. There was no way Linley would place too much trust in him.

What's more...

After having experienced Nina, how could Linley so casually present his back to others?

"Squeak squeak!" The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, came over carrying the backpack which was on Matt's back. He urgently said to Linley through their link, "Boss, hurry up and take a look and see how many magicite cores there are here. In this month, all of the other assassins combined didn't have as much as many magicite cores as that first assassin."

Doehring Cowart appeared by Linley's side as well.

"Linley, it seems like this little Shadowmouse that you've raised really enjoys counting magicite cores." Doehring Cowart chuckled.

"It does seem that way, just a bit." Linley accepted the backpack and opened it while joking with Bebe, "Bebe, this time when you killed that Matt fellow, I believe you used your claws, instead of your sharp teeth. Why didn't you use your fierce little teeth?"

Bebe sat up straight, let out a few arrogant squeaks, then said mentally, "Boss, I, Bebe, have incredible prowess. My sharp claws are no less fierce than my teeth. And that Matt fellow was too vile. Biting him would sully my teeth." After saying this, Bebe intentionally put on a display of 'spitting' out a mouthful of saliva.

The image of the little Shadowmouse spitting out a mouthful of saliva was simply too human-like. Upon seeing this, Linley immediately started laughing.

"That's enough, oi, Bebe. Look, that Matt fellow had a lot of magicite cores in his backpack. There's around thirty. Looks like he didn't waste much time during this month. But the best core in these thirty is just a core of the fifth rank."

Linley carefully began inspecting the cores.

During these thirty days, he had killed a number of magical beasts, as well as some people who wanted to kill him. All combined, he had nearly three hundred magicite cores, with a total valuation of perhaps around forty thousand gold coins!

"Forty thousand gold. If father knew...then..." Fantasizing about his father's reaction when he gave him all that gold, Linley couldn't help but feel overjoyed.

"It makes sense that you were able to acquire so much," Doehring Cowart said. "Aside from those magical beasts you killed, of those three hundred magicite cores, virtually all of them came from other people's backpacks."

Linley nodded in agreement.

That very first assassin ended up donating him 15,000 gold coins worth of magicite cores. The others, all combined, had just a bit more than that first assassin.

"The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is extremely dangerous, so most people here have grouped up with others. But assassins rarely are willing to attack groups, because they generally specialize in killing someone instantly, which is why they prefer to fight one on one."

Doehring Cowart suddenly began to laugh, his white whiskers floating about. "Linley, look at yourself. Yes, you might be tall and strong, but your face is still filled with a childish air. And that fuzz above your lips? All of those prove something..."

"You are just a kid!"

Doehring Cowart laughed uproariously. "Linley, in this huge mountain range, when those assassins find a kid here for his first training exercise, with such a childish face, how can they possibly not make their move against you? That's why, in a single short month, you've run into so many assassins."

"But those people travelling in groups might not encounter a single assassination attempt in a month. Of course, those five people we ran into that first day were exceptions. First of all, they were too weak. And secondly, their killer was really strong. But in the end, that assassin died by Bebe's claws."

Linley laughed and nodded as well.

He was only fifteen years old this year, after all. Although he was 1.8 meters tall, anyone with a good eye could tell that he was just a kid.

"Most magi of the fifth and sixth rank would probably only acquire a few thousand gold coins worth of magicite cores in a month here. And all of those cores would be acquired through life-and-death struggles. After all, the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is incredibly dangerous." Doehring Cowart sighed emotionally.

Linley nodded in agreement. "It is dangerous. I've stayed in the outer regions this entire time, and at most I have run into magical beasts of the sixth rank. But I've been injured several times already. If it weren't for the Coiling Dragon ring, if it weren't for the fact that I'm both a dual-element magus of the fifth rank and a warrior of the fourth rank, and if it weren't for the fact that I have Bebe, I probably would've been done for, travelling on my own like this."

He turned to look at the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, who was currently playing with a magicite core.

Calming himself, Linley collected the various cores, and then headed off once again, with Bebe in tow. He was going to continue his training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. After all, based on his original plans, he was going to stay here for two months.

.....

Each day, Linley would fight against local magical beasts, and his abilities in merging his abilities as a magus with his abilities as a warrior grew better and better. He was also growing in practical experience in using earth-style and wind-style magic in battle. Gradually, Linley began suffering fewer and fewer wounds in battle. Naturally, as Linley gradually drew closer and closer to the core regions, magical beasts of the sixth rank began growing more and more plentiful, and Linley began to be more cautious as well.

On the 46th day of Linley's entry into the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"Swish!"

Ripples began to appear on the surface of the quiet little lake. A human figure suddenly emerged from within. It was Linley. Linley was using a piece of cloth to casually wash himself.

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, stood on the shore, watching Linley bathe with an envious look in his eyes. After squeaking a few times, he began hopping up and down before diving directly into the lake. Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but chuckle, and then he continued to bathe himself.

"Haha, that's enough, Bebe, haha, that's enough!" Linley suddenly broke out into uncontrollable laughter.

"Oh, boss, you are afraid of being tickled?" The little Shadowmouse rose up into the surface of the water, guileless black eyes gleaming with a hint of mischief.

Chuckling, Linley walked onto the lakeshore. Removing a clean set of clothes from his backpack, he put the new clothes on. Changing clothes after a nice bath was a very luxuriant event. And then, Linley began to wash the just-removed clothes in the lake, then hung them onto a tree branch to dry off. With a leap, Linley landed onto another branch on the tree. Lying down, he watched Bebe mess around in the lake water.

He watched as Bebe joyfully leapt about in the water. Sometimes, Bebe would dive to the lake bottom, while at other times, Bebe would lie on his back on the lake surface.

"Rumble" "Rumble" "Rumble" "Rumble".

The ground suddenly began to shake ever so slightly. Based on the rumbling rhythm, Linley surmised that it should've been caused by something walking. Linley couldn't help but feel startled, and he looked directly towards the south, in the direction the rumbles were coming from. He saw a large, indistinct shadow appear from within the southern side of the lake, but after a short period of time, Linley was able to clearly see the figure.

It was at least two stories high, and covered with large, flame-red, shield-like scales, which also extended over and covered its four limbs like scaly armor. Its long tail was roughly half as long as its entire body, as nimble and as agile as a whip. Its two sinister, ruby-like eyes, each the size of a lantern, stared at the surface of the lake. Two plumes of white smoke continuously wafted out from its nostrils.

Linley was in total shock, and his body froze, even as his heart sped up.

“Velocidragon. Magical beast of the seventh rank – Velocidragon!”

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 18, Bebe's Prowess (part 2)

From his earlier years until now, the only magical beast which he was genuinely fascinated by was the Velocidragon, which he had seen that one time. That time, when the Velocidragon had demonstrated its terrifying power in the middle of Wushan township, it seemed to be an invincible force. With its terrifying power, it had wiped out one house after another...

Linley couldn't help but feel his heart quake.

When he was eight years old, Linley was just a child. But now, at age fifteen, he was a dual-element magus of the fifth rank.

"Boss! Boss! This one is mine!" The excited voice of the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley turned to look at the surface of the lake, and saw that Bebe was so excited that all of the hairs on his body were sticking up as straight and stiff as needles. Even all of the muscles on his body were pulsing with energy. His fierce claws and head had grown in size as well. The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was previously around 20 centimeters in size, but now he suddenly elongated to a size of half a meter. This half-meter long size was the largest that Linley had ever seen Bebe grow to.

But despite this, the half-meter long Bebe was nothing more than a speck in comparison to the Velocidragon.

The Velocidragon's huge, lantern-like red gaze was fixed coldly on Bebe's form. It let out an angry snort that reverberated within the mountains. In reply, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, also raised his head and let out a high-pitched shriek.

The sound of the low, growling snarl and the high-pitched shriek clashed.

Linley, who was watching all of this atop the tree next to the lake, suddenly felt as though the Velocidragon and the little Shadowmouse were two equally matched adversaries having a staredown.

"Raaaaaawr!" A thundering roar!

An all-encompassing, blazing flame suddenly erupted from the Velocidragon's maw, covering the entire area of dozens of meters ahead of it in flame. The lake began to hiss as the surface water instantly began to boil. But Bebe didn't move at all, despite being bathed in flames; he just let the flame burn as it might.

From within the blazing flame, one could see that Bebe was not harmed in the slightest.

"Although Bebe is physically small, his defensive abilities are incredible. The power of this flame is approximately on par with a fire-style magus spell of the fifth rank, but it isn't able to harm him at all." Linley quietly watched. Despite having been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for so long, Bebe had yet to meet a genuinely worthy opponent to do battle with.

Bathed in flames, Bebe was motionless. But then suddenly, he moved!

"Shkkkkkkkkreeee!"

With a terrifyingly high-pitched howl, Bebe transformed into a black shadow that sped towards the Velocidragon with vicious speed. The Velocidragon, which had continued to breathe out flames this entire time, suddenly widened its enormous, lantern-sized red eyes, while suddenly slapping forward with its long, whip-like draconic tail.

The incredible speed of the tail of the Velocidragon actually approached the speed of the little Shadowmouse's movement.

"Whoosh!" Bebe's movements were extremely bizarre, and he was actually able to dodge the hyper-fast attack of the Velocidragon's tail, and immediately tried to bite at the Velocidragon's throat. But the Velocidragon, in turn, immediately turned his head down and then tried to bite back at Bebe.

But clearly, Bebe was still a bit faster. As he gave the Velocidragon a vicious bite on the neck, a sharp 'crack' sound could be heard, as one of the thick scale on the Velocidragon's neck was actually broken, and then swallowed whole by Bebe. Bebe was a creature that was capable of even devouring stones and bones. This Velocidragon scale proved to be edible by him as well.

But just at this time, the Velocidragon's tail swept towards Bebe. "Thwack!" A high-pitched slapping sound could be heard, causing Linley to shiver. But Bebe had long since dodged and scurried away again.

"This Velocidragon has such a huge, thick neck. That bite Bebe gave it was nothing more than a light wound." Linley breathlessly watched this battle between creatures of totally different sizes. "This Velocidragon's tail moves in such an unpredictable manner, and it's able to twist in turn at high speeds as well."

The tail of a Velocidragon was not only fast, it was also agile and unpredictable.

"Shkreeee!"

Bebe once more turned into a vicious black shadow. Erupting out from the water, Bebe once more dodged the draconic tail. But just as he dodged, the tail suddenly changed directions in a rapid, unpredictable manner. With a sudden twist, it struck Bebe a direct blow.

The vicious black shadow was sent flying into the faraway woods.

"Bebe!" Linley's chest tightened.

But the Velocidragon only stared cautiously at the forest, as though keeping an eye out for a dangerous foe. Suddenly, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, came flying down at him from atop a particularly tall tree. The Velocidragon's tail immediately twisted to strike at him, but this time, Bebe had learned from the previous painful lesson. With a twitch of his tail, he too suddenly changed directions in mid-air.

The little Shadowmouse was a blur. The draconic tail was also a blur!

The two blurred shadows chased each other about in mid-air. The little Shadowmouse would occasionally be sent flying by the Velocidragon, but every so often, he would also manage to land a vicious bite on the Velocidragon as well. They continued their fight, fighting all the way from the lakeshore to the forests. One mighty tree after another was knocked down by the Velocidragon's tail as the Velocidragon and the Shadowmouse continued to fight without pause.

"From what I can see, it seems as though Bebe has a slight advantage."

Linley nervously watched the fight. By this point in time, the huge Velocidragon had already lost seven or eight scales, and blood continuously flowed from seven or eight wounds, covering half of its body in blood. The Velocidragon's enraged roars continued unabated.

Its tail whipping back and forth, any tree touched by the Velocidragon's tail was snapped in half. One mighty tree after another toppled over, and an area with a diameter of approximately two hundred meters around the two combatants was totally cleared.

"But can Bebe keep on being hit like that, by the Velocidragon's tail?"

Linley began to worry. The offensive power of the Velocidragon's tail was very high. If it smashed into a stone, the stone would crumble; if it smashed into a tree, the tree would snap. This sort of offensive power made Linley's heart grow cold. Linley knew that if he was struck so much as a single time by that tail, his life would be gone.

"Whack!" Bebe was sent flying again, but in the blink of an eye, Bebe once more transformed into a furious black shadow as he charged into the fray again, screeching.

By now, the Velocidragon was covered with blood, with many damaged scales throughout its body. It looked to be in a bad way.

"Raaaawr!"

With an angry roar, the Velocidragon actually turned and began to leave. At high speed, it began to run towards the core areas of the mountains. In a short period of time, the Velocidragon disappeared from Linley's vision. Bebe actually pursued it for a while as well before turning around and coming back to Linley.

Linley dropped down from his tree just as the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, also ran over to him, his body shrinking back to its normal size.

"Bebe, are you okay?" Linley immediately asked him through their mental link.

Bebe jumped onto Linley's shoulder and stood erect on his hind legs, as he looked arrogantly at Linley with his beady little black eyes. "Boss, what sort of magical beast do you take Bebe to be? How could I be afraid of a Velocidragon?" Pride and self-delight suffused Bebe's adorable little face.

But suddenly, Bebe twitched his tail. Shaking himself, he said, "But that Velocidragon's tail really is a rather nasty piece of work. My entire body hurts."

Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but chuckle. The Velocidragon's tail wasn't just a 'rather nasty piece of work'. It was an extremely nasty piece of work. Linley was extremely glad that Bebe was able to withstand so many blows from it without sustaining any serious injuries.

"And this Velocidragon's scales and meat really is thick. Even at my maximum size, I couldn't bite through him." Bebe sighed. "But I'm confident that if we kept on at it, I, Bebe, could've bled him to death. This Velocidragon was pretty sly though. It kept on moving about and never let me bite it on the same location twice."

Linley secretly laughed.

There was a huge gap between the sixth rank and the seventh rank, in terms of combat ability as well as other factors. Most likely, that Velocidragon's intelligence was not much less than a human being's. How could it possibly allow the little Shadowmouse to bite it in the same place twice?

No matter how thick the scales and flesh of the Velocidragon were, it couldn't withstand being bitten by Bebe multiple times. This Velocidragon most likely also realized that he wouldn't gain any benefit from continuing to fight, which was why it fled.

"Bebe, want to give a magical beast of the eighth rank a go?" Linley mentally teased.

Bebe's little eyes suddenly turned round as the moon. "Boss, don't mess with me like that. Dealing with that magical beast of the seventh rank was exhausting enough. I hear that magical beasts of the eighth rank are ten times as powerful as magical beasts of the seventh rank. Even if their movement speeds aren't as high as mine, most likely their attack speeds are higher."

Movement speed and combat attack speeds were two different speeds.

For example, the Velocidragon was perhaps much slower in terms of movement speed, but its tail was able to attack at an astonishing speed. Although some larger magical beasts appeared to be slow and clumsy, when they really started to fight, they were as fast as lightning!

After all, if they were mighty enough to be described as a magical beast of the eighth rank, they definitely would overmatch a magical beast of the seventh rank.

"Heh, looks like you know when to be humble after all." Linley chuckled while stroking Bebe's little head. "Alright, my clothes should be dry by now as well. Let's go take a rest on top of the tree, then eat some food. After a while, we'll continue onwards." As he spoke, Linley leapt up seven or eight meters onto a branch, and then he continued to lightly jump up, before leisurely coming to a rest at about twenty or thirty meters above the ground.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 19, The Black Dagger (part 1)

The fifty first day in the mountain ranges.

“Do all of these killers think that I’m easy meat?” Linley glanced at the corpse of the female assassin, dressed in black. This woman only was a warrior of the fifth rank. Assisted by his magic, Linley was able to kill her by himself.

Doehring Cowart laughed. “Anyone who sees you will be able to tell that you are just a kid, a stupid kid who doesn’t know how high the heaven is or how deep the earth is, a kid that dares wander these mountains alone. Why wouldn’t they want to get an easy kill like you?”

Linley felt helpless.

He was still just fifteen. Despite having the physical size of a fully grown man, his face still betrayed his youth.

“This woman wounded me as she died. It’s not a big deal that I have another scar, but she ruined my clothes as well. Now I only have one set of clothes remaining.” Seeing the giant, gaping hole in his clothes, Linley didn’t know whether to laugh or to cry.

Linley had managed to acquire several sets of clothes from attempted assassins, but he had lost even more, here in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"Boss, the magicite cores in this person's bag are worth a couple thousand gold coins. Can a set of clothes be worth that much?" Bebe immediately argued.

Hearing these words, Linley laughed.

After having spent well over a month in these mountains, the scars on his body had grown more and more plentiful, but so too had the number of magicite cores in his backpack.

"Forget it. From now on, I'm going naked from the waist up. I'll save my last set of clothes for when I go back. No one will see me anyhow, here in these mountains." Linley determinedly tossed aside the ruined set of clothes, going bare-chested. His black dagger in hand, he marched onwards.

During this period of time, this black dagger had provided quite a bit of assistance to Linley.

After walking for a while, Linley began to casually murmur the words to a spell. After a short moment, a gust of wind began to swirl around the area, with Linley at the center. This was the Windscout spell once again. In an area with a diameter of 300 meters centered on Linley, nothing could escape Linley's attention.

Generally speaking, after walking for an extended period of time, Linley would be cautious and cast the Windscout spell. After walking for a while, Linley once again cast the Windscout spell.

"Ah, a group of people? Why are those people hiding on top of that tree?" Linley felt curious.

At this moment, about a hundred meters south of Linley, around ten or so people were hiding on top of an enormous old tree, with a girth so wide that seven people had to link hands to surround it. Curious, Linley couldn't help but quietly sneak closer.

Slowly, carefully, Linley crept into a patch of tall, thick grass, from whence he had a vantage point to peer at the ten people on the tree.

Those ten or so people were all wearing black clothes, and each of them had a black dagger sheathed at their waists.

"Black dagger?" Linley's gaze fixed upon one black dagger in particular.

In terms of both shape and coloration, it was identical to the one in Linley's hands. In addition, the ten or so people hiding on top of the tree gave Linley a similar, sinister feeling, very much like when Linley encountered that first assassin.

"The same black clothes, and the same black dagger, and..." Linley noticed that the backs of all of these men were bulging slightly.

Linley couldn't help but think back to that first assassin, who had his backpack tightly strapped to his back, beneath his clothes. It was only because Bebe had ripped the assassin's clothes open that they had discovered the backpack.

"They belong to the same organization." Even an idiot would come to this conclusion.

Linley's heartbeat involuntarily began to speed up. At this point in time, the people hiding on the tree were talking in a low tone.

"Why haven't #18 and #7 come back yet?" One of the black-garbed men said unhappily.

"Possibly dead." Another black-garbed man said coldly.

"Watch the time. We'll wait until night falls. If they aren't back by nightfall, then regardless of whether or not they are still alive, they will be considered to have failed." Another black-garbed man said coldly. Hearing his words, the other black-garbed men fell silent.

Hidden within the grass below, Linley could guess that the person who had just spoke was the leader of this group of black-garbed men. He felt secretly startled. "The person who tried to kill me originally was a warrior of the sixth rank, specializing in the darkness-style. Most likely, their leader is even stronger."

Linley immediately moved to retreat, but after just taking a few steps back...

The leader suddenly frowned and swerved, staring directly at Linley.

"Swish!"

A black blur shot out at Linley at high speed, shocking Linley. He realized, "I've been exposed!" He immediately utilized the wind-style Supersonic speed, and at the highest speed he could muster, fled deeper in the forest.

As far as Linley was concerned, the deeper one went into the mountains, the more dangerous it was. The opponent, upon seeing him run into the deep, dangerous mountains, might hesitate and refrain from chasing him. Linley had already made up his mind that after going a bit deeper in, he would change directions and leave.

Seeing the black backpack on Linley's back and the black dagger in his hands, the expression on the face of the leader of the group changed.

"#2, deal with him." The black-garbed leader ordered.

The higher the ranking number was, the stronger one was. The leader had already been able to accurately gauge Linley's strength from Linley's movements just then.

"Yes, lord." One of the black-garbed men immediately jumped down from the tree, and began to pursue Linley with astonishing speed. But because Linley had a significant head start, and was quite far from him to begin with, the two of them started off at a 70 meter distance.

But this black-garbed man really was very fast, seemingly a bit faster than even the first assassin.

"What astonishing speed." Linley agilely made his way into the mountains, sometimes crawling, sometimes jumping.

But from behind, the black-garbed man continued to coldly pursue, and the distance between the two continued to shrink. 60 meters. 50 meters. 40 meters. 30 meters. The longer Linley fled, the closer the pursuing assassin got.

10 meters. 9 meters. 8 meters. 7 meters!

Apparently terrified out of his wits, Linley headed directly for the deepest parts of the mountains.

"Wind-style magus?" The black-garbed man could tell that Linley was being aided by wind magic. "Even aided by wind-magic, he's so slow. Looks like he's a warrior of the fourth rank, at most the peak of the fourth rank." Totally confident in his ability to kill Linley, the black-garbed man continued to draw closer.

On the surface, Linley seemed terrified, but in reality, he was quite calm and steady.

"We've run a few kilometers. Those ten assassins shouldn't be able to see us from here." A cold look suddenly flashed through the fleeing Linley's eyes, and at the same time, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, which had been crouched over, 'terrified' on Linley's shoulders, suddenly moved.

Whoosh!

The little Shadowmouse suddenly expanded in size before the assassin's eyes, and in the blink of an eye reached him. The assassin could clearly see the little Shadowmouse's fiercely sharp teeth...

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 20, The Black Dagger (part 2)

The dark-robed man, just five or six meters away from Linley, had considered the dark Shadowmouse beneath notice, but upon seeing Bebe's amazing speed, his cold face showed an expression of astonishment. "What is this speed?!" The dark-robed man hurriedly waved his dagger to block.

Clearly, this dark-robed man was somewhat stronger than the original assassin. At least when facing Bebe, he had the presence of mind and speed to wield his dagger.

"Swish!" Bebe swung his sharp claws fiercely.

"Clang!"

As Bebe's claws slammed into the assassin's dagger, the black dagger exploded into fragments, while Bebe's claws, undamaged, immediately slashed violently against the dark-robed man's head, directly shattering it. The man died on the spot.

"The gap between the sixth rank and the seventh rank really is enormous." Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but sigh.

Bebe was a terrifying Shadowmouse who could even force the mighty Velocidragon, a magical beast of the seventh rank, to flee. Based on the power of Bebe's sharp claws and sharp fangs, killing a warrior of the sixth rank was as easy as eating rice.

"Rip!" Linley ran over to the corpse and tore the dark-garbed man's clothes apart, immediately grabbing the hidden backpack. Without doing anything else, he immediately turned and fled northwards. Gusts of winds arose around his legs, and he began moving with such grace and agility that he left almost no trail in his wake.

After a while, a second group of dark-garbed men finally arrived. Seeing the injury on #2's head, all of them frowned.

"A magical beast?" The images of many different magical beasts suddenly began to swim about in the mind of a dark-garbed man. "A Blue Shadowmouse of the sixth rank? Or a Violet Shadowmouse of the seventh rank? Or a Gold Stoneater Rat of the seventh rank?" This fierce but tiny claw mark must have been left by a rodent-type magical beast.

In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, some people believed that the most terrifying possibility was encountering a magical beast of the eighth or ninth ranks. Others believed that it was encountering a terrifying swarm of pack-type magical beasts. But in the heart of the dark-garbed man, the most terrifying possibility was encountering a Stoneater Rat swarm or a Shadowmouse swarm.

The Stoneater Rat had formidable defense, sharp teeth, and sharp claws.

The Shadowmouse had high speed, sharp teeth, and sharp claws.

If a swarm of thousands or tens of thousands of Shadowmice or Stoneater Rats attacked, even an army might be totally devoured, much less the ten of them.

"We're going back now!" Without hesitating in the slightest, the dark-garbed leader issued his order.

.....

Amidst towering mountains and ridges, Linley continued to run, winding his way atop of a mountain peak. After having run over a hundred kilometers at once, Linley believed that his pursuers would no longer be able to catch him.

"Boss, hurry up and open the backpack and see what's inside!" Bebe immediately urged.

Linley's heart was filled with anticipation as well. The more powerful an opponent was, the more magicite cores he should have in his backpack. That original assassin had left behind 15,000 gold coins worth of magicite cores and magicite gems. How much would this second assassin, who had been addressed as #2, have on him?

He opened the backpack.

"Two more sets of clean clothes." Linley glanced at the clothes in the backpack, then withdrew two bulging pouches from within the backpack. This "#2" had been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for a month longer and was a bit stronger than the original assassin, so logically speaking...

Seeing how many magicite cores these pouches contained, Linley couldn't help but suck in a cold breath.

"So many? And most of them are magicite cores of the fifth rank. There's plenty of magicite cores of the sixth rank as well." After having seen so many magicite cores, Linley was now capable of recognizing the general rank of a magicite core at a glance. Linley immediately began to do a careful accounting of the cores.

"9 magicite cores of the sixth rank. 56 magicite cores of the fifth rank. 12 magicite cores of the fourth rank. Seven magicite gems. The total value, all together, would be roughly....20,000 gold coins. Adding this to the 50,000 gold coins worth that I already have, means that I should now hold at least 70,000 gold coins worth of magicite on me." After tabulating his total wealth, Linley couldn't help but take a deep breath.

70,000 gold coins!

If he placed this prodigious sum in front of his father, his father would most likely be stupefied.

Over the course of the 51 days he had spent in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, that assassin's organization alone had 'donated' 35,000 gold coins to him. The other attempted killers he had run into had 'donated' a further 30,000 gold coins, while he himself had killed enough magical beasts to earn 5000 gold coins worth of cores as well.

Doehring Cowart appeared from within the Coiling Dragon ring, laughing as he watched the look on Linley's face.

"I finally understood why so many people in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts like to try and kill other humans. After spending a full month working so hard, I only earned a few thousand gold coins, but when I killed someone else, I gained the fruits of their two months of labor." Linley placed the two pouches into his own backpack, then tossed the extra backpack into the grass.

"Of these 70,000 gold coins worth of magicite, only 5000 came from me killing magical beasts. The rest all came from assassins and killers." Linley shook his head and sighed.

Doehring Cowart stroked his white beard while chuckling. "Looks like your youth actually helped you. If you looked just a bit more mature and experienced, there probably wouldn't have been so many killers trying their luck against you."

"Hehe." Linley couldn't help but laugh.

"Grandpa Doehring, just now, based on the words being exchanged by the people in that squad, it seems like they were on a training mission here in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?" Linley was rather curious.

Doehring Cowart smiled faintly. "Linley, every single one of the major powers of the Yulan continent has to have its own base of martial power in order to maintain its strength. But martial power has to be trained and cultivated. Many of the larger powers will often send groups of its subordinates out to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts to train."

Linley nodded.

“Linley, this continent has many powerful organizations which you don’t have a clue about. To be honest...even I don’t know about them. In the past five thousand years, all of the powers which existed in the era of the Pouant Empire have most likely collapsed.” Doehring Cowart said self-deprecatingly.

Linley didn’t ask too much. At this moment, Linley felt enormous pressure. The Yulan continent was far more complicated than he had imagined.

After organizing his possessions, Linley put on a shirt before continuing on his way. Making his way agilely through the mountain forests, sometimes skipping over fallen rocks, sometimes crawling over fallen trees, Linley pressed onwards. But after Linley crossed a particularly large mountain....

He saw that this mountain was hundreds of kilometers long. There were many trees here. Standing at the peak of the mountain, Linley could tell that there was a distance of hundreds of kilometers from here to the next peak, if he wanted to directly fly across the gap.

“What a bizarre canyon.”

Linley noticed that the canyon walls of these two mountain’s cliffs drew closer and closer to each other at the edges. Linley immediately began to jog down from the mountain peak. The farther down he jogged, the closer the canyon walls appeared to be. After jogging for five or six kilometers, the gap between the two mountains was only a meter across.

One could cross it with a single step.

"It's like this on this side. What is it like on the other side? The same?"

With one foot on each cliff, Linley peered across. Off in the distance, he seemed to see the two cliffs draw even closer, then become one.

"Bizarre. Bizarre."

Having been in these mountains for some time, Linley had seen many things, but he had never encountered such a weird canyon. Looking down through the canyon gap, Linley only saw a white fog, so blurry that he couldn't see anything at all.

"Immeasurably deep." Linley felt extremely curious, but was also rather wary what lay within the belly of this mountain gulch.

Making his way along the edges of the canyon, Linley continued peering down, as though hoping he could see what was hidden by white fog. Aside from how close the canyon walls were, there was another oddity to this ravine.

It seemed that the farther down the ravine was, the farther apart the canyon walls drew again.

For example, towards the top of the ravine, the distance between the canyon walls was perhaps a hundred meters or so, but from what Linley could tell, towards the bottom, the distance was perhaps a few thousand meters, or even tens of kilometers.

"Hrm? That's..."

Linley looked as though he had been struck by lightning. He carefully stared at a small patch of grass that was hidden beneath the fog beneath him. The small patch of grass growing alongside the cliffside was dark green, but the patch of grass emanated a faint blue aura.

"Blueheart Grass. It's Blueheart Grass!" Linley had seen a picture of Blueheart Grass at the Ernst Institute's library, and he remembered it clearly. His eyes shone. That ultra-rare, precious grass growing from the cliff was able to counteract the harmful effects which live dragon's blood would have on the body. Blueheart Grass!

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Chapter 21 – The Foggy Gulch (part 1)

If one desired to train using the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual', one must rouse up the Dragonblood in one's veins. But there were only two possible ways by which one could agitate the Dragonblood in one's veins. The first was to reach a certain minimum level of Dragonblood density in one's veins. The second was to drink fresh blood from a live dragon.

But drinking blood from a living dragon was very dangerous.

Dragon's blood, even when applied topically, would cause terrible pain, to say nothing of drinking it. However, everything in the world had its equal opposite. Blueheart Grass, when paired with dragon's blood, made for an extremely potent mixture. But Blueheart Grass was extremely rare. Linley had previously asked about the price.

A single patch of Blueheart Grass was worth tens of thousands of gold coins. What's more, it was a rare item that often couldn't be bought even if one had the money. Doehring Cowart had once said: "Live dragon's blood is incredibly powerful. Usually, a single patch of Blueheart Grass is insufficient. If you are going to drink a large amount of live dragon's blood, you will need even more Blueheart Grass."

A single patch of Blueheart Grass was already that expensive. How could Linley afford it? Perhaps his entire fortune of 70,000, acquired over this month, would only be enough to buy a single patch.

"Blueheart Grass, Blueheart Grass! Heaven is being so kind to me." Linley felt unspeakable joy.

Linley energetically leapt down directly, falling several dozen meters before landing against the cliff on the other side. And then, he immediately began to mumble the words to a spell. In a short time, Linley's entire body was surrounded by flowing air elemental essences, and flows of air began to surround him as well.

Wind-style spell of the fifth rank – Floating Technique.

At his current level, Linley was only able to allow his body to float, rather than actually fly. Floating meant allowing himself to float up or down vertically. Taking a step forward, Linley stood in mid-air before slowly beginning to float down, gradually descending into the deep, foggy canyon. Bebe enviously stood on Linley's shoulder as they descended. Although Bebe was rather powerful, he wasn't capable of flight. He wasn't a flying-type magical beast, thus he would only be able to fly upon becoming a Saint-level magical beast.

This canyon was filled with the white fog, which roiled about. The deeper Linley went, the greater the distance between the canyon walls became. Quite soon, Linley landed near the Blueheart Grass.

"Blueheart Grass is deep green in color, but emanates a faint blue light. Blueheart Grass is cool to the touch. When the blades of grass are torn apart, they will leak out a dark green fluid which is very cool when drunk." Linley remembered quite well this explanation in the Ernst Institute library about Blueheart Grass.

Staring at the Blueheart Grass growing out from the cliff, rustling gently in the wind, Linley took a deep breath, then carefully uprooted the Blueheart Grass.

"It really is cold." When he touched the Blueheart Grass, he felt as though he had touched a piece of ice. He immediately placed the Blueheart Grass into his backpack, and then looked all around. "I wonder if there is any more Blueheart Grass here!"

A place which was capable of giving birth to one patch of Blueheart Grass was capable of giving birth to a second.

Using the Floating Technique, Linley continued to drift downwards into the roiling white fog. At the same time, Linley kept a close eye out, despite the fog making everything blurry. He could make out countless vines twisting about the cliffs.

"That's huge!"

The farther down into the canyon he went, the more Linley realized how enormous this place truly was. At the top of the canyon, the distance between the two walls was perhaps only a few hundred meters, but by now, Linley was certain that the distance was absolutely at least several thousand meters. He continued to float close to the wall. Using his vision, his flotation speed, and his angle against the wall, he was able to guesstimate this distance.

"Roar..."

"Grrr..."

All sorts of low-pitched growls emanated from below, occasionally sounding out. They came from all over the place. Just judging from the sound alone, there had to be over a hundred magical beasts below. Linley couldn't help but feel his heart quail. "Magical beasts. There are many magical beasts below!" Just from hearing the sound, Linley could tell.

Linley fixed himself against the cliff walls while gripping onto the vines with his hands as he descended more slowly and more carefully.

"Boss, I can sense great danger below." Bebe suddenly said to Linley through their mental link.

Linley also felt as though his heart was tightening. The further down he went, the clearer the growls of the magical beasts became. Those low growls were powerful. Clearly, they were coming from magical beasts of large size. Generally speaking, large magical beasts were not weak. Powerful magical beasts weren't necessarily large, but large magical beasts were generally powerful.

"Blueheart Grass!"

Linley suddenly saw that directly below him, far away, was another patch of Blueheart Grass. Surrounding the Blueheart Grass was many green vines and shrubs. As Linley was not a fearful person to begin with, upon seeing the Blueheart Grass, Linley began float down while keeping his hands gripped to the rattan vines.

But at this point in time, Linley totally failed to notice...

Coiled up amidst the green vines surrounding the Blueheart Grass was a giant green python snake, at least twenty meters long and thick enough that it would take two men to put their arms around it. That giant python was very green and also coiled up like a rattan vine. Given that it was also covered slightly by the fog, Linley didn't notice that it was there at all.

As he descended, Linley drew nearer and nearer to the Blueheart Grass.

"Boss, careful! That's a monstrous python!" Bebe suddenly, urgently said to Linley through their link.

"Python?" Linley was startled.

Virtually all python-type magical beasts were exceedingly powerful. Even the weakest Trihorn Python was a magical beast of the sixth rank. Linley immediately surveyed his surroundings carefully. By now, Linley was roughly around a hundred meters away from the giant python. After carefully searching for it, he quickly located the giant python.

"Whoah." Linley sucked in a deep breath.

That thirty-meter long python, as thick as a water barrel, made Linley's heart quail. "Green Tattooed Python. A magical beast of the seventh rank – the Green Tattooed Python." The information he knew about this type of Python immediately sprang to mind.

By now, Linley also realized why it was that this canyon had so much white fog.

"The Mist Technique is just a water-style technique of the first rank. A single Green Tattooed Python, a magical beast of the seventh rank, can generate enormous, almost unlimited amounts of white mist in its surroundings. With this canyon having so much mist of such density, there's definitely more than one Green Tattooed Python here."

Linley immediately came to this realization.

The canyon had a depth and width of around ten kilometers long. For such a huge canyon to be totally covered in white mist, one could only imagine how many Pythons were here. That Green Tattooed Python which lay hidden amidst the vines suddenly moved. Its enormous head turned to stare at Linley, and its two cold eyes stared death at him.

"Grrrr..."

A terrifying sound rumbled out from the Green Tattooed Python's maw, and at the same time, it shot forward at high speed.

"Rawr!" "Hiss!" "Grrr!" The entire canyon began to fill up with the calls of various beasts. At the same time, loud, sonorous movement sounds could be heard. Glancing below, Linley saw that over ten enormous creatures were moving towards him. And, Linley could tell that these ten made up just a tiny fraction of the creatures in this gorge.

"Flee!"

Faced with the attack by the Green Tattooed Python, Linley immediately began floating up at maximum speed. Controlling the force of the wind, he was able to make the flotation pressure exceed his body weight, causing him to rocket upwards at an astonishing speed. While flying upwards, Linley could already see a monstrously large Green Tattooed Python crawl up after him along the cliff walls. Its cold, serpentine eyes stared at Linley, promising death while the serpent itself hissed nonstop.

"Screech! Screech!"

A high-pierced bird cry split the air, and from below, dozens of giant birds suddenly charged forward in pursuit of Linley.

"Dragonhawks! Those are Dragonhawks!" Linley's face immediately turned paper white.

Book 3, The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 22, The Foggy Gulch (part 2)

Over ten Dragonhawks, each larger than a Griffon, were flying in fast pursuit of Linley. Through the Coiling Dragon ring, Linley immediately expended his mageforce to make himself rise even faster, while at the same time beginning to mumble the words to the Earthguard spell.

“Whoosh!”

Only the roaring wind could be heard. Linley had long since left the Green Tattooed Python behind, but the Dragonhawks flew at an amazing speed, and were drawing closer and closer to Linley. Even after Linley flew out of the canyon, those ten Dragonhawks continued in hot pursuit of Linley, following him outside.

Running at his maximum speed, Linley made his way through the forest as quickly as possible, but no matter how fast his legs were, how could he compare with the speed of the winged Dragonhawks?

“Screeeech!” The Dragonhawks issued piercing cries.

The wingspan of the Dragonhawks, at maximum extension, was over twenty meters long. These ten-plus Dragonhawks blotted out the sky as they all flew directly at Linley. Linley felt as though the entire world was growing dark. As the Dragonhawks descended upon Linley, they all opened their beaks and belched forth plumes of flame at him, immediately turning the surrounding trees into blazing pyres.

Fortunately, the Earthguard armor which Linley summoned continued to protect him, covering his entire body.

“Crackle, crackle.” The fires roared and blazed against the Earthguard armor. Earth-colored elemental essence swirled all about Linley.

Amongst the dragon-type creatures, Dragonhawks and Landwyrms were the weakest of their kin, but even they, the weakest of dragon-type creatures, were magical beasts of the sixth rank. What’s more, Landwyrms and Dragonhawks were pack-type beasts. Faced with an aerial assault from over ten magical beasts of the sixth rank, even a warrior of the seventh rank would flee.

The Dragonhawks charged forward, descending upon Linley....

“Smash!” A Dragonhawk’s sharp talons smote Linley’s Earthguard armor a mighty blow. The Earthguard armor shuddered visibly, and specks of golden light began to gently flicker on top of it.

“I can’t take those hits head on!”

That clawed attack terrified Linley. At the highest speed he could muster, he scurried deeper into the forest, charging into the densest, hardest-to-traverse area. Jumping, leaping, crawling...Linley went all out in his attempt to flee. But those Dragonhawk’s continued to strike viciously at Linley’s head with their vicious claws.

“Hissss!”

Bebe let out a fierce screech of his own, and then he rose on his hind legs, suddenly transforming in size from twenty centimeters to half a meter tall. But compared to the Dragonhawks, with their 20-meter long wingspans, Bebe was still just a small speck.

“Swish!” Bebe leapt off of Linley’s shoulders, transforming into a black blur as he shot directly towards the closest attacking Dragonhawk.

The terrifying sound of bones splintering could suddenly be heard, along with the agonized cries of the Dragonhawk. That Dragonhawk directly fell from the sky, but before it did, Bebe used it as a launchpad to leap at the next closest Dragonhawk. With two vicious bites, he directly bit this one to death as well.

Dragonhawks were just beasts of the sixth rank, while Bebe was able to force a magical beast of the seventh rank, a Velocidragon, to flee in defeat.

What’s more...

There was a huge gap in difficulty to advance as well as in power from the sixth rank to the seventh rank. Bebe wasn’t capable of flight, but once he got into physical contact with a Dragonhawk, it was as good as dead. In a few short moments, three of the ten-plus Dragonhawks were dead.

The other Dragonhawks all flew higher in terror. Seeing them fly higher, there was nothing that Bebe could do either, as he himself could not fly.

Those Dragonhawks hovered around Linley for a while, before finally letting out a few mournful cries as they began flying back towards the canyon.

"What a terrifying gorge." Only now did Linley finally let out a sigh.

While collecting the magicite cores of the three dead Dragonhawks, Linley pondered the question of the Foggy Gorge.

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley suddenly called out, and Doehring Cowart flew out of the Coiling Dragon ring. Still appearing to wear a pristine, moon-white robe, Doehring Cowart smiled as he spoke to Linley. "Linley, is there something you need?"

Linley had not yet calmed down.

"Grandpa Doehring, just now, I entered a foggy gorge. I didn't expect the place to be brimming with magical beasts. There was a Green Tattooed Python there, and huge crawling creatures. I didn't get a good look at them, but in terms of size, they definitely were not any smaller than a Velocidragon. There were Dragonhawks there as well...and I could tell that this was in just a small portion of the gorge. I have no idea how large the entirety of the Foggy Gorge was."

Thinking back, Linley felt a surge of fear again. He had actually stumbled into such a gathering spot for magical beasts in that gorge.

"Oh?"

Doehring Cowart seemed rather surprised. "This Foggy Gorge had so many magical beasts? Interesting. Generally speaking, only magical beasts of the same type will gather together, but the magical beasts you just mentioned were all of different types. They actually all gathered together in this Foggy Gorge? Interesting. How interesting. If I were still alive, I would most likely go inside and take a look myself."

Linley shook his head helplessly and laughed, "That gorge even contained Blueheart Grass. There was one patch that I didn't have time to gather. I was only able to gather one."

"Blueheart Grass?" Doehring Cowart's eyes lit up. "Any place where Blueheart Grass can grow definitely is no ordinary place. There definitely must be some sort of precious treasure within that Foggy Gorge, or perhaps some extremely powerful magical beast, such as a magical beast of the ninth rank, or even a Saint-level magical beast. However..."

Doehring Cowart began to frown. "Generally speaking, powerful magical beasts are very territorial. If there was a powerful magical beast there, they probably wouldn't permit creatures like Dragonhawks and Green Tattooed Pythons to live there as well."

"But Dragonhawks, Green Tattooed Pythons, and those huge crawling beasts you mentioned are all able to live there together? Bizarre. How bizarre." Doehring Cowart couldn't understand either. This Foggy Gorge seemed to be full of contradictions.

Linley laughed. "Grandpa Doehring, don't overthink it. When I become a magus of the seventh rank, I'll be able to use the 'Soaring Technique'. At that time, we'll come for another investigation.

Upon becoming a magus of the seventh rank, his Earthguard would have reached the level of generating jadestone armor. The additional speed granted by the Supersonic spell would also dramatically improve. By then, Linley would have full confidence in his ability to deal with the Dragonhawks. And with the ability to use the Soaring Technique to fly, Linley would be able to easily enter and leave the gorge.

"Magus of the seventh rank? You are only a magus of the fifth rank right now. You have a long way to go." Doehring Cowart said, pouring cold water over Linley's enthusiasm.

In his heart, Linley knew this as well.

Perhaps becoming a magus of the sixth rank wouldn't be too hard, but there was a huge gap between the sixth rank and the seventh rank.

"All roads are traversed one step at a time." Linley smiled. "It's been about two months since I entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. It is about time for me to go back. It'll take several days to get back anyhow. I'll use that time to do some more training."

With Bebe on his shoulders, Linley embarked on his return trip back home.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 23, Her Name Was Alice (part 1)

On the return journey, the magical beasts which Linley encountered grew progressively weaker. By the time Linley stepped into the outer regions, all of the monsters he encountered were of the third and fourth ranks. They posed no threat to him at all. But despite this, Linley didn't dare to relax his vigilance.

Doehring Cowart travelled alongside Linley, but in his mind, Doehring Cowart was worrying. Right now, Linley carried within him a steady, stable presence, but when he made his move, he showed no mercy at all. His eyes also carried within them a cold, forbidding aura.

Doehring Cowart still remembered how, when he first entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley's eyes were filled with sincerity. He was a very trusting person.

After hesitating for a while, Doehring Cowart mentally spoke to Linley. "Linley."

Making his way through the mountains, Linley turned his head to look questioningly at Doehring Cowart. "Grandpa Doehring, what is it?"

Doehring Cowart nodded as he spoke seriously. "Linley, before entering the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, I had warned you that people were not to be easily trusted, as people's intentions are not easily understood. I told you to be wary of others, to have a cautious mind."

Linley nodded. "Grandpa Doehring, your words were very correct. One really cannot easily trust others. If I had listened to Grandpa Doehring's words early on, my chest most likely wouldn't have this knife scar."

Doehring Cowart shook his head. "Although one cannot easily trust others, one also cannot be over-cautious. The way you are currently, how will you be able to interact with people in the future? Remember, you can't be too cold and callous towards others, even if you can't be overly trusting either. Trust is something which is built up through a long period of time. Do not easily trust the words of others."

Linley was very smart. Both at home and at the Ernst Institute, he had read many books. Upon hearing Doehring Cowart's words, he somewhat understood. But the merciless life he had experienced over these past two months, the human cruelty he had witnessed and experienced, was something he had seen so clearly. For him to trust people again would be very hard.

"Doehring Cowart, I understand." Linley nodded.

Doehring Cowart secretly sighed, but at the same time, he was also happy. "It's a good thing that Linley has this little Shadowmouse, Bebe, for a companion, as well as those friends of his at the Ernst Institute. At least he shouldn't become excessively unfeeling."

Doehring Cowart could still remember how, thousands of years ago, when the Pouant Empire was still around, another Saint-level combatant of the Pouant Empire who also dressed in white. That white-robed man was a famous Sword Saint, and he was also an extremely proud, reclusive person.

“Grandpa Doebling, when father sees all of these magicite cores, what do you think his reaction will be?” Linley suddenly looked at Doebling Cowart, smiling as he asked the question. At this moment, Linley’s eyes were filled with eagerness for his father’s praise.

He looked just like a kid who had just performed stellarly on a test and was awaiting his father’s praise.

“Linley, are you planning to give all of this money to your father?” Doebling Cowart asked with a smile.

Linley nodded. “Of course. These magicite cores are worth around 70,000 gold coins. All I need is enough to feed myself. A few dozen coins each year is enough. But father needs to manage all of our clan’s affairs, and also provide for Wharton’s tuition. Of course I’ll give these magicite cores to father.”

Linley didn’t want to personally sell these magicite cores. After all, in terms of buying and selling, he had no experience at all. He probably wouldn’t even know if he got cheated.

“Haha, I trust your father will be so excited that he’ll be jumping up and down,” Doebling Cowart said, laughing loudly.

Linley couldn’t help but grin as well. He immediately sped up the pace on his journey back.

By now, Linley couldn’t even be bothered to kill magical beasts of the third and fourth ranks. He quickly made his way through the mountains. When he arrived next to a small creek, he paused as he heard the furious bellows of a magical beast, intermixed with the shouts of humans engaged in battle with it.

“Hrm? If they dare come to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, they must be at least combatants of the fifth rank. But in the surrounding areas, the local beasts are of the third or fourth ranks at most. How could the battle sound so prolonged and frenetic?” Linley was rather curious.

Within the inner areas of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, where beasts of the fifth, sixth, and sometimes even the seventh rank would appear, there would often be many frantic battles. But in the outer areas, this was quite rare. Battles would generally end extremely quickly.

With a jump, Linley leapt 7-8 meters up. Landing on a tree, he began tree-walking his way towards the scene of the battle.

Upon arriving, Linley surveyed the battle from his position on the tree.

He saw that there were two young men and two young women engaged in a bloody battle with a Bloodthirsty Warpig. One of the youths, wearing a white armor, was shouting out loudly while directing the course of battle. “Second bro, don’t run around so wildly! Protect Alice [Ai’li’si]! I’ll draw this stupid pig’s attention away. Niya [Ni’ya], don’t panic, aim your arrows at its vitals!”

These four people clearly were very inexperienced. Upon encountering danger, they had panicked. Only the leader wearing the white armor seemed a bit more capable.”

“These four really have some guts. That youngster in white armor should be a warrior of the fifth rank, while the other three are just combatants of the fourth rank at best.” Linley shook his head. Those other three really were daring, to come here without even having reached the fifth rank.

A red-haired youngster began to shout frantically, “Big brother Kalan [Ka’lan], didn’t you say that the outer regions only had magical beasts of the third or fourth ranks? This is a magical beast of the fifth rank!”

The leader of the group of four, the fifth ranked warrior Kalan, also felt helpless. As a warrior of the fifth rank, it shouldn’t have been a dangerous affair for him to bring a number of friends to the outer regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. But he didn’t expect to run into a magical beast of the fifth rank.

“Whoosh!” More than ten earthen spears suddenly erupted from the ground beneath the Warpig, and three of them even pierced into the Warpig’s body, but they were all broken and shattered by the Warpig’s tough hide.

“Roar!”

The Bloodthirsty Warpig immediately turned its enraged attention upon the only magus in the group, before charging forward at the magus rapidly. The Warpig’s charge was truly too fearsome, and what’s more, flicks of flame could be seen coming from its nostrils. Immediately, it caused the remaining youngster to panic.

"Run! Alice, quick, dodge!" Kalan shouted loudly.

The girl named Alice had a head full of long, golden hair and a pair of hazy eyes. Seeing the danger, Alice too tried to flee in panic, but the Bloodthirsty Warpig was a magical beast of the fifth rank, after all. Although it was not very intelligent, it was much smarter than a normal animal.

The Bloodthirsty Warpig chased after Alice.

Seeing the Warpig charge after her, Alice was going to flee, but as she did, she slipped and tripped on a vine and fell face-forward into the ground. Turning her head, she saw the furious eyes of the Warpig draw closer and closer to her. Based on Alice's weak physical conditioning, the Bloodthirsty Warpig probably was capable of killing her with just one stomp.

Alice was struck dumb with terror.

The other two boys and the girl were also stupefied, not knowing what to do. There was no way they could rescue her in time.

"Alice!" The youngster called Kalan shouted loudly with anguish. Although he was a warrior of the fifth rank, he simply didn't have enough experience."

"Rumble!"

Seven or eight sharp earthen spears suddenly jutted out of the ground.

Although the Bloodthirsty Warpig, a magical beast of the fifth rank, did have thick skin, two of the spears still managed to penetrate its thick skin and into its flesh, causing fresh blood to flow from the wound.

But alas...

The earthen spears only pierced its flesh. They didn't actually cause any injury to its vitals or organs.

"Grrrrrrrrr!" The Bloodthirsty Warpig lifted its head up and bellowed in pain.

"Swish!" A black dagger suddenly fell down from above, piercing into the Warpig's eye like a bolt of lightning. The Warpig's eyeball exploded, and the black dagger penetrated directly into the Warpig's brain. Agonized, the Warpig's entire body shuddered as it collapsed. Shortly afterwards, it no longer moved.

Kalan, Niya, and Alice were all so terrified, their hearts almost leapt out of their bodies.

They watched as a powerfully built young warrior dressed in blue used the knife to extract the magicite core of the Warpig in a very practiced manner, and then turn to leave. But Kalan was the first amongst the four to recover, and he immediately shouted out, "Friend, please stay!"

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 24, Her Name Was Alice (part 2)

"Hrm?" Linley turned around, frowning.

Kalan immediately walked over to thank Linley. "My name is Kalan. I very much would like to thank you for your support. If it wasn't for you, Alice most likely would've died just then."

That girl named Alice ran over as well. Clearly, she was still panicked, and she was panting so heavily her chest rose and fell with each breath. But her soft, hazy eyes were fixed on Linley. "Thank you for saving my life. I'm Alice. My full name is Alice Straf [Si'da'fu]. I'm also a magus of the earth-style."

Linley's gaze paused for a moment on Alice.

He had to admit, Alice was a very refined-looking young lady. She had an aura which would naturally make men want to cherish and protect her. She was the sort of girl who didn't need to use her voice or cosmetics to improve herself.

"Linley, when you see people in danger in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, you usually don't assist, right? What's going on today?" Doehring Cowart's jesting voice rang out in Linley's head. "Oh, I get it, you must have taken a fancy to that Alice girl."

Linley frowned.

“Grandpa Doehring, in the past, it wasn’t that I didn’t want to help them. It was that within the inner regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the monsters which people were dealing with were at least magical beasts of the sixth rank, sometimes even the seventh rank. I didn’t have the ability to help them. Killing a beast of the fifth rank isn’t too hard, which is why I went ahead and helped.” Linley immediately explained to Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart chuckled and no longer spoke.

“My name is Tony [Tuo’ni]. Milord magus, what is your name?” The other male youth also spoke.

Linley calmly glanced at this group of people. “How long have you been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?”

“This is the first day,” Kalan admitted helplessly. “I didn’t expect that on our very first day, we would encounter a magical beast of the fifth rank. We really were too unlucky. Based on what the books said, the outer region should only have magical beasts of the third and fourth ranks. The four of us shouldn’t have been in any danger.”

“Foolish.” Linley shook his head and spoke.

That female archer named Niya immediately got angry. “Hey, why are you being so cocky? You saved Alice, but that doesn’t give you the right to insult people!”

“Niya!” Kalan immediately shouted.

Linley directly explained, "I really very much admire your courage, that all of you dare to barge into the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts like this. But at the same time, I have to say that you are very lucky. You didn't run into any bandits on your way to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts."

"Bandits?" Kalan and the others looked at each other. They really hadn't encountered any bandits.

The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was over ten thousand kilometers long, after all. There were many routes by which one could enter. To not encounter any bandits was very normal.

"Let me tell you this. If you don't want to die, then immediately depart these mountains." Linley directly said.

"Why? Are there a lot of magical beasts of the fifth rank in the outer regions as well?" The younger named Tony said curiously.

Linley calmly explained, "In these mountains, especially in the outer areas, the most danger comes not from magical beasts, but from other humans. The four of you are both weak and inexperienced. I trust that certain greedy people will not let you slip away. I expect that the only reason why you haven't been discovered yet is because today is your first day in these mountains. Otherwise, the four of you would be killed by now."

"The most danger comes from other humans?" Kalan frowned, but shortly afterwards, his face changed.

Kalan respectfully said to Linley, "Milord magus, we just entered these mountains and only know a little bit about this area. We made a private decision to come here. I hope you can assist us, milord magus, and escort us out of these mountains."

Linley couldn't help but frown.

He hated trouble. But if these people were to encounter bandits on their way home, they really would be in for it.

"Milord magus, we beseech your aid." Alice also begged.

Linley glanced at Alice. Seeing the look of appeal in her eyes, and imagining her being killed by bandits, Linley's heart softened. Nodding, he said, "Fine. I'm headed back anyways. I'll take you along with me. But if we really do encounter bandits on the way back, I can only promise to try my best. If you end up getting killed, there's nothing I can do."

Kalan immediately joyfully nodded. "For you to be willing to aid us, milord magus, we are extremely grateful already."

Linley nodded, then immediately headed forwards. His back towards the four of them, he said, "Follow me." Kalan and the other four began following Linley. Under Linley's protection, they departed the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and headed in the direction of the city.

.....

On the road back, Kalan and the others learned Linley's name. That Alice, also an earth-style magus, was filled with admiration for Linley. She, too, was only fifteen years old, and she was considered the number one genius at the Wellen [Wei'lin] Institute.

But despite this, Alice was only a magus of the fourth rank. This sort of accomplishment, at the Ernst Institute, would only be considered average.

A break in the journey. Linley, Kalan, Alice, and the others were all eating. Linley and Alice were seated together.

"Big brother Linley, you really are too amazing. You became a magus of the fifth rank when you were fourteen. I probably will be twenty when I reach the fifth rank." Alice stared worshipfully at Linley.

"I'm nothing. The number one genius at our institute, Dixie, became a magus of the fourth rank when he was nine, and a magus of the fifth rank when he turned twelve." Linley said casually. He didn't disclose...that when he was thirteen, he had also been a magus of the fourth rank. But by age fourteen, he had become a magus of the fifth rank."

In just one short year, he had advanced as much as Dixie had in three.

"A magus of the fourth rank at age nine? I'm fifteen, but I just became a magus of the fourth rank. And I'm considered the top genius at my school. Our Wellen Institute really can't compare at all to your Ernst Institute." Alice sighed.

"Big brother Linley, it felt like to me that your Earthen Spear Array was very powerful and formidable, even more so than the other magi of the fifth rank at my school. Why is that?" Alice was also an earth-style magus. Naturally, she noticed the differences in Linley's spell.

Linley smiled faintly. It wasn't just power. The speed at which it erupted was also very fast.

"Earth-style magic's origin lies in the essence of the world..." Linley began explaining to Alice. To be honest, in terms of understanding earth magic, Linley had a much deeper grasp and understanding than even the earth-style instructors of the Ernst Institute. After all, he had a Saint-level Grand Magus as his personal tutor.

Alice stared at Linley, totally focusing and concentrating on him.

One listened while the other spoke. As they talked, the two of them drew closer and closer to each other. Totally absorbed in magical theory, Linley only noticed after taking a break that their faces were now so close that only a fist's worth of distance separated them.

Linley was startled. This was his first time being so close to a girl. Being so close, he could clearly see Alice's two hazy, soft eyes, her pert nose... Linley even thought that he could feel her breath on him and smell the fragrance of her body.

"Big brother Linley, why'd you stop talking?" Alice asked curiously. But moments later, Alice realized what happened. She immediately pulled back, and her face immediately flushed as red as an apple.

Linley forced himself to calm down, and then stood up to face the others. Pretending that nothing was amiss, he said, "Alright, everybody eat up. We're going to continue to travel soon. Let's do our best to arrive at the city early."

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 25, Violet in the Night Wind (part 1)

On the Greenleaf Road of Fenlai City, the capital of the Kingdom of Fenlai, a member of the Holy Union, there were many noble manors clustered together. In front of one particular manor, over ten people were clustered together.

“The Debs [De’bu’si] clan would like to thank you, Linley, for your assistance. If it wasn’t for you, this child of ours, Kalan, probably would’ve suffered greatly.” A distinguished looking old man with flowing silver hair smiled towards Linley. By this old man’s side was Kalan, Alice, Tony, and Niya. Behind them were the servants of the Debs clan.”

Turning around, the old man nodded at one of the servants, who took out a small golden sack from within his clothes.

Taking the gold sack, the old man turned to Linley with a smile. “This is a hundred gold coins. Although it isn’t much, it represents the gratitude of our Debs clan. I hope, Linley, you will accept it.”

“No need. It didn’t take any effort on my part.” Linley said quite courteously. “I should be heading off now.”

The old man didn’t persist. Smiling, he watched Linley depart.

“Tony, you three should go home as well. Your parents are no doubt extremely worried.” Smiling, the old man spoke. After bidding farewell, Alice, Niya, and Tony all headed back to their own homes.

When Kalan and the silver-haired old man returned to their own living room, the old man's face suddenly turned cold. In a voice filled with frozen rage, he barked out, "On your knees!"

With a thud, Kalan immediately fell to his knees. "Second Grandpa, it was wrong of me. This time, I brazenly took three of my friends to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts without clearly investigating all of its associated dangers. Second Grandpa, please punish me."

"Hmph! Brazen?"

The old man's cold glare stared daggers at Kalan. "Kalan, you are already an adult. In addition, you are the heir and successor to our Debs clan. How can you make such a foolish, such an utterly moronic mistake? How could you possibly imagine how dangerous the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is? You dared to traverse it without so much as even informing the clan? Hmph! I'll let your own father decide what punishment would be suitable. Just let me remind you of one thing – in the future, if you continue to act so foolishly, even if the clan is handed over to you, you will wreck it!"

Hanging his head, Kalan didn't dare to speak.

The Debs clan could be considered one of the three top clans in the Kingdom of Fenlai. The reason the Debs clan was so powerful was not because it had a high rank of nobility; it was because the Debs clan was the direct trading partner in Fenlai of the Dawson Conglomerate, one of the three greatest trading unions in the Yulan continent.

The wealth of the Dawson Conglomerate could match an entire kingdom's wealth. Its business stretched across the entire continent.

Any of the three trading unions on the Yulan continent possessed a terrifying amount of both wealth and power. Here in the Kingdom of Fenlai, many clans wanted to do business with them, because being able to do business with the Dawson Conglomerate meant being able to ride atop a titanic war-machine.

For the Debs clan to be able to do business with the Dawson Conglomerate was an extremely impressive thing.

After all, even the two major alliances and the Four Great Empires had to do their best to watch their step around the trading unions and to do their best to make them happy.

.....

After departing Fenlai City, Linley took the road towards the Ernst Institute. Bebe was perched on Linley's shoulders, keeping watch, while Doehring Cowart was also walking side by side with Linley.

"Grandpa Doehring, have you ever felt that this world is a terrifying place?" Linley said mentally.

Doehring Cowart nodded, but he didn't speak. He just quietly listened.

"In the past, when I visited Fenlai City, I didn't notice anything. But upon returning from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, I've learned so much. The ruthlessness and mercilessness of the mountains is naked and open. It's bloody, without any concealment."

"If we look at the high ranking magi and warriors, as well as the nobles, of Fenlai City, on the surface, they all seem to be polite and courteous. They make the entire Fenlai City seem so splendid. But the class system in Fenlai City is so severe, so callous."

"Even the law itself gives nobles far more privileges than the commoners. Although Fenlai City is very prosperous and gaudy, filled with laughter, its unspoken rules are far more binding than those of the mountains. In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, there are no such things as nobles or commoners, only the strong and the weak."

Linley was slowly beginning to understand the world.

In this world, the nobles had all the advantages, while the commoners were trampled upon. No matter how gentlemanly and refined the nobles acted, or how benevolent they behaved, there was no way they could alter the severe inequality that existed in the world as a whole. If you wanted to have status as a commoner, your only choice was to become a powerful warrior or a powerful magus.

If you didn't strive hard, you would be discarded.

"Human society is far more complicated than the world of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. They just hide the same brutality which exists in the mountains under a beautiful set of clothes. But sometimes, this set of beautiful clothes can be very useful." From the bottom of his heart, Linley felt contempt for those nobles who pretended to be kind but really were not.

After seeing the cruelty of the mountains, as well as the splendor of Fenlai City, Linley's mentality had begun to change upon seeing the great contrast.

"Are you afraid of struggling?" Doehring Cowart suddenly asked.

Linley smirked. "Afraid? No. I enjoy it. If there were no struggles in the world, and everything was calm and peaceful, how boring would that be? I like struggle, especially struggle that is exciting. Dancing on the edge of a knife...that's the sort of life which is the most exhilarating."

"Squeak squeak!" Bebe let out two cries as well.

....

They stepped into the Ernst Institute.

After having travelled into the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and after having witnessed the cruelty of mankind, Linley cherished the genuine friendships he had formed at the Institute even more than before. Upon entering his dorm, he heard these words....

"Boss Yale, Linley still isn't back yet. Could he have run into a dangerous situation in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?"

"Shut your stinking mouth, fourth bro. Third bro will definitely come back to us safely. Come on, let's go eat..." As he raised his head, Yale saw that familiar shadow standing in the doorway. He paused, stunned. George and Reynolds were stunned as well. But then, immediately afterwards, the three of them charged forward towards Linley.

"Haha, third bro, you finally came back!" Yale was the first to reach Linley, wrapping his arms around Linley in a bear hug.

Reynolds also shouted out happily, "Wow, Linley, do you know that Boss Yale and George have been muttering about you every day? They were all worried about you. I was the only one who was totally sure you'd make it back safe."

"Fourth bro." George stared at him. "Just now, you were talking about being worried that Linley had encountered something dangerous."

"Me?" A look of 'confusion' was on Reynolds' face. "Did I say such a thing?"

Seeing his three bros together, Linley's heart instantly felt warm. Yale immediately waved his arm ostentatiously and said, "Alright, enough chitchat. Third bro's safe return from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is a major event! Let's go have a good celebration!"

"Second bro, fourth bro." Linley laughed as well. "Let's go. We have to all go and have some drinks. My treat!"

"Whoah." Reynolds stared at him. "Your treat?"

Yale laughed loudly. "Right, third bro has to treat us. Don't forget that a while back, those representatives from the Proulx Gallery contacted us and send us that letter of invitation. Those three sculptures of third bro managed to sell for over 4000 gold coins. We have to have a good celebration."

"A letter of invitation from the Proulx Gallery?" Linley was startled.

Yale hurriedly explained, "Third bro, your sculptures sold for high prices. The Proulx Gallery has already totally recognized your abilities as an expert sculptor, which is why they are now inviting you to start up a private booth at their 'Hall of the Experts'. Right, let me give the letter to you." Yale immediately ran towards the interior of the dormitory.

Reynolds said in a very secretive way towards Linley, "Linley, you wanna know something? Ever since that guy from the Proulx Gallery came to our school, the news that you've been invited to have a private booth at the gallery has spread across the entire institute. Your fame has tremendously increased."

"It's been spread across the entire institute?" Linley was somewhat numb with surprise. He himself had just found out, after all.

"Right. In the entire institute, you might be the last one to know about this, actually." George chortled as well.

"Linley, this is the letter of invitation the Proulx Gallery sent us." Yale came running out of the dormitory with a white enveloped that had a golden seal affixed to it.

Book 3, Mountain Range of Magical Beasts – Chapter 26, Violet in the Night Wind (part 2)

Night time. The four bros of dorm 1987 were walking along a dark, silent street of the Ernst Institute, casually talking about what had happened over these past two months.

"As vicious as that?" Reynolds, amazed, tugged aside Linley's shirt. Seeing all the crisscrossing scars across Linley's chest, he couldn't help but hold his breath. The nearby George also went silent. Only Yale was able to laugh, "Haha, you guys have no experience. When I was a kid, I saw way worse than this."

"Boss Yale, are you serious?" Reynolds said in astonishment.

Yale smiled cockily. "Of course I'm serious. And I've seen more than a few as well. For example, killing prisoners by torture. Or real people fighting against magical beasts with their bare hands. When they fought barehanded against the beasts, they were surrounded by a ring of rich spectators. The sight was really bloody."

Hearing Yale's words, Linley was able to picture the scene in his mind.

"It's good to be on campus," George sighed.

Linley also nodded in agreement. By this time of the night, many couples could be seen walking together on the road, some holding hands, others seated together on the backs of a magical beast. Campus life was very leisurely.

"Right. Boss Yale, aren't you going to go spend tonight with your girlfriend? Why aren't you getting ready to leave?" Reynolds suddenly said.

Yale said with dissatisfaction, "Girlfriend? My bro has just come back from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts after encountering so many near-death situations. And I'm going to go spend time with my girlfriend? Reynolds, you have to remember these words: Bro's are like your arms and legs, while girls are like your clothes. They're just good for playing with."

A look of contempt immediately appeared on Reynolds' face.

"Linley!" A surprised voice suddenly rang out from far away.

Linley and the others all turned their heads and watched as a tall, slender, beautiful young woman with golden hair ran towards them happily. Upon reaching Linley, she exclaimed in surprise, "Linley, you're back from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts? This is wonderful. You disappeared for two full months this time. I was so worried. Are you injured?"

"Delia, I'm fine," Linley laughed as he responded.

Delia was also someone whom Linley had met just as he had enrolled in school. They were on very close terms with each other. When he was together with Delia, Linley felt as though he could totally relax, and be without any mental pressure. It was just like when he was with his three dear bros.

"Delia, Uncle's carriage is outside waiting for us. Let's not waste any time." A cold voice rang out.

Turning his head, Linley saw a youth dressed in long robes standing some distance away. It was Delia's elder brother, Dixie, one of the two geniuses of the Ernst Institute. Dixie's robe was extremely clean and neat, without a single blemish or stain. His eyes also seemed very clear and tranquil.

"Oh." Letting out a disappointed sound, Delia looked at Linley. "Linley, father asked me and my brother to go back. Our carriage is outside waiting for us. I have to go back now."

"Alright, Delia. We can chat when you come back." Linley smiled as he replied.

"Right. Bye." Delia clearly felt rather disappointed at not having more time to chat with Linley. Dixie walked over to them as well. He only glanced at Delia, and Delia immediately began walking towards him. But then, Dixie turned to look at Linley. "Linley, I heard you successfully returned from your training exercise in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Congratulations."

Linley was stunned.

This Dixie was actually speaking to him?

Dixie's coldness and aloofness was legendary at the Ernst Institute.

Most people would feel themselves to be under enormous pressure next to Dixie, especially when his cold, clear eyes fell upon them. That sort of psychological pressure was enough to cause some to break under the strain.

"Oh. Thanks." Linley replied.

Dixie barely nodded, and then escorted his sister Delia to the school gates.

....

Austoni carefully looked at Linley, sighing in amazement, "Linley, I must say, you really are a genius, a super genius! A fifteen year old youngster who is a genius amongst the geniuses at the number one magus academy in the entire Yulan continent, and also someone who has reached an incredibly high level in the art of stonesculpting."

"For you to be able to accomplish all this is a miracle."

"Putting aside the fact that you are a genius magus, even in the world of artists, in this day and age, most sculptors who qualify to be invited by us to open up a private booth in the Hall of Experts are at least forty years old. You are the youngest one. Even in our entire history, there are only two unparalleled geniuses who are a match for you. But the difference is...not only are you a genius sculptor, you are also a genius magus. Wow...what a genius."

Austoni's words of praise caused Linley to be embarrassed and not know what to say.

"Austoni, stop wasting time. Hurry up and finish. We four bros are going to go out and have some fun." Yale urged.

Only now did Austoni seem to come to himself. He hurriedly pulled over a stack of documents and withdrew a silver magicrystal card. Smiling, he presented it to Linley. "Linley, this silver magicrystal card was specially designed by the Golden Bank of the Four Empires. It represents that you are one of our expert sculptors. In the future, any and all proceeds from sales of your art will be directly transferred by us into the balance for this card."

"Right now, this silver magicrystal card doesn't have an owner imprinted. Use your fingerprint to seal it to you. In the future, you can use it." Austoni respectfully handed the magicrystal card to Linley, then said in an eager voice, "Linley, might I ask if you brought any sculptures for us this time?"

Linley nodded his head slightly. "I have. Three in total."

Austoni's smile immediately became even more radiant.

....

Night time. Within the Jade Water Paradise. Linley, George, and two courtesans were there by themselves, drinking while talking and laughing. By now, Reynolds and Yale had long since retired to their rooms with their courtesans.

"Jeeze, those two, Boss Yale and fourth bro..." Linley drank a cup of wine as he spoke to George, who was in the middle of laughing and chatting with his girl. "Second bro, my head is getting a bit dizzy. I'm going to go out to cool off a bit."

"Sure." George replied, then continued to chat with his companion.

Heading downstairs, Linley directly left the Jade Water Paradise. Upon departing the lively premises, Linley suddenly felt a cold, refreshing night wind blow past him, helping to clear his mind. Compared to the Jade Water Paradise, the outside was much calmer and more tranquil. Linley began to take a casual walk around the streets of Fenlai City.

The cool night breeze was very refreshing.

There were some noble estates lining the streets, but compared to the Greenleaf Road, the estates on this street, Dry Street, were clearly on a lower level. And on the balcony of one two-story estate in particular, Alice was standing, enjoying the night breeze.

Staring up at the bright moon in the empty sky, Alice couldn't help but think about Linley, who had saved her life.

At that moment, when she had fallen into despair, he had descended from the heavens and vanquished that Bloodthirsty Warpig and saved her life. That action had shaken her deeply. It could be said that that event had left a deep impression on her soul.

"Big brother Linley is a bit taciturn, but when he gets into discussing magic, he's rather handsome." A faint smile appeared on Alice's face as she reminisced.

Suddenly, Alice saw a figure walking on the streets below. His frame seemed very familiar. Taking a closer look, she immediately recognized him, and a smile lit her face up. She hurriedly waved while shouting, "Big brother Linley, big brother Linley!"

Linley, who was walking on the street while enjoying the cool night, looked up suspiciously as he heard someone calling his name.

A distant balcony, a shadowy form dressed in violet, the bright moon illuminating from behind. The violet clothes fluttered in the night breeze, and under the glow of the moon, seemed to radiate. Long hair fluttering alongside the violet clothes. Suddenly, Linley seemed to smell Alice's fragrance.

That fragrance, was so mesmerizing...

"Alice..." Linley couldn't help but walk towards that balcony.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 1, Coming Home (part 1)

The walls around Alice's manor were not too high, only around two meters high. Walking to the walls, with a single jump, Linley leapt on top of the walls. Then, with a single leap, he descended in front of Alice, as though he had flown to her.

"Quick, lie down." Alice urgently tugged at Linley.

Suspicious, Linley obediently sat down.

"Shhh." Alice cautiously looked around before finally letting out her breath as she turned to Linley. "Good thing everyone's asleep. If someone saw something, then I would be in for a lot of trouble."

Linley suddenly understood.

"Let's sit down. If we talk while sitting down, the wall will prevent anyone from seeing us." Alice smiled delightedly, like a sly little fox. She casually wiped down the floor with a nearby cloth, then sat down alongside Linley.

Linley was also very delighted to be able to run into Alice again.

"Big brother Linley, what are you doing out here on the streets so late at night? Right, didn't you say you are a student at the Ernst Institute? What are you doing here in Fenlai City?" In one breathe, Alice asked several questions.

Why was he in Fenlai City?

Linley felt rather awkward. After all, he couldn't say that he had come here to visit the Jade Water Paradise with three friends, could he?

"I came with a few close friends to have fun in the city. At night time, I thought it was really stuffy inside, so I came out for a stroll." Linley could only give this rather unclear answer.

Alice nodded.

"Alice, what are you doing up awake so late at night?" Linley asked.

Alice chewed her lower lips helplessly. "I fell asleep really early, but just as I was enjoying my rest, I got woken up out of a beautiful dream by my father, who drank too much and was totally smashed. You don't know how excessive my father is. He goes gambling every day and drinking every day. After getting drunk, he causes trouble at home. I'm so annoyed!"

"To have a father like this, all I can say that is that I'm unlucky. How about you, Linley? What is your father like?" Alice was looking at Linley, who was seated across from her.

"My father?" Linley couldn't help but think about his own father. "My father doesn't gamble. Although he does drink, he doesn't get drunk. But my father is extremely strict. He's been like that since I was young."

Alice sighed with jealousy. "Big brother Linley, you are so lucky. Unlike me."

Under the moonlight, a young man and a young woman were chatting happily on a balcony. From the topic of fathers, they switched to education, then to their schools, and then to each other's friends. Finally, they started talking about things they did with their friends...

Linley was very happy while chatting with her. The more they chatted, the more Linley began to understand what Alice's life was like.

Slowly, the night wore on, and the first rays of light began to peek out from the east. The entire earth began to be filled up with the fresh morning air. But Linley and Alice, both happily immersed in conversation, didn't notice the passage of time at all. Only when the sky was bright did the two of them realize how much time had passed.

"Oh, it's day already." Only now did Linley notice the time.

Alice finally realized as well. "I'm so embarrassed, big brother Linley. I've forced you to keep me company all night."

Suddenly, Linley and Alice stopped talking. They felt a bit awkward.

"Right. Time for me to go." Linley could feel that the atmosphere was a bit strange. He couldn't help but suddenly feel nervous, and so he immediately stood up.

"Big brother Linley, in the future, will you come back to Fenlai City?"

Alice asked.

"I will, as long as I have free time." Gripping the railings with his hands, Linley somersaulted over, landing on the wall, then with a leap, jumped down to the street below, almost ten meters away from the wall.

Linley didn't look back, just casually, weakly waving goodbye.

Alice watched as Linley departed. Only after he disappeared into the streets did she rather forlornly return to her own room.

....

The summer sun in August was like a huge ball of flame, baking the land. After having lunch with his three bros, Linley headed directly towards his hometown, Wushan township. He carried with him his backpack with over 70,000 gold coins worth of magicite cores.

"Squeak squeak." On Linley's back, Bebe began to excitedly squeak as well.

Linley glanced at Bebe, then began laughing as well. He mentally said, "Bebe, you are excited about going back to Wushan township as well, eh? Right, I've never asked you before, but how and why did you appear in my family's courtyard, back then?"

"I dunno either." Bebe helplessly shook his little head. "As far back as I can remember, I was there in your family's back courtyard. I don't know who my parents are either. But I do remember one thing; a voice, which seemed to say, 'Stay here, don't run around.'"

"Stay here, don't run around?" Linley heart throbbed.

Could that voice have been that of Bebe's father or mother?

"At the beginning, I just ate rocks. I obeyed that voice, so I didn't leave your family's courtyard. But then, boss, you found me and fed me a wild hare. In the whole wide world, there isn't anybody who treats me better than you, boss. I don't want to ever leave ya, boss." Bebe wrinkled his little nose.

Linley, too, reminisced about what had happened before.

Back then, Bebe really did hesitate for a while at the entrance to Wushan township, but in the end, upon seeing Linley really was going to leave, Bebe had made the decision to bite Linley and initiate their soul binding contract.

"Alright, Bebe, we'll always be together, okay?" Linley lovingly stroked Bebe's little head, and Bebe, comforted, closed his little eyes happily.

Linley didn't walk too fast, traveling around twenty kilometers per hour. By the time he arrived at the borders of Wushan township, it was already night. As he made his way into town, he heard a familiar voice...

"All of you, straighten and tighten up those waists! Don't bend! If anyone's buttocks touches those branches and gets stained by the dye, they'll be considered to have broken the rules. Double training for them!"

Hillman's voice could be heard from far away.

Linley stared towards him.

On that familiar, empty field in the east side of Wushan township, next to a row of trees, a group of kids from age six to sixteen were standing in three divisions. Under the strict supervision of Hillman and the other two, they were engaged in tough training. Sweat had totally drenched all of the children's clothes.

"Back in the day, I did this training as well." Seeing this, Linley felt very moved.

"Linley?" Hillman saw Linley from far off. After giving some instructions to Roger and Lorry, he immediately ran over towards Linley, immediately giving Linley a big bear hug.

"Uncle Hillman, long time no see!" Linley was very happy as well.

"Haha, let's go! Let's go home first. Lord Hogg will be so happy to see you." Hillman chortled as he spoke, and then led Linley into Wushan township proper.

"Young master Linley." Roger and Lorry greeted Linley warmly from afar.

"Uncle Roger, Uncle Lorry." Linley also waved at them happily, and then followed Hillman towards his own manor.

“Linley, you brought a backpack with you? It seems heavy. What’s inside?” Hillman noticed the backpack on Linley’s back, and asked with a laugh.

Linley smiled mysteriously. “A present, a present for my father!”

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 2, Coming Home (part 2)

Within the Baruch clan manor, Hogg was reclining in a chair, carefully reading an exceedingly thick book.

“Lord Hogg, dinner is prepared.” A female servant said respectfully.

Ever since Housekeeper Hiri had gone off to accompany Wharton to the O’Brien Empire, the Baruch clan no longer had any servants in their employ. But Hogg was the clan leader of the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. He couldn’t do all the servant’s work himself, right? So he forced himself to hire a female servant.”

“Oh.” Hogg closed his book and glanced at the female servant. In his heart, he sighed, “Fortunately, now that these other nobles know that my son is a genius magus at the Ernst Institute, they are willing to loan me money again. Otherwise, life would be even tougher.”

Based on the low taxation rate in Wushan township, Hogg was only able to just barely pay his bodyguard’s salary and also pay his yearly tithe to the kingdom. Hogg felt unhappy just thinking about it. By the time the clan had fallen into his hands, virtually all things of value had been sold off.

Fortunately...

He, Hogg, had two sons, two wonderful sons.

"Linley is already a magus of the fifth rank. He will graduate soon. By then, I can hand the position of clan leader to him, and I'll be able to do some things I have always wanted to do."

Hogg stood up, preparing to head towards the dining room, when suddenly...

"Lord Hogg, Lord Hogg!" Hillman's voice rang out from afar.

Hogg looked questioningly towards the main gate. In a short period of time, Hillman ran in, and right besides Hillman was a tall, sturdily built young fellow.

Upon seeing the young fellow, a smile blossomed upon Hogg's face. Laughing loudly, he advanced. "Linley, you are back. Haha, this is wonderful. This is an enormous surprise!"

"Agatha [A'jia'sa], please prepare a more sumptuous dinner." Hogg intimately patted Linley on the shoulders. "Nice, kid. You are almost as tall as me now. Oh, right. I thought you were usually only allowed to come back at the end of each year. This time?..."

Linley smiled secretly. "Father, I'll tell you later, during dinner."

"So mysterious?" Hogg intentionally frowned at Linley.

Hillman, next to them, laughed, "Lord Hogg, Linley wouldn't tell me either, but he's prepared a mysterious gift for you. I asked him what, but he refused to say."

"Uncle Hillman!" Linley frowned at Hillman.

"Alright, I'll be quiet, I'll be quiet." Hillman laughed loudly.

Darkness fell upon the world, blanketing the earth in shadows, but the Baruch clan manor's dining room was brightly lit with many lanterns. After finishing dinner, the serving girl Agatha cleared the table, leaving behind only Linley and Hogg in the room. Only now did Linley place the backpack in front of his father.

"This is?" Hogg stared suspiciously at Linley.

"We'll open it in a bit." Linley stood up and closed the door to the room. Hogg couldn't help but chuckle. "As secretive as all that? You even went to close the door."

Linley sat down confidently. "Father, you can open the backpack now."

"Hrmph, let me see just what you have in here." Hogg curiously opened the backpack, but much to his surprise, there was another sack inside the backpack. The mouth to the large sack was closed tightly, and it was bulging with the magicite cores that were hidden within it.

Rubbing his hands against the sack, Hogg said suspiciously, "What a large sack. It doesn't feel like gold inside. Can it be pebbles?" Hogg didn't understand what was going on. As he spoke, he opened the sack up.

As soon as the sack opened...

Gaudy, beautiful, multicolored magicite cores all gleamed with rainbow light. Hogg couldn't help but feel dazed upon seeing them. This sack was filled to the brim with magicite cores. In all his life, Hogg had never seen so many.

"These are magicite cores?" Hogg's eyes were round, and he stared at Linley in astonishment. And then, he slowly swallowed. Hogg had seen magicite cores before, but he had never seen so many in one place. So many magicite cores in one sack really did have the capacity to astonish its viewers.

Linley nodded. "Right. This bag is filled almost exclusively with magicite cores. There's a very small number of magestones inside as well. Based on what I read, these magicite cores should be worth a total of around 70,000 gold coins."

"Seventy thousand gold coins?" Hogg felt his heart pump frantically.

All these years, Hogg had been suffering from the restrictions of money. By now, even if one just wanted Hogg to produce 500 gold coins, Hogg would probably have to go borrow money. One could imagine how dire their straits were.

Seventy thousand gold coins!

What sort of wealth was this? 70,000 gold pieces definitely could keep the entire Baruch clan fed for over a hundred years.

"Of course, 70,000 is just the book estimate, and these prices were previous prices. I expect that this will be enough to reach 80,000 gold prices." Linley said honestly.

Staring at the gaudy magicite cores, Hogg felt as though he were living in a dream. His entire body was floating.

"Haaaaah. Haaaaah."

Hogg took two deep breaths, finally calming himself down.

"Linley, where did you get these magicite cores?" Hogg finally thought of this. He stared at Linley with a deadly stare. "Did you go to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?"

Linley nodded. "Yes, father. I got all of these from Mountain Range of Magical Beasts."

"You...you..." Hogg was somewhat angry now. "The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts is one of the most dangerous places in the entire continent. Entering it is a major endeavor. Why didn't you discuss it over with me before going inside? Do you know how dangerous it is in there?"

Just as he finished speaking, Hogg began to laugh at himself.

Linley had gone inside, after all. He definitely now knew how dangerous it was.

Hogg lowered his gaze, and was silent. Seeing Linley with an earnest "listening to himself being lectured" expression on his face, he couldn't help but shake his head and sigh. "Linley, it's not that I, your father, want to yell at you. But you must know that you are currently a genius magus studying at the Ernst Institute. In the future, your potential will be limitless. The heavy burden of stewarding the Baruch clan will rest on your shoulders. After all, your brother is still young. Who knows how long it would take before he becomes a real Dragonblood Warrior? All my hopes rest on you for now, as well as all of the hopes of the Baruch clan. This is why you can't treat your life as a joke."

Linley didn't dare to speak.

"Take off your clothes. Let me see if you have any injuries." Hogg suddenly said.

Take his clothes off?

Linley hesitated. Others couldn't tell with his clothes on, but Linley himself knew very well how terrifying the sight of all the crisscrossing scars on his body was.

Hogg frowned. "Take them off."

After hesitating another moment, in the end, Linley still undressed, taking off his shirt and baring his upper body. Upon his robust chest, there were countless scars, and even several wounds that appeared to be fatal wounds!

Seeing the terrifying scars on Linley's body, Hogg could feel his own heart quivering.

Hogg reached out towards Linley's chest with a quivering hand. Seeing those near-fatal wounds on Linley's chest, Hogg couldn't help but feel his heart turn sour. How much pain had his son had to endure, how many near-death experiences had his son experience? Hogg didn't even want to think about it.

"Linley, you..." Hogg choked up.

"Father, look, I'm fine." Linley immediately said comfortingly.

Hogg stared at the pile of magicite cores, which represented a huge sum of money, then turned to look once more at the terrifying scars on Linley's body. Hogg's entire body began to quiver.

He was filled with hate!

Hate for himself for being useless, for being incapable!

Taking a deep breath, Hogg finally fell silent, staring at the sky. In the end, he finally said in a low voice, "Linley, you've spent an entire day on the road. You must be tired. Go get some rest."

"Yes, father."

Linley quietly left, leaving Hogg alone, sitting quietly by himself, in that dining hall lit by candles...

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 3, Hogg

The next morning, while seated at the dining table in their dining hall, Linley was astonished to see his father looking radiant, with energy levels seemingly like Linley had never seen.

Putting down his knife and fork, Hogg smiled as he looked at Linley. "Linley, this time you should stay at home a bit longer. It's been quite some time since I have seen you. The two of us, father and son, need to spend some quality time together."

His father was asking him to stay at home longer?

Linley was a bit astonished. After all, in all these years, his father had never said these type of words to him. Originally, Linley was planning to go back to Fenlai City to stroll about and maybe visit Alice. But upon hearing these, he put all thoughts of visiting her aside.

"Okay, father." Linley happily nodded.

Hogg nodded with pleasure, but in Hogg's eyes, there seemed to be an hint of something indecipherable.

....

This time, Linley stayed for ten full days in Wushan township. Even when the start date for the next semester at the Ernst Institute arrived, he still didn't go back, and Hogg didn't rush him either.

Upon the mountain peaks of Mt. Wushan, rain clouds drifted hither and to. Linley was seated in a meditative pose, refining mageforce.

Earth elemental essence and wind elemental essence swirled around Linley, entering his body from every direction and being absorbed into his muscles, his skeleton, and his veins, improving his body's strength. After part was absorbed, the rest was transformed into mageforce and stored in his central dantian.

Like an ocean being fed by a hundred rivers, all of the flows of elemental essence in his body would eventually end up here.

Linley just sat there for half a day. By the time Linley opened his eyes, it was already sunset.

"Time to go back to school." Linley rose to his feet and took a deep breath. "Ever since I gave those magicite cores to my father, my father has changed for the better. He's been much closer to me as well."

These ten days Linley had spent here had been the closest ten days he had ever spent with his father.

"What caused father to change so much? The magicite cores? I don't think father would have changed just because of money. Perhaps...it was the scars on my body?" Linley pondered, but in the end, he still couldn't fully understand why his father's attitude towards him had changed so much.

'Asking if one was cold, worried that one might be hot'; this idiom expressing concern perfectly captured how considerate and caring Hogg was towards Linley.

After entering the Baruch clan manor, Linley immediately saw his father, book in hand. "Father, it's getting dark. Why don't you finish the book tomorrow?"

"Oh, Linley's back." Laughing, Hogg closed the book. "Your words have merit. I'll finish it tomorrow."

"Linley, after spending all this time training, you should be thirsty." Hogg poured a glass of hot water from the tea carafe he kept by his side. "Here, have something for your throat. The temperature of this water is just right, not too cold, not too hot."

"Thanks, father." Linley's heart felt warm.

This was how Hogg had treated Linley during these past ten days; incomparably well. While in the past, Hogg was always strict and solemn. Rarely would he show his affectionate side.

While drinking the water, Linley said, "Father, I've been at home for some time now. I'm planning to go back to school tomorrow."

"Tomorrow?" Hogg paused for a moment, seemingly stunned, but then nodded. "Alright. Come back earlier for your end-of-the-year holiday this year."

"Sure." Linley assented.

Hogg said in a soft voice, "Linley, your father doesn't have much ability. In the future, our clan will depend on you. By giving me these magicite cores, your little brother's tuition expenses are guaranteed as well. I am already extremely satisfied. But in my mind, I still constantly think about our family's humiliation. I hope that you will never forget that our ancestral heirloom is still in the hands of others."

Linley could sense his father's faith being placed in him. Taking a deep breath, he nodded slightly.

"Right now, I don't have any other desires. I only hope that before my death, I will be able to see with my own eyes the 'Slaughterer' warblade." Hogg's voice became even more quiet.

Linley could feel that something was amiss. He immediately said, "Father, don't be so gloomy. You are only forty years old this year. You have lots of time left. I have confidence that within ten years, I can definitely bring our warblade 'Slaughterer' back, and once more place it within the ancestral hall in our manor."

"Ten years. Good, good." Hogg gently nodded.

....

The second day, after lunch, Linley departed from Wushan township. That night, in the main hall at the Baruch manor, two people sat together. Hogg, and Hillman. The door to the hall was closed, and on the main table in that hall, the sack of magicite cores was on display.

Hillman had been totally stupefied by this sack of magicite cores. Finally, Hogg spoke. "Hillman, I plan to sell off these magicite cores. I want you entrust that gold into your safekeeping."

Hillman immediately recollected himself. He hurriedly said, "Lord Hogg, no. How can you hand such a vast sum of money to me? Why don't you take care of it?"

"Hillman, don't call me Lord Hogg. You can just address me as big brother Hogg again." Hogg laughed in a very kind way.

Suddenly, Hogg stood up, facing the east. "Me, take care of it? Haha... Hillman, perhaps there is nobody besides you who knows more about the affairs of the Baruch clan...and about me."

Hillman started. He didn't know why Hogg had suddenly said this.

"That affair has been buried in the deepest reaches of my heart for eleven years now. For eleven years, I've felt as though my heart has been chewed on by ants. I've been suppressing it all this time. Suppressing it, one day after another, one year after another...and in the blink of an eye, eleven years went by."

Hogg's entire body began to tremble.

Hillman's face changed. He suddenly stood up, saying in astonishment, "Lord Hogg, are you going to...?!"

“Right. I am going to investigate what happened that year. I must get vengeance for Lina [Lin’na].” Hogg’s face was fierce and violent, filled with baleful aura.

“Lord Hogg.” Hillman hurriedly said. “Didn’t we investigate it back in the day? The opponent has tremendous power. Just the small part of it that we encountered was already terrifying. If you keep investigating, it’ll mean the death of you.”

Hogg let out a low growl. “Death? You think I fear death? Hillman, you have no idea how much pain I’ve been in these past eleven years, the sort of mental torment I’ve been under. I’ve had enough. The value of the magicite cores should be worth around 80,000 gold coins or so. This will totally be enough to pay for Wharton’s tuition. With this sum of money, I have no worries or cares at all now.”

“All these years, I’ve been suppressing myself, why? Because of my two sons. Now that Linley has grown up, and Wharton has reached the O’Brien Empire, I have nothing to worry about anymore.”

Hogg tightly clenched Hillman’s shoulders with his hands, staring into Hillman’s eyes. “Hillman, although you have always addressed me as Lord Hogg, after all these years, the two of us have developed genuine brotherly affection towards each other. For the sake of that brotherly love, I hope you can help me.”

“Hogg, you...” Hillman was frantic.

Hillman knew very well that once Hogg really went to investigate that affair, he would very likely lose his life.

"My mind is set. Hillman, you must understand, this life I have been living is worse than death." Hogg's eyes were turning red. Seeing Hogg like this, Hillman felt helpless. He could understand how Hogg felt.

Why was it that over these years, Hogg had become so solemn, so cold?

Others might not know, but Hillman knew very well. Before the birth mother of Linley and Wharton, Lina, had died, Hogg was a very easy-going, open-minded person. But after Lina's death, Hogg's character and disposition had changed.

Although Hogg had told others that Lina had died in childbirth, Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri knew the truth.

"Hillman, don't try to persuade me. I just want to ask you – will you help me, or won't you?" Hogg fixed his gaze upon Hillman.

Staring at Hogg, in the end, Hillman let out a long sigh. "Fine. I'll help." A hint of a smile blossomed on Hogg's face. The smile of relief and liberation.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 4, The Price of a Sculpture

On the Dry Road of Fenlai City, Alice was standing on the balcony of her two-story house. Her hands cupped her face as she stared down at the street and the people on it.

Ever since Linley had departed, Alice would come here almost every day to watch the people on the street, hoping that Linley would come again. But...

"School starts again tomorrow. I have to go back today." Alice secretly sighed, taking another glance at the street.

She had hoped that Linley would come see her again, but over the past ten or so days, Linley hadn't come even a single time. By this time, the voice of her good friend, Niya, could be heard from below. "Alice, hurry up." Niya, Tony, and Kalan were all down at her door, waiting for her.

Kalan, Niya, and Tony were all students at war academies, and their school was located fairly close to Alice's magus institute. Given that, and the fact that all four of their families were located in Fenlai City, they were on very good terms.

"Okay, coming!"

Alice glanced at the street one last time before putting on her backpack and going downstairs.

....

On the third night after Alice had departed the city, Linley arrived in front of Alice's residence. Raising his head to look up at the little balcony, he saw that no one was there.

"Hey, what are you doing here?" A middle-aged guard in front of the residence shouted at Linley.

Turning his head, Linley smiled as he replied, "Hello. I'm from the Wellen Institute. Alice is a good friend of mine. Is she still at home?"

"Oh." Hearing these words, the guard immediately was all smiles. "Miss Alice has already left for school three days ago. She's long since headed back to school."

"Oh, got it. Thanks." Linley said courteously.

Turning around, Linley left via the Dry Road. After departing on the Dry Road, he turned his head and glanced at the balcony on the second level of the house. In his heart, he felt a bit helpless.

.....

On the road in front of the Ernst Institute.

A white light shone out of the Coiling Dragon ring and transformed into a white-robed old man, the white-bearded Doebling Cowart. Smiling,

Doehring Cowart said to Linley, "Linley, you've fallen for Alice?"

"A bit." Linley didn't deny it.

Doehring Cowart stroked his beard, laughing loudly. "I didn't think that you, you little punk, would finally fall for a girl. But Linley, you and Alice are at different magus institutes. With the two of you living in separate places, it will be very hard for your relationship to advance."

"I know. It's up to fate. If we are meant to be, we will. If not, then forget it." Linley couldn't help but think about what being together with Alice would be like.

He thought back to that terrified look on her face during the battle with the Bloodthirsty Warpig.

On the road back from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, that shy look on her face as the two of them talked.

And under the moonlight, her moving appearance, seemingly the goddess of the moon herself.

.....

"This must be what one's first crush is like." Linley said to himself self-deprecatingly. By his age, all the other bros in his dorm had dated, with Yale and Reynolds having found girlfriends long ago.

As far as relationships went, Linley actually was somewhat excited about it.

.....

At the Ernst Institute, Linley was still as studious and hard-working as ever. Every day, he would spend at least part of his time training in the Straight Chisel School of sculpting. In terms of both spiritual essence and mageforce, his power continued to grow both stably and quickly.

In the blink of an eye, a month passed.

Per their previous arrangement, Linley and his bros brought three new sculptures to Fenlai City, where they were received at the Proulx Gallery by manager Austoni.

"Almost 15,000 gold coins? That much?" Linley was somewhat astonished by the price his three previous sculptures had fetched.

Austoni laughed loudly. "Linley, this is normal. The value of most expert sculptors is around a thousand gold coins. But the Proulx Gallery would of course introduce you and your status as a fifteen year old genius magus who is also an expert sculptor. Just based on your personal status alone, the value of your artwork will be multiplied."

"More importantly than that though...your sculptures have a very unique aura. Although other people's sculptures are also beautiful, in terms of smoothness, there will always be some flaws. The lines of your sculptures are very smooth. For example, when comparing where you used the straight chisel and where you used the butterfly chisel, people actually can't tell. They flowed together very perfectly.

Linley couldn't help but laugh on hearing this.

Traces of switching tools?

From start to finish, his sculptures were carved with the usage of the straight chisel. He didn't use any other tools at all. Naturally, the lines would be very perfect and smooth.

"This unique point, along with the innately lofty, arrogant aura your sculptures possess, and combined with your personal status, caused each sculpture to rise to the price of five thousand gold coins. The only thing preventing the price from rising even further was that there were still some minute imperfections in your patterns." Austoni explained and praised.

In his heart, Linley understood.

"Minute imperfections?" Linley mentally shook his head. He only used a straight chisel. Although he could manage to carve out some unique patterns with it, in terms of effectiveness, naturally it would not be able to compete with specialized tools such as the butterfly chisel or the oblique knife.

At the same time, Linley couldn't help but sigh.

Those three sculptures were able to reach a price of 15,000 gold coins.

This money came so easily. If Linley spent all his time carving, in a month, he could definitely produce ten sculptures.

Ten sculptures meant 50,000 gold coins!

“In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts I spent two months and encountered countless dangers and experienced countless life and death situations. After killing all those assassins, I ended up with just 70,000 gold coins or so. Being a sculptor is like stealing money.” Linley couldn’t help but sigh.

The value of Linley’s sculpture was considered high even amongst experts.

“If expert sculptors are practically stealing money, then grandmaster sculptors...” Linley couldn’t help but be moved.

The deeper Linley began to understand this profession, the more amazed he was. The circle of sculptors had an incredible disparity in terms of income. In the entirety of the Holy Union, there was perhaps just a hundred or so expert sculptors. One could imagine how rare they were.

“Linley, work hard. I have faith that one day, you will become an amazing grandmaster sculptor.” Austoni said encouragingly.

Not only did grandmaster sculptors possess amazing wealth, they also had an exceedingly high social status. They stood at the very top of this ancient artistic form. Even most powerful nobles, upon meeting them, wouldn’t dare to be arrogant.

Grandmaster!

This was a very incredible designation.

It wasn't something one could acquire through money or power. Only when a person had received universal acclaim as being on top of a particular field would one be honored with the designation of 'grandmaster'.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 5, The Rose in Winter (part 1)

That evening, Linley and his bros all walked out of an inn together. Per their usual habits, they would head to the Jade Water Paradise together.

“Boss Yale, you three go on ahead without me. I’m going to take a walk.” Linley said to them after leaving the inn.

Yale, Reynolds, and George all stared at Linley in surprise.

“I really don’t like the atmosphere all that much at the Jade Water Paradise. You guys go on ahead. In about two or three hours, I’ll meet up with you.” Linley explained, and then Bebe, standing on top of Linley’s shoulders, let out two squeaks. Mentally, Bebe said, “Boss, you headin’ to Alice’s?”

Since he was always by Linley’s side, of course Bebe knew everything.

Although Bebe didn’t seem to grow larger, his intelligence by now was the match of any human youth.

“You little...” Linley glanced at Bebe, annoyed.

“Alright, third bro, you go out for your walk. But don’t walk for too long.” Yale laughed. Linley bid his three bros farewell, then started to walk in the direction of the Dry Road.

The Dry Road didn't see too much traffic, and thus it seemed very quiet. On both sides of the road were various restaurants and inns, with most of the customers inside being locals.

As he drew close to Alice's residence, Linley looked up at the balcony on the second floor.

The balcony was still empty.

Linley laughed at himself. In honesty, he had only a shred of hope that she might be here. Linley immediately turned and headed into a nearby bar, selecting a window seat. Through the window, Linley could see Alice's balcony.

"One bottle of jade wine and two cups." Linley casually ordered.

"Yes, sir."

Although the servant was rather curious as to why Linley wanted two cups, he didn't ask.

"Bebe, drink slowly." Linley poured a cup for Bebe and set it to the side. Bebe immediately hopped onto the table and, imitating Linley, began to sip the wine.

Holding his cup of wine and staring at the balcony, Linley sipped slowly.

Just like that, the two of them, a man and a magical beast, drank quietly, polishing off three bottles over the course of two hours. Only then did Linley pay his tab, and the two of them left the bar.

“Boss, are you really disappointed?” On Linley’s shoulder, Bebe messaged him mentally.

Linley reached out to stroke Bebe’s little head. Laughing, he ‘berated’, “You little punk.” And then Linley began walking towards the major roads of Fenlai City towards the direction of the Jade Water Paradise, enjoying the night scenery.

The second day, September 30th, Linley and his three bros left the city and returned to the Ernst Institute. That night, Alice, Kalan, and the others returned to Fenlai City.

The reason for this ‘coincidence’ was that the Ernst Institute and the Wellen had different break days for the students.

The break days for Ernst Institute students was on the 29th and 30th of each month, while for Wellen Institute students, it was on the 1st and 2nd of each month. Thus, Alice only got home on the 30th.

Sadly...

Although Alice stood there on the balcony, watching the crowded streets, occasionally getting excited when someone who looked similar to Linley walked by, in the end, she was always disappointed.

The afternoon of October 2nd, she had no choice but to return to school.

....

October 29th, Linley once again went into town to deliver three more stone sculptures. At night, Linley once again went to that bar on the Dry Road. He once more selected the same window seat, ordered the same jade wine, and began drinking with Bebe.

"Boss, looks like you are gonna be disappointed again." Bebe looked at Linley, his beady little black eyes rolling as he mentally spoke.

"No big deal. I guess it wasn't meant to be." Throwing his head back, Linley polished that cup of wine off. By now, him and Bebe had finished two bottles of jade wine. But on the balcony, Linley still could not see the figure he was waiting for.

By now, the server came over.

"One more bottle of..." Halfway through his sentence, Linley paused, and his eyes lit up, his gaze focusing on that little balcony on the second floor of Alice's house. A female figure dressed in white had suddenly appeared.

"Bill, please." Linley immediately stood up.

The server, already preparing to grab another bottle of wine, was momentarily baffled, but he quickly recovered. After paying the bill, Linley walked out, with Bebe leaping from the table to his shoulders.

By now, it was almost eight at night. The Dry Road was getting dark. Because it wasn't a main road, there were very few people there at night.

"It's Alice." Linley was absolutely certain.

"Whoah, Boss, you finally are gonna meet that beauty again. Haha! Are you happy? Are you excited? Are you impatient?" On Linley's shoulders, Bebe continued speaking delightedly.

Linley didn't even pay attention to Bebe. Quite agilely, he flipped over Alice's wall, and with a push of his hands, he transformed into a black blur, landing directly onto the balcony.

Alice had been watching Linley make his way over to her past the wall this entire time.

"Big brother Linley!" Alice immediately recognized him. Her heart rate immediately sped up and, nervous, her face turned red as well. But in her heart, she was filled with joy.

Last time, she hadn't managed to catch Linley. Upon returning to the Wellen Institute, she had asked around and found out that the Ernst Institute's vacation days were on the 29th and the 30th. Thus, Alice had skipped class and come home two days early.

"Big brother Linley, what a coincidence." Alice said with a smile.

Linley was briefly stunned. "Alice, yeah, what a coincidence."

Alice couldn't help but laugh, before she recovered and immediately tugged Linley to sit down. "Quick, sit down, don't let anyone see you." Linley sat down. The two of them hid in the corner of the balcony, quietly chatting with each other.

Doehring Cowart appeared at this time.

"Linley, Linley."

"Doehring Cowart, what is it?" Linley was a bit unhappy.

Doehring Cowart laughed loudly. "Kid, don't talk too much with this girl about irrelevant things. Be a bit friendlier, a bit more forward. You idiot. Judging from the look of her, this Alice girl is interested in you too."

"No rush, no rush." Although Linley had no fear of death, at this moment in time, he was a bit unsteady and a bit wobbly, mentally speaking.

"You really are stupid." Doehring Cowart said impatiently.

Linley began to totally ignore Doehring Cowart's advice, only talking to Alice about irrelevant, casual topics.

Watching the two of them, in the end, Doehring Cowart could only shake his head and disappear back into the Coiling Dragon ring. While chatting with Alice, Linley didn't notice the passage of time in the slightest.

"Big brother Linley, you are so amazing! You must have lots of girls chasing after you at the Ernst Institute, right?" Alice intentionally said these words in a casual manner, but upon hearing them, Linley's heart began to beat faster.

"Not too bad, not too bad." While chatting with Alice, sometimes Linley spoke without thinking.

"You idiot." Doebling Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 6, The Rose in Winter (part 2)

Together with Alice, Linley felt truly joyful from the bottom of his heart. In this manner, an entire night passed away. Neither Linley nor Alice felt tired at all, despite having been up all night.

As the sun began to rise, the horizon began to glow with a soft, blue color.

"The sun is rising. Alice, I have to go." Linley stood up.

"Okay." Alice replied.

Alice also stood up, looking at Linley with a somewhat reluctant to part expression. Linley grinned, waved at her, then floated down to the street like a leaf, his body surrounded by flows of air.

After Linley arrived at the Jade Water Palace, he waited for his bros to get out of bed, at which point he was 'interrogated' by Yale and the other two.

After returning to the Ernst Institute, Linley continued to be as studious as ever. But when he was relaxing, he would often think of Alice. Linley had a certain feeling; he had been struck in the heart by the gods of love.

Yulan calendar, year 9997, November 29th. Evening.

Alice had gotten up very early to wait outside her family's door. After waiting for a while, she saw Linley's familiar figure making his way up from the Dry Road. Immediately, she ran to him.

"Big brother Linley." Alice shouted rather excitedly. They hadn't seen each other for a month. After finally being able to see him, Alice was somewhat unable to control her excitement.

In his heart, Linley was feeling excited as well. After all, it had been a month since they last met. But today, he felt especially happy. "Even though I didn't tell Alice when I would see her again, she came outside to wait for me today."

Last time, after chatting with Alice, Linley discovered that the Wellen Institute's vacation days were on the 1st and 2nd of each month. Alice was skipping class in order to meet with him. Linley fully understood what that meant.

"Linley, keep at it! This time, you have to be a bit braver." Doehring Cowart's voice sounded out in Linley's mind.

Linley secretly also made up his mind. After all, he didn't want to wait another month.

"Alice, why are you outside today, instead of on your porch?" Linley and Alice were walking side by side on the street. Alice laughed. "We can't always be hiding on my balcony, can we?"

Thinking back to how the two of them were hiding in the corner of a balcony, Linley couldn't help but laugh.

"Right. If you don't go back home at night, isn't your father going to be worried?" Linley asked.

"Him?" Alice pouted. "My father is a drunken sot, and also a compulsive gambler. He might not even know when he himself will be home, much less me."

"Big brother Linley, I grew up in Fenlai City as a child. Fenlai City is a very big city. You probably haven't been to many places. Come on, I'll show you around." Alice laughed.

Linley and Alice walked together on the streets. It was winter now, and on the Yulan continent, December and January were the two coldest months of the year. The night wind was very cold as well. There weren't too many people on the streets.

But as Linley and Alice walked and chatted, they totally ignored the people who were on the streets.

"Oh, it's snowing?" Alice raised her head up to stare at the night sky and watched as white flecks gently drifted down. "I love snow. This is the first snow of this year's winter."

"I also like snow." Linley lifted his head up, allow the snow to collect and then dissolve upon his face.

To be able to take a walk with the girl he liked on a snowy night was quite romantic. The two of them continued their slow stroll in the streets of Fenlai City.

"Big brother Linley, do you have a girlfriend?" Alice suddenly asked, before saying in a soft voice, "Big brother Linley, you are so amazing, you must have one already."

"I do not, definitely do not." Linley quickly said.

Hearing his words, Alice fell silent.

"Alice, do you have a boyfriend?" Linley dithered for a while, but finally got the question out.

Alice's face immediately turned red. Even her neck turned red. But in the dark night, there was no way for Linley to see. "How could I have a boyfriend? Who would want me as their girlfriend?"

"Oh."

Linley took a deep breath, then suddenly said, "Then how about, you be my girlfriend?"

"Um..." Alice looked up at Linley in surprise, as though she had been stunned silly. Linley was just chatting normally with her earlier. All of a sudden, he asked this question of her, catching her totally offguard.

In the Holy Union, it was very normal for young people to have boyfriends or girlfriends. Many of Alice's female classmates already had boyfriends, and she had also thought about having one.

But she didn't expect that Linley would ask her in such a direct manner.

"You want me to be your girlfriend?" Alice asked.

Right now, Linley felt that his heart was pounding so frantically that it was going to burst out of his chest. Even when facing life and death battles in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts he had never been so frantic. "Yes. Are you willing?"

Alice's face was totally red by now. She stared at Linley. "Big brother Linley, honestly, maybe I'm not as good of a person as you think I am."

"I trust my judgment. Alice, I asked you already. Are you willing?" Linley was about to go crazy. He wanted to know Alice's reply right away. Even Linley's voice was quivering.

Alice was quiet for a moment, and then she gently nodded.

"Yes."

Excited, Linley couldn't help but enfold Alice in a deep embrace. Embarrassed, Alice buried her face against Linley's chest. Just then, Linley noticed that there was a flower shop next to them.

Moments later...

"Alice, here." Alice lifted her head up in response, and she did, she saw a brilliantly beautiful rose in front of her.

Her face blushing, Alice accepted the rose. Looking at Alice, Linley thought that the red rose complimented her blushing pink face perfectly. She was an unspeakably moving picture. This image was burned into Linley's mind forever.

Holding Alice by the hand, the two of them continued their walk.

The snowflakes continued to fly about. The two youths slowly strolled about the night streets of Fenlai City. The rose in Alice's hand was so beautiful, so vibrant.

In one of the superior rooms of the Jade Water Paradise, there were seven people; Yale, George, Reynolds, and four beautiful ladies.

"I don't know what's gotten into Third Bro. Last time he went missing for an entire night also. This time, he hasn't come back even now." Yale shook his head helplessly.

"Hey, that guy looks like Third Bro." Reynolds, who was seated next to the window, suddenly let out a surprised shout. "And he's holding hands with a girl. Damn! Third Bro managed to find himself a beauty behind our backs."

"Whoosh!" Yale and George also ran to the window, staring down at Linley below them.

At this moment, Linley, who was drunken in the beautiful throes of young love, didn't even notice that they had reached the Jade Water Paradise! Linley and Alice walked right past the Jade Water Paradise, continuing onto the Fragrant Pavilion Road.

"Man, when did Third Bro become so formidable? Yale's eyes were sparkling.

George and Reynolds were both excited as well. Reynolds immediately suggested, "Haha, when Third Bro comes back, we have to give him a proper interrogation."

....

The next morning, Linley happily returned to the superior room in the Jade Water Paradise. Per their usual habits, Reynolds and Yale should've each retired to their own private rooms with their beauties. But...

Upon opening the door, Linley stared inside with surprise. "Boss Yale, why are you all here?"

"You ask me why we are all here?" Reynolds began to chortle. Scheming looks were on the faces of George and Yale as well, and they began to creep closer to Linley.

"Tell!" Reynolds stared at him. "Who was that beauty who was with you last night?"

"Quick, tell!" Yale and George also demanded.

"Whu.....you guys...?" Linley was totally flabbergasted.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 7, Experts Everywhere (part 1)

Under the forced interrogation of his bros, Linley was very honest and revealed the entire story behind him and Alice. This story made those two playboys, Yale and Reynolds, sigh in amazement.

Ever since becoming boyfriend and girlfriend with Alice, although he was separated from her physically during the school term, they made an agreement to meet with each other at the end of every month.

In the blink of an eye, another month passed. December 28th, Linley was in an exceptionally good mood, because he was going to meet with Alice again in Fenlai City.

"Hey, Linley."

"Yo, David [Da'wei]."

Walking along the road within the Ernst Institute, Linley greeted a number of familiar faces in a friendly fashion.

"Boss, you're as happy as this, just because you sealed the deal with Alice?" On Linley's shoulders, Bebe wrinkled his nose. Condescendingly, he said, "Look at that stupid grin. This entire month, you've been smiling like an idiot."

In the past, although Linley wasn't exactly cold and emotionless, he wasn't particularly friendly either. But this month, Linley was in an extremely good mood, and so he was often laughing and smiling.

"You little punk, what do you know?" Linley glared at Bebe, before strolling casually into the library. After flipping through two books on wind-style magic, Linley entered a reading booth and began to read.

The reading room was extremely quiet, and in the entire reading room, there was perhaps just twenty or thirty people, spaced far apart from each other.

Linley selected a location off to the side and began to read. At the Ernst Institute library, Linley would read almost anything regarding history, magical beasts, politics, magic...but most of his time was still spent on wind magic.

After all, Linley primarily relied on earth-style and wind-style magic. His earth-style magic had a Saint-level Grand Magus for a personal trainer in the form of Doebling Cowart, but the same couldn't be said for wind.

While reading, Linley continued to learn and improve, and he often nodded unconsciously.

In the reading room, two hours passed by very quickly. Linley closed the book in front of him. "Grandpa Doebling, it would be a very difficult task to understand all of the profundities of wind-style magic, much less devise a brand new spell of my own."

When casting magical spells, usually one would need to have the assistance of a magical incantation to stabilize and launch the spell. Generally, one would just recite the incantation as taught, without needing to understand it. But if one was able to understand the principles behind a spell or perhaps even refine the words to an incantation, or perhaps further refine the usage of spiritual essence, one could allow the efficacy and power of one's mageforce to reach new heights.

"Naturally. Do you think spells are so easily created?" Doehring Cowart's voice sounded in Linley's mind.

"Forget about inventing them for now. I wish I could at least see or learn some spells of the seventh rank. Unfortunately, the Institute is too stingy. Spells of the seventh, eighth, and ninth ranks are restricted and not open for public viewing at all." Linley was rather dissatisfied, but he also knew very well that behind the Ernst Institute was the Radiant Church. The Radiant Church was not willing to disseminate its most powerful spells to people from other countries.

Linley was fortunate. Thanks to Grandpa Doehring's guidance, at least for earth-style magic, he had nothing to worry about.

Flipping through the other book on wind magic, Linley continued to read...

"To summarize, all styles of magic, including wind magic, share a commonality in that their spells are formed from mageforce. For example, our wind style's 'Wind Blades', the higher level 'Chain of Wind Blades', or the even higher level 'Wild Dance of Wind Blades', all the way up to the ninth level spell, 'Vacuum Constriction Technique', are all considered to be in one chain of spells. But of course, if the 'Wind Blades' spell was developed and advanced in a different direction, down that path, in the end, it will transform into the 'Dimensional Edge' spell, that fabled forbidden spell..."

Upon reading this portion which provided details on the 'Wind Blades' spell, Linley grew interested.

This book was written from a viewpoint at the highest levels of magic, that sought to classify it systemically. This book was extremely useful to someone who had a narrow grasp of the fundamentals, as it would help them gain a more complete, thorough, systemic grasp of magic.

"The Floating Technique is actually a very simple technique, but using it isn't simple. That's because this technique has a strong emphasis on one's elemental affinity for wind essence. The higher the affinity, the easier one will find it to control wind mageforce and wind elemental essence. This will allow their Floating Technique to be much faster. But by comparison, the 'Soaring Technique' is a level higher than this technique. The Floating Technique only allows one to levitate up or down, while the Soaring Technique allows one to soar and fly in the air. Although it looks like it's omnidirectional, in reality, the Soaring Technique just has a few extra components compared to the Floating Technique, allowing the user to also go forwards, backwards, left, and right. For example, if you want to fly down and right, all you have to do is to control yourself to go both down and right. Frankly speaking, from this line of training, and based on the incantation the Floating Technique uses, in principle it should be fairly easy to figure out what the incantation to the Soaring Technique is."

Upon reading this, a light went on in Linley's mind.

Right. The Soaring Technique, compared to the Floating Technique, really just added the additional directional components of left, right, forward, and backward. In essence, it was still controlling wind elemental essence around the body to propel one in the various directions.

“Right, it just adds the components of forwards, backwards, left and right. If this hypothesis is correct, shouldn’t be too hard to extrapolate the incantation for the Soaring Technique.” Linley immediately began to try and mentally work out what the incantation should be.

But of course, whether or not the extrapolated incantation would be correct was something which only experimentation could prove.

Previously, Linley had been under the impression that the Soaring Technique had to allow a person to fly in any which way, and thus the incantation would be quite complex.

But now, given that it just had four more directions compared to the Floating Technique, the level of difficulty for extrapolating the Soaring Technique was much lower.

Linley continued to read, excited.

“Of course, high level magical incantations that could be easily extrapolated are in the minority. For example, the a higher level variant of the Soaring Technique is the Airwings spell, which forces the surrounding air elemental essences to form giant, invisible wings around the caster. This is far more difficult, and its incantation is very different from that of the Soaring Technique. There’s simply no way to extrapolate it at all.”

Linley nodded as well.

The more he read, the more confident Linley was that the author of this book was an expert in researching magical spells, because the explanations this book gave were almost all rooted solidly in the fundamentals of magical theory. It gave advice on how to truly understand the mechanisms behind controlling elemental essence and in understanding each magical incantation. But it didn't say anything about how to improve the power of one's spells.

Most people, upon seeing how deep and in depth this book went with regards to magical theory and usage of elemental essence, wouldn't bother to read further.

But Linley understood that if he could understand the reasoning behind each spell, he would naturally also learn how to better control his magic. At that time, the power behind each of his spells would be greater.

"Linley." Just as Linley was getting absorbed with this book, a clear voice sounded out by his side.

Lifting his head, Linley looked off to the side, where he saw a tall, slender, beautiful girl standing next to him. It was Linley's good friend, Delia. But the expression on Delia's face wasn't too happy.

"Hey Delia, what's up?" Linley laughed.

Delia bit her lower lips. She was silent for quite a while, before finally asking, "Linley, I hear...you have a girlfriend?" Delia's eyes, beautiful and large, were firmly fixed upon Linley.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 8, Experts Everywhere (part 2)

Linley was slightly startled. He hesitated. In his mind, many thoughts flashed by. But in the end, he still nodded. "Yes. Her name is Alice."

Delia's eyes immediately turned red. "Congratulations."

Delia hurriedly turned away, unable to prevent her tears from coursing down her face. She quickly ran out of the reading room.

But Linley himself did not see Delia's tears.

"Sigh." After directly telling Delia the truth, Linley felt restless and annoyed. But at the same time, he also felt relaxed.

After this event, Linley had no desire to keep reading. After noting down the name of this book, he returned it to the shelf.

On his way back to his dormitory, Linley couldn't help but feel rather grumpy.

"Boss, I get it. You also like that Delia girl, right?" Bebe said, engaging in a bit of schadenfreude. "You know, I think Delia is a great gal. She's better than Alice, y'know."

"Shut your mouth." Linley yelled at him mentally.

"Hrmph, hrmph, I was right on the money, wasn't I." Bebe said delightedly.

Linley let out a deep sigh. After a while, a hint of a smile appeared on his face. "Forget it. Since I've made things clear to Delia, this won't be on my mind anymore. Mm, right. I'm meeting with Alice again tomorrow. I have to prepare a present."

As he began thinking about Alice, Linley felt much more happier and relaxed.

.....

December 29th. Evening. Linley split apart from Yale and his other bros, and headed off by himself to Alice's house for his rendezvous. This time, Linley was going to be able to spend some extra time with Alice.

The first day of the first month of each year was known as the 'Yulan Festival'. This was the biggest holiday in the entire Yulan continent. On this day, every year the Radiant Church would organize a huge religious mass.

As Fenlai City was known as the 'Holy Capital', with the headquarters of the Radiant Church located in West Fenlai City, naturally the religious mass in Fenlai City would be the largest one in the entire Yulan continent. When the time came, the Holy Emperor himself would officiate over the proceedings. This was always an incredible mass, and many, many people attended each year.

January 1st.

West Fenlai City, the headquarters of the Radiant Church. The Radiant Temple. This was a huge building that rose up nearly a hundred meters. Anyone at any place within Fenlai City could see it in the skyline.

In front of the Radiant Temple was an enormous city plaza, over a thousand meters in length. The plaza was paved with smooth, equally sized white stones. At this moment, the plaza was filled with a sea of people, and Linley and Alice were amongst them.

Many mounted knights of the Radiant Church were there as well, keeping order amongst the crowd. But in general, all of the people there were very orderly and obedient.

"Big brother Linley, at eight o'clock, a group of high-level officials of the Radiant Church will appear, including the Holy Emperor himself." Alice said to Linley in a soft voice.

Linley nodded, glancing at the knights of the Radiant Church maintaining order. "Alice, look at all of these guardian knights here. There's got to be at least a few thousand of them, and from the looks of it, none of them are weak."

"Of course. This is the Yulan Festival. The ones who are guarding the event are the elite knights of the Radiant Church. Every single one of them present is at least a warrior of the fifth rank." Alice, having grown up in Fenlai City, clearly knew much more about it than Linley.

Linley's heart skipped a beat.

All knights of the fifth rank or higher? Such a powerful troop of knights, all consisted of knights of the fifth rank, would possess inconceivable power. As a mere magus of the fifth rank, he was nothing in front of their might.

Alice pointed at some magnificently dressed people in front. "Look, many of the highest ranking nobles have come today. In a bit, the royal clans of the six nations of the Holy Union will come as well."

Time passed very quickly. In the blink of an eye, it was eight.

Suddenly, that hundred-meter high Radiant Temple began to radiate light, bathing the plaza in white. The enormous statue of an angel, located in the middle of the plaza, also began to dimly glow. At the same time, the entire plaza was suddenly filled with a beautiful song that seemed to have come from the realm of the gods.

At this point in time, from a building to the side of the Radiant Temple, a group of people walked out. In front of them were several rows of men clad in gleaming white armor and helmets with red plumes. These were the guardian knights of the Radiant Temple itself. Each and every one of them was a majestic, knightly sight to behold. This group of nearly a hundred knights all marching in perfect unison made for an awesome, high-pressure sight which quickly silenced the entire crowd.

"I didn't realize the Radiant Church had this much power. Those hundred or so knights must all be warriors of the seventh rank at least."

Doehring Cowart appeared next to Linley, carefully inspecting the people present. "And there are even Saint-level combatants here today? Forget it, best I hide inside the ring."

And then, Doehring Cowart promptly disappeared again.

"Saint-level combatants?" Linley couldn't help but also carefully inspect that group of people.

Behind those hundred guardian knights of the Radiant Temple, there were ten or so people dressed in long, flowing white robes. And behind them, surrounded by several Cardinals wearing crimson, was a bald-headed old man dressed in silver robes.

"The Holy Emperor!"

Clearly, the bald-headed old man dressed in silver was the center and heart of this group of people. Linley couldn't help but focus all of his attention on this man. The Holy Emperor was a tall man, perhaps almost two meters tall. In his left hand, the Holy Emperor was wielding a scepter that was nearly as tall as he himself was.

Behind the Holy Emperor and the Cardinals, there were four old men all dressed in black, as well as over a hundred warriors dressed in violet. This group of people walked in an orderly fashion to the center of the plaza. None of the hundred thousand people gathered in the plaza dared to make a sound.

"Grandpa Doehring, you said there are Saint-level combatants present.

Which of these are Saint-level combatants?" Linley asked mentally.

"I could tell at a single glance. That Holy Emperor as well as one of those four old men in black are both Saint-level combatants. They are quite self-confident, it seems; they didn't attempt to mask their power in the slightest. I didn't expect that after five thousand years, that little Radiant Church which was hiding within the Pouant Empire would develop to such a level." Doehring Cowart sighed nonstop.

"Not mask their power?"

Startled, Linley looked at the group of people again. Honestly speaking, when looking at the Holy Emperor, the Cardinals, and the four old men in black, Linley only felt they were imposing and majestic, but didn't sense any powerful aura emanating from them at all.

But Doehring Cowart had just said...that those two Saint-level combatants weren't masking their power at all?

"Linley, you have a long way to go. In the Yulan continent, a magus of the fifth rank isn't much. Only upon reaching the seventh rank are you qualified to be considered 'powerful'. But a combatant of the seventh rank, in front of one of the mightiest forces in this continent, is only a small fry as well."

"On this continent, the Radiant Church, the Cult of Shadows, the Four Great Empires, and various other secretive organizations, all combined, have far more experts than you can imagine. Right now, you have very little power. You haven't had any contact with people of this level. In the future, you'll understand." Doehring Cowart chuckled as he spoke. "Your biggest advantage is your youth. The strength of those powerful people was cultivated over many years of constant, bitter training. In the future, you will also become powerful.”

Linley nodded slightly.

Because at the Ernst Institute, he was praised as a genius, in his heart, Linley really did think rather highly of himself. But these words by Doebling Cowart startled him and woke him up. In comparison to the Yulan continent as a whole, Linley really didn't count for much.

By the time the Holy Emperor's group arrived, everyone on the plaza began discoursing amongst themselves quietly.

“Big brother Linley, look. The six royal clans have all arrived. That one in front is the royal clan of our Fenlai City, while that big, golden-haired man is his Royal Majesty, who also happens to be a powerful warrior of the ninth rank.” Alice whispered quietly into Linley's ears.

“His Royal Majesty?” Linley looked over.

Dressed in resplendent golden armor, built tall and muscularly, the king was a middle-aged man with a full head of lion-like golden hair. This man was not only the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai, he was also a warrior of the ninth rank. This was inconceivable.

As a citizen of the Kingdom of Fenlai, Linley had long ago heard speak reverently about the pride of Fenlai, the legendary ‘Golden Lion’, Clayde [Ke’lai’de]. For a kingdom to have a king that was an extremely powerful warrior was, without a doubt, a huge source of pride to the citizens of that country.

At the Radiant Temple’s plaza, over a hundred thousand people were there, watching. In front of the angel statue, the Holy Emperor, the Cardinals, the white-robed attendants, and the guardian knights of the Radiant Temple all quietly stood. Amongst all of those people, without a question, the Holy Emperor was the most dazzling figure.

The members of the six royal clans of the six kingdoms, as well as all the dukes of the various duchies, all quietly stood there as well.

Suddenly.

With the Holy Emperor at the center, a wave of pure, billowing light suddenly emanated outwards, spreading across the entire plaza. The entire plaza full of people fell silent, and on everyone’s face, a calm, peaceful smile appeared, as they felt their hearts and minds be comforted.

“How terrifyingly powerful, for him to be able to so easily emit a wave of light that encompassed over a hundred thousand people.” As a magus himself, Linley could immediately tell how mighty this Holy Emperor really was.

The entire plaza was now so quiet that the sound of wind could be heard.

“In the name of the Lord!” The Holy Emperor said quietly, but his voice penetrated everyone and shook everyone’s souls.

Everyone present at the plaza could sense the majestic presence now emanating from the Holy Emperor. Linley, too, didn’t have any chance to resist this pressure, and he obediently bowed. The strength of this awesome presence emanating from the Holy Emperor was even more terrifying than the presence which emanated from those two Saint-level combatants who did battle in the sky over Wushan township, and more terrifying than that Black Dragon as well.

This sort of presence did not need to compel others to do anything. Its very nature caused people’s souls to feel worship and veneration towards it.

It was a deity’s presence!

In the entire plaza, aside from the Holy Emperor, everyone else, including all hundred thousand onlookers, the Cardinals, and the kings, all bowed reverently to hear the Holy Emperor speak.

“May you be blessed with the love, the kindness, and the benevolence of the Lord.”

The Holy Emperor’s voice didn’t seem to be too loud, but it shook the heavens and the earth, causing everyone’s soul to tremble.

Countless patterned rays of holy light suddenly emanated forth from the top of the Radiant Temple, bathing every single person in its radiance. Everyone in the plaza felt their hearts suddenly grow calm, and their bodies feel more comfortable than they ever had before. Everyone was extremely solemn and respectful.

“May the Lord bless you with peace and love.”

At the same time, a glorious aura began to emanate from the Holy Emperor himself. “Children of the Lord, let us admit our sins. Let us genuinely reflect and repent for our mistakes in thought, action, and speech. May the Lord take pity on us and pardon us our sins, and grant us eternal life.”

Instantly.

The entire world seemed to be filled with the sound of a holy song, which all the adherents of the Radiant Church immediately began to chant along with. The sound of the adherents singing, combined with the holy song emanating from the heavens, filled everyone’s hearts with reverence and solemnity.

.....

The mass was an extremely complicated one. It started with repentance, proceeded to God's pity, went on to songs of praise, was followed by prayers, then words of thanks, before finally ending with a choir.

The vast majority of the people on the plaza were followers of the Radiant Church, and bathed by the radiant glow from the Radiant Temple, almost everyone was silent. Even those people who didn't really believe in the Radiant Church were sincerely moved by the sight. When the choir songs came to an end, everyone finally woke up. By now, it was mid-day.

With the mass concluded, everyone present began to leave.

Hand in hand, Alice and Linley were walking together. "Big brother Linley, how do you feel? Don't you feel very comfortable?"

But Linley shook his head. "I was influenced by the atmosphere, to the point where I couldn't even think clearly. Perhaps those who are not mentally strong and need something external to rely upon would really like that feeling, but personally speaking, I do not. I dislike being influenced by outside factors."

He had to admit, during the mass itself, Linley had been affected, and he had lost himself within that comfortable, embracing aura.

But Linley had, after all, fought his way through and survived the deadly Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. After the mass ended, he immediately woke up. Thinking back to what just happened, he was terrified. The seductive power of the Radiant Church was really too frightening.

"Influenced? No. The Lord is like our father and mother. We are all the Lord's children, and we are all blessed with the Lord's benevolence and love. Big brother Linley, how could you think such a thing?" Alice was somewhat unhappy.

Alice had grown up in Fenlai City since she was little. As the Holy Capital, each year during the Yulan Festival, Fenlai City would put on this sort of large-scale mass. The vast majority of the citizens in Fenlai City were followers of the Radiant Church. Alice, as well, had been a believer in the Radiant Church since she was a child. This sort of spiritual belief was not something that would be easily changed.

"Alice, you can't think of it like that. The power and abilities you currently have, aren't they all a product of your own hard work and training? How can it have been bequeathed to you by the Lord? If the Lord is benevolent to you, why would he give you a father and mother like the ones you currently have?" Linley knew very well what Alice's family situation was like.

Alice couldn't help but fall silent. She stared at Linley.

"Big brother Linley, I'm going home now. There's no need for you to walk me back." Turning, Alice immediately headed in the direction of her home. Watching Alice depart, Linley felt unhappy and stifled. Turning his head, he looked back at the Radiant Temple, which rose into the clouds. "This Radiant Church really does cause lots of harm."

.....

It was quite normal for young lovers to quarrel. By the next time Alice and Linley met, they were madly in love with each other again. Both of them wisely decided to refrain from discussions of religion. While they originally met twice a month, at the depths of their ardor, they even upped it to meeting four times a month. Their relationship grew so close that they even began sleeping together, although they never did break that final barrier.

Per Alice: "My first time has to be on my wedding night." That second year, during the first half of year 9998 of the Yulan calendar, was a high point in the relationship between Linley and Alice.

But of course, any long-term relationship would have some small problems.

Year 9998 of the Yulan calendar, September 29th.

"Eh...there's something Alice is hiding from me and doesn't want to tell me." Linley was walking with his three bros on the streets of Fenlai City. Thinking back to the unhappy parting him and Alice had last time, Linley felt very helpless.

Alice and Linley grew up in very different circumstances, and also had many different thoughts on things. Most importantly of all...Alice was a very independent, strong-minded girl. She definitely wasn't the sort that would easily compromise with others. What made Linley the most helpless of all was that Alice was a closed gourd who hid her thoughts.

"Third bro, you and Alice are quarreling again?" Yale teased from the side.

George and Reynolds began to chuckle as well. Reynolds patted Linley on the shoulders and said, "Linley, I feel like you care a bit too much about this Alice. Careful that you don't let your heart be hurt too badly if you break up. Look at me; I've had over ten different girlfriends by now. How relaxed and easy my life is!"

Linley glanced at Reynolds, speechless.

"Fourth bro, watch your words. Third bro is intending on making Alice his wife." Yale chortled. Afterwards, he patted Linley on the shoulders as well. "But third bro, I have to say, as a man, there's plenty of women out there waiting for you. No need to restrict yourself so much."

Linley smiled but didn't speak.

Within Fenlai City, Linley bid farewell to his three bros and headed towards the Dry Road and Alice's residence.

"Uncle Hudd [Ha'de]." Linley warmly called out to the guard who stood in front of Alice's house. Over this period of time, Linley and Alice had grown extremely close, and so he had also gotten acquainted with the guard.

Hudd laughed as he saw Linley. "Oh, it's Linley. Are you here to see Miss Alice? Alas, Miss Alice isn't back yet. She should have been back already. I'm not sure what's going on."

"Not back yet?" Linley was stunned.

But then, Linley smiled at Hudd. "Then I'll just wait for a while over here. I bet she'll be back soon." Linley then headed straight for the bar located next to Alice's residence, made an order of his preferred jade wine, and then began to drink while quietly waiting.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 10, Cracks (part 2)

The sky grew dark, but Linley continued to sit there and slowly drink. Alice still did not show up, and the people in the bar grew fewer and fewer in number. By his side, Bebe was very much enjoying all the alcohol, as normally, Linley didn't let him drink too much. This was the first time that he was able to drink to his heart's content.

"Sir, we are about to close." The waiter said respectfully to Linley.

"Close?" Linley was startled.

"Oh. What's the bill?" Linley stood up, but he was feeling very woozy.

Linley had already finished six bottles of jade wine. Fortunately, Linley had a strong constitution and was able to hold his liquor. An ordinary person probably would've collapsed long ago. Next to him, Bebe had drank an even more ridiculous amount, polishing off a full dozen bottles.

After paying his tab, Linley left the bar. By now, it was late at night. The Dry Road was almost deserted and devoid of people.

"This was the first time that Alice missed our appointment." Linley let out a long sigh.

Taking one final look back at the two story house shrouded in darkness, Linley headed directly for the Jade Water Paradise.

At the Jade Water Paradise.

"Third bro's probably having fun with his girl right about now." Yale, George, and Reynolds were all chatting, laughing, and enjoying their wine.

"Hey, Boss Yale...do you think Linley's still a virgin?" Reynolds chuckled.

Yale wrinkled his nose. Quite confidently, he said, "That goes without saying. Just by looking at him, you can tell that he's a 100% virgin. Bah... Fourth Bro, let's go get some rest." As he spoke, Yale pulled his beauty by the hand and moved to leave the room, quickly followed by Reynolds.

"Crack."

The door to their room suddenly opened.

Yale and Reynolds stared in surprise. Shocked, Yale said, "Third Bro, why'd you come back?"

"No reason. Come on, Boss Yale, Fourth Bro, Second Bro, keep me company and have some drinks with me." Linley's voice was a bit low and quiet.

Reynolds, George, and Yale all looked at each other. Yale was the first one to laugh and say, "Wonderful. It's rare to see Third Bro in such a frank and straightforward mood. Tonight, we bros are gonna keep you company and drink with you." Yale, Reynolds, and George all sat down and began to drink with Linley.

The next day, Linley once more went to Alice's house, but once again, Alice did not show up.

.....

Within the Ernst Institute.

"Alice really is mad at me this time?" Linley was walking on the roads within the Ernst Institute, and his mood was not very good.

While walking, Linley noticed a particular shop located in the middle of the Institute, and saw various notices and advertisements outside of the shop. Linley's gaze suddenly fixed upon an advertisement for a crystal ball. In his mind, he suddenly remembered some words Alice had once said to him. "Big brother Linley, we're living in different places. Every time I see other couples on campus, I'll think about you and miss you, but it's so hard for us to meet each other. Alas...how wonderful it would be if the two of us could always be together."

Linley's heart suddenly moved.

Heading directly to the shop counter, he spoke with the storekeeper. "How much do the memory crystal balls here cost?"

"800 gold coins." The storekeeper's eyes lit up. Memory crystal balls were extremely luxurious items. "We have some extremely high quality memory crystals here. These memory crystals were specially manufactured for us by water-style magi of the eighth rank, right here in the Institute.”

Linley had a thorough understanding of the fundamentals behind the construction of a memory crystal ball.

The water-style’s “Floating Scryer Technique” would be embedded into the crystal ball through the usage of alchemical methods. When the memory crystal ball was activated through a small amount of mageforce, the spell would automatically activate and automatically record a long scene. After the recording was completed, the next time mageforce was used to activate the memory crystal ball, the crystal ball would automatically play back the previously recorded scene.

After negotiating over the price, Linley managed to procure two memory crystal balls at the price of 1200 gold coins.

“I’ll use one memory crystal ball to record what I do at the Institute, while I’ll give the other to Alice and let her do the same. That way, even if I’m not able to see her, I’ll be able to watch her through the memory crystal ball.” Seeing the two crystal balls in his hands, Linley couldn’t help but let a smile blossom.

....

Stonesculpting in the dormitory, training in the mountains, attending classes at the Institute...Linley recorded everything down, until the memory crystal itself was totally filled up and could not record any more. And then, excited, at the middle of October, Linley took the two memory crystals with him to Fenlai City, only to find...Alice still did not show up.

October 29th.

The four bros once more headed together towards Fenlai City. Within the city, Linley separated from his three bros.

Reynolds, Yale, and George watched as Linley departed, the expressions on their face solemn.

"In the past seven years that I've known Third Bro, he's always been an outstanding genius, both in the field of magic as well as in the field of stoneshaping. But clearly, Third Bro highly values the relationship between him and this Alice. If this results in heartbreak, I'm afraid that Third Bro will be deeply hurt." Yale frowned as he spoke.

Reynolds nodded as well. "I have the same feeling. That Alice girl hasn't shown up for three of their meetings now. I'm afraid there must be some trouble."

"Honestly, breaking up isn't necessarily a bad thing," Yale laughed. "As a man, if you don't experience the pain of a breakup, how will you mature? I've always felt that Third Bro dotes on that Alice too much. If it was me? Shit. If a girl acts up towards me, I'd drop her in a heartbeat."

George laughed. "Boss Yale, honestly, I rather appreciate how Third Bro behaves. Your point of view is really a bit too..." George shook his head.

"I myself am inclined towards how Boss Yale thinks." Reynolds smirked.

"Enough chitchat, let's go to the Jade Water Paradise."

Yale, Reynolds, and George headed directly to the Jade Water Paradise, but halfway to their destination, Reynolds suddenly, secretively nudged Yale and George. "Boss Yale, George, wait a second. Take a look over there. See who that is?"

Yale and George both turned to look in the direction towards which Reynolds was gesturing. Immediately, the expressions on the faces of both Yale and George changed.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 11, A Meeting

The Fragrant Pavilion Road was filled with people, but Yale, George, and Reynolds clearly and distinctly could tell who a certain female was, not too far away from them. Since Linley and Alice had been together for a long time now, Yale, George, and Reynolds had all been formally introduced to Alice. Naturally, they recognized her.

"It's Alice." George said in a low voice.

Right at this moment, Alice was walking hand-in-hand with another young man, a hint of a smile on her face. If Linley was here, he would definitely have been able to recognize that this young man was Kalan.

"Bastard." A murderous look was on Yale's face.

Reynolds was furious as well. "These past two months, Linley has been going to her home time and time again, waiting bitterly for her. He's been recording all of his activities down in a memory crystal as well, like an idiot. And he even told us that in the future, he was going to marry this Alice. fk this!"

"In what way is our Third Bro not worthy of her?" George was starting to get upset as well.

Yale let out a sneer. "It's not convenient for us to interfere. We'll go to the Jade Water Paradise, and we'll talk to Third Bro about it when he's back. The most important thing for us to do now is to help Third Bro mentally prepare for this. If he doesn't prepare? I'm afraid that he won't be able to take this blow.”

George and Reynolds all nodded as well.

.....

Within their private room at the Jade Water Paradise, Yale, George, and Reynolds all sat, frowns on their faces. They didn't ask for any courtesans to accompany them, and the only thing in their cups was juice. They were afraid that they might get drunk, and would not behave appropriately when dealing with Linley.

“I know Third Bro all too well.” George said worriedly. “He normally doesn't say much, and he's very hard working as well. There are so many girls at our school who are pursuing him. He's never accepted a single one of them. But a guy like him, once he falls for someone, he will fall much harder than you, Boss, or you, Fourth Bro.”

Yale and Reynolds both nodded.

To Yale and Reynolds, losing a girl just meant getting a new one. It was no big deal at all. But in this past year, every day, when they were joking with Linley, they could tell from Linley's reactions that he had really developed genuine feelings for Alice.

“This is pissing me off.” Yale drank all the juice in his cup at one go.

Reynolds snorted. “Boss Yale, don't be too pissed. It's just a girl. Third Bro will be in a lot of pain this time, but after he's over it, everything will be fine.”

Yale nodded as well.

Yale, Reynolds, and George were all members of large clans, and thus they were influenced accordingly since youth. For Reynolds and George, it wasn't too bad, as their clans had strict rules. But Yale had been buried in women since he was a kid.

Time passed on, one second at a time, one minute at a time. Yale and the others all sat there quietly.

One in the morning. With a creak, the door swung open. Linley walked in, reeking of wine. “Hey. All of you guys are still here?”

Yale laughed loudly. “We were waiting for you.”

“Third Bro, you weren't waiting for that Alice this entire time, were you?” George said in an intentionally casual manner.

Linley nodded silently, and then sat down. “You guys aren't drinking alcohol tonight?” Bending down, Linley retrieve a flagon of strong liquor from a chest, and immediately poured himself a cup.

“Third Bro, we need to talk to you about something.” Yale said with a grin.

“Talk.” Linley was in a very foul mood.

Yale said softly, "Tonight, when we were on the streets, we saw a girl. She looked a lot like your Alice. Honestly. We were a bit far away, so we couldn't clearly tell. But that girl was holding hands with another guy."

"Lies." Linley said in a steely tone that brooked no argument.

Yale couldn't help but start.

Reynolds clapped Linley on the shoulder with a laugh. "Third Bro. We're all men. As men, how can we let women ride on our heads? Alice hasn't shown up several times now. If I were you, I would've thrown her off a long time ago. Even if she knelt in front of me, I wouldn't pay her any mind."

"Fourth Bro, you're just a punk ass kid. What would you know?" Linley said with a laugh, and then he drank a large cup of liquor. "Come, enough chitchat. I'm in a foul mood. Drink with me."

Reynolds, Yale, and George all exchanged glances. They couldn't do anything besides sit down and drink with Linley.

Early next morning, Linley, Yale, George, and Reynolds were all sleeping, stretched across the table. Linley was the first one to wake up.

Seeing his three dear friends, a bitter smile was on Linley's face. In his heart, he murmured to himself, "Boss Yale, Second Bro, Fourth Bro...all of you accompanied me in drinking and said so many words of encouragement to me. I understand what you guys are thinking. For Alice to miss our appointment these past two, three times, I too had a bad feeling, but...I don't believe it. I'm not willing to."

Linley walked over to the window, looking down.

It was five or six in the early morning. The city of Fenlai seemed to have just woken up as well. Only a small number of people were walking about, preparing to work. The vast majority of people were still sleeping.

"Linley." Doebling Cowart flew out from within the Coiling Dragon ring.

Doebling Cowart was forever dressed in those pristine, long white robes. His white beard was forever long.

"Grandpa Doebling." Upon seeing Doebling Cowart appear, Linley suddenly felt as though he himself was a lonely boat that had finally reached the harbor.

Glancing at the sleeping dorm mates, Doebling Cowart laughed. "Linley, you have three really good friends. As far as the affairs of the heart between men and women? I can only say this. In the 1300 years when I was alive, from what I've seen, perhaps only one time out of ten would I see a person's be successful in his first love."

"Grandpa Doebling, I get it." Linley barely nodded. "But...I trust her."

Doebling Cowart nodded as well. He no longer spoke.

....

In the middle of November, Linley put on his backpack, making sure to secure the two memory crystals within, and then headed towards Fenlai City again, once more arriving at the two story house.

"Uncle Hudd, has Alice come back yet?" Linley said courteously to the guard named Hudd.

Hudd shook his head. "No. It's been over a month since Miss Alice has come back. She hasn't returned a single time."

"Not a single time?" Linley frowned, furrows appearing in his forehead. "Then Uncle Hudd, I'll head out now." Linley courteously bid farewell.

Walking alone on the Dry Road, Linley walked over to the bar, but did not enter. Bebe mentally said to him, "Boss, don't be so worried. For Alice to not appear, maybe she just has some important things going on? For example, maybe she went to do training. That's always a possibility. Don't stand here thinking idle thoughts."

"Right. Maybe she's busy dealing with something and can't get free." Linley's eyes suddenly became alive again.

Seeing this, Bebe couldn't help but wrinkle his little nose. "Boss, you are so love-struck that you've gone dumb. Just a few words of encouragement and you're incredibly excited."

"You little punk. No alcohol for you today, as punishment." Linley didn't know whether to laugh or cry.

But Linley also had to admit that after joking around with Bebe, his mood improve a little.

.....

November 29th. This was a blizzard day, and snow covered everything in white. Linley, Reynolds, Yale, and George were all seated within a carriage. The driver was someone belonging to Yale's merchant clan, and behind them there were several knights escorting Linley's sculptures.

"Third Bro. In the next few days, the end-of-the-year exams will be coming. I wonder if that fellow who was once proclaimed the number one genius of our institute has become a magus of the sixth rank yet." Yale chuckled.

George and Reynolds were all extremely proud.

Because in the previous week? Linley had reached the realm of the sixth rank.

In truth, Linley had reached the fourth rank when he was 13, the 5th rank when he was 14, and by now, he was almost 17. After two and a half years, Linley finally made the transition from being a magus of the fifth rank to the sixth rank.

Two and a half years!

What about that Dixie, who was previously regarded as the ultimate genius of the Institute?

Dixie became a magus of the fifth rank when he was twelve, but now he's also around seventeen. It's been five years. Honestly speaking, Dixie's progression was also extremely fast. However, in comparison with Linley, who was assisted by the Straight Chisel School's technique of stonecarving, he was much slower.

If, at the end-of-the-year exams, Linley had reached the sixth rank while Dixie had not, then Linley would be known as the indisputable number one genius of the Ernst Institute.

"Third Bro, try and smile. Becoming a magus of the sixth rank is something you should be happy about." Reynolds said encouragingly.

Linley quirked his lips.

"You call that a smile?" Reynolds intentionally tried to tease Linley.

Linley finally let out a smile. "Alright, Fourth Bro, let me be quiet for a while." Linley had already decided that this time, no matter what, he was going to meet Alice. If he couldn't see her in Fenlai City, he would go directly to the Wellen Institute to look for her."

No matter what, he had to have a face-to-face with Alice and sort things out.

Opening the carriage window, Linley let a cold gust of air inside. He couldn't help but squint. Outside, everything was blanketed in white, and the sky itself was filled with feather-like plumes of snow. While enjoying the winter scenery, the time passed quickly, and they arrived at Fenlai City.

After delivering the three sculptures to the Proulx Gallery, the four of them had a meal, then temporarily parted ways.

By now, Linley's income was very high. Almost each month, he was able to collect around 20,000 gold pieces. Thus Linley didn't really care much about money anymore. Carrying his backpack with two memory crystals, Linley headed directly to Alice's home.

"Boss, if I recall correctly, this is the fourth time that you've headed to Fenlai City with these memory crystals, right?" Bebe said disapprovingly. "How about you give them to Delia instead? I rather like Delia."

From October until now, this indeed was the fourth time that Linley had carried these memory crystal balls to Fenlai City.

"That's enough, Bebe." Linley said with a frown.

Walking on the snow-covered street, crunching noises could be heard with each step Linley took. In short order, he arrived at that familiar, two-story house.

After seeing and briefly speaking with Hudd, Linley could only turn and depart.

"Once again, not back." Linley was frowning severely. "Wellen Institute!" Linley immediately decided to head off to the Wellen Institute.

Fenlai City. The Fragrant Pavilion Road.

Alice was walking on the streets, holding hands with Kalan. Kalan gently said, "Alice, are you not planning to make things clear to Linley?"

"Maybe later." Alice shook her head.

Kalan nodded and no longer spoke.

His eyes on Alice, who was holding hands with him, Kalan couldn't help but smile. He had grown up with Alice and was childhood sweethearts with her. In his heart, he had always liked Alice, but he didn't expect that Alice would get together with Linley so quickly.

When he first discovered that Alice and Linley had started dating, Kalan was exploding with rage.

Ever since he was a kid, Kalan had always regarded Alice as his. Even if Linley had previously helped him, when it came to love, Kalan wasn't going to back off. Thus...he used a few small tricks to achieve what he wanted.

"Love at first sight? The hero rescuing the damsel in distress?" Kalan was filled with contempt. "When faced with reality, all of that is as flimsy as a piece of white paper.”

Holding Alice’s hand, Kalan was totally content.

“Alice, when do you think you’ll make things clear to Linley?” Kalan asked again. Kalan really didn’t want Alice and Linley to stay entangled much longer.

Alice shook her head. “I don’t know either. But I believe that if I don’t meet with big brother Linley for a long period of time, in time, the feelings will fade. By then, if I say goodbye to him, he won’t have as strong a reaction.”

“You’re right. After all, Linley saved us once.” Kalan nodded.

As they walked, they reached the intersection between the Dry Road and the Fragrant Pavilion Road. Kalan noticed that Alice suddenly came to a halt. He couldn’t help but look curiously at Alice, but Alice, looking stunned, was looking at a place on the Dry Road. Her face was ashen. Kalan also turned his head....

A young man, dressed in a moon-white robe, was standing there, not moving in the slightest. He was staring at them, stunned. His face was devoid of all color, as white as snow.

“Linley!” Kalan immediately frowned.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 12, The Desolate Snow

Alice had previously believed that she no longer held too deep of an affection for Linley, but when she saw him once again face to face, especially when she saw the disbelieving look on his face, she felt pain in her heart.

“Big brother Linley.” Alice called out to him.

Linley’s snow-white face held not a spick of blood. He stood there, stunned, for a long time.

“Swish!” Letting out an enraged scream, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, transformed into a vicious black blur and charged directly towards Alice and Kalan. Although Bebe was now highly intelligent, he was still a magical beast, and still possessed the vicious cruelty of beasts.

He could keenly sense the disbelief and despair in Linley’s heart. He was going to get revenge.

Bebe’s body suddenly enlarged by one size, and in the blink of an eye, appeared by Kalan and Alice. Bebe’s sharp claws gleamed with cold light, freezing the hearts of those two. They didn’t even have the chance to dodge or to speak!

“Return!” Linley’s voice suddenly rang out.

The dark blur that was Bebe shuddered, then landed on the snow, brushing right by Kalan's face. Bebe turned his head to stare at Linley. "Squeak squeak!" He called out, while at the same time he began to argue mentally with Linley.

Linley slowly, but firmly, shook his head.

Bebe glanced at Alice and Kalan with his cold, cruel eyes, then turned. Once more mysteriously shrinking back to his usual size, he transformed into a cruel shadow once more and leapt onto Linley's shoulders. Just judging from his superficial cuteness, no one could've imagined how terrifying he actually could be.

"Huff, huff." Only now did Kalan began to gasp for breath. Sweat was beaded on his forehead, and with terror, he stared at Bebe, perched on Linley's shoulders.

Alice stared at Linley. She took a deep breath. "Big brother Linley, I know that right now, in your heart, you must be in a lot of pain. It's not convenient for us to talk about this on the street. Let's go to a nearby tavern and have a good talk there. Okay?"

Linley nodded. He did not speak.

....

On the Dry Road, within a lavish hotel. Linley and Alice each sat on opposite sides of a table. As for Kalan, he quite intelligently ran off to sit in a corner of the room, not daring to get close enough to disturb them. He had just barely escaped with his life from Bebe's near-assault. Kalan really was terrified of Linley.

The table was made of polished black marble. On it were two cups of warm fruit wine.

Linley and Alice were facing each other silently.

After a long silence, Alice let out a tiny sigh. "Big brother Linley. I've wronged you terribly in this affair. This entire time, I've refused to meet with you because I wanted you to be mentally prepared. At the very least, I didn't want the two of us to part ways as enemies."

"Enemies?" In his heart, Linley laughed bitterly, but he didn't speak. He just quietly listened, looking at Alice.

Alice continued. "Big brother Linley. I admit that in the beginning, I really, really liked you. I had also thought about us getting married and having kids. But after we were together for a long time, I realized that in many ways, we really weren't a good fit."

Linley finally spoke. "In many ways? Alice, I don't just like your strengths, I also accept your weaknesses. I believe that when two people are together, they should make allowances for each other and try to understand each other. No two people will be a perfect, flawless couple without a hint of discord."

Alice bit her lips. With her two hands, she picked up her cup of fruit wine and took a sip.

"Back when we were younger, when we first met, I was fifteen." Alice spoke only after a long period of collecting her thoughts. "In my heart, you were the hero who saved me, descending from the heavens. I once thought you were my earth, my sky, my whole world, but I now realize that isn't the case. Aside from these things, family is important as well."

Linley was startled.

"Big brother Linley, you've always been so filled with vitality, and you are also very good to me. You are very hard working as well. I must admit that you are very perfect. But...this isn't enough. For example, this time, when my father went gambling, he lost several hundred thousand gold coins! But all big brother Kalan had to do was ask his family to help, and this matter was easily resolved."

Alice looked at Linley. "Big brother Linley, this is something you aren't capable of doing. Although my father is a gambler and an alcoholic, he's still my father."

"Just because of this?" Linley said gently.

"No." Alice continued. "Not just this. I've discovered that big brother Kalan has always been very good to me as well. He grew up alongside me, and I'm very familiar with him. But with regards to you, I've always felt as though you've been shrouded by a layer of mist. I can't see you clearly."

"You are a genius magus at the number one magus institute in the continent, and at age 15, you were able to have your own private exhibition booth at the Proulx Gallery. By the sound of it, you are very perfect, but because of that perfection, I feel like I can't see you clearly."

Alice's voice grew lower. "The most important thing is, the two of us are always in separate places. At the beginning, it wasn't so bad, but as time went on, I got tired. I'm used to always having someone by my side, just like how big brother Kalan is always by my side."

After saying all of these things, Alice fell silent.

Linley was silent as well.

After a long time passed, enough for the wine to grow cold, Linley spoke. "Alice, do you remember what we once said to each other? I once said to you, I can directly come live with you. But you told me, no. You don't want to interrupt my training."

"But now, you say that I'm never with you?" A very pained smile was on Linley's face.

Alice wanted to speak, but there was nothing she could say.

Everything she had just said was just excuses.

Looking at Alice, Linley continued. "Alice, do you remember that first time we were together in a hotel, you said to me, you hoped that if my love for you disappeared, I would tell you and wouldn't hide it from you. You would quietly leave me."

Linley suppressed his agitation, forcing himself to remain calm. "Back then, I also said, if you ever feel like you've lost your feelings for me, I too would hope that you would tell me directly and not lie to me. I, too, would quietly leave."

Alice's eyes grew moist.

"It isn't a big deal that you are now with Kalan. But I wish you didn't deceive me. For you to now be with Kalan behind my back and not openly explain things to me, to let me continue to harbor hope in my heart, to let me wait for you time and time again....do you know how it feels to wait for someone like that?"

Linley's body began to tremble. "September 29th, that was the first day you missed our meeting. I waited from midnight until nearly dawn. Every minute, every second, was hard to endure. When I returned to school, I was thinking, was it because I made you angry the previous time? So I wanted to make you happy. Like an idiot, I went to buy memory crystals to record the scenes of all the places around the Institute. I hoped that when we were not together, when you missed me, you could watch me."

"Carrying these two memory crystal balls, in mid-October, I once again went to you, my heart filled with hope. But once again, you weren't there."

"In my heart, I started to grow restless. But I held firm. Because I remember that promise that we made each other. I believed that if you were going to leave me, you would let me know first. That's why I held firm. The end of October, mid-November, I went as well. But in the end..."

Linley stood up, regarding Alice with a bitter smile on his lips. "I came again today. But I'm lucky. This time, you didn't continue to deceive me."

The tears were welling up in Alice's eyes.

"Big brother Linley--"

Linley opened up his backpack and removed those two memory crystal balls. As he did so, Linley couldn't help but think back to how he had gone everywhere in his school to record scenes. Thinking back to it, he felt himself to be such a fool.

"These two memory crystals, I've carried from the Ernst Institute to Fenlai City four times now. But now...they are meaningless."

Linley was holding a memory crystal ball in each hand. Those two crystal balls suddenly collided....

"Smash!"

Countless cracks appeared on the surface of each crystal ball. Linley's hands went limp, and the two crystal balls dropped to the floor. "Crash!" With a splintering sound, they each split into over ten pieces, rolling about on the floor of the hotel. The splintering sound was very clear and high, and caused all the patrons of the hotel to turn and look at them.

Alice could no longer restrain her tears, which began to pour down her face.

"Big brother Linley, in the future, will we still be friends?" Tears blurring her vision, Alice raised her head to look at Linley.

On his feet, Linley looked at Alice, but he didn't answer her question. After a while, a faint smile appeared on his face. "Alice, if I'm not mistaken, we started our relationship on November 29th of last year. Today is also November 29th. It's been a full year. Thank you. At least you've given me some beautiful memories."

Suddenly turning, Linley directly left via the front door of the hotel.

The entire hotel was silent. Kalan, previously in a corner, hurriedly ran over to Alice. As he did so, he ran over and stepped on some pieces of the shattered crystal balls. The crystalline sounds of the memory crystals being further shattered echoed in the hotel.

"Alice, are you okay?" Kalan embraced Alice comfortingly.

But by this time, Alice had been reduced to a puddle of tears. Despite being in Kalan's arms, she still turned her head to watch as Linley departed. At this moment, in her mind, she began replaying every moment she had spent with Linley, but Alice knew....

From this moment onwards, Linley would never treat her like that again. Perhaps he would never see her again.

.....

The Fragrant Pavilion Road was covered with white snow, and some snowflakes still fluttered about in the air.

Walking on the Fragrant Pavilion Road, Linley's shadow seemed very desolate. Raising his head to look at the sky, Linley allowed the snow to cover his face with a layer of coldness. Right now, Linley's heart was trembling. He couldn't help but fiercely clutch at his chest.

His heart hurt. Deeply.

The pain penetrated his heart!

Within Linley's mind, one moving scene after another floated through his consciousness.

That set of violet clothes. That beautiful, spirit-like appearance under the moon.

Hiding in the corner of the balcony, warmly talking to him in soft tones.

While the snow flew about, she had hidden her face bashfully in his chest.

At the hotel, she had lain coquettishly in his embrace.

.....

Linley had once believed that he would forever be together with Alice.

But today, his dream was shattered. And with it, Linley's resilient, tough heart shattered as well.

"Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaah!"

Standing in the middle of the Fragrant Pavilion Road, Linley couldn't refrain from letting out a pain-filled howl. That howl was like the howl of a wolf separated from his pack, a howl of desolation, of despair. All the people nearby looked at him in shock, and all of them slowly backed far away from him.

These people all looked at him as though he were an idiot.

Two rivers of tears flowed down silently from Linley's face.

Idiot. He really was an idiot.

An idiot who believed in promises!

"Smash!" Linley suddenly, painfully, knelt to one knee, clutching his chest hard.

His heart hurt. Hurt so bad, it was as though it had been stabbed with needles.

Hurt so much, even his hand started to hurt. Hurt so much his ten fingers had lost all feeling. Linley could only tightly clutch at his chest with his hands. It seemed as though this was the only way he could lessen the pain.

"Haha!"

Tears flowing down his face, Linley suddenly stood up and started laughing wildly. Laughing at his own stupidity. Laughing at his naiveness.

At this moment...

That savage pain in his heart caused Linley to begin coughing, so hard that he felt like his chest was being stabbed by knives. But Linley continued to cough, so hard that he curled up in the street like a caterpillar.

"Cough, cough!"

With a particularly vicious cough, a mouthful of bright, fresh blood was splattered onto the snow.

Staring at the fresh blood on the snow, Linley suddenly felt that this blood was like a rose, a blood-colored rose. In Linley's mind, he couldn't help but think back to an image from a year ago, an image of Alice holding a red rose.

"The moon's reflection in the water, the flower in the mirror, the man in a dream. In the end, all of it is illusionary, is reduced to nothingness. Haha..." Linley began laughing wildly on the Fragrant Pavilion Road, as though no one else was there. But his laughter was so desolate...

Doehring Cowart, dressed as ever in his snow-white robes, stood quietly by Linley's side. He didn't speak, only looked sadly at Linley. In his heart, he sighed, "Oh, Linley...in the end, you're still just a kid."

This year, Linley was only sixteen years old.

"Third Bro!"

Suddenly, a frantic shout could be heard. Yale, Reynolds, and George all ran over from not too far away. It wasn't too far from this place to the Fragrant Pavilion Road, and so the three of them had also noticed Linley standing in the middle of the road. Upon seeing Linley spit out a mouthful of blood, all of their faces changed.

"Third Bro, are you okay?"

"Linley."

George, Yale, and Reynolds all hurriedly propped Linley up.

Linley looked at his three bros. He minutely shook his head. "I'm fine. Don't be worried about me." Linley looked up at the sky. "In the past, I liked the snow. But now, I feel as though the snow is very desolate, very cold."

"You guys can stay here. I'm going back." After speaking these words, Linley headed directly towards the end of the Fragrant Pavilion Road.

Yale, Reynolds, and George all looked at each other, their eyes filled with concern and worry. And then, all three of them chased after Linley....

That day, the snow continued to fall. Gradually, that rose-shaped stain of blood was covered up by the snow, with no traces of it left behind.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 13, Ten Days, Ten Nights

Upon returning to the Ernst Institute, Linley just got his usual backpack from his room, then directly headed to the mountain behind the Ernst Institute. Within the backpack, there was just his clothes, his magiccrystal card, and a straight chisel.

"Second Bro, Fourth Bro, watch after Third Bro." Yale instructed.

George and Reynolds both nodded. They, too, were worried about Linley.

"Boss, what are you going to do?" Reynolds asked.

Yale's eyes flashed with a frozen look. "Me?"

"I'm going to investigate and see why Alice, that blind girl, decided to betray Third Bro. And I'm going to see what little bastard dared to steal my bro's woman." As he spoke, Yale stood up. "I'm heading to Fenlai City right now. You guys help me take care of Third Bro."

"Got it." Reynolds and George nodded.

And then, Yale left, taking with him his clan's guardsmen, heading directly out of the Ernst Institute to Fenlai City. As for Reynolds and George, in the middle of this icy winter night, they hastened to the mountain behind the Ernst Institute.

.....

Riding a fine stallion, Yale led his guards charging across the snowy plains. Quite soon, they returned to Fenlai City. Upon entering the city, Yale headed directly to one of his clan's headquarters in Fenlai City.

This was a nine-floor building, a famous hotel in Fenlai City.

Behind the hotel, there were a number of small buildings that were not open to the public. Yale directly charged into a smaller, two-floor tall red building. As he did, five extravagantly dressed middle-aged men came out. Upon seeing Yale, they all respectfully called out in union, "Young master Yale!"

"Walt [Hua'te], where is my Second Uncle?" Yale immediately asked.

Amongst the five middle-aged men, there was one named Walt. He was the only one of them dressed in long black robes. Walt respectfully replied, "His lordship returned to our main headquarters seven days ago. For now, the affairs in the Holy Union are under my management."

Walt knew very well that ever since this second young master became a pupil of the Ernst Institute, his position within the clan's hierarchy had skyrocketed.

Yale was not like one of the ordinary clan members, because Yale was in the direct line of descent. Even Walt's highest supervisor, the 'Second Uncle' in charge of all of the affairs of the Holy Union, wouldn't dare to be discourteous to Yale.

"Young master Yale, if you have anything you need handled, please just let me know." Walt said respectfully.

Yale was quiet for a moment, then gave direct instructions. "Go and do some investigations for me. On Fenlai City's Dry Road, there is a girl called Alice. She should be sixteen years old this year. She's also a student of the Wellen Institute. Recently, she's been together with a man. Provide me with all of the information regarding this man."

"Yes, young master Yale." Walt smiled slightly. "Young master Yale, do you like this Alice? If you do, then I can..."

"No need." Yale's face was cold and dark. "What I need is information, as fast as you can provide it. Understood?"

"Yes." Walt could sense that this young master Yale seemed to be truly enraged this time.

.....

That same night. Candles flickering.

Yale was sitting at a table, pouring himself a cup of wine, his face unhappy. But clearly, his mind was elsewhere and not on the wine.

Suddenly, urgent footsteps could be heard. Walt suddenly hurried inside, along with a woman in her 20's who looked as cold as ice. Upon entering the room, Walt bowed respectfully. "Young master Yale, we have clearly investigated this Alice and her male friend."

"Speak." Yale said coldly.

Walt looked at that cold woman, who bowed respectfully. "Young master Yale, that Alice has two male friends. The first one is named Linley Baruch, who was born in Wushan Township..."

"Stop. Discuss the second one." Yale frowned.

"Alice's current boyfriend is named Kalan Debs. He was born in Fenlai City, and is currently seventeen years old. He's a student at the Wellen Warrior Academy, a warrior of the fifth rank! This Debs clan is a major clan in the Kingdom of Fenlai, and Kalan Debs will be the direct successor to the clan leader."

"Kalan Debs...the Debs clan?" Yale frowned. "Just a small clan within a kingdom?"

Walt, seeking to ingratiate himself with Yale, said, "In the Kingdom of Fenlai, the Debs clan can be considered a major clan. But of course, in the Yulan continent as a whole, it can only be considered a very unremarkable little clan."

"Oh. I want to severely punish this Debs clan. What would you recommend?" Yale looked at Walt.

"That's easy!"

Walt began to laugh. "Young master Yale, you don't know this, but this Debs clan is actually the working partner of our Dawson Conglomerate here in Fenlai. In the Kingdom of Fenlai, the Dawson Conglomerate makes the big money, while their Debs clan gets some of our scraps. After all these years though, those scraps have fattened up the Debs clan."

"Oh, this Debs clan is actually the working partner of our Conglomerate here in the Kingdom of Fenlai?" A hint of a smile appeared on Yale's face.

Walt nodded. "Yes, young master Yale. You should know very well that our Dawson Conglomerate doesn't seek to gain all the benefit from every single trade. In the Four Great Empires and in the dozens of various kingdoms, we always have a working partner. Naturally, we have to give them some benefit as well."

Yale nodded.

He knew this very well. The Dawson clan controlled the Dawson Conglomerate, which was one of the three titanic trading unions in the Yulan continent. Even the Four Great Empires and the two alliances did not dare to look down on them. This was the reason why Yale was able to enroll in the Ernst Institute.

Behind the Ernst Institute was the Radiant Church. On the surface, they claimed that the enrollment standards were fair and open.

How could an ordinary clan manage to get someone in through the backdoor of the Radiant Church?

The creed of the Dawson Conglomerate was this: "When there's money to be made, everyone gets a share."

In the Four Great Empires, the two alliances, and the various other kingdoms and duchies, the Dawson Conglomerate always would have some trading partners, and would allow them to make some profit as well.

To be able to work alongside the Dawson Conglomerate was the same as getting on top of a massive money-making war machine. In the Kingdom of Fenlai, the Debs clan only get a small fraction of what the Dawson Conglomerate made, but it was enough to make them fabulously wealthy by the standards of the Kingdom of Fenlai.

"Young master Yale, there are always many clans in the Kingdom of Fenlai who clamor to replace the Debs clan as our local partner here. The only reason we still work with the Debs clan is because they have been fairly decent partners, which is why we haven't given any other clans the opportunity." Walt smiled.

Yale understood Walt's intentions.

"Immediately change our local partner here in the Kingdom of Fenlai. As for the Debs clan? Suppress them!" Yale's voice was as cold as ice.

"Yes, young master." Walt replied respectfully.

This was nothing more than an issue of working partners in a small kingdom. Even Walt, who was just the second-in-command of the Dawson Conglomerate here in Fenlai, had the authority to make this decision. Much less Yale, a clan member who was in the principal family branch.

"Poor Debs clan." Walt secretly said to himself.

.....

In the mountain behind the Ernst Institute, the snow covered everything with a layer of silvery white clothes. Within the dense trees, there were some large stones. At an empty spot in the mountain, Linley was standing quietly, eyes closed, on top of one of those giant stones.

The Shadowmouse, Bebe, was next to him, standing in the snow, quietly protecting Linley.

George and Reynolds looked at each other with concern.

"George. What is Linley doing? He's been standing there on that boulder for a full day and night now. When we call out to him, he has no response. And he hasn't eaten or drank anything. If this continues..." Reynolds was starting to grow frantic.

George slowly shook his head. "Don't be impatient. Third Bro is a magus of the sixth rank, and a warrior. His body is extremely strong and tough. It has been fortified by the absorption of nature's elemental essences. Even if he goes several days without food or water, it shouldn't be a problem. Let's just watch him for now. I trust that Third Bro isn't the sort of person who cannot recover from a setback.”

Reynolds nodded slightly.

None of them had any idea as to what Linley’s current condition was like.

In fact, Doebling Cowart was there, by Linley’s side as well. Only Reynolds and George could not, of course, see him. Doebling Cowart quietly watched Linley. In his heart, he was secretly surprised. “This Linley fellow seems to have entered a higher mental realm.” As a grandmaster sculptor, Doebling Cowart was able to guess what sort of state Linley had entered.

Linley was staring at that boulder. This boulder was over two meters tall and three meters wide.

He was staring at the lines on the boulder. The rocky lines and craggy patterns covering this boulder were all extremely complex. But as Linley continued to stare at it, a number of those lines and patterns seemed to drift off from the boulder and rematerialize in Linley’s mind.

These lines and patterns seemed to form into five human images.

Suddenly, those five images transformed themselves in to Alice. All sorts of scenes appeared in Linley’s mind as well. In his mind’s eye, this boulder suddenly transformed itself various sculptures. In the end, it transformed into five female statues.

“George, look! Third Bro is moving!” Reynolds said in surprise.

From within his backpack, Linley retrieved his straight chisel. Wielding it in his right hand, staring at the boulder, Linley suddenly began to move. The straight chisel transformed into a blur, and immediately, excess stone and rubble began to fly off from the boulder.

His soul had become one with the earth, had become one with the wind.

Linley’s soul could clearly sense every single crevice, every single line of that boulder. He wielded the straight chisel as though it were like the wind, blowing pieces of excess stone away from the boulder. Every single chop of his chisel seemed to be perfect in movement, not too much, not too little, accurate to the point of perfection.

Sometimes, the straight chisel would move slowly, while at other times, it would move very quickly. Sometimes, it would leave traces and lines as it flowed through the stone; at other times, it would directly chop off an entire piece of rock.

“I still remember how you looked that year, that pitiable look when you were being attacked by the Bloodthirsty Boar.”

A perfect mental image of that scene and of Alice formed in Linley’s mind. All of his emotions and feelings were concentrated into his chisel. The snow began to settle and coalesce around Linley, and as it did, Linley felt his soul merge with the earth and with the wind as it never had before, as earth elemental essence and wind elemental essence rapidly began to enter Linley’s body.

Linley didn't think about anything else. Right now, he was focusing on those bygone feelings.

Slowly, the leftmost 20% of the statue began to transform into the image of a woman. The basic structure of the sculpture was beginning to take shape. Linley neither ate nor drank, continuing to carve nonstop. Occasionally, he would wield his chisel several dozen times in a row. At other times, he would spend several minutes carefully carving a single, perfect line.

.....

Linley, having totally subsumed himself and his feelings for Alice within his straight chisel, totally did not notice that this was the first time he had entered such a state since he had first started to learn carving.

In the past, regardless of whether or not it was his early days or his later days, Linley wouldn't be totally, 100% subsumed into the carving.

At the very least, he would spend several days carving a statue. He could stop at any time and continue the next time.

But this time was different. Linley was totally submerged in those bygone feelings, and totally subsumed into energetically carving. He didn't even think about stopping, couldn't even notice that he hadn't eaten or drank anything. This sort of total immersion and concentration caused Linley to become one with nature as he never had before.

That sort of absolute oneness with nature caused Linley's spiritual energy to rise at a terrifying, previously unseen speed.

Right now, Linley's growth in spiritual energy was rising a thousand times more rapidly than an ordinary person's.

"He's totally become one with nature, and has reached the level of forgetting oneself. What a wonderful surprise." Doebling Cowart's eyes lit up.

One day after another passed, with Linley totally absorbed still in his work. Earth elemental essence and wind elemental essence still continuously poured into his body, replenishing the energy that he had lost.

Like the blink of an eye, ten days passed, with Linley absorbed in sculpting the entire time.

"Puff!"

With Linley at the center, the snow suddenly swirled outwards in all directions. Straight chisel in hand, Linley stared quietly at the giant sculpture in front of him. Linley had put all of his effort into making this sculpture. This was the largest sculpture he had ever made, and it was also the most successful one.

This sculpture was made up of five images of a woman. In all five images, the woman was the same. Alice.

There was one showing the pitiable look she had when she faced danger.

There was one showing the adorable look on her face when she was secretly chatting on the balcony.

There was one showing the look of shyness on her face when they first started dating.

There was one showing how mesmerizing she looked when they were in the throes of their love for each other.

And there was one showing that hint of heartlessness on her face when they broke up!

"In a year's time, everything has passed on, as though it were nothing more than a dream. But now, the dream has come to an end. Let this sculpture, then, be called 'Awakening From the Dream'." Staring at his sculpture, Linley felt his spirit was more at peace now than ever before. It was as though all of his previous emotions had been entrusted within this sculpture.

'Awakening From the Dream'. This sculpture had been brought into the world!

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 14, Liquefy

Reynolds, George, and Yale all stared dumbly at the statue. They had been totally awed by this stone sculpture, and to their eyes, the five human shapes in the statue seemed to all have souls.

The image on the left, carried within it a soft, tender, vulnerable air that made anyone who saw it feel pity.

The second image one carried within it a cute, adorable air that stirred the hearts of viewers.

The third image seemed to be just like a real girl, who was blushing with shyness right in front of you.

.....

All five of the figures within this statue carried their own unique aura.

Linley stared at the statue, and as he did, he felt like he was seeing a fantasy. These five figures seemed to be figures from his dreams. But now, he had awoken.

“Linley.” Doehring Cowart walked over to him. His moon-white robe was still spotless, without a speck of dust.

Linley looked at Doehring Cowart.

A look of gratification was on Doehring Cowart's face. "In terms of stonesculpting ability, you have already reached the level of masters. And this statue of yours that you just created, is totally worthy of being a sterling paragon of an example of our Straight Chisel School's sculpting. After having experienced this, I believe that your understanding of stonesculpting has also dramatically deepened.

Linley slightly nodded.

Only after completing this sculpture did Linley realize why it was that each master sculptor might perhaps only have a single work of art which would be acclaimed and passed down throughout the ages. It wasn't due to them not having enough ability; rather, it was because those 'divine' sculptures were something which occurred out of nowhere and could not be forced.

For example, Linley had just completed this statue, 'Awakening From the Dream'. But if you were to ask him to do another one like it, it would perhaps be impossible.

When a 'divine' sculpture came into existence in the world, it did so only through a unique combination of exquisite skill, marvelous inspiration, and sudden, all-encompassing emotion. Only when someone was absolutely emotionally moved, 100%, could a 'divine' sculpture be born. Because only then would they hold nothing back and produce such a stunning, soul-stirring sculpture.

Linley had completed this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. But who could possibly guess as to how long it would be before he might be able to produce another one of this quality?

However....

Throughout those ten days of non-stop carving, Linley's soul had already clearly keenly attuned with that perfect sensation of being one with the universe. And thus, in terms of sculpting ability, Linley had dramatically improved. If Linley were to carve another sculpture right now, although it wouldn't be able to match the quality of this 'Awakening From the Dream', it would be much better than his previous sculptures which were worth around 5000 gold each.

"Linley, have you felt the change in your spiritual energy?" Doehring Cowart said with a delighted smile.

Linley started.

Spiritual energy?

This sculpture had forced him to exert far more spiritual energy than he normally did, and now, his spiritual energy was far stronger than before. If ten days ago, Linley's spiritual energy was like a small tree, by now, it was like a gloriously flourishing giant oak.

"How could it have increased this much?" Linley was totally amazed.

Doehring Cowart laughed delightedly. His white beard flourishing, he said, "Ten times! Your spiritual energy increased by ten times! It's received such an incredible boost; in ten days, it has increased by about ten times!

In ten short days, the benefit you gained was equivalent to what others might get after tens of years of training. Your level of spiritual energy directly leapt out of the level of the sixth rank and has reached the level of a magus of the seventh rank at one go."

Linley, as well, felt that this was inconceivable.

It increased by way too much! Ten times!

"The effect is quite good, right? Hrmph, the effectiveness of Doehring Cowart's Straight Chisel School is unquestionable and unfathomable. However...I really am jealous of you." Doehring Cowart was grinning as he looked at Linley. "Linley, you should know that upon entering a state of absolute emotion, where your soul totally becomes one with nature is extremely rare and extremely hard to achieve."

Linley nodded in agreement.

If that sort of state was easy to enter, then perhaps a 'divine' sculpture would be commonplace.

"In the 1300 years of my life, I've only entered that state three times, and during those three times, I completed the three sculptures which I am the most proud of." A look of pride was on Doehring Cowart's face as he continued. "But the sculptures that I made, each took me two, three, and four days respectively. All together, I only spent nine days in that state, which was less than this one session you had."

Only upon hearing Doehring Cowart's words did Linley realize that he had spent ten days and ten nights during this stonesculpting session.

“This sort of state is the fastest way through which members of the Straight Chisel School can increase their spiritual strength. This sort of state usually sees you grow a thousand times faster than normal people! This state is what we dream of. The longer you can remain in this state, the better, and therefore the larger a statue you are inspired to carve, the greater the benefits are to you.”

Linley agreed in his heart.

The ‘Awakening From the Dream’ was a giant work of art, encompassing fully five different figures. This was a statue of a size that was very rarely seen.

Doehring Cowart let out a long sigh. “But when your soul has been moved to produce a certain type of sculpture, you really have no control over it at all.”

Linley understood.

Just like how when he saw that giant rock and saw those lines and patterns on it, when combined with his already agitated condition, his mind naturally summoned forth the image of five people. That was a sort of energy and excitement which allowed him to forget everything else in the world, including himself. The only thing remaining was the sculpture!

All of his energy, all of his emotions, were poured into the sculpture.

Upon entering this state, he had no excess energy to think about anything else, such as, 'I want to work on a large statue'. He couldn't divide any attention at all. If he had divided his attention, then he would have shattered that perfect state.

"Linley, I want to ask you a question. Does this sculpture have a name?" Doehring Cowart asked.

"Awakening From the Dream." Linley replied.

Doehring Cowart mused for a while, then nodded slightly. "Well done. Good name."

That rarely seen blizzard had finally come to an end. The world was blanketed in white, and the entire mountain was covered with a thick layer of snow, as high as one's knee. This sort of snowstorm was rather rarely seen. After the snow, the temperature dropped further.

Yale, George, and Reynolds had erected a tent to ward off that freezing weather. Yale had ordered some servants to deliver food to them regularly, and they had waited there, watching over Linley.

At this moment, Yale and the other two were still staring speechlessly at Linley's carving.

"Boss Yale, Third Bro has successfully completed his carving. Why is he still standing there?" Reynolds was getting a bit worried. He had no idea that Linley was mentally chatting with Doehring Cowart, and of course none of them could see Doehring Cowart's spirit form.

Yale slightly shook his head. "I don't know either. But this sculpture of Third Bro's can definitely be considered to be almost on par with the sculptures of Grandmaster Proulx."

At least in Yale's eyes, Linley's sculpture was earthshakingly brilliant, capable of stirring men's souls.

"Boss Yale. Second Bro. Fourth Bro."

Linley's voice suddenly rang out, causing Yale, George, and Reynolds all to be startled. Reynolds immediately shouted back excitedly, "Linley, you finally speak! It's been eleven days, eleven full days! You haven't eaten or drank anything for eleven days!"

Linley had first stood there silently in front of the boulder for a full day, and then spent ten more on his carving. This was, in fact, the eleventh day.

An ordinary person who didn't eat or drink for eleven days would've died by now. Even an ordinary magus of the fourth or fifth rank would be extremely weak after not eating or drinking for that long. But right now, Linley only felt slightly thirsty, and he didn't feel uncomfortable in the slightest.

Because upon entering that special state, upon becoming one with the universe, earth and wind elemental essence had constantly entered his body, nourishing him and replacing all of his spent energy, while strengthening Linley's body at the same time.

"Eleven days, eh? Yeah, I am a bit hungry." Linley laughed.

"Hungry?"

George was the first one to excitedly rush to the nearby tent, where he pulled out two fur-wrapped cases. Those furs were used for temperature control. Removing the furs, he pulled out two metal boxes from inside. Inside those two metal boxes was a sumptuous feast.

"Wait, we can't eat without having any wine to drink, can we?" Yale laughed loudly.

Watching one of his bros scurry around preparing the food, while another ran around preparing the rice, and a third pour wine, Linley suddenly felt an unspeakably warm feeling.

They had accompanied him for 11 days. How can Linley not be moved?

But Linley hid all of these feelings deep in his heart.

"Boss, Second Bro, Fourth Bro. We will be good brothers for all our lives." Linley said determinedly.

"Third Bro, come, eat up!" George said warmly.

"Alright!"

On top of the snow-covered mountain behind the Ernst Institute, Linley and his three bros began to eat and drink, and the laughter and merriment they shared continued unabated. Next to them, the Shadowmouse, Bebe, also happily began to eat and drink.

After eating.

"Boss Yale, please help me store this sculpture." Linley stood up, casting his gaze upon the snow white surroundings. "When I was fifteen, I went for training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Logically speaking, in July and August of my 16th year, I should've gone for training again. But because of Alice, I didn't go. Right now, I've made up my mind to go and get some good training done."

George, Yale, and Reynolds were all stunned.

"Third Bro, you are heading to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?" Yale grew frantic. Reynolds and George as well.

To them, Linley had just suffered a huge emotional blow, and had gone eleven days without food or water. Just as his mood had improved slightly, he was going to go off to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, one of the three most dangerous places in the entire Yulan continent? How could they not be worried?

Linley laughed. "Alright, don't be worried. I'm very level-headed right now. If I hadn't walked past my pain, I would've gone ahead and destroyed this 'Awakening From the Dream' sculpture."

As he spoke, he turned his head to 'Awakening From the Dream'.

Staring at it, Linley felt as though he was staring back at bygone days. Linley felt absolutely calm and peaceful in his heart.

"This is nothing more than a memory, nothing more than setback in my life. Because of Alice, I had already slowed down my pace of training. I can no longer afford to waste any time." Linley smiled at his three bros, then picked up his backpack. "I'm going to head out immediately. I won't go back to the Institute."

"Boss, Second Bro, Fourth Bro."

Linley stared at his three good friends, smiling slightly. "I really am grateful to all of you. I, Linley, am so fortunate to have three good brothers like you."

After speaking, Linley put on his backpack, picked up Bebe, and began to walk east, away from the mountain.

Yale, Reynolds, and George all watched as the image of Linley's back grew more and more distant, until finally it disappeared into the snowy white landscape.

.....

Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Tall, majestic trees. Dense vines and rattans. Wild grass and shrubs. Dried leaves. The entire Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was so primeval, so natural. Linley was in the meditative position, absorbing wind and earth elemental essence from the world and transforming it into mageforce.

Linley's spiritual energy had already reached the level of a magus of the seventh rank, but his mageforce was still only that of a magus of the sixth rank.

Linley had already spent a full month within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Within the past month, Linley sometimes would kill magical beasts, while at other times he would analyze the seventh level wind-style spell, the Soaring Technique. The rest of the time, he spent in the meditative state gathering mageforce.

The Ernst Institute didn't teach or train anyone in spells of the seventh rank. But since the Soaring Technique was virtually identical in principle with the Floating Technique, according to the book on magical theory that Linley had found in the library, Linley had constantly been applying wind-magic principles to test out the Soaring Technique using various magical incantations.

After a full month of research and tests, Linley could already easily fly about in the sky.

Although Linley didn't know if the magical incantation he had puzzled out was identical to the one used in the rest of the world as a whole, Linley was already fairly satisfied with his current speed of flight.

There was a huge gap between the sixth rank and the seventh rank, but the biggest part of that gap lay in increasing one's spiritual energy. Since Linley had already increased his spiritual energy, all he needed to do was to spend some time refining more mageforce.

As Linley's elemental affinity was exceptional, his speed of refining mageforce was also extremely quick.

The Shadowmouse, Bebe, was cautiously walking around the area near Linley, protecting him as Linley remained in the meditative position, gathering mageforce.

Within the central dantian in Linley's body.

Those specks of earth-colored elemental essence and that bluish-jade elemental essence had already reached an astonishing density, but for now, they still remained in a gaseous form within his central dantian. But as the density of particles grew still greater...the density of the gaseous elemental essences had reached a critical point.

A drop of earthen-colored liquid and a drop of bluish-jade liquid suddenly coalesced within Linley's central dantian.

And then, more and more drops of liquid began to form, as one drop turned to ten, and ten drops turned to a hundred, a thousand...

The biggest difference between a magus of the sixth and the seventh ranks was this – the condensation of mageforce into liquid form!

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 15, Returning to the Foggy Valley

Beneath him was a roiling, watery white mist. Standing at the precipice of the cliff, there was simply no way to see the bottom.

Straight chisel in hand, Linley was peering down into the Foggy Valley. Linley had spent three thousand gold coins to purchase straight chisel, and in terms of sharpness, it even exceeded that black dagger Linley previously used. After all, to Linley, the straight chisel was more suited to his hand than daggers.

Linley had already been inside the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for over a month and a half. He felt that right now, he was at the peak of his strength, in the best possible condition.

A dense layer of earth-elemental essence began to swirl around Linley as Linley softly chanted the words a magical spell. Finally, it formed into a seemingly simple set of armor, but if one took a closer look at it, one would find that the material it was formed from looked very much like jadestone, with the only difference being that this jadestone armor emanated with earth elemental essence.

Earth-style spell of the seventh rank – Earthguard armor (Jadestone level).

A magus of the seventh rank was far more powerful than a magus of the sixth rank. The power of the defensive spells alone multiplied tenfold.

"Now, if I run into those Dragonhawks again, just using my jadestone armor, I'll be able to easily handle their blows." Linley felt very confident. Next, Linley began to mutter the words to a wind-element spell. Air began to swirl about Linley's body, until finally, Linley lifted up into the air and began to drift into the Foggy Valley.

Linley was actually quite confident when it came to investigating the Foggy Valley.

"I now have both jadestone armor and also the Soaring Technique. In addition, my physical fitness level is that of a warrior of the fourth rank. When aided still further by a Supersonic spell of the seventh rank....survival should not be a problem." Linley slowly made his way through the Foggy Valley, not at all rushing.

This was because....

Of the Blueheart Grass!

Blueheart Grass was extremely important to Linley. Aside from procuring Blueheart Grass, Linley was also extremely curious as to why so many magical beasts were all living here, especially given they all belonged to different categories of beasts.

"Boss, be careful. Don't forget how you were almost hunted down last time." Bebe mentally reminded him.

"Don't worry."

The further down Linley flew, the greater the gap between the two cliffs grew. Clearly, this valley was astonishingly large. Within the misty fog, Linley flew very carefully while inspecting his surroundings. Bebe was also watching with extreme caution. Both of them were looking to find more Blueheart Grass.

The first target Linley aimed at was naturally the place he had seen that Blueheart Grass last time, where he did not have the chance to gather it.

Hugging the cliff, Linley proceeded forward with caution.

"Boss, I see Blueheart Grass. It's right there!" Bebe's eyes were very sharp. Linley took a look as well, and instantly his eyes lit up.

The grass blades were green, but a faint current of blue emanated and flowed throughout them.

"There aren't any Green Tattooed Pythons, are there?" Linley didn't dare to be too rash. Although he no longer feared the Green Tattooed Python, once he began to fight with it, most likely many other magical beasts would be drawn here as well. He definitely didn't have sufficient confidence in dealing with an army of magical beasts.

As the Green Tattooed Python was green in color, it was very easy to miss it in the surrounding green vines, so Linley had to be absolutely careful.

After closely inspecting his surroundings and verifying that there was no Green Tattooed Python nearby, Linley carefully flew closer.

Gathering the Blueheart Grass, Linley once more felt its icy cold in his hands. A hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face. This chilling sensation was proof that this grass was indeed Blueheart Grass. Linley carefully stored it inside his backpack, and then continued to make his way forward in search of more.

"Growl..."

"Shriiiiiek..."

All sorts of howls from magical beasts emanated from below. Their wild, mixed roars caused Linley's heart to quiver. Those howling sounds came from below. Just judging from the roars alone, there must be an enormous number of magical beasts below!

Peering through the thinning white fog, Linley could now vaguely make out the rich grassland below.

"Boss, be careful. I don't want to be attacked and chased and flee in all directions." Bebe reminded.

"I know." Linley was at maximum alert, and his eyes constantly scanned his surroundings, especially the green vines near the cliff walls. Linley was very much concerned that a Green Tattooed Python might be hiding amidst the vines. Being discovered by a single magical beast was the same as being discovered by all of them.

"Dragonhawk." Linley discovered that far away, a large, flying magical beast was lazily soaring through the air. Hurriedly, Linley flew away from it.

Fortunately, the valley was filled with white fog, causing distant objects to have only a faint silhouette. The Dragonhawk was huge and easy to notice, but Linley was comparatively much smaller. Naturally, he had something of an advantage in this regard.

"Shriek, shriek!" Suddenly, a series of strange howls could be heard, and even worse, the howls were heading in Linley's direction.

"Not good." Linley's facial expression changed.

Linley, who had been in close contact with Dragonhawks before, knew that this was the call of a Dragonhawk. Looking in the direction of the origin of the noise, he saw the hazy outlines of roughly two or three dozen giant Dragonhawks flying in this direction.

The Dragonhawks were simply too huge in size. Twenty or thirty of them flying in a row made for a formation that blotted out the sun and covered the skies.

With so many Dragonhawks present, there was virtually nowhere Linley could hide.

Right now, Linley had two choices. The first was to do battle with these Dragonhawks. The second was to fly up and flee for his life. The third....was to fly down, deep into the belly of the mountain.

“Whoosh!”

Without hesitating at all, Linley immediately threw himself downwards, blazing his way through the white mist. In the space of a breath, Linley had transformed himself into an arrow, shooting himself into the middle of the grassy plains. And then, not moving in the slightest, he threw himself face-down, hiding in the grass.

Linley carefully began to crawl to the edge of the plains. At the edge of the grass, he peered out, carefully assessing the valley.

This was an enormous valley, filled with rivers as well as huge grassy fields, appearing like a pristine utopia. But, this pristine utopia was filled with countless gigantic crawling creatures.

Two stories tall, and thirty meters long, with rocky, stone-like carapaces, each scale the size of half a person.

The relevant information immediately sprang to Linley’s mind.
“Landwurm. Magical beast of the sixth rank. Fire element.”

“If there was only one Landwurm, it wouldn’t be much of a threat, but...”
Linley scanned the area. “There’s over a hundred Landwurms here. If a hundred Landwurms all attacked, there’d be no way to block them.”

“But they aren’t fast enough. To me, they shouldn’t pose much of a threat.” Linley looked towards the other magical beasts.

Within the valley, Landwurms only made up a small part of the total magical beast population. There were also a large number of... Velocidragons. Velocidragons were not pack animals, and so most of them were spaced out in various places in the valley. At the same time, the skies were filled with Dragonhawks. If one looked carefully, within the various grassy plains, gigantic boas could also be seen slithering about.

And these were just what Linley could see at a glance.

"Just from that short glance, I can at least be sure that this valley runs from east to west. In the north, I can just barely make out the cliff walls." Linley turned his head and looked back. From the west, he could also see the cliff walls. It was only the cliff walls to the east that he could not see clearly.

Especially that east-west running river, which was continuously flowing to the east.

"Bebe, you be careful too." Linley executed the supporting wind-style Supersonic spell, and then carefully made his way through the grass. There were many grassy areas within this valley, possibly because all the magical beasts here were carnivores which did not eat grass.

While carefully making his way forward, Linley suddenly noticed something.

"What an extremely high density of natural elemental essence. The density of the natural elemental essence here is at least six or seven times higher than in the outside world." Upon entering the valley, Linley was extremely keyed up, and actually didn't notice this fact until now.

"I wonder what has caused this place to have such a high elemental density?"

Linley carefully crawled westwards through the valley. Landwyrms, Velocidragons, Green Tattooed Pythons, and Dragonhawks were all exceedingly large creatures. Thus, the little speck which Linley was in comparison to them wasn't very visible at all.

"This valley is really long!"

After crawling nearly 20 kilometers eastwards, Linley still hadn't come to the end of the Valley. At the same time, Linley discovered some new magical beast packs.

Magical beast of the sixth rank, Winged Pegasus. Magical beast of the seventh rank, Thunderwing Pegasus.

All sorts of pegasi were flying about in the air, while others slowly walked about in the valley, eating the grass.

"Boss, there's all sorts of underbrush here. How should we get across?" Bebe was worried.

Linley was starting to frown as well. The underbrush in front of him was all over the place, and it rose up half the length of his leg.

"The distance on the ground is too long. There's no way to crawl there. I'll have to go by air." Linley carefully backed up about a few hundred meters, as far away from the pegasi flocks as possible, and then exercised the Soaring Technique.

"Whoosh!"

Directly soaring into the air, Linley immediately scurried into the dense white fog. Within the dense white fog, only occasionally would a pegasus draw near. After all, pegasi were fairly small and didn't take up too much space, thus when they did draw near, Linley could dodge them.

Carefully flying eastwards, Linley kept close to the southern walls while carefully inspecting the cliffs for Blueheart Grass. But as Linley continued going forward, he began to frown again.

"Aside from that first patch of Blueheart Grass, I haven't found any more at all." Linley was starting to grow impatient.

But Linley continued flying eastwards. After flying roughly ten kilometers, Linley noticed that he was no longer seeing any pegasi in the upper reaches, and so he once again descended to the valley floor.

"Linley, there's all sorts of types of magical beasts here. Many of the creatures here normally never travel in packs, such as the Velocidragon or the Black Bear, or the agile Dragoncat. Doebling Cowart wafted out of the ring, appearing by Linley's side as they went forward together.

Linley carefully snuck forwards, while Doebling Cowart leisurely walked with him.

"Ah!"

As though struck by lightning, Linley suddenly halted and stood there stupidly. Roughly fifty meters ahead of Linley, in a knoll of grass with a diameter of roughly seven or eight meters, there was one patch of green-colored grass after another.

The fact that the grass was green was not of surprise. What mattered was...these grassy patches all emanated a blue aura.

"Blueheart Grass. All of it is Blueheart Grass!"

At this moment, Linley's very heartbeat stopped. Heavens. A single patch of Blueheart Grass was worth tens of thousands of gold coins, and it would be considered a priceless item that would rarely even be seen on the market. But fifty meters in front of him, within that seven or eight meter wide patch of grass, there were at least a hundred patches of Blueheart Grass.

"So much! I could grab them seven or eight at a time!" Linley sucked in a deep breath.

Doehring Cowart's eyes lit up. "Linley, for the purposes of drinking live dragon's blood, most likely four or five Blueheart Grass would be enough. To have so much Blueheart Grass in one place is inconceivable. However... the area around the Blueheart Grass is empty, with no place to hide. How will you get there?"

Perhaps Blueheart Grass was inimical to normal grass.

In a 30 meter area around Blueheart Grass, there wasn't a single blade of normal grass.

"There aren't too many magical beasts around here, and the ones that are here are not pack beasts. They're scattered all over the place." Linley carefully observed that large cluster of Blueheart Grass and also the surrounding area. "There's only seven magical beasts located near the Blueheart Grass. As long as I move fast enough, I shouldn't have any problems escaping with my life."

Linley forced himself to calm down, letting himself reach the maximum state of readiness.

"Boss, are you stupid? Have you forgotten about me, Bebe?" Bebe suddenly mentally said to Linley.

Linley started. Turning to look at Bebe, he saw Bebe delightedly winked at him. "Boss, my speed is much faster than yours, and my body is much smaller as well. How about I go do the gathering? There won't be any problems at all. All you have to do is open your backpack and wait to get the grass."

"Whoosh!"

Transforming into a black blur, in the blink of an eye, Bebe scurried into the middle of the grassy patch, and then using his sharp little claws, Bebe began agilely and voraciously digging up all the Blueheart Grass. As his little claws danced, quite soon that grassy patch became totally empty, while next to Bebe, there was now a pile of Blueheart Grass that was almost as tall as Bebe himself was.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 16, Forbidden the Skies

Still lying down in the middle of the grass, Linley held his breath as he watched. "That mound must have at least fifty or sixty Blueheart Grass." Linley forcibly tamped down on the wild joy he was feeling. But the thing which astonished Linley the most was...

Bebe seemed to feel that wasn't enough, and continued to pull out more and more Blueheart Grass.

"Will Bebe be able to carry over that huge mound with those two small claws of his?" Linley was growing confused. He immediately reached out to Bebe mentally. "Bebe, that's enough. Get back here."

Bebe raised his head and glanced at Linley, and then wrinkled his cute little nose. "No rush. There's a lot more to go."

Right at this moment, a Velocidragon which was drinking water by a nearby river just so happened to look over in this direction. Its gaze falling upon Bebe, it clearly noticed him, and it rose up from the water, snorting out a plume of smoke as it fixed its icy cold gaze fixed upon the little Shadowmouse.

"Not good." Linley's heart immediately tightened.

If Bebe began an all-out battle with the Velocidragon, perhaps even more magical beasts might be attracted here. By then, the situation would become even worse.

Bebe also noticed the Velocidragon. Upon seeing it, Bebe seemed to be terrified, and immediately hid near the Blueheart Grass, 'trembling'.

"Growl..." The Velocidragon let out a satisfied roar, and then immediately lay back down again and continued to drink water from the river.

"What a big stupid lump. It's so easy to fool it." Bebe delightedly spoke to Linley mentally.

At this moment, Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. He didn't expect little Bebe to 'feign weakness'. Linley knew very well that a year and a half ago, Bebe was capable of forcing a Velocidragon to flee. After another year and a half of growth, Bebe should now be even stronger.

Bebe definitely had no fear of a Velocidragon.

But Bebe was also very smart. He knew that if he caused too much of a ruckus, Linley would be easily exposed.

Humans!

Magical beasts were very much antagonistic towards humans.

In the eyes of that Velocidragon, Bebe was nothing more than an extremely small and weak magical beast. Seeing how terrified Bebe was, naturally it wouldn't bother to kill Bebe. After all, the Velocidragon knew that amongst Shadowmice, only the lowest level mice had black fur.

But the Velocidragon had no idea that one of his 'comrades' had been mauled quite badly by little Bebe.

"Formidable." Linley gave Bebe a big thumb's up.

Bebe laughed delightedly. "Naturally. I, Bebe, am an extremely intelligent Shadowmouse." Taking a look at the large pile of Blueheart Grass next to him, Bebe suddenly expanded his body size dramatically, from twenty centimeters to nearly half a meter.

Now that his size had increased, Bebe was able to easily use his two large paws to press that pile of Blueheart Grass against his chest. Then, with a flex of his legs....

Whoosh!

Bebe suddenly landed in the grass, directly next to Linley.

"Boss. All in all, there's 160 clumps of Blueheart Grass here. Having me, Bebe, take action was the perfect, flawless plan." Bebe arrogantly puffed out his little chest.

Linley lovingly rubbed Bebe's little head, and then put all of the Blueheart Grass in his backpack.

"Let's keep going. I'm growing more and more curious about this valley." Linley's eyes shone as he looked east. "For this valley to have so many magical beasts, and also to have such a thick density of elemental essence....mmm, I feel like the elemental density here is even higher than when we first came down. The elemental essence density here is about ten times higher than in the outside world."

Linley had a feeling...

Whatever strange factor was causing the elemental essence in this valley to be so much higher than normal, must have come from the eastern side of the valley.

Linley continued heading east, moving his way through the dense grass. With the assistance of the supportive wind-style spell Supersonic, Linley was able to move at a very fast speed. A seventh-level magus using the Supersonic spell was capable of allowing someone to move three times faster than normal!

Three times Linley's normal speed as a warrior of the fourth rank.

"Whoosh. Whoosh!"

Linley quickly scurried from one hiding spot to another, dodging one magical beast after the other. Fortunately, aside from that part which had an abundance of pegasi, the rest of the valley was filled with abundant grass, tall enough to totally hide Linley within it.

"From the point where I entered the gorge until now, I've perhaps gone east almost a hundred kilometers."

Linley was very astonished.

The entire Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was around a thousand kilometers or so wide, so for a valley to be over a hundred kilometers long was very astonishing. Based on distance, Linley should have begun to draw very near to the core regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"Hey, Boss. There's very few magical beasts here." Perched on Linley's shoulders, Bebe was constantly scanning in all directions as well.

Linley nodded.

In an area around them with the radius of several kilometers, only two magical beasts could be seen. It was very strange for the density of magical beasts to be so low here. The two magical beasts present were both gigantic Velocidragons. Most importantly...these two Velocidragons were both resting on the ground, apparently asleep.

"Just two Velocidragons, and sleeping besides." Linley laughed in a self-mocking way. "This section will probably be the easiest section to traverse ever since I got in here. But I must say ,these two Velocidragons are rather different compared to your average Velocidragon.

Linley noticed that these Velocidragon's bodies were even larger than that of most Velocidragons. Because they were lying down, it was hard to be certain, but these two Velocidragons, even while lying down, were almost as tall as most Velocidragons were while standing up. In addition, their body length was double that of an ordinary Velocidragon.

While lying down on the ground, those two large Velocidragons looked very much like two small mountains.

In order to be extra cautious, Linley went so far as to carefully pass the two large Velocidragons via a patch of grass that was over twenty meters away from them. But Linley didn't notice that when he passed through the grass, making a soft 'swishing' sound, the ears of the two Velocidragons twitched, even though their eyes remained close and they didn't move.

When traveling through the grass, of course there would be some noise.

But Linley didn't pay too much heed to that, because as Linley saw it, even the wind blowing through the grass would cause some swishing sounds. It would only just be a bit quieter than the sound of a person traveling through the grass, was all. Linley had crept through the grass for so long now without any trouble.

"Swish!"

A sudden blur sliced through the air and directly smashed towards Linley. Linley, even while boosted by the Supersonic technique, was only able to just barely stop in time.

"Whack!"

A long, dragon tail, as fast and flexible as an iron whip, heavily struck the ground right in front of Linley, perhaps just half a meter in front of him. The earth itself split apart from that blow, as a meter-wide crevice appeared in the ground. Linley hurriedly exerted force with his legs and began to run.

"I've been discovered." Linley's heart shuddered.

"Growl!" "Growl...."

Two roars in succession. The two Velocidragons that had been sleeping suddenly both rose to stand up. Both of them were four stories tall, and their body length alone was around forty meters, with their tails making up another forty meters in length. Their size was absolutely astonishing.

"They are so huge! These must be elites amongst the Velocidragon race. Most likely magical beasts of the eighth rank." Linley's heart trembled.

These were the first magical beasts of the eighth rank which Linley had met here in the valley. As a magus of the seventh rank now, Linley had confidence to tussle with even magical beasts of the seventh rank. But upon encountering a magical beast of the eighth rank, he didn't even dare to entertain the thought of fighting, because at the higher ranks, the differences in power for each rank grew even more pronounced.

Just from the value of magicite cores, one could tell.

A magicite core of the sixth rank. 1000 gold coins.

But a magicite core of the seventh rank could be worth up to 50,000 gold coins! The gap between the sixth and the seventh ranks was thus easily imagined.

A magicite core of the eighth rank? The price could reach up to 500,000 gold coins!

As for a magicite core of the ninth rank? The value was an astonishing 5,000,000 gold coins!

"These were just the general estimates based upon the books in the libraries. In reality, the magicite cores of some particularly large and powerful magical beasts are extremely rare, and thus even more valuable. Often, you won't even be able to find them on the market."

A magical beast of the eighth rank was far more powerful than a magical beast of the seventh rank.

"Growl." "Growl!"

The two Velocidragon's of the eighth rank exchanged glances. A look of amusement actually appeared in their eyes, and then they turned, charging at Linley at high speed.

The intelligence of a magical beast of the eighth rank was definitely no less than that of any human being.

"Whoosh!" At maximum speed, Linley began to frantically run eastwards while immediately beginning to chant the words to the wind-style Soaring Technique spell. But since it was a magical spell of the seventh rank, the incantation was quite complex as well, and had to take quite a bit of time to perform.

At this point in time, Bebe didn't dare to try and show off either.

He could defeat a Velocidragon of the seventh rank, but a Velocidragon of the eighth rank? Just based on their size alone, which was a full size larger than ordinary Velocidragons, Bebe knew very well that his teeth might not even be able to bite through the scales and reach their flesh.

Their huge size signified that they had thick scales as well. Each scale of these Velocidragons of the eighth rank were more than half a meter thick, and beneath that was an even thicker layer of muscles.

To injure them was an extremely difficult proposition.

Possessing the speed of a warrior of the fourth rank boosted by the Supersonic supportive spell, Linley's traveling speed was still somewhat faster than the rather slow Velocidragons. These huge creatures were rather slow and lumbering, but each step they took covered a large amount of distance. Each step of theirs covered as much distance as ten of Linley's.

Most importantly...

The iron-whip-like tails of these Velocidragons of the eighth rank. Possessing the speed of lightning, they were even faster than the tails of Velocidragons of the seventh rank. With a flash and a flicker, they could move dozens of meters, and were approximately on the same level as Bebe's own speed.

The earth shook as those two huge, ponderous creatures continued to chase after Linley. Every so often, the two of them would exchange a strange look with each other.

"Whooosh!"

Linley suddenly flew into the sky. He had finally completed the incantation for the Soaring Technique.

"I'm finally safe." Linley quickly flew higher. Seeing the two enormous Velocidragons beneath him, Linley finally let out a sigh of relief. "These two Velocidragons of the eighth rank were really sinister. They intentionally feigned sleep in order to lure me in."

Actually, what Linley didn't realize was that the two Velocidragons were not baiting him in at all, earlier.

But these two Velocidragons of the eighth rank were extremely sensitive to their surroundings. They were very used to the sound of the wind rustling through the grass. When they heard the frequency of the rustling suddenly change, of course they would immediately become suspicious.

"Growl..."

The two Velocidragons of the eighth rank watched as Linley flew away. They didn't appear angry in the slightest. Instead, they raised their heads high and roared. That roaring sound seemed almost...happy.

Linley was able to differentiate between a roar of rage, and a roar of pleasure.

"Growl..." "Growl..." "Growl..." "Growl..."

Suddenly, the air above Linley was split with draconic roars as well, one draconic roar following the other. Just from the number of roars, one could tell that there was an extremely large number of magical beasts present.

"They're above me." Halting in mid-air, Linley looked up, startled. From within the white, foggy mists, one enormous draconic beast after another began to emerge, every single one of them around seventy or eighty meters long, and with an enormous wingspan of around fifty or sixty meters long as well.

Multiple huge, draconic figures hovered there in the white mist. Linley could tell at a glance how many there were.

"At least a few dozen." Linley felt as though he couldn't breathe.

One enormous flying draconic beast after another descended from the skies. Their flame-colored scales were so resplendent, and flames seemed to flicker around their entire bodies.

"Fire Dragons!" Linley knew that the situation had just become catastrophic.

Fire Dragons were considered middle-class dragon-type beasts. Most Fire Dragons were magical beasts of the eighth rank, while elite members of the race could reach the ninth rank in power.

“Two magical beasts of the eighth rank were able to give me so much trouble for so long. Now, I’m dealing with ten that can fly.” Linley felt extremely miserable right now.

And right at that moment....

“Growl...” “Growl!”

Another series of roars began to emanate from a different direction. And then, one flying creature after another, each approximately the same size as a Fire Dragon, began to spread their massive wings and fly in this direction. These enormous, flying draconic beasts had dark green scales that were as clear as jasper.

These flying draconic beasts with green jasper scales were not the slightest bit fewer in numbers when compared to the Fire Dragons.

The two Velocidragons of the eighth rank below Linley began to roar in amusement as well, their eyes filled with a sinister maliciousness.

“Now I know why when I entered this area, I only saw the Velocidragons of the eighth rank and didn’t see anything else.” Linley felt miserable. “Most likely, only magical beasts of the eighth rank are permitted to reside in this area. Magical beasts of the seventh rank don’t dare to enter. This Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons are all pack-type draconic beasts of the eighth rank. Most likely, these two Velocidragons were just toying with me this entire time. When they saw I was about to fly away and escape, they immediately roared out to have the Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons to come as well."

Over a hundred massive flying dragons were circling above him in the sky. Only now did Linley realize what was going on.

But by now, the way out through the skies was forbidden to him!

"Boss, what are we gonna do?" Bebe's pitiful voice rang out in the back of Linley's mind.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 17, The Gloomy Depths

His head raised, Linley watched the hundred-plus dragons circle above him. The flames surrounding the Fire Dragons raised the temperature around them, while those jasper-scaled Emerald Dragons seemed to emanate a soul-chilling aura.

An amalgamation of the opposites, frost and flame!

Beneath Linley, those two enormous Velocidragons were watching him with amusement. Right now Linley, who was 70-80 meters above the ground, had nowhere to flee. At the same time, those hovering, circling dragons also watched Linley with amusement.

The intelligence of a magical beast of the eighth rank was definitely not inferior to that of humans. Linley knew all too well that to these countless flying dragons, he was like nothing more than an ant. His opponents weren't at all concerned with whether he lived or died, only....if he could provide them with a bit of amusement.

A game!

Just like how humans might like to play with ants. When they were bored, they would crush him to death.

"Bebe, I don't want to be an ant." Linley glanced at Bebe. "Get ready to run."

"Swish!"

Linley's body shot downwards, allowing his natural body weight to combine with the Supersonic spell to rocket him forward towards the ground, and then, just before hitting the ground, he brought his body to a sudden halt. This sort of sudden change from high speed to a halt disrupted the flow of blood in his body, causing him so much pain that he spat out a mouthful of blood.

"Good thing I'm not just a magus, I'm also a warrior of the fourth rank and my body can take it."

"Right now, behind him there were two enormous Velocidragons, while above him there were over a hundred giant flying dragons. He didn't have the time to care about anything else. Linley immediately began charging towards the empty wasteland in front.

"Roar..." The two Velocidragons began to roar.

"Roar!" "Roar!" "Roar!"

Over a hundred dragons swooped down from the skies. The Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons were roaring, and the two giant Velocidragons began chasing after Linley, the earth shaking with each step. The hundred plus dragons were also swooping towards Linley, causing the sky to darken as they blotted out the sun.

A single dragon was already enormous, to say nothing of a hundred. They totally covered the sky with their mass. And then, the dozens of dragons all opened their giant maws and began blasting giant balls of flame at Linley.

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!"

One giant fireball after another, each the size of Linley or larger, began smashing down from the heavens. The 'fireballs' generated by the Fire Dragons were not like ordinary balls of flame; they contained within them a mixture of magic as well as the innate dragonflame which all Fire Dragons held within them. Their temperature was so high that even the tough scales of Velocidragons of the seventh rank would most likely crack from the heat.

"Boom!"

A particularly large fireball just barely brushed past Linley. The fleeing Linley instantly could smell the smell of burning hair.

"Boss, your hair got burnt." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley himself knew very well that his hair hadn't actually been touched by that ball of fire. It was just that the temperatures the fireball generated was way too high.

Just by passing by him, the temperature was raised high enough that his hair was burnt. Like an agile little monkey, Linley began to run about in unpredictable patterns, constantly dodging those fireballs.

Those Fire Dragons also didn't just charge forward to kill him. They were just playing around, using fireballs to toy with Linley.

“The difference in power is too great. Even though I’m a dual-element magus of the seventh rank, when facing a magical beast of the eighth rank, I would definitely be destroyed.” Linley could sense how terrifyingly hot those fireballs were, and yet those Fire Dragons could casually blast them out from their mouths, one after the other.

Fortunately, the Fire Dragons weren’t actually trying to kill him as quickly as possible.

Suddenly, Linley felt a cold aura. His body, which had just begun adjusting to the heat, suddenly clenched with the cold.

“Swish!” A translucent, faintly green spear passed by Linley, and then shattered, releasing a terrible, cold aura that forced Linley to instantly and quickly dodge away.

In the skies above, those dozens of Emerald Dragons had also opened their maws and begun vomiting frozen arrows at Linley. To the enormous Emerald Dragons, these projectiles were perhaps just arrows, but to the comparatively small Linley, these three meter long projectiles were not arrows; they were terrifying frozen spears.

With balls of flame and spears of ice raining down upon him from the skies, Linley had to use all of his wits to constantly dodge and dart about in all directions.

It was exhausting!

Linley was feeling mentally exhausted. His mental energy was being worn down to the point of exhaustion. For a short period of time, this level of energy expenditure was fine, but in the long run, he would definitely suffer from mental exhaustion. Linley also had to expend enormous amounts of physical energy in sprinting around so frantically.

"Boom!" A ball of fire clipped Linley on his left shoulder.

A shattering sound could be heard as the Earthguard jadestone armor covering Linley began to splinter and crack. Earth elemental essence began to swirl about the armor, attempting to repair the damage.

"The attack power is terrifying. If struck head on, I expect my jadestone armor will only be able to take one blow." Faced with certain death, Linley's latent potential seemed to explode, and he once more upped his speed as he ran about and dodged wildly.

Even Linley himself was amazed at his dodging abilities.

This really was Linley at his absolute peak performance. But unfortunately, even at his peak, there was no chance of success when faced with over a hundred dragons.

"Roar!" "Roar!"

The hundred-plus Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons in the sky watched Linley with amusement. Seeing him constantly dodge, they felt more and more interested in him. Even the two Velocidragons chasing after Linley would occasionally wave their tails to threaten him.

At this point in time....

Linley was like an ant, an ant being toyed with by an entire group of giants.

If he made just the slightest mistake, Linley would die. These titanic dragons didn't care in the slightest about whether Linley lived or died; they only cared about one thing. "How long will this little human creature be able to hold on?"

Five minutes!

Linley had managed to survive for five entire minutes as they toyed with him!

Five minutes, ie 300 seconds!

It sounded like a short period of time, but Linley felt as though it had passed extremely slowly. Every single second was a second in which his life was on the line.

"This group of bastards. If I didn't dodge fast enough, I would have been killed by them, and then they would leave without caring in the slightest, continuing with their leisurely lives." Linley knew very well that he was nothing more than a slight diversion for these giant dragons.

In actuality, Bebe possessed even higher speed than those giant dragons. If he were alone, he definitely would be able to escape. Bebe was currently perched on top of Linley's shoulders, his eyes staring at the fireballs and ice spears falling from the skies, telling Linley where the danger would be.

"Boss, careful! Three fireballs!" Bebe urgently warned.

Linley's facial expression changed.

"Boom!"

A fireball directly struck Linley on his back, and then exploded. The jadestone armor covering Linley suddenly shone with an earthen light, and then with a crack, shattered into its component elemental essence.

"Hiss!" Linley's hair was, in the blink of an eye, all burnt, and his face was painfully scorched by the heat.

Without the protection of the jadestone armor, if Linley took another blow, regardless of whether it was a fireball or an icy spear, he would definitely die.

"I won't be able to hold out much longer." Linley could feel all his muscles quivering, and even his head was splitting. Linley knew that he had already reached his limit. If he continued under these circumstances, he would definitely collapse."

"Linley, up ahead, 120 meters, there's a 20-meter high hill. Beneath it is a very deep tunnel. The hill doesn't actually totally block the tunnel; there's enough space to fit two people in. Hurry and flee there, it could save your life." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out.

While he was being pursued by the dragons, Doehring Cowart hadn't said a single word, but as soon as he did, Linley found new life and new hope.

Somehow, unbelievably, Linley managed to increase his speed even further. The hope of survival brought incredible things out of people.

Those hundred-plus Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons circling above all stared at Linley with rather odd looks.

"Hrm?"

When they realized where Linley was going, those hundred-plus dragons, previously amused, all roared with fury. Without any coordination, they simultaneously began to angrily blast out balls of fire and icy spears at the same time, covering an entire area of 20-30 meters.

"Ah!"

At Linley's current speed, in about 2-3 seconds, he managed to reach the hill. It was just about at this time that the fireballs and icy spears arrived as well.

"There's the crack!" Linley instantly saw the two-meter wide cave entrance. Without any hesitation, Linley dove inside.

But before he managed to make it inside, a large ball of fire came blasting down at him. The fireballs travelled at much higher speeds than the icy spears. By the time the fireball came within 20-30 centimeters of Linley, Linley's clothes began to burn.

"Screech!"

Bebe suddenly enlarged himself, and then used his own body to accept that vicious blow from the fireball. Only then did Linley luckily manage to make it inside the tunnel. But Bebe, in turn, was buried by an avalanche of those fireballs and icy spears.

"Oof!"

Linley fell all the way down, perhaps seventy or eighty meters, before smashing into the tough ground. This place was very gloomy and dark, with the only light coming from that small hole up above. But Linley had excellent vision, and that dim light was enough for him to see his surroundings. And right now...

Linley's hair had been burnt, and there were two or three spots on his face which had also been burnt black.

His face had been ruined, and he had been scarred!

But right now, Linley couldn't bother to care about these things. The only thing he was worried about was Bebe.

"Swish!" A black blur fell down, smashing directly in front of Linley. "Yeowch! That was comfortable! First cold, then hot. That felt so incredibly nice." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley joyfully embraced Bebe. "Bebe, are you okay?"

Bebe's face was extremely dirty, but he still wrinkled his nose delightedly. "Of course! I, Bebe, am much stronger than I was a year ago. Even if I were to fight head on with a magical beast of the eighth rank, I wouldn't be afraid, much less a little fireball or ice spear?"

Linley laughed. Now that he knew Bebe was fine, Linley was no longer worried.

"Then why didn't you go out and tussle a bit with those giant dragons?" Linley teased.

Bebe said unhappily, "How could I, Bebe, be afraid of them? But their scales are simply too thick, and my size is too small. My mouth is also small. I can't bite through those scales. It's too hard for me to kill them, but they can forget about killing me as well."

Linley began to chuckle.

"Boss, your face...your face is ruined!" Bebe's mental shout suddenly reminded Linley.

Stretching out his facial muscles, Linley felt a fiery pain. He had no choice but to sneer at himself, "Bebe, although I've trained up my physical strength, no matter how much I train, I can't possibly strengthen my facial muscles. My defensive abilities weren't strong enough."

"Oof, Bebe, let me rest for a bit, I'm so tired."

Linley let go of Bebe, then lay down on the ground.

Just then, Linley had stretched himself to the absolute limit, both in terms of physical energy as well as his mental energy. It wasn't so bad when facing danger, but now that he was safe, Linley felt endless waves of exhaustion crashing upon him. Linley wanted to rest.

Within the valley. Those hundreds of giant, coiling dragons and those two Velocidragons of the eighth rank were all staring at the hill.

"Growl..." Suddenly, a particularly large Fire Dragon let out a roar.

All of the giant dragons and Velocidragons retreated. Only that large Fire Dragon remained, staring at that hill with a mixture of terror and alarm in his eyes.

One of the main entrances to that underground area was previously extremely large, large enough for even a dragon to go inside. But then, the Fire Dragons and the Emerald Dragons had received an order to move a small hill to block off that tunnel.

To those enormous dragons, that two-meter wide crevice was nothing. Based on their size, there was no way they could get in.

But to Linley, it was very easy to slip inside.

“Having entered the forbidden area, this human will die without question.” That particularly large Fire Dragon rose directly into the air and flew away.

This was the forbidden area of the Foggy Valley. Forget about humans; even Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons dared not trespass there.

Nothing which went in would come out alive. This was the iron rule of the Foggy Valley.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 18, The Armored Razorback Wyrms

Within the underground cave, Linley laid down and rested for a while. After feeling that he had recovered, he stood up. That situation just now, where he had been attacked by over a hundred flying dragons, was the most dangerous which Linley had ever been in. Virtually every second, he was in fear for his life. After escaping from that calamity with his life, Linley had finally managed to take a breather, but in his heart, he also had an ardent desire – the desire to increase his power!

In front of those giant dragons, he was nothing more than a toy. He had no ability to resist at all.

“Boss, there’s no way out from above. The only option we have is to keep going down. Next to us, there’s a very wide path.” Bebe mentally transmitted to Linley while jumping on Linley’s shoulders.

Off to the side of Linley, there was a very wide, crooked road, several dozen meters wide and almost ten meters tall. But this road was curved and crooked, heading off into an unknown location in the east. After silently pondering for a while, Linley decided to venture forth with Bebe into that gloomy darkness.

The cave tunnel grew darker, the further in they went. After a while, nothing could be seen but darkness. Linley couldn’t even see the tunnel, and so he had to carefully make his way in by feeling his way through the wall.

“Boss, where the heck are we. Why was this tunnel covered up by that hill?" Bebe asked Linley.

Linley shook his head.

"There's over a hundred flying dragons overhead. If we go up, we're just committing suicide. We can only keep going down." Linley also didn't have the ability to tunnel his way to escape through this maze-like rocky tunnel. His only choice was to follow it to whatever unknown destination it led to.

Following Linley, Bebe was also on maximum alert, inspecting his surroundings out of fear that a magical beast might pop up out of nowhere.

"There's light up ahead." Within the darkness, Linley saw a dim glow coming from up front. He unconsciously sped up his pace to head towards it. Slowly, Linley discovered the exit to this tunnel, and that it was the exit which was glowing with a dim red light.

Suddenly...

"Haha, Sartius [Sa'di'e'si], weren't you very arrogant? Those things you did to me three hundred years ago, I will repay you manifold today." An extremely deep voice rang out from the exit, sounding as deep and powerful as a peal of thunder.

Linley couldn't help but feel shocked. "A person!"

"No matter what, it'll be easier negotiating with a person than with a magical beast. And I have no other path I can take. But this fellow's voice is really loud." Sticking next to the tunnel walls, Linley walked towards the exit. But when he got within 20 meters of the exit, he could already see what was going on at the other side through the exit hole.

This was the end of the tunnel. There was an extremely large cave here.

This cave was at least several kilometers wide, and at least several dozen meters high. But what shocked Linley was....

From his current vantage point, Linley could clearly tell that there was a huge black bear standing in mid-air, at least ten meters high, with all the fur on his body appearing as though it were made from steel. This black bear was covered with countless violet tattoo-like patterns, making him look very bizarre.

This black bear that was standing in mid-air was the source of the 'human' words Linley had heard.

"This...this..." Linley couldn't breathe.

It was as though his consciousness was being repeatedly struck by lightning.

"A Saint-level magical beast!" Linley instantly understood.

Upon reaching the Saint-level, magical beasts would usually be able to fly, and also be able to speak using human languages. These were the defining characteristics of Saint-level magical beasts. Saint-level magical beasts were extremely terrifying creatures. Most human Saint-level combatants were not capable of defeating a Saint-level magical beast. Only the strongest Saint-level human combatants had enough power to kill a Saint-level magical beast.

A Saint-level magical beast was capable of shrinking his physical size; a hundred meter large Saint-level magical beast could shrink himself to the size of a small snake.

Naturally, though...there was no way for a Saint-level magical beast to assume the form of a human being.

Perhaps only a magical beast which possessed the power of a deity would be able to able to assume human form.

"A Saint-level magical beast. I've actually encountered a Saint-level magical beast." Linley didn't even dare to breathe loudly. He carefully watched the cave opening. "This is a Violet Tattooed Bear. Violet Tattooed Bears are magical beasts of the ninth rank."

Violet Tattooed Bears were considered a very powerful race of magical beasts. Naturally, they were capable of reaching the Saint-level in some cases.

"But this Violet Tattooed Bear is blind in one eye." Linley suddenly noticed the terrifying injury that was over the left eye of the Violet Tattooed Bear that was standing in mid-air. Clearly, this bear was half-blind.

"Sartius, all these years, I've been waiting for my chance to get revenge. Haha, so what if you ended up seizing this place for your own? Although the elemental essence density here is a hundred times higher than that of the outside world, I was still the first to reach the Saint-level. Haha."

Clearly, the Violet Tattooed Bear was extremely excited.

"Where is this Sartius that this bear keeps talking about?" Linley stealthily retreated, then crept closer to the other wall of the tunnel. Indeed, from the other side of the tunnel, he was able to see another magical beast. This one was a magical beast that made Linley's heart shudder yet again.

This magical beast was ten meters long and three meters high.

Its entire body was densely covered with pitch black scales, and all of the scales on its body were patterned in a very orderly, regimented manner. Every single scale was roughly the size of a human palm.

But the densely patterned scales were arranged together in such a way that for some reason, it struck fear into the hearts of whoever saw it.

On its back, there were many sharp spikes that were thirty centimeters long, which spread all the way from its back to its neck.

The most terrifying of all were its eyes....

Its eyes were a dark gold color, so cold that it could cause someone to utterly freeze.

“The Armored Razorback Wurm, the most terrible dragon-type beast of the ninth rank.” Linley’s heart began to tremble, and within his mind, he naturally began to recollect the information he had previously acquired on Armored Razorback Wurms.

Armored Razorback Wurms: Magical beasts of the ninth rank, darkness-type. The smallest dragon-type beast in physical size, amongst dragon-type beasts of the same rank, the Armored Razorback Wurm possessed the most powerful defense, the highest agility, and also extremely possessed sharp claws with incredibly offensive power.

Without question, amongst dragon-type beasts of the same rank, the Armored Razorback Wurm would definitely be one of the most powerful creatures.

“It’s actually an Armored Razorback Wurm!” Only now did Linley finally understand everything.

A Violet Tattooed Bear was an extremely terrifying combatant. Not only did it inherit the massive strength inherent to all bear-type beasts, it was also extremely nimble.

Amongst magical beasts of the ninth rank, there weren’t many which were more powerful than a Violet Tattooed Bear...but an Armored Razorback Wurm was, without question, one of them.

The Armored Razorback Wurm swept its icy gaze across Linley.

Linley felt as though the season had turned to winter, and in the midst of that winter, a bucket of cold water was poured over his head. The fear he now felt far surpassed the fear he had felt when he was a child at Wushan township and saw that Black Dragon of the ninth rank.

Although the Armored Razorback Wurm had discovered Linley, it didn't pay him any mind. Because right now, its greatest opponent was this Violet Tattooed Bear in front of it. Although amongst magical beasts of the ninth rank, an Armored Razorback Wurm was indeed an indomitable tyrant, when faced with a Saint-level magical beast....

"Growl...." The Armored Razorback Wurm let out a deep growl.

"Sartius, you say that I'm just a new Saint-level beast? That you aren't afraid of me? Haha, true, I just recently entered the Saint-level. As soon as I entered the Saint-level, I became consumed with the urge to kill you! Hmph, even if I've just entered the Saint-level, you still aren't a match for me." The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear had a look of total confidence on its face.

"Armored Razorback Wyrms. You really are a species of dragons which advance very slowly. You've dominated this place for so long, and enjoyed the benefits of a location where the elemental essence density is a hundredfold that of the normal world. But you still remain at the peak of the ninth rank and still haven't been able to take that final step. But today, I will let you know the power of the Saint-level." The Violet Tattooed Bear's aura began to dramatically increase in power..

Although the Violet Tattooed Bear talked a big game, in his heart, he knew very well how terrifying an Armored Razorback Wurm could be.

The Armored Razorback Wyrms had the strongest defensive abilities amongst dragon-type creatures. What's more, Sartius was at the peak of the ninth rank, only one step away from becoming a Saint-level Armored Razorback Wyrms. In terms of defensive ability, Sartius definitely could compete with most Saint-level dragons. But aside from his defensive power, there was also his offense to watch out for!

The twin talons of the Armored Razorback Wyrms were incomparably sharp!

"Nonetheless...I have entered the Saint-level, after all." The Violet Tattooed Bear was very confident in himself.

"Upon reaching the Saint-level, one advantage is the ability to fly, while the second advantage is that I'm able to send the power of my soul outside of my body. Most magical beasts rely upon their vision to do battle, but Saint-level combatants are able to use their soul sense to clearly detect their opponent's movements in battle. Thus, in combat, they definitely have a big advantage."

Most importantly, upon reaching the Saint-level, one's offensive power would also increase.

Barely breathing, Linley continued to watch through the exit hole as the two terrifying magical beasts stared at each other.

An Armored Razorback Wyrms at the peak of the ninth rank, against a Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. Linley could feel his blood begin to boil. For some reason, whenever Linley saw those icy, merciless eyes of the Armored Razorback Wyrms, Linley felt that he was more afraid of the Wyrms than of the Bear.

"It's begun." Linley's eyes lit up.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear landed on the ground, while at the same time, it began to emanate a roaring sound. All of the muscles on the Bear's body began to swell, while at the same time beginning to emit crackling, popping sounds. The Violet Tattooed Bear, previously around ten meters in height, suddenly increased its height by two meters. Twelve meters tall now, it had the same waist as before, but its legs were a full size larger now.

"Die, Sartius!"

With a mighty growl, the Violet Tattooed Bear swept towards Sartius like a blur, appearing directly in front of the Armored Razorback Wyrms. The Wyrms, which had been in a state of readied action this entire time, suddenly, viciously smacked the earth with its tail, sending its entire body flying far away through the tremendous counterforce which had been released.

A gigantic, meter-long paw viciously slammed into the ground where the Armored Razorback Wyrms had been just a heartbeat ago. "Bam!" Linley could clearly see that the ground itself rippled for at least two or three meters in a radius around the Bear's paw, and within that area, the stone floor itself was partially turned into dust, to a depth of half a meter. And outside of that area, within a radius of several dozen meters, the ground itself split with seven or eight terrifying large cracks appearing.

"How terrifying." Linley's heart had gotten stuck in his throat.

The Violet Tattooed Bear suddenly turned around, focusing its bizarre, red gaze upon the Armored Razorback Wurm.

The Armored Razorback Wurm just stared back at it with its cold, dark golden eyes, not actively attacking at all.

"Sartius. You are afraid." The Violet Tattooed Bear laughed delightedly. And then, its entire body began to dimly emanate a dark aura. "Whoosh!" With a strong kick to the floor, the Bear launched itself into the air, and then began to descend in a bizarre pattern, directly at the Armored Razorback Wurm.

The Armored Razorback Wurm stared at the Violet Tattooed Bear with its cold eyes. And then, its iron-whip-like dragon tail suddenly swept out...

"Swish!" It sliced through the air, causing a screaming sound so high that Linley's ears were hurting. "This draconic tail is far more powerful than the tails of those Velocidragons. I bet even I, Bebe, couldn't take a blow from it." At this time, Bebe's eyes were as round as round could be.

The Violet Tattooed Bear's left paw, glowing with that strange dark energy, directly reached out to snatch at the dragon's tail. A Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's paw had incredibly powerful offensive power, and it also was extremely strong defensively as well.

"THUD!"

The dragon's tail directly collided with that huge paw, with an incredibly deep striking sound. The Violet Tattooed Bear's giant left paw shuddered slightly, and the dragon's tail retreated as well.

But when they had exchanged blows just now, the Violet Tattooed Bear's right paw had already struck out and arrived at the Armored Razorback Wurm's body. The Armored Razorback Wurm did not try to dodge. Instead, it inclined its body and pointed that row of sharp spikes on its back towards the paw.

This Armored Razorback Wurm and the Violet Tattooed Bear were old foes. Naturally, the Bear knew how fierce this particular tactic by the Wurm was.

Not only did the Armored Razorback Wurm possess extremely high defensive power, its body was also designed extremely well. If the opponent smashed down on it with a palm, the Armored Razorback Wurm could easily move its body and dissipate the strength of the blow across its entire body.

"Sartius. I'm no longer that old magical beast of the ninth rank." A malicious, cruel look was in the eyes of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. Suddenly, a freezing black light emanated from the giant paw of the Violet Tattooed Bear, and that extremely fast paw began to move even faster than before, viciously striking down upon the spikes of the Armored Razorback Wurm with even greater force than before.

"Bang!" The Armored Razorback Wurm's entire body was smashed deep into the ground by that blow, and in a radius of a hundred meters around it, the stone floor splintered and shattered. Upon the dense row of sharp spikes on the back of the Armored Razorback Wyrms, a single spike had been shattered by the force of the blow. And from the mouth of the Armored Razorback Wyrms, a mouthful of fresh blood was suddenly spat out.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 19, Viciousness

“What a waste! That’s dragon’s blood from a magical beast of the peak of the ninth rank!” Linley couldn’t help but say to himself upon seeing the blood splash onto the ground. According to the Secret Dragonblood Manual, blood from a living Saint-level dragon could definitely rouse the Dragonblood in his body, while blood from a dragon of the ninth rank would have a somewhat lower chance of success.

This Armored Razorback Wyrms was, after all a dragon-type beast of the peak of the ninth rank, just one step away from becoming a Saint-level dragon. What’s more, Armored Razorback Wyrms were considered one of the most powerful type of dragons. When faced with any dragon of the same rank, the Armored Razorback Wyrms would be more powerful.

“This Wyrms is both at the peak of the ninth rank and is an exceedingly powerful type of dragon. The effect of its blood shouldn’t be much weaker than that of a Saint-level dragon. Unfortunately, there’s no way for me to get it.” Linley didn’t dare at all to step within this cave, because if he did, any random blow from these two combatants which happened to land on him would crush him to a pulp.

“Boss, is this Armored Razorback Wyrms gonna die? It seems like he isn’t able to defeat that big stupid bear.” Bebe said mentally to Linley.

Linley didn’t make a sound. He just stared fixedly at the cave, watching the battle between these two major magical beasts.

“Haha...” The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear let out an excited laugh, while at the same time, struck out with his massive, furry black paw, turning it into a fist as he did. That meter-long fist carried with it almost 15000 kilograms of force, and it forcefully smashed against the Armored Razorback Wyrms which were buried underground.

While it was ill, go for the kill!

"Bang!"

The giant furry fist smashed into the middle of the ground, causing the entire cave to shake and rubble to fall down.

"Hrm?" That lone remaining eye of the Violet Tattooed Bear began to glow with a red light.

Right now, that Armored Razorback Wyrms, which had been smashed deep into the ground by the Bear, was now burrowing through the ground like an earthworm, scurrying about at the speed of lightning. Wherever the Armored Razorback Wyrms passed by, the stony ground itself would tremble and crack.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear had missed with his punch, only landing a hit on the Wyrms' tail, allowing the Wyrms to immediately burrow underground.

"Haha, Sartius. Are you actually going to just hide underneath the ground and not come out?" The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear stared at the ground as he laughed.

The Violet Tattooed Bear knew that when it came to underground burrowing, even though he had reached the Saint-level, he wasn't a match for the Armored Razorback Wyrms. Thanks to its sinuous, spiky body and its razor-sharp claws, the Wyrms were much better at burrowing than the Bear was. If the Armored Razorback Wyrms really decided to stay underground and not come out, then the Violet Tattooed Bear really would have no recourse.

However, the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear believed that Sartius wouldn't have been scared to the point of hiding underground and not dare come out to do battle.

This was because...Sartius was an Armored Razorback Wyrms.

"Everyone always says that you Armored Razorback Wyrms are extremely arrogant and won't allow themselves to suffer any humiliation at all. Even in the face of certain death, you'll still make up your mind to fight to the death with their opponent. But now, from the looks of it, that doesn't seem to be the case. You, Sartius, are an absolute coward." The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear said in a bright voice. Right now, he was using words to agitate his opponent.

Hiding within the tunnel, Linley just quietly watched this affair progress.

"Dragons are generally very arrogant and very conceited. Armored Razorback Wyrms, in turn, are the most conceited and most arrogant of dragons." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

"Grandpa Doehring, why don't you come out?" Even as Linley asked the question, he laughed at himself.

His head was totally muddled. Doehring Cowart's aura could easily be detected by a Saint-level combatant, and a Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was of course such a combatant.

"Can't come out. Right now, in their eyes, you punk, you're just an ant. Although they've both noticed you, they can't be bothered to care about you. But if I come out, once they sense my aura, then you'll be in trouble." Doehring Cowart remained hidden within the Coiling Dragon ring.

Linley nodded slightly, but his gaze was still firmly locked on the cave.

That Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was engaged in nonstop ridicule, but the Armored Razorback Wyrms seemed to have disappeared completely, as there was no sign of it at all.

"It's laughing?" Watching the battle, Linley noticed that there was a delighted smile on the face of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear, but he didn't understand its meaning."

Suddenly, the dragon tail which had been compressed into a drill shape suddenly burst out of the ground at high speed, piercing through the air with a terrifying hissing sound as it directly stabbed at the Violet Tattooed Bear's waist.

The speed was so fast that there was no time to react at all.

"Whap!"

The Violet Tattooed Bear seemed to have foreknowledge of this attack.

Just as the tail burst out of the ground, the huge bear quickly retreated, while at the same time reaching out with its huge furry paws and grabbing onto the tail.

"Haha...."

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear began to laugh wildly. Its hands firmly fastened around the tail, with a mighty tug, it forcibly ripped the Armored Razorback Wyrms from the earth, then, after waving it about in the air, began to viciously slam the Wyrms directly into the stony ground.

"Bam!"

Like a dancer performing with a whip or a ribbon, the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear brandished the Wyrms in the air, slamming it into the ground time and time again.

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear wildly brandished the Armored Razorback Wyrms, smashing it into the ground without pause. The body of the Armored Razorback Wyrms had turned into a blur, as in the time it took to take a single breath, the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear had slammed it into the ground over a hundred times.

The constant, high-velocity impacts made Linley's heart quail.

"And it's still not dead?" Linley couldn't help but feel nervous.

"Haha, Sartius, this is for your arrogance, for taking one of my eyes. Haha..." The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear continued to laugh wildly as its two-meter wide hands continued to wave the Armored Razorback Wyrms about, slamming it into the ground.

More and more cracks appeared on the ground, and countless crevices over three meters deep began to appear.

The stony ceiling of the cave had also begun to shake loose rocks, but those falling rocks weren't of the slightest hindrance to the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear.

"I hope he doesn't collapse the tunnel." Pebbles began to fall down on Linley's head as well, causing him to silently curse at this Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. The only option he had was to silently murmur the words to the Earthguard spell to summon a jadestone armor to protect his body. Only then was his physical safety ensured.

"Growl..." "Growl...."

One roar of fury and pain erupted from the Armored Razorback Wyrms after another. Based on its terrifying defensive power, logically speaking, the rocky ground shouldn't cause any harm to it at all, but being slammed at such a high speed was a different matter!

A rock itself didn't have much offensive power, but when a rock was propelled to extremely high speeds, it could even penetrate a steel board.

Speed was also a form of offensive power!

Bear-type magical beasts were all born with tremendous strength, so naturally the strength of this Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was terrifyingly high. Based on this Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's terrifying wrist power, when slamming the Armored Razorback Wyrms into the ground, it could produce an astonishingly high speed. And so, at high speed, the Armored Razorback Wyrms continued to impact with the ground.

This sort of slamming attack was extremely terrifying.

The Armored Razorback Wyrms were continuously coiling around like a snake, letting the impact be spread across his entire body.

"Dragon's blood, dragon's blood everywhere." Linley saw how the Armored Razorback Wyrms were leaving blood all over the ground.

To the Armored Razorback Wyrms, however, the physical injuries were a smaller matter. The more important problem was that it was starting to get extremely dizzy!

Being whipped around at such high speed was starting to make the Armored Razorback Wyrms' mind go blank. If this continued, even if its body was able to hold on, its mind wouldn't be able to.

"Sartius, you idiot, did you think that by ambushing me from underground, I wouldn't be able to react in time? Haha. Have you forgotten? Saint-level combatants all have the ability to soul sense outside of their bodies. I saw every single movement you were making underground. And you thought you could ambush me? Haha..."

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was unspeakably delighted with itself.

For over three hundred years, it had nursed this hatred. Every time, when he looked into the water and saw the reflection of his ruined eyes, his heart would be filled with unspeakable rage. He had stewed in this hate, in this rage, for over three hundred years, until he had reached the Saint-level.

"Crack!"

A strange noise was heard, and suddenly, the Armored Razorback Wyrms body flew out in the air, colliding with the wall several hundred meters away, creating a giant crater before it landed onto the ground.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear only stared at the dragon tail in its hand in astonishment.

"You...you broke off your own tail?" The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was very astonished, but after recovering, it began to laugh uproariously. "Haha, Sartius, you actually are in such a pathetic state that you chose to break your own tail off. Wonderful! Wonderful!" The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was extremely delighted at having been able to force the Armored Razorback Wyrms into such a state.

Linley also stared at the Armored Razorback Wyrms in astonishment, that it was ruthless and cruel enough to break its own tail. The importance of the tail to a dragon could not be understated. Breaking off its own tail carried and required the same courage and viciousness that a human cutting off his own hand would have to have.

Behind the Armored Razorback Wyrms' posterior, there was nothing aside from a meter-wide round injury. This was where its long tail had previously been connected. This enormous wound was leaking out a huge amount of blood. But the Armored Razorback Wyrms' dark golden eyes were still as cold as ever, fixing the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear with its deathly glare.

"How vicious. But there's no doubt that you are still going to die." The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear casually threw the tail away with a wave of its giant paws, his face filled with confidence.

No tail, and suffering from severe blood loss.

The Armored Razorback Wyrms had suffered a huge loss in combat power. In such a situation, if the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear still was not able to kill the Armored Razorback Wyrms, it would be a huge joke.

"Roar!" A low growl. The Armored Razorback Wyrms flexed its four limbs and transformed into a cruel blur, throwing itself at the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's two huge paws once more glowed with a dark aura, and then the Bear struck viciously at the Armored Razorback Wyrms with them.

Based on the power of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's paws, it should definitely be able to send the Armored Razorback Wyrms flying.

However...

Faced with the oncoming strike from the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's paws, the Armored Razorback Wyrms opened its jaws and viciously launched onto one of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's arms. The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's arms were extremely durable; although the Armored Razorback Wyrms was able to bite into them, it wasn't able to bite through them.

"Ahhh!" The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear let out a howl of pain, as it definitely had not expected the Armored Razorback Wyrms to do this, because by doing this, it was as good as offering its head to the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. "You want to die!" The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear roared with rage as it slammed its other paw towards the Armored Razorback Wyrms's eyes.

Once the meter-long fingers penetrated into the Armored Razorback Wyrms's eyes, it would shatter the Armored Razorback Wyrms's brains and kill it.

But right at that moment...

"Swish!" "Swish!" "Swish!"

The Armored Razorback Wyrms's entire body began to clatter, and then, like water being released from a sieve, every single spike on its back all flew out, piercing into the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's body like so many bolts of lightning.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's entire body was riddled with spikes now, and even its face had a spike put through it.

"Ah! Sartius, you..." The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's eyes were filled with disbelief.

The Armored Razorback Wurm's two most formidable aspects were its "armor" and its "razorback". The word 'armored' reflected its astonishing defensive capabilities, while "razorback" referred to that line of dense spikes on its back, which most people didn't even know had a use.

If it needed to defend? It's powerful, thick carapace was more than enough.

If it wanted to attack?

How could the razor spikes on its back be used to attack? Even if it wanted to, it would have to do so in a passive way.

There were very few magical beasts that knew the Armored Razorback Wurm had this technique of shooting out all of the razor spines along its back at once, which was the technique an Armored Razorback Wurm would use when it intended to perish alongside its opponent. Those spikes shot out with such speed that its penetrating power was even greater than that of its claws.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear had no idea at all that this Armored Razorback Wyrms actually possessed such a technique. With the two of them so close to each other, and with the spikes shooting out at such a high speed, there had been no way for him to dodge at all.

“Gurgle...” Its body riddled with spikes, the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear could feel as life began draining away from its body. Unwilling to die like this, it raised its head and roared with rage.

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 20, The Draconic Crystal's Transformation

Even Doehring Cowart, back at the height of his powers as a peak Saint-level Grand Magus, didn't have any real means of preserving his life after his body was destroyed.

Once the body was destroyed, one would definitely die.

Only someone with the power of a god would be able to repair his body easily.

The life ebbing out of his body, the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear could also feel his soul being called to the nether realm, and could sense that in a few minutes, it would enter it. "Sartius!" The very last action the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear took on the Yulan continent was to wildly smash its two massive paws against the skull of the Armored Razorback Wyrms.

One of the Armored Razorback Wyrms' eyes were smashed, while scales around its neck and forehead were totally smashed, and fresh blood began to leak out.

But the Armored Razorback Wyrms didn't try to resist in the slightest, because the Armored Razorback Wyrms had also reached the end of its road. After having shot out all of its razor spikes, the life force was beginning to ebb out of the Armored Razorback Wyrms as well.

"I am unwilling to die!"

A furious howl!

"Thud!" That massive, twenty-meter tall body slumped over, falling to the ground. By now, the soul of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear could no longer resist the call of the nether world, and it forever vanished from the physical realm of the Yulan continent.

Linley looked at the fallen Violet Tattooed Bear, and then at the Armored Razorback Wyrms which were still biting at the Bear's arm. "Is this a double defeat?" The Armored Razorback Wyrms were also at death's door. Fresh blood constantly flowed out, both from its severed tail as well as from its neck. Its eyelids slowly closed as well.

Then suddenly.

The Armored Razorback Wyrms opened its one remaining eye. That remaining, dark golden eye remained as cold and emotionless as ever, and it was focused on Linley.

"Ah!" Faced with this cold gaze, Linley's heart began to beat frantically.

Both the Armored Razorback Wyrms and the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear both had noticed Linley long ago. Only, they didn't bother with him.

However...

The Armored Razorback Wyrms didn't want its body to be defiled after its death by this human. Dragons were a proud race, and Armored Razorback Wyrms were the proudest, most conceited dragons in existence. Even in death, it wouldn't want its opponents to get off too easy, much less allow its corpse to be mutilated by a human.

"Not good." Without hesitating at all, Linley immediately turned tail and began to run.

"It's almost dead, and it still wants to kill." Linley was feeling rather pissed.

The Armored Razorback Wurm stared a deadly gaze at Linley with its one remaining dark golden eye. And then, emitting the most furious roar it had ever let out in its existence, it transformed into a blur and appeared next to Linley almost instantaneously, sweeping its merciless claws towards Linley.

Feeling the sudden rushing air from behind, Linley instinctively wanted to lie down, as he knew that a dragon claw would come swiping in. When it did, even a magical beast of the ninth rank would perish, much less him. That jadestone armor on his body would not prove to be any deterrent to the Armored Razorback Wurm's sharp claws.

"Swish!"

Emitting an ear-piercing shriek, Bebe's tiny, weak little body collided head-on with the Armored Razorback Wurm's sharp claws.

"Bebe!" As he was spiritually linked with Bebe, as soon as Bebe had moved, Linley sensed it, and instantly Linley's heart began to tremble with fear.

"Whap!"

A clear striking sound. Bebe's body was sent flying by the Armored Razorback Wurm's vicious claws, and it was shot backwards at an incomprehensible speed, smashing into the tunnel wall a few dozen meters away, creating a deep crevice.

On the outside of that crevice, there was a spot of bright blood.

"Bebe's blood." At this moment, Linley was filled with boundless pain, pain which was a thousand, no, ten thousand-fold the pain he had felt upon losing Alice.

Within his mind, one image after another of him and Bebe together swam to the forefront.

He remembered the first time they met, how Bebe had hidden behind that decrepit old stone house and stared at Linley in terror.

He remembered Bebe's self-satisfied look, and adorable Bebe looked upon wrinkling his nose.

He also remembered how Bebe would lie down for a nap inside his clothes, and how cute he looked asleep.

....

From when Linley was 8, until now.

The one who had truly always been by his side was Bebe. Although he liked to boast and brag, and also liked to mock, in Linley's heart, Bebe had occupied an extremely important position.

"Graaaaaw..." That huge maw of the Armored Razorback Wurm bit down at Linley.

"Aaaaargh!" Linley let out a deep howl, his eyes now totally bloodshot. When the Armored Razorback Wurm's giant fangs drew near to him, Linley's speed attained a previously unreached level, and he opened his own mouth wide and bit down at the Wurm's neck as well.

"Crush." A large part of the flesh on Linley's shoulder was bitten off.

But Linley's own teeth were also firmly locked onto the wounded area on the Armored Razorback Wurm's neck!

"Die, die, die with me!"

Having entered a berserk, crazed state, Linley wildly drank the blood of this living dragon and wildly bit at the exposed flesh.

"Aaaargh!"

When the dragon blood splashed on Linley's body, Linley felt as though all of the skin on his body had been painfully scalded by boiling water. But this was only a secondary thing. The dragon blood that he drank into his stomach made Linley's entire body jerk, spasm, and tremble.

Pain! Incredibly fierce pain!

The pain of dragon blood splashing on his body, Linley could withstand. But the dragon blood entering his stomach, entering his body? One's internals, after all, were much more vulnerable than one's skin. This sort of pain was an internal, constant, non-stop stabbing pain.

He was in agony. But Linley had forgotten about what agony was, at this point.

The last, desperate, full-strength attack of this peak ninth rank Armored Razorback Wurm...one could imagine how terrifying it was. The fierce sharpness of the Armored Razorback Wurm was legendary. Even a magical beast of the ninth rank would be rent by it. And Bebe?

Linley could still see that bloodstain on the tunnel wall.

Once Bebe's tiny body had its protective fur and skin torn apart, how could he survive? Most importantly of all, Linley could already sense that Bebe's life force had already grown so weak as to be all but undetectable.

"Arrgh!" His heart filled with grief, Linley savagely bit at the dragon's flesh, drank the dragon's blood. He allowed the blood to boil as much as it wanted of his organs, allowed his entire body to be in such agony that it shuddered. Linley simply didn't care.

"Linley, stop, stop!" Doebling Cowart was howling at him. "Use the Blueheart Grass, quick, use the Blueheart Grass! If you keep doing this, your body will fall apart!"

But it was useless. Linley continued to devour the dragon's blood. Suddenly, some sort of icy cold crystalline entity entered Linley's throat, then passed into his stomach. Instantly, the pain intensified still further, and Linley's entire body began to convulse uncontrollably.

Pain?

Linley wanted himself to feel pain. This sort of physical pain was able to, just barely, lessen the terrible pain he felt in his heart.

"Linley!" Doebling Cowart was at his wit's end.

"Bo...Boss!" A very weak voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley's entire body trembled. He suddenly came to a stop, no longer chewing at the dragon's flesh, nor drinking any more blood.

"Bebe?"

The entire tunnel was silent, now. Stunned, Linley stared at Bebe, who was inside the deep crevice created by his impact. He could feel that Bebe's life force was beginning to strengthen. Seeing Bebe's body slowly crawl out of that deep crevice, Linley felt an unspeakable joy. But immediately afterwards, another terrifying wave of pain engulfed Linley's very soul.

"Quick, eat the Blueheart Grass!" Doebling Cowart roared with rage.

Only now did Linley react. He ferociously tore the backpack open, grabbed a large handful of Blueheart Grass, and directly swallowed it. This handful had at least ten patches of Blueheart Grass. When he ate it, Linley only felt a cool sensation enter his body, and that earlier, intense burning pain began to lessen.

But Linley could feel that in one part of his stomach, there was still an incredibly intense pain. After the burning sensation in the other parts of his body had lessened, the intense pain in that location became all the more pronounced.

Without hesitating at all, Linley grabbed another handful of Blueheart Grass and quickly ate it as well.

Immediately afterwards, Linley assumed the meditative position and allowed the Secret Dragonblood Manual's inscriptions on how to rouse the Dragonblood of the Dragonblood Warriors come to mind. He began to agitate his blood in accordance with the instructions in the book, and as he carried out these secret techniques, the blood of the Dragonblood Warriors which lay deep in Linley's veins began to show itself.

"Success."

The chance of success through using a dragon of the ninth rank was a bit lower than a dragon of a Saint-level dragon. But the Armored Razorback Wurm was both a peak ninth rank dragon, and also an extremely powerful dragon. Its small physical size also was an indicator that the quality of the blood it had should have been extremely high.

“Woosh.” “Whoosh.” The Dragonblood in Linly’s veins was beginning to transform as well, as wave after wave of it was being transformed into Dragonblood Battle-qi.

But whenever he reached that part of his stomach which hurt the most, for some reason the pain remained the same, no matter how much Blueheart Grass he ate. What Linley hadn’t realized is that what he had actually swallowed was, alongside everything else, the draconic crystal of the Armored Razorback Wurm.

Realistically speaking, that crystal was ten thousand times more terrifying than dragon’s blood. Even after having eaten so much Blueheart Grass, all it served to do was to blunt the bad effects. The pain it was causing was incredible.

However, the blood of the Dragonblood Warriors was no ordinary bloodline either!

The lineage of the Dragonblood Warriors hailed from the very first Dragonblood Warrior, Baruch. In the past, when Baruch had mastered his abilities, he was even able to kill a peak Nine Headed Serpent King of the Saint-level. That sort of power he had, to walk about the Yulan continent totally unrecognized, was incredibly great.

Even the mighty dragon race didn't want to do direct battle with Baruch and his clansmen, despite the fact that Baruch had captured several Saint-level live dragons and fed their blood to his clansmen.

This was the terrifying true power of the Dragonblood warriors!

As far as the secret manual handed down in the Baruch clan, where it said that no one could drink dragon blood and live, this was just a case where the truth was hidden because of the dragon race. Baruch had actually used this method to produce a great many Dragonblood Warriors.

The unique blood of the Dragonblood Warriors and their descendants, when compared even to the noble blood of dragons, was far nobler.

Even when just a little bit of it was hiding in the veins, it was capable of allowing a human potentially reach the level of being a Saint-level combatant. From this, one could imagine how powerful the blood of the Dragonblood Warriors was!

And right now, the blood of the Dragonblood Warriors was beginning to stir. When the Dragonblood Warrior blood met with the draconic crystal of the Armored Razorback Wurm, a strange transformation occurred! A draconic crystal was the purest distillation of a dragon's energy, making this crystal the pure, distilled essence of an Armored Razorback Wurm at the peak of the ninth rank...while the density of Dragonblood in Linley's veins was too low....

"Pant, pant."

Vicious pain erupted from every fiber of Linley's body, and Linley painfully reared his head up and howled. On top of Linley's skin, bizarre black scales began to emerge, and those sharp little black scales split Linley's clothes apart.

Linley's thighs and arms also saw these scales slowly emerge. This sort of absolutely inhumane pain caused all of the veins in Linley's body to protrude out, and his facial expression was contorted to a terrifying degree.

Suddenly, another wave of even greater pain crashed down upon Linley, as a sharp, keen spike erupted forth from Linley's forehead...

Book 4, The Dragonblood Warrior – Chapter 21, The Dragonblood Warrior

Linley's entire body was in such pain that it was convulsing. Linley's very spine was straining as if trying to pop out, and then one small spike after another did begin to slowly grow out of his spine, piercing through his skin and flesh and rising to form a line on his back.

This extreme pain caused Linley to begin letting out guttural howls. His entire body was covered in sweat, but even as the sweat came out, so too did one black scale after another, each and every scale very much similar to the scales of the Armored Razorback Wurm. The only difference was that they were smaller in size.

Grinding his teeth, his throat trembling with every guttural, pain-filled roar, Linley did his best to forcibly will himself to begin utilizing the secret methods contained within the Secret Dragonblood Manual.

The draconic crystal was being constantly eroded away by the Dragonblood in Linley's veins, and it was slowly growing smaller. At the same time, the Dragonblood in Linley's veins was constantly devouring the astonishing darkness-type elemental force contained within the draconic crystal. The pace of his body's evolution actually began to pick up even further...

"Graaawr!" A blood-covered, black-scaled draconic tail slowly began to protrude from Linley's tailbone. This draconic tail was of the size and hardness of a steel whip.

"What, what is going on?" Feeling his entire body transforming, especially those spikes popping out from his spine, and those black scales, Linley was totally flabbergasted.

Per the records of the Secret Dragonblood Manual, a Dragonblood Warrior had three forms.

Under the third form, 'Dragonform', the Dragonblood Warrior's entire body would be covered with azure scales, and a horn would sprout from his forehead as well. This was the most powerful form available to a Dragonblood Warrior...but currently, Linley's physical transformation was totally different from that which was described in the Secret Dragonblood Manual.

The scales which were covering Linley's body were all black, not azure. The spikes protruding from Linley's spine should not be there. Linley couldn't help but suddenly think of the Armored Razorback Wurm.

The second form, 'Demidragon', was not quite as strong as the 'Dragonform' transformation, as it only allowed part of his body to transform.

As for the first form, that was the normal human form. In most situations, a Dragonblood Warrior would be in this form. This was also the weakest form available to a Dragonblood Warrior.

Per the Secret Dragonblood Manual, the first time a Dragonblood Warrior successfully trained the usage of Dragonblood battle-qi, his body would uncontrollably enter the third form, the Dragonform. This first transformation would be incredibly painful, but afterwards, the transformations would no longer hurt at all.

Within Linley's body....

A surge of deep blue liquid seemed to have merged with a black liquid and spread itself throughout his body. Every single muscle, every single vein was constantly absorbing energy from these liquids, causing Linley's physical attributes to all start improving at a terrifying pace. But this rapid strengthening of the body was causing Linley excruciating pain as well.

"Damnable dragons." Linley was beginning to curse at them mentally. "It must have been you guys. Otherwise, our clan definitely would have written in much greater detail about the aftereffects of drinking live dragon's blood and the things to be careful about."

The more Linley thought about it, the angrier he became.

His own clan's Secret Dragonblood Manual clearly was filled with contradictions. If it was true that no one had ever successfully used live dragon's blood to rouse the Dragonblood in their veins, then why would the book be so confident that this method would be successful? This was a clear contradiction.

And how could Linley know what the situation in the clan was, 4000-5000 years ago!

"It must have been that due to the pressure of the entire race of dragons that our ancestors were forced to skimp on the details of this method of using live dragon's blood to rouse the Dragonblood in our veins." Right now, Linley had no idea what he should do.

His 'Dragonform' was clearly different from the authentic 'Dragonform' which had been mentioned in the Secret Dragonblood Manual.

"I am far too mentally resilient. I really hope I'll faint soon." Linley actually was begging for himself to faint, as once he fainted, his pain would be over.

"Aaaargh..."

Linley's entire body trembled once again. All ten fingers and all ten toes suddenly were wracked with a bone-deep pain, as the fingernails and toenails suddenly began to grow sharp, like miniature dragon claws. The pain of sharp claws forcibly growing out of his fingers and toes really, finally, caused Linley to begin to lose all consciousness.

As his head grew foggy, Linley's eyes began to close, and then all consciousness fled.

"Thud."

Linley's body collapsed to the ground.

"He's passed out." Doehring Cowart stood next to Linley, watching him. He couldn't help but let out a small sigh. "How bizarre. I can't imagine how Linley's ancestor, Baruch, could have developed such a strange ability of transforming into a Dragonform."

Frowning, Doehring Cowart mumbled to himself, "Honestly speaking, it's bizarre. It seems that aside from the Dragonblood Warriors, there's also three other bloodlines of Supreme Warriors. But when I was alive, there was no such thing as a Supreme Warrior. But shortly after I died, these four bloodlines arrived on the scene."

Despite his thousand-plus years of experience and wisdom, Doehring Cowart was unable to puzzle out how and why this occurred.

"If he was able to slay a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor, then in all likelihood, Linley's ancestor, Baruch, was no weaker than I am, and perhaps stronger." Doehring Cowart knew full well how powerful a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor was. Nine-Headed Serpents were an extremely formidable race of magical beasts, and for a Nine-Headed Serpent to receive the title of 'Serpent Emperor' meant that, without question, it was a peak Saint-level magical beast.

Even he himself would not have the confidence to say that he could slay a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor.

"And that little Shadowmouse is no ordinary creature either." Doehring Cowart turned his head to stare at the little Shadowmouse Bebe, who was still lying and resting in that crevice his body had created earlier. "An Armored Razorback Wurm is amongst the most powerful dragon-type beasts of the ninth rank, and this Sartius fellow was at the peak of the ninth rank. His dying blow should be able to shatter the bones and rend the flesh of magical beasts of the ninth rank, but somehow, this little Shadowmouse managed to survive it."

Doehring Cowart couldn't help but feel astonished.

In fact, he was starting to suspect...

“Could it be that this little Shadowmouse isn’t a Shadowmouse, and is actually a Stoneater Rat?”

Doehring Cowart knew very well that of the two major rodent-class magical beasts, the Stoneater Rats were far more populous than the Shadowmice. The weakest Stoneater Rat was of the first rank, while the most powerful was of the seventh or eighth rank. As for Shadowmice, although they started at the third rank, they also topped out at the seventh or eighth rank.

The advantage of the Shadowmouse was its speed and its sharp claws, while the strength of the Stoneater Rat lay in its defensive abilities and its sharp claws.

“The Stoneater Rat is physically small, but its defensive ability is the most powerful of any magical beast at the same rank. The defensive power of a Stoneater Rat of the eighth rank could most likely compare with the defensive power of an Armored Razorback Wyrms!” Doehring Cowart knew very well how terrifying Stoneater Rats could be.

Although physically small, the defensive power of its fur was formidable to an extreme.

Across all the myriad types of magical beasts, be it dragon-types, bear-types, serpent-types, or any other types, the tiny little Stoneater Rat had the highest defensive power at the same rank!

“Bebe’s power should be at the eighth rank now. If he’s a Stoneater Rat of the eighth rank, I would find it conceivable that he could take a hit and not die. But he’s not a Stoneater Rat. A Stoneater Rat of the eighth rank should have golden fur.” Doehring Cowart’s mind was full of questions.

“Black fur and terrifying speed, and also such amazing defensive power? How bizarre.”

Suddenly, Doehring Cowart’s eyes glazed over.

A terrifying name suddenly appeared in the back of his mind!

“Could it be that this little Shadowmouse is...is related somehow to ‘that one’ in the Forest of Shadows, in the northeast of the Yulan continent?” Doehring Cowart was trembling with fear now. Back in the days when Doehring Cowart was alive, in the Yulan continent, there were only two entities powerful enough that he wouldn’t have any hope of fighting against them.

In those years, Doehring Cowart really had been ranked amongst the top five most powerful figures in the Yulan continent. Aside from the first and the second, there wasn’t much difference amongst the rest of the five in terms of power.

But the power of the number one and number two experts of the Yulan continent was without question.

As for who exactly was number one and who was number two, nobody knew for sure. One of the two was the pillar and foundation of the Yulan Empire. As long as he was alive, even if the Yulan Empire grew weak and decrepit, it would never fall.

And the other, was the one who lived in the Forest of Shadows.

The Yulan Empire had unified the entire Yulan continent and also initiated the Yulan calendar that year, year one. After almost ten thousand years, the continent had now fragmented to its current state, resulting in the two major alliances and the Four Great Empires. And even as far back as when the Yulan Empire ruled over the entire continent, that human expert's name was famous throughout the world.

"That one in the Forest of Shadows is the undisputed strongest magical beast in the world. I heard that he is extremely fond of rodent-type magical beasts. Could it be that this strange little Shadowmouse was brought up by him?" Doehring Cowart was wondering to himself.

But Doehring Cowart also knew that the information he had about the experts of the Yulan continent were five thousand years out of date.

Five thousand years ago, the Yulan continent had exactly two ultimate super-combatants; one human, and the other a magical beast. The other Saint-level combatants could only admire them from afar.

But five thousand years later?

"Perhaps there have been mutations to the rodent-type beasts. That's also a possibility." Doehring Cowart consoled himself.

Doehring Cowart once again glanced at Linley and Bebe, then nodded. "A descendant of the Dragonblood Warriors, and a mutated Shadowmouse. What will the two of them accomplish together?" Doehring Cowart was rather excited to see. Perhaps, by Linley's side, his future days wouldn't be too lonely either.

The entire tunnel was absolutely silent.

The unconscious Linley's body was still transforming, and the Dragonblood battle-qi was slowly gathering three inches beneath his navel, crystallizing into a pattern similar to a draconic crystal. Bebe's wounds, in turn, were also slowly healing.

....

Three days later.

Linley opened his eyes and suddenly rose to his feet.

Right now, Linley was absolutely naked. All of the clothes he had previously been wearing had been torn asunder long ago by that first Dragonform transformation he had undergone. But now, after having returned to human form, Linley seemed no different from any other humans.

"I've finally changed back."

Although according to the Secret Dragonblood Manual a Dragonblood Warrior was able to transform back into human form, only after it actually happened did Linley feel at ease. After all, his 'Dragonform' and the authentic 'Dragonform' as described in the manual was different.

"Boss, you woke up." That bright, chipper voice rang out in Linley's mind.

With surprised delight, Linley turned his head to look, and as he did, Bebe jumped into his arms. Embracing Bebe, Linley finally felt his heart at peace. When Bebe had suffered that vicious wounding deathblow of the Armored Razorback Wurm, Linley had truly been afraid.

He was afraid that the little Shadowmouse he had grown up with was dead.

"Bebe, are you okay?" Linley carefully inspected Bebe's body. Upon doing so, Linley saw an unassuming scar directly on Bebe's chest...but Linley could also tell the rest this scar appeared unassuming was because the fur on Bebe's chest was blocking much of it.

Bebe chortled, "I'm fine. How could I, Bebe, be afraid of a little worm?"

"Boss, hey! Your body no longer has any scars? Same with your face. You don't have any scars at all, now!" Bebe suddenly said in astonishment.

Only now did Linley pay some attention to his own body.

"Ah, so this is indeed as the Secret Dragonblood Manual described. The first time one undergoes the Dragonform transformation, one's entire body is transformed, and even the skin is changed." Right now, there wasn't a single scar anywhere on Linley's body, and it was in perfect condition.

Sensing the boiling power now within his body, Linley couldn't help but feel excited.

"What tremendous physical power!" Linley could feel that his current power was at least several dozen times greater than before. After having roused the Dragonblood in his veins, the physical characteristics of his body had all been tremendously enhanced. Even in his human form, he was much stronger than before he had roused the Dragonblood.

Clenching his fist and generating a field of Dragonblood battle-qi, Linley suddenly delivered a powerful punch to the nearby stone wall.

"Bang!" As though struck by a steel rod, a large hole was punched into the stone tunnel wall as rocks began flying in every which way.

"Sixth rank. Linley, in your human form, you already have the power of a warrior of the sixth rank!" Doebling Cowart flew out of the Coiling Dragon ring, laughing as he spoke to Linley.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 1, The Mysterious Magical Formation

Linley, too, could feel that his body was now far stronger than it had been in the past. Previously, his body was that of a warrior of the fourth rank, but now, he had suddenly reached the sixth rank. This was the inherent ability of the Dragonblood Warriors. Thinking back to the pain he had just suffered to reach this, Linley couldn't help but shiver.

"Linley, give your Dragonform a test." Doehring Cowart said with interest.

"Boss, give it a test!" Bebe was excited as well.

Linley slightly nodded. He, too, wanted to get a sense of what level of power his body now possessed when under the Dragonform transformation. Immediately, Linley began to exert his control over the Dragonblood battle-qi that had been compressed into a quasi-crystal at the dantian location, below his navel. Suddenly....

One stream after another of black liquid began to flow from his dantian to his body, his limbs, and his bones.

"Rrrrrgh." Letting out a deep growl, Linley watched as a dense layer of small black scales began to sprout on top of his skin, while at the same time, a row of spikes began to appear on his back, and a long, iron-whip-like tail sprouted out from his tailbone.

Compared to the Armored Razorback Wurm, those spikes running along Linley's spine were slightly fewer in number and slightly shorter.

"I feel as though my body is filled with limitless power." Linley couldn't help but begin to grow excited. He felt so incredibly powerful. The Dragonblood Warrior, one of the Four Supreme Warriors of the Yulan continent. He had just begun his training in this area, but he already possessed enormous strength.

The Supreme Warriors really lived up to their name!

"The power I have right now, must be several tens of times greater than the power I had in my human form." Linley stretched out his right arm, which was currently covered with scales, and saw that his fingernails were now as sharp as knives.

Linley suddenly leapt off the ground with a mighty kick...

As fast as a streak of fire, Linley charged into middle of the wide cave, then delivered a powerful blow to the cave wall. With an earth-shaking sound, rocks begin to fall down from the cave walls. His arm pierced all the way into the stone wall, and to Linley, it felt as though it was as easy as piercing his arm into soft mud.

Such incredible power.

"Harrgh!" Letting out a loud, excited shout, Linley lashed out with two mighty kicks at the wall as well, immediately blasting a huge hole into it, causing rocks to rain down from even the ceiling.

With a kick of his legs, Linley sent himself flying in the air...

And then, with his twin fists, Linley gave the cave ceiling a mighty smash.

"Bam!" The ceiling of the cave cracked like the shell of a turtle, and one giant boulder after another began to fall down from the ceiling. But Linley wasn't afraid in the slightest. These boulders wouldn't do any harm at all when slamming into his body. The black scales protecting his body right now were far more powerful than even the jadestone armor his Earthguard spell provided.

"Swish!" "Swish!" "Swish!"

Linley's body transformed into a vicious black blur. Sometimes he would land on the ground, while at other times, he would rise into the mid-air. Sometimes, he would use all of his strength while smashing his legs into the wall with ferocious kicks, while other times he would viciously pummel the cave ceiling with his fists and allow the rocks to fall on his body.

After a while...

Linley landed on the floor, then directly leapt to the tunnel entrance.

"Grandpa Doehring, what do you think?" He asked.

Most people would find it very difficult to accurately assess a warrior's strength unless a battery of tests was used. Linley, at least, didn't have the ability to make this assessment. But the highly experienced Doehring Cowart should have been able to estimate his strength through the destructive power he had just unleashed.

“In terms of power alone...you should have just crossed over the threshold of being a warrior of the eighth rank.” Doehring Cowart seemed a bit uncertain. “But your movement speed was very fast. Perhaps you have inherited the high movement speed inherent to Armored Razorback Wyrms. Your speed should be on par with highly agile warriors of the eighth rank. As for your defensive abilities, there’s no way for me to judge at this time, since there was nothing to see.”

Linley nodded slightly.

He knew that this Dragonform of his had some sort of connection with the Armored Razorback Wurm, so it made sense that this Dragonform of his was similar in many ways to the Armored Razorback Wurm.

“For the Dragonblood Warriors of our clan, the more powerful one is, the less of a difference there is between the three forms. Right now, I’m a warrior of the sixth rank, and so my Dragonform can reach the early eighth rank in power. According to the books that I read, once a Dragonblood Warrior has reached the early ninth rank of power in human form, then in Dragonform, he will possess the power of an early Saint-level combatant. But once his human form reaches the Saint-level, then in Dragonform, he will still only be a Saint-level. His battle ability, however, will be somewhat improved.”

Linley was quite clear about the nature and origins of the Dragonform ability.

The purpose of assuming the Dragonform was because early on, a normal human being would not be able to utilize all of the power held within the Dragonblood in his veins. Only after using the Dragonform would they be able to summon forth all of their power.

But once they reached the Saint-level, and had totally mastered and harnessed the effective power of their Dragonblood, then when they assumed the Dragonform, their increase in power would be fairly small.

“Linley. Hurry up and dispose of the corpses of those two magical beasts. The two of them have a Saint-level magicite core and a draconic magicite core of the ninth rank.” Doehring Cowart immediately urged.

Linley’s heart suddenly shuddered.

Cores of the ninth rank and Saint-level?

Linley knew that the value of a magicite core of the ninth rank was worth up to five million gold coins, an incredible amount of money. In Fenlai City, some of the relatively large clan’s entire net worth might be around that much.

But the core of a Saint-level magical beast? That was a priceless treasure.

“Right.” Maintaining his Dragonform, Linley immediately rushed over to the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear’s corpse. Because Linley had caused so much damage to the walls and the ceiling, even the Bear’s corpse had been buried under falling rubble.

With a wave of his black-scale-covered right arm, Linley knocked over ten large pieces of rubble away, revealing the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's upper torso and head.

Using his set of two knife-sharp claws, Linley directly tore at the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's fur.

"Oooof!" Linley used as much force as he could, but the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's fur wasn't damaged in the slightest.

"Linley, this is a Saint-level magical beast. Even under the effects of the Dragonform, you are only a warrior of the early eighth rank. If you want to split open this Bear's fur, there's no way you can do it alone." Doehring Cowart laughed.

Linley was forced to admit that this was the truth.

"But Linley, look. There's many sharp spikes on the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's body. These spikes are all extremely sharp. Based on your current ability, there's no way you can use the spikes to cut open the fur either. But there's a spike located very close to the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's eyes. What you need to do is pull that spike out, then stick your claws into that wound and go digging. I'm confident that you should be able to pull out that Saint-level magicite core." Doehring Cowart instructed.

To the enormous Armored Razorback Wyrms, these spikes were nothing more than spikes!

But to the much smaller Linley, these spikes were like massive drills which were twenty centimeters in length. After pulling the spike out, a huge, gaping wound would be revealed near the eyes of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. Going digging for the magicite core through that gaping wound should be an easy task indeed.

After all, as tough as the fur of a Saint-level magical beast might be, its brain and organs weren't too tough.

Using all his strength, Linley forcibly tugged out the giant 'drill', and then extended his black scaly arm into the wound, digging for the magicite core. This Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear's head was really large as well, over a meter long. Linley had to extend his arm into the wound all the way past his elbows before he was able to locate and pull out the Saint-level magicite core.

The Saint-level magicite core was still covered in blood and gore.

A black, fist-sized magicite core.

"It actually doesn't have even a hint of darkness-style aura." Linley was very surprised. If he hadn't already known that this fist-sized black stone was the magicite core of a Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear, he would've never been able to guess.

"The energy within a Saint-level magical beast's magicite core is highly dense and reserved. Frankly speaking, the magicite core of a magical beast of the ninth rank is as well." Doehring Cowart explained.

Linley nodded.

"The entire body of a Saint-level magical beast is a treasure. For example, the leg bones of this Saint-level magical beast definitely possesses an astonishingly resilient strength." Doehring Cowart let out a sigh. "Unfortunately, you simply don't have the ability to break through the powerful defensive barrier of its fur."

Linley also nodded helplessly.

This Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear was simply too huge. He didn't have the ability to bring the corpse of this Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear back either.

"What a waste." Bebe said intentionally, off to the side.

Linley chuckled. "We've already done quite well. The most valuable part of a magical beast is its magicite core. A single Saint-level magicite core is already a truly priceless treasure. I am already very satisfied at having acquired it. What's more, I also have a draconic crystal of the ninth rank." Linley laughed as he walked over to the Armored Razorback Wurm's corpse.

The corpse of the Armored Razorback Wurm had a gaping wound on its head. Finding the draconic crystal shouldn't be too much of a problem.

Linley plunged his sharp claws directly into the wound on the Armored Razorback Wyrms' head.

"Eh?"

After carefully sifting around in the Armored Razorback Wyrms' skull for a while, Linley couldn't find anything. This made Linley feel suspicious.

"Why is there no draconic crystal? What bizarreness is this?" Linley frowned.

"Impossible. A magical beast can't be without a magicite core, and this dragon must absolutely have a draconic crystal as well. After a magical beast dies, there's no way that the magicite crystal will disappear." Doehring Cowart couldn't believe it either.

But Linley suddenly remembered something...

Earlier, when he was raging and drinking the dragon's blood of this Armored Razorback Wyrms, he had swallowed an icy cold object into his stomach. But at that time, due to his rage and his sorrow, he hadn't paid it any attention. And then, when he had eaten the Blueheart Grass, the pain in the rest of his body had faded, except for that one place where the object was.

"No way...was that the draconic crystal?" Linley thought to himself.

Linley could still recollect that sensation of having that ice cold object pass through his throat into his stomach.

"I ate a draconic crystal? This...how could this have happened? In the Secret Dragonblood Manual, there only is a discussion on drinking dragon's blood. Can it be that eating a dragon's draconic crystal core also works?" Linley totally didn't know what was going on. But no matter what, it seemed he had indeed swallowed the core, and from the looks of it, he wasn't suffering from any particular bad aftereffects.

Linley chuckled.

"What I ate wasn't just a draconic crystal core. It was five million gold coins." Linley sighed to himself.

"Boss, lu, lu, look!" Bebe's excited voice rang out.

Linley glanced at Bebe, who was standing in the middle of a pile of rubble, staring dumbly up at the ceiling of the cave. Linley immediately left the tunnel and returned to the cave, and also looked up at the ceiling.

"...what is that?"

At the top of the cave, a large, circular black platform had been revealed. This circular black platform had been embedded into the ceiling, and even now, a large part of it was covered with stone. Clearly... Linley's wild attacks on the ceiling earlier had caused so many rocks to fall down that the circular black platform had been revealed.

Linley wasn't too surprised by the black platform. What did surprise him was....

On the black platform, there was an extremely complicated pattern of magical marks. All sorts of marks were on the platform, and the pattern was complicated to an extreme. Clearly, on the top side of the black platform, there was some sort of magical array formation, but Linley had never, ever, seen such a complicated magical array formation.

If one described the magical array formation covering the front gates of the Ernst Institute as a single 'wind blade', then this mysterious magical formation was the 'Annihilating Tempest' spell.

In particular, in the direct center of this black circular platform, there was a violet-covered sword plunged into the platform.

"This magical formation...how is this possible?" Doehring Cowart appeared by Linley's side as well. Lifting his head up and staring, he said, "Impossible. How could there be a magical formation such as this here, and with this bizarre sword as a focus."

Doehring Cowart, who in the past had always been calm and composed, had now totally been shocked. In his thousand plus years of life, he had never seen such a terrifying magical formation. Although this magical formation was currently dormant and not active, he could already tell what terrible power this magical formation contained.

"Grandpa Doehring, is this magical formation very powerful?" Linley asked.

Doehring Cowart looked at Linley. "Very powerful? We can't even use the word 'powerful' to describe it. The power of this magical formation is even greater than that of any forbidden spell. You tell me, is it 'powerful'? In my entire life, I've never seen such a complicated magical formation, such a powerful magical formation. And what's more, it is borrowing power from that strange sword to supplement the power of the formation itself. What, did the creator feel the power of this formation alone was not great enough?"

Linley was totally stunned by Doebling Cowart's words.

"Grandpa Doebling was a Saint-level Grand Magus of the era of the Pouant Empire. If even he has never seen such a complicated, powerful magical formation before, and is certain that the power of this formation is even greater than that of forbidden spells, then..." Linley felt a thread of trepidation.

What exactly was this mysterious magical formation doing here?

"Linley, take a closer look and try to get a feel for the formation, as well as that violet longsword." Doebling Cowart said to Linley.

Linley nodded slightly. He immediately gathered wind elemental essence to him and used it to sense the aura of that magical formation and the violet longsword. Closing his eyes, Linley could sense an aura of weight and density emanating from the black platform's magical formation, so heavy and oppressive it was stifling.

At the same time, this black platform, or perhaps the magical formation anchored on the platform, emanated waves of incredibly dense elemental essence.

"No wonder the elemental essence here is so dense, almost a hundred times that of the outside world. So the reason is this." If he hadn't directly and clearly attempted to probe the black platform, Linley wouldn't have been able to understand that the platform was the origin, as the elemental essence constantly came down in waves.

In actuality, the center of the cave was where the elemental essence was the densest.

"Amongst the seven elemental essences, the darkness-type elemental essence is the strongest. No wonder both the Armored Razorback Wyrms and the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear both liked this place. Both of them were darkness-type magical beasts." Linley nodded to himself.

"That violet longsword." Linley carefully tried to sense out any details on the violet longsword plunged into the middle of the black platform. "Darkness-type element...but so reserved and introverted."

Stroking his beard, Doebling Cowart smiled at Linley. "Linley, I can tell you something. The value of that violet longsword is most likely not at all inferior to a Saint-level magicite core."

Linley stared at Doebling Cowart questioningly.

Linley knew very well that generally speaking, a warrior's weapons were not very valuable. As long as some extremely hard metals were used along with some other alloys, a weapon could be made. Even his Baruch clan's family heirloom, the warblade 'Slaughterer', only cost a few tens of thousands of gold coins to make.

Afterwards, the successors to the Baruch clan sold the warblade 'Slaughterer' for 180,000 gold coins, but that was primarily because of its connection to the famous Dragonblood Warriors.

Unfortunately, it had been many years since a Dragonblood Warrior had surfaced, and thus the fame of the Dragonblood Warriors was no longer worth as much. If it had been sold in the days when the Dragonblood Warriors had roamed and dominated the lands, the price would have been much higher.

The weapons of warriors weren't worth much. But the magistaff of a magus was a different matter.

The higher quality a magistaff was, the more precious the materials for making it needed to be.

For example, the 'divine treasures' used by a Saint-level Grand Magus, such as a powerful magistaff, would use the magicite core of a magical beast of the ninth rank, or a Saint-level magical beast, to serve as the energy source. Next, complicated and powerful magical formations would be carved onto the magistaff, in order for it to reach its maximum potential.

A magistaff which was hailed as a 'divine treasure' definitely was a priceless treasure. After all, a Saint-level magicite core by itself was considered a priceless treasure.

But of course...

When discussing the relative worthlessness of warrior's weapons, that was with respect to material weapons forged in the Yulan continent. If a weapon came from another place, such as one of the Four Higher Planes, then its value would be different.

"This violet longsword has a very unique aura. If my guess is correct, it should come from one of the Four Higher Planes. Most likely, the Infernal Realm." Doehring Cowart said musingly.

Linley asked curiously, "The Four Higher Planes?"

His white beard fluttering, Doehring Cowart said, "If we consider the Yulan continent as a whole, at your current level of power, you can nominally be considered to be in the upper tier. I can begin telling you a few things now. Linley, you should know by now that in this universe, there is more than just one plane of existence."

Linley nodded. "Of course I know. For example, the Netherworld."

"You know very little." Doehring Cowart shook his head. "In reality, within this vast, infinite universe, there are countless planes, with material, physical planes just one of the most basic, elementary types of planes. Amongst all of these countless planes, there are Four Higher Planes of existence. These planes are the Netherworld, the Infernal Realm, the Life Realm, and the Celestial Realm." Doehring Cowart explained carefully.

Linley attentively listened, as this information was perhaps known only to the absolutely most powerful people of the Yulan continent.

"Linley, by now, you should know what a so-called 'god' is, right?" Doehring Cowart grinned as he looked at Linley.

Linley nodded. "Those who have surpassed the existence of 'Saints' are what we call Deities or Gods." Having read many books, Linley knew that in many books discussing power which transcended the level of the Saints, this level of power was described as the power of the Gods. A power that was so great, it was irresistible.

"Right. But above the level of the Deities, are the Sovereigns. And above the Sovereigns, there are the Overgods!" Doehring Cowart sighed. "These Four Overgods are truly eternal presences which surpass everything else in existence."

This was the first time Linley had ever heard of the existence of the Four Overgods.

"Overgods? Are they more powerful than the Radiant Sovereign?"

"Haha, the Radiant Sovereign?" Doehring Cowart began to laugh. "Regardless of whether we are discussing the 'Radiant Sovereign' of the Radiant Church, or the 'Shadow Sovereign' of the Cult of Shadows, they are nothing more than Sovereigns. To us, and to any ordinary Deity, a Sovereign is an all-powerful entity. But they still require the power of faith from their followers."

"But the Four Overgods are different. They neither require followers, nor require faith. Their power is all-encompassing and all-ruining. Sovereigns such as the Radiant Sovereign or the Shadow Sovereign most likely would only be worthy of being servants for the Four Overgods. And that would be only if the Overgods found them worthy." Doehring Cowart spoke with absolute certainty.

Linley's heart trembled.

"The Netherworld, the Infernal Realm, the Life Realm, the Celestial Realm. These Four Higher Planes were created by the Four Overgods. In the past, I had once had the chance to sense the aura of these Four Higher Planes, which is why, immediately upon seeing that violet longsword, I felt certain that it hails from the Infernal Realm."

Doehring Cowart stared suspiciously at the violet longsword plunged into the round black platform. "But I, too, am suspicious. How did something from the Infernal Realm come here?"

"Linley, think about it. This is a magical formation which is more powerful than even forbidden spells. For it to rely on this violet longsword as a supplemental source of energy, in terms of energy levels, this sword should at least be on par with this magical formation. I strongly recommend...that you drip your blood on it and see if you can bind it to you." Doehring Cowart's eyes were gleaming.

"Bind it?" In Linley's heart, there arose a desire to acquire this treasure.

"Don't be afraid. No matter what this magical formation is meant to do, for such a huge formation to be activated would take a long period of time. This will give you enough time to run far away. First drip your blood onto it and see if this sword already has a master. If it has no master, you can take it away with you. There definitely won't be a problem, and no one will find out." Doehring Cowart said with absolute confidence.

A divine sword which could be bound with blood was no ordinary thing.

When worn, nobody would be able to tell what it was. In the eyes of others, it would be as ordinary as the Coiling Dragon ring.

"Alright." Linley exerted control over his Dragonblood battle-qi, and instantly, the scales on his arms and his upper body began to vanish.

The second form of the Dragonblood Warriors: the Demidragon form.

Linley could now totally control which portion of his body would transform. The rest of his body was now the same as a normal person. After using his teeth to cut his finger, Linley directly leapt up and flicked that drop of blood onto the violet longsword, which had been there for who knows how many years.

The drop of Linley's blood landed on the dust-covered violet longsword, which had been there for countless years. It absorbed his blood like a sponge, easily drinking it in. At the same time...

"Ting!" That violet longsword rang out with a clear sound, and at the same time began to tremble.

All of the dust stuck to its surface suddenly flew away, and at the same time, a strange, bloody aura began to circulate on top of the sword, as though fresh blood was flowing all around it.

"An item with no master." Seeing this, Doehring Cowart felt surprised and pleased.

Doehring Cowart knew very well that if this sword had a master, then Linley would've had no hope at all. But if the sword had no master, then in the future, Linley would possess an extremely useful tool.

"Linley, quick, pull the sword out, and then immediately get out of this place!" Doehring Cowart urged.

"Got it."

Linley once more leapt up, this time directly grabbing the violet longsword and giving it a powerful tug. "Shrrring!" With a clear ringing sound which seemed to carry boundless joy, it came out.

Earlier, when Linley's blood had been absorbed by the violet longsword, Linley immediately knew....that this was a flexible sword!

But upon exerting battle-qi, mageforce, or any other sort of force through the sword, it could instantly become firm and rigid! It could be flexible or hard!

Pulling the sword out from the black platform, Linley landed on the ground. As he landed, with the flick of his wrist, Linley wrapped the violet longsword around his waist, using it like a belt!

"Bebe. Let's go."

Picking up his backpack with one hand, Linley immediately ran for the tunnel exit. At the same time, he began to cover his entire body with scales once more. Bebe, as well, instantly jumped atop of Linley's shoulders.

In the Dragonform, Linley possessed the power of a warrior of the early eighth rank. But in terms of speed, he was a match for a particularly fast warrior of the eighth rank.

“Seventh rank Supersonic!” Linley immediately cast the wind-style supportive spell, ‘Supersonic’.

A Supersonic spell cast at the seventh rank could increase the speed of a warrior of the fourth rank by up to three times. However, Linley’s current base speed was already extremely fast, and so even with the assistance of the Supersonic spell, his speed only improved by another 50%.

But even a 50% increase was already a terrifying increase.

.....

The white fog continued to flow about in the air above the Foggy Valley. As for those giant flying dragons that were previously circling about in the air, aside from a very small number of them still in the air, all of the dragons were now resting on the ground. However, without question, all of them were staying far away from that small hill.

The tunnel covered up by that hill was forbidden grounds!

These giant dragons still remembered how, days ago, that pitiful human had entered the forbidden grounds. Most likely, that pitiful human had died long ago.

"Whoosh!"

A black blur suddenly shot out from within the tunnel, and then directly rocketed into the sky.

"What was that?" Those hundred-plus dragons all noticed the human-sized blur.

A fast warrior of the eighth rank could definitely match the speed of a giant flying dragon of the eighth rank. And now, with Linley utilizing the Supersonic spell to assist himself, his speed had been increased by 50%. Right now, Linley's speed was definitely on par with a warrior of the ninth rank. Even compared to Bebe, he wasn't much slower.

"Roar!"

Those hundred-plus dragons immediately began to roar with rage.

A human had actually dared to trespass on the territory of the dragons? One giant dragon after another spread their wings, taking off and chasing after Linley, but Linley's current speed was simply too fast. Even that largest Fire Dragon could do nothing save watch as Linley's form grow farther and farther away from them. In just a short amount of time, Linley had thrown them off and disappeared from their sight.

"That doesn't seem to be a human." That largest Fire Dragon coiled about in mid-air, musing to itself, confused.

Although it hadn't been able to catch Linley, it could tell quite clearly that this creature was human-shaped, but was covered with scales.

"A human-shaped magical beast?" That Fire Dragon wondered to itself.

.....

Within the underground cave, atop the black platform, the countless crisscrossing lines and patterns of the magical formation slowly began to glow. Each line seemed to have a line of glowing silver emanate from it. Slowly...the entire magical formation began to shine, so brightly as to hurt one's eyes.

"Boom!"

A deep rumbling sound could be heard, and the magical formation began to grow even brighter. Those rumbling sounds grew more and more frequent, more and more urgent. "Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!" Like a series of drumbeats, those booming sounds continued, and that mysterious magical formation continued to grow brighter.

"CRACK!" That black pavilion, made out of an unknown material, suddenly cracked, with three cracks appearing.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 3, Piercing the Heavens

After the three massive cracks appeared on the round black platform, the light from the entire magical formation suddenly flashed as the drumbeat-like booms reached a crescendo, beating faster and louder.

“BOOM!” “BOOM!” “BOOM!” “BOOM!”

Like a series of unabated thunderclaps, capped off with one final “BOOM!” the entire round black platform exploded into fragments. Naturally, the magical formation atop of it disintegrated as well. Suddenly, one patterned crack in the air itself after another began to appear, clear and visible to the eye, spreading out in all directions.

.....

While the flying dragons of the Foggy Valley were still busy wondering about that man-shaped aberration, they suddenly felt the ground itself tremble. All of the giant dragons were startled, and immediately spread their wings and took to the air. Just a few moments later..

“BOOOOOM!”

The ground for kilometers around suddenly exploded. That entire hill which had sealed off to the underground tunnel was reduced to smithereens.

“Growl...” A deep roar emanated from underground.

Where the round black platform had been, space itself was suddenly ripped apart like a piece of paper, revealing a gaping hole of nothingness. And from within that hole, stepped forth a handsome, devilish looking young man, wearing a long, dark gold robe and carrying three little kittens in his arms.

At this moment, the young man looked to be in quite bad shape, and his face was covered with blood.

"Whoosh!"

That gaping hole in reality suddenly vanished. The space nearby, however, was still very unstable, and wild bolts of energy would occasionally appear and disappear.

"I...have finally escaped." The young man stared at the unstable space, a look of wild joy on his face.

"Haha...how many years, now? I've finally escaped that damnable place." Right in the middle of the young man's forehead, there was a slit that appeared almost like a knife wound. Suddenly, that 'scar' opened, revealing a gold-colored third eye.

This golden eye radiated light in every which way.

"This is....this is actually the Yulan continent?" The devilish young man began to laugh in amazement and joy. "This is just wonderful."

"Father, I'm hungry." One of the little kittens in the young man's arms suddenly said.

"I'm hungry too."

The other two kittens also echoed.

Kittens that could speak?

Could they actually be Saint-level magical beasts?

"Alright. Haha, there's around a hundred or so little dragons flying up ahead. You guys can go and have a good meal." The devilish young man laughed loudly.

"Oooo!"

Those three little kittens began meowing in excitement. Suddenly, they transformed into three bolts of lightning and streaked into the sky. As they flew, their bodies suddenly expanded as well, growing larger and larger...smiling, the devilish young man took a single step, and appeared in the middle of the Foggy Valley.

.....

Within the Foggy Valley, over a hundred giant dragons were circling in the air. They had no idea as to what caused the earth to explode just then.

"What's that?"

They saw three huge blurs streak into the air above the Foggy Valley. Each of the three creatures were over thirty meters tall and a hundred meters long. They looked like lions, only magnified by several dozen times. But these creatures were not, in fact, lions, because these three creatures each had a pair of enormous wings, and also had six eyes each.

Six eyes, two wings. Physically as large as one of those legendary Behemoth creatures.

But even Behemoths were not as terrifying as these three creatures.

"RAWR!" Those three strange creatures opened their bloody maws wide and let out a mighty roar. Instantly, their mouths seemed to have turned into a vortex, generating an astonishing pulling force towards the flying dragons.

These hundred-plus dragons wanted to flee in terror, but this sucking force was simply far too strong. The strangest thing was, the pull seemed to only affect them, and didn't disturb any of the rocks on the cliffs near them in the slightest.

"Roaaaar!"

Those hundred-plus dragons began to bellow in fear and rage, but in the face of that terrifying attractive force, they were helplessly sucked away. One giant dragon after another fell into the gaping maws of those six-eyed monsters.

The thing which scared the dragons the most was...

The bellies of these monsters seemed to have unlimited capacity. Although the dragons were slightly smaller in size than these monsters, one should be more than enough to fill the stomachs of these monsters. But as soon as one dragon was sucked into a monster's belly, the monster would begin sucking in another.

One dragon....another dragon...

The pulling force from the maws of those three monsters was simply too terrifying. The eight-ranked dragons were totally unable to resist it. One dragon after another was sucked into the bellies of those six-eyed aberrations. In a short period of time, every single one of them had been devoured by these three monsters.

"That was great!" One of the aberrations laughed loudly. "It's been so many years since I've had a proper meal."

"I thought I was going to die in that damnable place and never come out again. Unfortunately...number four and number five..." Another one of the aberrations said with a low sigh.

All three of the aberrations fell silent.

They thought back to the thousands of years they had spent in that damnable place. They couldn't help but feel their hearts grow cold. No future. No hope. They could've died at any time. If it hadn't been for their father, the three of them most likely would've been killed long ago. But even despite the efforts of their father, their fourth brother and fifth brother, the weakest of the five, had both died.

"Father's coming."

The three aberrations watched as that devilish young man walked towards them in midair. Their bodies shrinking, they once again transformed into three ordinary little kittens. The only thing was, their fur was now rainbow-colored and beautiful to behold. Their two little wings were also much more beautiful than the wings of the dragons.

But those three sets of eyes still would shock anyone who saw them.

"Father." Those three aberrations excitedly flew to their father's side. By now, there was no longer a hint of blood on the devilish young man's face, and the dust on the dark golden robe he was wearing had all disappeared as well. A smile was still on his face.

"Did you have a good meal?" The devilish young man laughed. "Oh, and there's two more magical beasts of the eighth rank here as well."

The devilish young man looked towards the west side of the Foggy Valley, while at the same time, a burst of quad-colored energy radiated west. In a short time, the burst of energy had wrapped around those two giant Velocidragons, and pulled them over in mid-air.

Those two Velocidragons seemed to know that the end was nigh. All they did was moan in a low voice, begging for mercy.

They were Velocidragons. Although they were also magical creatures of the eighth rank, like Emerald Dragons and Fire Dragons, due to the fact that they were different races of dragons and also did not fly, they usually stayed far away from the Emerald and Fire Dragons.

When those three aberrations had been happily devouring the flying dragons, they hadn't paid any attention to those two far-away Velocidragons.

"Over a hundred flying dragons were just devoured." The hearts of the two Velocidragons were trembling.

Their opponent was far too strong, and those three kittens, now at a 'normal' size, could even talk.

"You wanted to flee?" That devilish young man smiled at the two Velocidragons.

The two Velocidragons were physically huge. That devilish young man was just a tiny speck by their side. And yet, the hearts of the two Velocidragons were quailing, and they were panting hoarsely nonstop. In the language of the dragons, they said, "Lord, we wouldn't dare, we wouldn't dare."

The devilish young man seemed to understand the draconic tongue. Smiling, he nodded. "Very good. I've just arrived in this plane, and I'm in a very good mood. I'll spare you two. You two...shall serve me now."

The energy chains around the two Velocidragons disappeared, causing the two of them to land heavily on the ground. Upon smashing into the ground, they traded glances, then immediately prostrated themselves flat on the ground, their heads lowered in a sign of obedience.

Dragons were extremely arrogant creatures, but in the face of such overwhelming power, they had no choice but to submit.

Facing this devilish young man, these two Velocidragons strongly suspected that they could be killed with a single wave of his pinky.

"The Yulan continent." The devilish young man surveyed his surroundings, his face all smiles. "What a wonderful place. I trust that I won't be as unfortunate as I was, five thousand years ago."

.....

Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Having returned to his human form, Linley was only wearing a pair of slacks and an undergarment. This was the beginning of February, when the temperature was extremely low. But Linley was only carefully inspecting the violet sword.

Right now, Linley had no idea what a huge calamity he had unleashed upon the world by pulling out this violet longsword!

The ignorant knew no fear!

But while Doehring Cowart did have some idea as to what would happen, to Doehring Cowart, no matter how great the disaster might be, it wouldn't have too much impact on Linley. After all, even if the heavens collapsed, the ultimate experts of the Yulan continent would be able to stave off calamity. What was there to fear?

Only an idiot would see a treasure there for the taking and not take it.

"Grandpa Doehring, what do you think these two words here mean?" Linley asked Doehring Cowart.

On the hilt of this violet longsword, there were two angular characters, written with many complicated strokes.

"This..." Doehring Cowart's eyes lit up upon seeing these two words. "These words are from the common tongue used in the Infernal Realm. Years ago, shortly after I became a Saint-level magus, I studied this tongue. These two words should be 'blood' and 'violet', respectively."

"Blood Violet?" Linley murmured quietly. "Can it be that the name of this longsword is Bloodviolet?"

Linley carefully inspected this flexible sword, Bloodviolet. Bloodviolet was as thin as a cicada's wings. Precisely because it was so incredibly thin, even though it was made from special materials, it was quite light, perhaps only five pounds or so. To Linley, a five pound sword was absolutely nothing at all.

As he channeled the Dragonblood battle-qi from his body into the sword, Bloodviolet instantly became hard and straight.

With a wave of the hand...

"Swish!" The whisper-thin Bloodviolet very easily sliced through a huge tree with a trunk which would require three men holding hands to surround. Despite being cut through, the tree didn't budged at all. But Linley knew very well that in reality, the tree had been cut into two halves.

But Bloodviolet was too fast, too sharp, which was why the tree didn't move at all.

With a mighty leap, Linley flew into the air, and then kicked at one of the branches of the tree in mid-air. Immediately, the tree began to tremble. After smashing several large branches, the entire tree slowly slid and fell to the ground.

Linley took a glance at the place where Bloodviolet had made its cut. "How smooth." The cut area didn't have any coarseness or any splinters.

"That sword is awesome." Munching on a roast duck he was carrying, Bebe stared with wide eyes.

Linley chuckled, then turned to stare at the flexible sword, Bloodviolet. In his mind, he said, "With such an agile, sharp weapon, even if I encounter a thousand or ten thousand foes, I won't fear them." Linley immediately began to brandish the flexible sword about.

With incredible agility, Linley danced amidst the forest, easily waving Bloodviolet to and fro amongst the trees.

Sharp! Fast!

As thin as an insect's wings! This caused Bloodviolet to be virtually unimpeded by air resistance, allowing its speed to reach terrifying heights. And its lightness allowed Linley to transform even more of his physical strength into a fast swing speed.

"Linley, although this flexible sword, Bloodviolet, is quite sharp, its sharpness isn't all that shocking." Doehring Cowart's appraising skills were much better than Linley's. At one glance, he could tell what the true strength of this Bloodviolet sword was.

Linley couldn't help but stare suspiciously at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart laughed. "If you just want to use this Bloodviolet sword to chop down an ordinary tree, then of course it would be unstoppable. But in facing an expert opponent, such as a warrior of the seventh rank using a shield infused with battle-qi, I'm afraid you wouldn't be able to cut through it so easily."

Linley was startled.

"The true value of this Bloodviolet longsword lies in two different areas. The first is that it can be either firm or flexible, and thus it would be extremely hard for an opponent to defend or protect against it in battle.

And the second is....its durability! Most weapons aren't able to withstand too much battle-qi, as they would crumble. But this precious sword of yours will not." Doehring Cowart explained.

Linley nodded slightly.

A sword that was very sharp and very hard probably would also be fragile and unable to take too much force. This Bloodviolet flexible sword was very sharp, but not ridiculously so. Its true strength lay in it being both flexible and firm, while possessing astonishing speed and innate durability.

"Speed? Flexibility?"

Linley's heart was moved. He no longer channeled his Dragonblood battle-qi into the sword, and instead began to channel his wind-element mageforce into it.

At the same time, he began to brandish the sword about. After having been filled with wind-style mageforce, the already fast Bloodviolet sword was able to reach an even higher level, while also the trajectory of its movement became erratic and unpredictable. The sword was sometimes straight, sometimes curved, causing one to not know how to handle it.

Linley instantly understood.

"For me right now, this is perhaps the most suitable way to utilize this flexible sword, Bloodviolet!"

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 4, Grandmaster Sculptor?

Shortly after the Ernst Institute began the new school semester, Hillman arrived at the Ernst Institute in search of Linley.

In front of the Ernst Institute's main gate, Hillman was frowning while pacing. Clearly, he had a belly full of bad thoughts. The Ernst Institute was under very strict management, and as an outsider without any particular status or power, he didn't have the qualifications needed to enter.

After a while, Yale and Reynolds, both dressed in sky-blue robes, stepped out and walked towards him.

"You are Linley's Uncle Hillman, right? I met you before." Yale spoke out warmly.

Hillman had previously seen Linley's three bros before. Upon seeing Yale and Reynolds, he immediately went over and asked them, "Hey...I know that you are classmates with Linley, and I wanted to ask, why didn't Linley come back to celebrate the New Year? Every year in the past, he would come back."

"Uh..." Yale and Reynolds exchanged glances.

That Linley had his heart broken wasn't a happy event. It wouldn't be good for them to reveal it to Linley's elders.

Reynolds reaction speed was the fastest. Smiling, he said, "Uncle

Hillman, Linley's totally focused on his training, and long before the end-of-the-year examinations, had already reached the rank of magus of the sixth rank. And then, he once more entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for training. Man, he's so hard-working...he didn't even bother coming back for the yearly examinations. That Dixie fellow was assessed as a magus of the sixth rank this year. Some people are now saying that Dixie has surpassed Linley."

"Third Bro has no care for these superficial things. Right, Uncle Hillman, Linley headed off to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts last December. He should be back very soon. Is there something important? If there is, you can tell us. We'll definitely let him know when he's back." Yale said very courteously.

Hillman was silent for a while, then shook his head, a smile on his face that didn't seem like a smile. "No...nothing important. It was just that Linley had always come back every year, and so this year, when he did not, the family grew worried and wanted to check up on him. Since we now know that Linley has entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, we're satisfied."

"Uncle Hillman, don't worry, when Third Bro comes back, I'll definitely tell him to go home early so that you won't be worried." Yale immediately said.

Hillman shook his head. "No need, no need to rush him back. Let him focus on his training. When he has some free time, he can come back then. Nothing big is going on back home anyways. Thanks, the two of you. I'll head off now."

Watching Hillman depart, Yale and Reynolds smiled, then turned to leave as well.

Suddenly...

"Young master Yale, young master Reynolds!" From far away, an exceedingly friendly voice called out.

Yale and Reynolds turned to stare outside of the Institute. From far away, they could see a parked carriage guarded by four armored knights. Frowning, Yale said questioningly, "Who is calling out to me? Oh. It's Austoni." Yale saw Austoni poke his face out of the carriage.

Austoni was the first out of the carriage. He smiled humbly at Yale, and then respectfully stood off to the side. At this time, the screen door to the carriage was once more pushed open, and a very distinguished-looking bald gentleman with a cane slowly made his way out.

Yale and Reynolds exchanged glances.

"Who is this old geezer? Seems distinguished." Reynolds said beneath his breath.

Yale shook his head. Also beneath his breath, he said, "I don't recognize this old geezer either. But based on Austoni's actions, he should be an important individual. Austoni is a high level manager at the Proulx Gallery who has fairly high status himself."

Accompanied by Austoni, that distinguished looking old man walked over to them, smiling.

"Little Yale, hello." The bald man smiled as he spoke to Yale. "I ran into your father not long ago. Your father was full of praises for you. Haha, for Mr. Dawson to have a son such as yourself at the Ernst Institute is a very proud thing."

Yale looked questioningly at the bald man.

"He says he knows my father? And seems to be close to him?"

Austoni said from the side, "Young master Yale, this is the managing director of our Proulx Gallery. You can call him Director Maia [Mai'ya]."

"No need, just call me Uncle Maia. I've been friends with your father for decades." The bald old man said with a smile.

Yale felt secretly shocked.

The Proulx Gallery was the holy land for the arts. Every single large city in the Yulan continent had a branch of the Proulx Gallery. Even here at Fenlai City alone, the total value of all the sculptures stored at the local Proulx Gallery would come to an astounding figure.

And that wasn't the half of it.

The most important thing was status. To be the managing director of the holy land for the arts meant that the circle this Director Maia travelled in composed of the highest tier of people in the entire Yulan continent, and he might even be on friendly terms with Saint-level combatants. How could anyone look down upon someone like this?

What's more, the Proulx Gallery had a extremely formidable armed force, as otherwise, how could they protect their valuable treasures?

"Uncle Maia." Yale said humbly.

The bald Director Maia turned to look at Reynolds. "And this is?"

"This is a good bro of mine – Reynolds." Yale immediately replied. Quite elegantly, Reynolds also said, "Very pleased to meet you, Director Maia."

Director Maia nodded slightly. From Reynolds movements, he could tell that Reynolds had received excellent tutelage from when he was young.

"Uncle Maia, why have you come here, if I might ask?" Yale asked.

Although he was asking, in his heart, Yale already suspected the answer. "80% chance he's here because of that sculpture of Third Bro – Awakening From the Dream." The last time the Ernst Institute had a holiday break, due to the fact that it had been quite some time since Linley had sent any sculptures to the Proulx Gallery, Austoni had come over to see what the situation was.

But upon arriving at Linley's dormitory, by chance, Austoni had caught a glimpse of that sculpture, which they had placed in the dorm.

Upon seeing it, Austoni had been totally stunned.

As a high level manager of the Proulx Gallery, Austoni's eyes were exceedingly sharp. From that glimpse, he was absolutely certain that this sculpture of Linley's was qualified to be described as standing at the pinnacle of the entire art of stonesculpting. It definitely was qualified to stand on the same pedestal as the Ten Great Sculptures.

The most important thing was, this sculpture of Linley's was enormous, on par with five separate sculptures of most people.

Just like in the art of painting, the value of a sculpture was related in part to its size. Such an enormous sculpture would've required an incredibly large amount of effort. This sculpture which contained five lifelike images of people had already contained within it a unique soul and was on a totally different level.

Seeing that sculpture was the same as seeing five real-life beautiful women.

In the entire Yulan continent, there were very few master-level sculptors. But this sculpture by Linley had already surpassed the level of 'masters'; it was qualified to be ranked amongst the works of the most venerated grandmaster sculptors in history, such as Proulx, Hope Jensen [Hu'pe Jin'sen], and Hoover [Huo'fu].

Those who were granted the title of master were able to produce sculptures of exceedingly high quality, with their own distinct aura and the ability to stir the soul of the viewers.

But their works, when compared to the works of Proulx, Hope Jensen, and the other sculptors who had received the title of 'Grandmaster', was still slightly inferior. Although the gap was very small, it still determined a difference in status.

Stonesculpting had a history of hundreds of thousands of years, and during that period of time, the vast majority of sculptures had been destroyed by the passage of time. Only a few special statues made of special materials could survive and be passed down to the present generation. Thus, of the so-called Ten Grandmasters, nine of them lived within the past hundred thousand years.

Ever since the Yulan Empire unified the Yulan continent, there had been only two sculptors that could be put on the same level as those ancient grandmasters: Proulx and Hope Jensen.

Hoover was a Grandmaster from over a hundred thousand years ago, and his famous sculpture, the Bloody-eyed Maned Lion, had survived all those years due to the unique properties of the material it was made from, thus ensuring Hoover's fame would live on.

In the past ten thousand years, there had only been two Grandmaster sculptors. Now, of course, Proulx was actually the most formidable sculptor in all of history, and three of the Ten Masterpieces belonged to him. Not all of the Ten Grandmasters had produced sculptures which numbered amongst the Ten Masterpieces.

Of course, this was just the judgment of the later generations. In terms of actual sculpting ability, all of the Ten Grandmasters were about the same.

A new Grandmaster had been born...and he was a 17-year old youth!

What an amazing event this was! And this was the reason why the managing director of the Proulx Gallery himself had hurried over here, all the way from the Proulx Gallery located in the Dark Alliance.

“No rush. Let’s go to a private room in a hotel and have a nice, quiet chat.” Director Maia wasn’t in too big of a rush.

A Grandmaster sculptor?

What a joke!

Although Austoni’s eyes were keen, whether or not a sculpture was capable of being passed down the ages required extremely formidable judgment. The work of a master sculptor and that of a Grandmaster lay in its unique aura and soul.

Whether or not a work of art was qualified to be considered a Grandmaster-level piece of art was an extremely deep field of study.

.....

Within a deluxe room at the hotel.

In front of the four of them, there was a kettle of light tea. Laughing, Director Maia said, “This kid, Austoni, upon seeing Linley’s sculpture, insisted that it was on par with the Ten Masterpieces. Haha, isn't that the same as saying that we now have a seventeen year old Grandmaster?"

'Grandmaster' was a title representing a certain status, representing that someone was at the peak of this art form.

But in casual conversation, most people would address someone as 'master', for example, 'Master Proulx'.

"Grandmaster sculptor?" Yale was somewhat amazed. "I don't know if Linley's sculpture qualifies or not. After all, my experience is limited. But I am absolutely sure that this sculpture of Linley's is, at the very least, comparable with the sculptures you have on display in your hall of the masters."

"Oh?" Director Maia laughed. "Well-spoken. After all this chitchat, I suppose it's best I take a look. I don't know where this sculpture is. May I take a look?"

"Of course." Yale smiled.

"Little Yale, even if this sculpture isn't at the level of the Ten Masterpieces, I'll wager it isn't too far off. You have to protect it and make sure it isn't stolen." Director Maia reminded.

Yale confidently said, "Uncle Maia, please set your mind at ease. Right now, I've secreted the sculpture into the secret underground room within the Huadeli Hotel, and I have experts of the Dawson Conglomerate protecting it. What's more, there are very few people who even know of the existence of this statue to begin with."

"You've moved it to the hotel?" Austoni was somewhat surprised. The last time he saw it, it was in their dormitory.

Yale pursed his lips. "I trust my bros, but I don't trust you."

Austoni could only let out a few awkward chuckles.

"Uncle Maia, let's go. I'll lead you there." Yale said warmly.

The Huadeli Hotel was actually a property under the banner of the Dawson Conglomerate. This was the reason why the upper-level management of the Huadeli Hotel knew Yale's status."

With a large stand-alone room inside the Huadeli Hotel, there were several seats as well as three experts who had been standing guard every day.

"Young master Yale." The three warriors of the seventh rank bowed respectfully.

Yale nodded and smiled slightly. "Uncle Maia, please view to your heart's content." As he spoke, Yale gave a sharp tug to the heavy covering over the sculpture, revealing the enormous work of art. Those five beautiful women were incomparably immaculate and fine. One an image of tender love, another an adorable innocence, a third all bashful and shy, the fourth passionate and stirring, and the last...heartless.

All of them seemed to be as real as an actual person.

Seeing these five human shapes within the sculpture, Director Maia's mouth hung open, and he stared at it, stunned, for a long time.

After a long time...

"Incredible. Incredible." Only now did Director Maia awaken from his stupor. "This sculpture is at the master level, at the very least. A sculpture which links together five different human figures, all totally lifelike? How much effort did this cost? In terms of carving time alone, at least a year must have been spent on it."

Director Maia knew very well how much effort sculpting took.

It took so much effort that sometimes, in the middle of carving a sculpture, a master sculptor might suddenly vomit blood and pass out from the exertion. In history, there were people who died in the middle of their sculpting. Sculptures such as this were formed from blood and effort.

"For a seventeen year old to be able to produce this sculpture is simply...simply..." Director Maia was at a loss for words. He excitedly walked closer to the sculpture for a closer examination. "Whether or not this sculpture is on par with the Ten Masterpieces requires further inspection from multiple angles."

As he spoke, Director Maia glued himself next to the sculpture, beginning to carefully inspect every single carved line.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 5, Sword Training

Without making any sound, Director Maia carefully inspected every single inch of this sculpture, Awakening From the Dream, as though he had been possessed.

“Boss Yale, it’s been two hours already.” Reynolds looked at Yale with an unhappy expression.

Yale shook his head and said softly, “Don’t be impatient. Let Uncle Maia do a close inspection. As the managing director of the entire Proulx Gallery, he must be one of the descendants of Master Proulx himself. I believe that his abilities at judging sculpture must be extremely high. I wonder what level this sculpture of Third Bro’s has reached.”

Reynolds nodded slightly as well.

After over three hours had passed, Director Maia straightened his waist, letting out a long breath.

“I hear that the name of this sculpture is, Awakening From the Dream?” Director Maia asked.

Yale nodded. “Correct. Third Bro gave it this name himself.”

Director Maia let out a soft sigh. After taking another good look at the sculpture, he praised, “I must say, this brother of yours, Linley, is without question a genius sculptor. A genius who is comparable to Master Proulx himself.”

“Although on a technical level, his sculpture is just a tiny bit weaker than Master Proulx’s, in terms of the soul or the aura of this sculpture, Linley has definitely reached the same level.” Director Maia sighed with praise.

“Technical level?” Yale said questioningly.

Director Maia nodded. “Right. But although this sculpture does have minor technical flaws, at the same time, it has amazing strengths of its own.”

“The flaws are, some of the indentions and some of the soft lines were not handled with perfect adroitness. But this sculpture of Linley’s is extremely smooth and flowing as a whole, and the feelings it invokes are definitely on par with several of Master Proulx’s finest. And most importantly of all, this sculpture is huge.”

Director Maia sighed in praise. “For a sculpture to pass down throughout the ages, in every single aspect, it requires a tremendous amount of effort. A single error can ruin the entire sculpture. To be able to sculpt a single human-shaped sculpture is already quite an accomplishment. But Linley was able to sculpt five! The most admirable thing is that all five of the people in this sculpture have their own unique aura, but yet everything is still linked up in a story. If I guess correctly, your brother must have suffered a romantic heartbreak.”

Based on Director Maia’s astuteness, he could clearly tell at a single glance the story behind these five figures.

"Awakening From the Dream. It is really amazing that Linley was able to carve a sculpture such as this." Director Maia couldn't stop praising it.

"Director Maia, tell me, what level is this sculpture of my bro at, exactly? Is it on par with the sculptures of Master Proulx?" Reynolds asked.

Director Maia frowned. "To be frank, I'm not sure either. Let me put it to you like this. On the technical side of things, this sculpture can only be considered to be an expert level sculpture, despite being on the same level with Master Proulx in terms of invoking emotions and telling a story. But there is a unique point about it..."

"The carving strokes of this sculpture were very clean, very agile. From start to finish, it can be said that these five figures were inseparable parts of a flawless whole. This unconventional feeling is something I have never even heard of before, much less seen." Director Maia praised.

Yale said urgently, "Uncle Maia, so what level is this sculpture at?"

Director Maia was helpless. "I can't say for certain. From a traditional evaluation standpoint, this sculpture should be considered to be on the master level. After all, the uniqueness of its aura is unquestionable, and the quality of the work is on clear display from the grace the statue emanates."

"From a traditional evaluation standpoint?" Yale and Reynolds both looked questioningly at Director Maia.

Director Maia nodded. "The traditional evaluation method has been universally agreed upon as a fair, impartial evaluating mechanism for countless years. But I feel that...when actually viewing Linley's sculpture, it appears to be a very perfect whole, without any apparent flaws."

"The whole point of having sculptures is for viewing them. The actual viewing determines everything. Let me put it this way. Linley perhaps cannot be termed a Grandmaster sculptor, but the value of this sculpture will most likely be incredibly high, on the same level as the Ten Masterpieces." Director Maia laughed.

A sculpture not produced by one of the Ten Grandmasters with the valuation on the same level as the Ten Masterpieces. This was something totally unheard of.

But Director Maia couldn't help but to admit that this was very likely to occur.

"Oh." Yale and Reynolds nodded.

This was the one flaw of the Straight Chisel School, honestly speaking. When just using a single tool, the straight chisel, in terms of precision when carving out certain curves, couldn't match some more specialized tools. The technical appearance created by Linley's usage of the straight chisel was perhaps comparable with a normal expert sculptor.

When judging it against the standards of a master sculptor, the weaknesses became readily apparent.

But the Straight Chisel School had its own strengths as well. For example, the continuity of the carving, and...others, when carving, had to constantly switch tools, but the Straight Chisel School only required an earth-style magus to become one with the earth as he carved, which actually increased the speed at which he raised his spiritual energy.

"Where is Linley?" Director Maia asked.

Yale shook his head. "Third Bro is a student magus, after all. The vast majority of his time is spent in training. Right now, he is engaging in a practical excursion in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and we're not sure exactly when he'll be back."

"Then, Yale, can you act on behalf of Linley in permitting our Proulx Gallery to auction off this sculpture?" Director Maia suggested.

"Can't be done." Yale was very blunt. "Without Third Bro's express permission, it isn't convenient for me to make that decision."

Director Maia frowned, and continued. "Then what about exhibiting it? There shouldn't be too much of a problem in allowing our Proulx Gallery to exhibit it, would there? After all, Linley's previous sculptures were all exhibited in our Proulx Gallery before being auctioned off."

But Yale knew very well how much symbolic importance Linley placed on this sculpture.

This represented an extremely painful period of heartbreak in Linley's life. It was hard to say if Linley would have agreed to exhibit it if he were here. He didn't want to make Linley uncomfortable.

"Can't be done. I'm only responsible for safeguarding this thing. As far as exhibiting it or selling it, we'll have to wait for Third Bro to return." Yale's voice was resolute.

.....

Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Exactly two months had passed. During this time, Linley had been immersed in studying the Bloodviolet sword. The Bloodviolet sword was the finest sword Linley had ever seen. Just based on its sharpness alone, most magical beasts of the sixth rank couldn't handle it. But the sharpness was only a small specialty of the Bloodviolet sword.

The strengths of the Bloodviolet sword were – Unpredictability, speed, and also a certain baleful aura.

That's right. A baleful aura.

Linley only discovered this baleful aura after killing quite a few magical beasts. The material making up this Bloodviolet sword contained within it a unique energy. With each chop of the blade, a unique baleful aura was released.

This baleful aura was very similar to a dragon's terrifying presence. Naturally, it wasn't nearly as terrifying, but in battle, this baleful aura could be put to very good use.

Night. In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, surrounded by a pack of hundreds of Windwolves. The Windwolf pack leader stared at Linley with its greenish-yellow eyes. Letting out wild howls, one Windwolf after another pounced towards Linley. But moving as agilely as the wind, Linley slipped through the attacks of the pack, the sword in his hand glowing with a blue light.

After being activated by wind-style mageforce, the Bloodviolet Godsword's speed increased even more. The Godsword flickered about, not impeded by air resistance in the slightest.

"Whoosh!"

Within the darkness, a streak of violet intermixed with blue was flickering about at high speed. It floated about in bizarre patterns, and every time it flickered, a Windwolf was split into two parts. Windwolves, after all, were only magical beasts of the fourth rank. In this pack of Windwolves, some of the stronger ones were beasts of the fifth rank, and only the two leaders were beasts of the sixth rank.

Right now, Linley remained in human form, in which he possessed the power of the sixth rank.

Frankly speaking, even a warrior of the seventh rank might not dare to directly fight with a pack of hundreds of Windwolves, much less a warrior of the sixth rank. After all, a hero could still be brought down by numbers, and Windwolves possessed extremely sharp claws. Even Linley's body, when scratched by a Windwolf, would most likely bleed. Unless, of course, he entered the Dragonform.

"Howl!" A Windwolf leapt at him with high speed, bloody maw wide open.

"Swish!"

The Bloodviolet Godsword flashed. The Windwolf was instantly bisected from head to tail.

"Perhaps this Bloodviolet Godsword of mine would have some problems piercing the armor of a Velocidragon. But you guys?" The Bloodviolet Godsword in Linley's hands was beginning to move even faster and even more agilely.

The reason why a pack of Windwolves was a terrifying thing was because of their speed as well as numbers. If over ten Windwolves suddenly snapped at you, even a warrior of the seventh rank would be hard pressed to block them all at once. His only option would be to use his battle-qi to tank the blow.

But Linley was different.

"Swish!" The Bloodviolet Godsword flashed again, and yet another Windwolf was cut in twain.

The Bloodviolet Godsword was simply too fast, so fast that all the Windwolves could see was a blur. After Linley had slaughtered over a hundred Windwolves without suffering any injury at all, the pack of Windwolves finally began to be filled with fear.

They weren't afraid of death, but they weren't willing to die senselessly either.

"Hooooowl!" Those two large Windwolves that had been hiding in the back finally began to howl angrily. All of the remaining Windwolves lowered their heads, then turned and retreated at high speed. Their angry, saddened howls could be heard from far away. Clearly, it was caused by the fact that they had lost so many of their comrades, but no gain at all.

With a flick of Linley's wrist and a violet flash, the Bloodviolet Godsword wrapped around Linley's waist into a belt shape again.

"Against the likes of them, there's no need to use Bloodviolet's real power." There was a hint of blood on Linley's robes, but all of it came from the Windwolves.

During the entire battle, from start to finish, the Bloodviolet Godsword had been straight. Against the likes of a Windwolf pack, just relying on the sharpness of the Godsword was already enough. But once the Bloodviolet Godsword began to fluctuate between being straight and being flexible, the offensive power would multiply.

"Boss, you are starting to get more and more powerful." Bebe was lying on Linley's shoulders.

Linley laughed. "You aren't weak either."

After taking a deep breath then releasing it, Linley glanced around at his surroundings, then took a look at the three bags on his back. In the past two months, through analyzing and training with this Bloodviolet Godsword, Linley had already filled up three sacks with magicite cores.

"After spending two months in training, I've already reached a bottleneck in my ability to use Bloodviolet. If I want to get better, for now, I'd have to rely on improving my own arm strength and wrist strength."

During these two months, Linley had trained in the movements of drawing the sword, striking with the sword, cutting with it, stabbing with it, hacking with it, and all sorts of other skills. The purpose of Linley's training was all to improve his speed, to as high a level as was possible. What's more, with Linley's proficiency in wind magic, Linley could with relative ease discern the secrets of using the sword.

Just now, when faced with over a hundred Windwolves, Linley wasn't injured at all. This was the result of his accomplishments.

In the past, Linley wouldn't have dared to imagine what it would be like, at this level.

"Now that I'm at a bottleneck, there's not much more point to me being at the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Time to go back."

.....

Morning. The early rays of the sun shone upon the earth. With Bloodviolet wrapped around his waist, carrying three sacks of magicite cores, and wearing a slightly blood-stained blue robe, Linley arrived at the main entrance to the Ernst Institute, Bebe on his shoulders.

“Finally back.” Seeing the main gate to the Ernst Institute, Linley felt his heart was at peace.

The Ernst Institute and the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were two opposite extremes. Here, no one dared to kill wantonly, and everyone was amiable. But the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was a world which belonged to magical beasts. The strong were revered, while the weak were cast out. Murder could happen at any time.

“It’s Linley.” The guardians at the main gate of the Ernst Institute all recognized this famous figure, Linley. Naturally, they would not stop him.

Linley slightly nodded towards the guards, and then walked into the Ernst Institute. On the roads within the Institute, quite a few students on their way to classes began to talk amongst themselves in hushed tones when they saw Linley.

“Look, it’s Linley. He’s covered in blood. He should’ve just gotten back from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. I heard that last year, he went to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and skipped the end of the year assessment. This has been four months. He’s so amazing, to be able to survive there for four full months.”

“Dixie was assessed as a magus of the sixth rank last year. But Linley didn’t go for an assessment at all.”

.....

Hearing these hushed murmurs, Linley only smiled as he headed towards his own dormitory. Right at this moment, Yale, George, and Reynolds were preparing to breakfast together.

“Oh, Third Bro, you’re back.” Reynolds was the first to excitedly call out to him.

Yale, George, and Reynolds all excitedly rushed over to him. Linley, as always, grinned upon seeing his three bros.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 6, Applying For Graduation

Within the Huadeli Hotel.

Linley, George, Yale, and Reynolds were all casually seated at a long table, which was covered with over ten exquisitely prepared dishes. Next to the dishes were fruit wine, liquor, and more. Right now, the four bros were drinking wine while casually chatting about recent events.

“Linley, last year, you should’ve attended the end of the year testing ceremony before going to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Last year, during the examination, Dixie showed that he had also reached the sixth rank. But you didn’t attend at all. Some people are saying that you are inferior to Dixie. Damn. Only the four of us know that you reached the sixth rank long ago.” Reynolds grumbled.

Linley drank a cup of wine, chuckling.

Magus of the sixth rank?

Ever since he entered that rare state of oneness and carved out the sculpture, ‘Awakening From the Dream’, over the course of ten days and ten nights, his spiritual energy had increased tenfold, helping Linley to vault almost directly from the sixth rank to the seventh rank.

In fact, just looking at spiritual energy, Linley would be an above-average magus of the seventh rank.

"Fourth Bro, you should know by now that Third Bro doesn't care about this sort of stuff at all. If he cared, then he wouldn't have skipped the annual competition every year." Yale chortled. "Right, Third Bro, when this school semester just started, your Uncle Hillman came looking for you."

Linley started. Looking at Yale, he immediately asked, "What did Uncle Hillman want?"

In the past, Linley had always gone home for the New Year. This previous year was the first and only year in which Linley spent the end of the winter and early spring in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"Not really. Most likely, he was wondering why you didn't go back for the New Year and was worried something had happened to you." Yale said casually, then added, "Right. Something else we have to tell you. That same day your Uncle Hillman came to visit, the managing director of the Proulx Gallery came as well. The purpose of his visit was to see sculpture of yours, 'Awakening From the Dream'."

Linley coughed in shock. "The managing director? How did he know about 'Awakening From the Dream'?"

Somewhat embarrassed, Reynolds said, "It's all my fault. When Yale instructed people to carry your sculpture out of the mountain, I figured nobody knew how valuable it was, so I just had them leave it in our dormitory. That way, we bros could admire it from time to time. But I didn't expect that Austoni would come looking for you, and came directly to our dorm. He managed to catch a glimpse of 'Awakening From the Dream', and then he informed the managing director of the existence of this sculpture."

Linley nodded slightly.

“Linley, the managing director wants to know if you’d be willing to auction off your sculpture within the Proulx Gallery? If you aren’t willing to auction it off, he still hopes that you would be willing to put it on display in the Proulx Gallery. Will you agree?” Yale looked at Linley.

Without hesitating in the slightest, Linley shook his head.

“For now, I don’t wish to publicize the existence of ‘Awakening From the Dream’. And I don’t need money either.”

To Linley, ‘Awakening From the Dream’ represented a period of love and loss. But of course, after completing this sculpture, Linley had mentally transformed as well.

Especially during this period of time within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. He had experienced the siege of over a hundred giant dragons, then watched two extremely powerful magical beasts battle to the death, and then nearly died himself before successfully drinking dragon’s blood and transforming into a Dragonblood Warrior.

After having experienced so much, the affairs of him and Alice seemed to be nothing more than a distant memory.

Linley had also learned to cherish the present.

"If Father knew that I could now assume Dragonform, how excited must he be?" Linley thought of his father.

Hogg's greatest lifelong desire was to see one of his son's become a Dragonblood Warrior. Little Wharton's density of Dragonblood in his veins was sufficiently high, true, but Linley was capable of Dragonform, and even of reaching the eighth rank of power in Dragonform.

If this news reached Hogg, that his son had become a Dragonblood Warrior, he would be bursting with pride, no doubt.

.....

Linley could guess as to how much this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', would be worth. He also knew very well that storing such an enormous sculpture in Wushan township would not be safe. This was why he asked Yale to help him safeguard this sculpture.

To the enormous Dawson Conglomerate, this was nothing but a trifle.

After leaving the hotel, Linley and his bros were walking on the Shady Grove Street.

"Boss Yale, Second Bro, Fourth Bro. There's something that I must inform you about." Linley spoke after a period of silence.

Seeing how serious Linley looked, Yale, George, and Reynolds all focused their attention on him.

"Within these next few days, I intend to apply for graduation." With difficulty, Linley forced out these words.

Graduating meant leaving the Ernst Institute and leaving his three bros behind. Linley had entered the Ernst Institute when he was nine years old. He was now seventeen. He had spent eight years here. Friends made during these innocent years, without any consideration of gain or ulterior motives, would always be true, genuine friends.

Linley couldn't bear to part from his bros.

But in life, one must have some accomplishments. Upon graduating, he would have the chance to begin to gain titles, writs of nobility, a fiefdom, and perhaps an army. By then, he would be able to advance himself in leaps and bounds.

"Graduate?"

Yale, George, and Reynolds were all stunned. Yale was the first to recover. "Third Bro, why are you in such a hurry to graduate? What's the big deal about graduating from the Ernst Institute early anyhow? Isn't it great, we four bros being together here? And the Ernst Institute is far more peaceful than the outside world."

George and Reynolds also hurriedly tried to dissuade Linley.

Linley shook his head. "Nah. We can't always be hiding within the walls of the Ernst Institute and not interact with the outside world."

“Third Bro, right now, you are only a magus of the sixth rank. Although a magus of the sixth rank is considered an expert in the outside world, there’s many people who are stronger than you. How about...you wait until you reach the seventh rank, and then you graduate.” George suggested.

Based on what George knew, there were two major hurdles for a magus to overcome in his training. The biggest hurdle, of course, was crossing from the ninth rank to the Saint-level. But the second biggest hurdle was from the sixth rank to the seventh rank.

From the ninth rank to the Saint-level, even if one had sufficient spiritual energy and had a powerful reserve of mageforce, one could still spend countless years without being able to break through that last hurdle. It was something which required luck and opportunity, a stroke of luck which allowed someone to suddenly comprehend the way.

And from the sixth to the seventh ranks, even geniuses would normally need ten or so years.

“I am already a magus of the seventh rank.” Linley told them directly.

“A magus of the seventh rank?”

The three bros of Linley stared at him, seemingly thunderstruck. Even a genius such as Dixie only became a magus of the sixth rank upon turning sixteen. If he worked extremely hard, perhaps when he was around thirty years of age, he would reach the seventh rank.

But Linley...

Linley was only seventeen years old!

"Third Bro, did you just say that you've reached the seventh rank?" Yale couldn't believe it at all.

"Third Bro, you better not be tricking us." George was also in disbelief.

Reynolds was silent. He only stared at Linley, not saying a word.

"Squeak squeak!" Bebe, on Linley's shoulders, began to squeak excitedly towards Linley's three bros while baring his fangs. Linley could hear Bebe's voice in his head. "Boss, these three punks think you're lying! Boss, use a spell of the seventh rank on'm, show'm!"

Linley glanced at Bebe. "Bebe, enough."

A 'wronged' look on his face, Bebe glanced at Linley then fell silent.

"Bebe's performing skills are pretty good, actually." Linley secretly laughed, and then he looked at his three close friends. "Boss Yale. You three don't believe me. When I go tomorrow to apply for graduation, you'll see."

Yale, George, and Reynolds all knew what sort of person Linley was. Linley wasn't the type of guy to lie.

"Third Bro, you really accomplished it?"

Linley nodded slightly. "How about, I show you the Soaring Technique." Linley began to mumble the words to a magical incantation, while Yale and the others quietly watched. After a while, wind-type elemental essence began swirling around his body, lifting Linley into the air.

Linley rose very slowly, hovering perhaps only twenty centimeters above the air. Someone looking from far away wouldn't be able to tell that he was in mid-air at all.

"This is the Floating Technique." Reynolds said.

The Floating Technique only allowed one to rise up and down.

"Watch closely." Linley suddenly shot up into the air at an incline. Upon reaching the height of several tens of meters, he suddenly dropped down at high speed again. But once he reached the height of 20 centimeters, he once more came to a halt, maintaining a hovering height.

After maintaining this state for a few moments, Linley landed.

"The Soaring Technique?" Yale and the others were truly astonished.

Although this demonstration of Linley's was seemingly simple, it also showed one thing very clearly. Being able to rise at an incline was definitely something only the Soaring Technique would allow.

"Hey, Linley! Long time no see! Didn't imagine that I'd find you here, showing off your jumping skills." From far away, a young man laughed as he walked over. From far away, Linley's movement did indeed seem like he was jumping in the air.

To a very powerful warrior, jumping several dozen meters was not too difficult.

And a large majority of the people at the Ernst Institute knew that this genius, Linley, was not only a magus, he was also a mighty warrior. There had been people who had seen him easily carry a thousand-pound boulder inside his dormitory.

Linley, Yale, and others exchanged pleasantries with the fellow, as he was a neighbor living next door to them.

"Third Bro, you've really become a magus of the seventh rank. This can't...can't be possible? But just now, I..." George was the first one to say excitedly after the neighbor left.

"A seventeen year old magus of the seventh rank. My heavens. Has there ever been such a genius in the entire history of the Yulan continent?" Reynolds was getting excited as well.

Looking at Linley, Yale's eyes were shining. "Even I am starting to look forward to Third Bro's graduation ceremony. I want to see the looks on the faces of those test givers..."

....

The next morning. On the empty magical ability examination fields of the Ernst Institute, thirty instructors were standing in a line. In truth, four magus instructors were enough for a graduation test, but most instructors at the Ernst Institute had a lot of free time. Upon hearing that Linley was going to apply for graduation, they all came over to watch the fun.

After all, generally speaking, most students would only apply for graduation after being confirmed as a magus of the sixth rank. After spending some time at the sixth rank, only then would they apply for graduation. In a situation like that, there was no need for an actual graduation examination. Thus, a graduation examination was quite a rare event.

Thirty instructors, plus three students – Yale, George, and Reynolds.

Amidst the thirty or so instructors, there was even Vice Chancellor Deland [De'lan'te], who came here out of interest. As Deland had put it, "If one of the two greatest geniuses of our Institute is applying for graduation, of course I must be here to witness it."

"Linley, utilize the earth-style spell, 'Earth Spear Array'. Based on the size and speed of the earthen spears, we will be able to assess your level." One of the test-givers spoke.

If his spell power had reached the sixth rank, then naturally he would be able to graduate.

Linley slightly shook his head.

All of the onlookers couldn't help but feel suspicious. Vice Chancellor Deland spoke out. "Linley, aren't you applying to graduate? What is going on?"

"I want to use wind-style magic." Linley said with a smile.

Vice Chancellor Deland and the onlookers all laughed. They knew that Linley was a dual-element magus of wind and earth. But the test of magical strength was primarily a test of spiritual energy. It made no difference which element was tested; the underlying spiritual energy wouldn't change.

"Go ahead." Vice Chancellor Deland and the thirty odd instructors all grinned at Linley.

Linley immediately began to mutter the words to the seventh-ranked wind-style spell, 'Soaring Technique'. After a while, a gust of wind began to swirl around Linley's body. Linley's body soared into the air, and then he began to agilely glide about in the air, sometimes turning, sometimes diving, sometimes flying straight at high speeds.

"So...Soaring Technique?!"

The thirty odd magus instructors were all shocked. They all knew what was implied by the usage of the Soaring Technique.

"A seventeen year old, dual-element magus of the seventh rank. This..."

Vice Chancellor Deland immediately understood that the quiet Ernst Institute would perhaps no longer be quiet for a long, long time.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 7, Second in History

A dual-element magus of the seventh rank, compared to the Yulan continent as a whole, could only be considered someone who had just stepped into the field of the powerful figures.

But if you added the words 'seventeen year old' in front of the words 'dual-element magus of the seventh rank', the effect was totally different. The Radiant Church probably wouldn't care too much about a dual-element magus of the seventh rank; after all, there were plenty of powerful figures in the Yulan continent.

However...

A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank? Leaving the Radiant Church aside for now, perhaps each and every major power on the Yulan continent would be jealous to possess this.

"Genius. Genius!" Vice Chancellor Deland, a magus of the eighth rank, was extremely excited.

All of the watching magus instructors were in shock as well. All of them understood exactly what a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank represented. This was a miracle! At the very least, it was the Ernst Institute's miracle!

"Heh heh." Yale, George, and Reynolds all started to snicker.

They had all been anticipating the expressions on the faces of these magi. And it was as priceless as they had hoped.

In terms of power, Vice Chancellor Deland couldn't even rank amongst the top three, here at the Ernst Institute, but he had significant amounts of experience. He quickly was able to tamp down his excitement, and was the first to walk to Linley's side. "Linley, do you know what being a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank represents?"

"Heh, does he have to ask?" At this time, Doebling Cowart flew out of the ring, delightedly stroking his long, white beard. "How could the pupil of I, Doebling Cowart, not be outstanding?"

All of the teachers currently present were quite far from the Saint-level. Naturally, none of them were able to detect the presence of Doebling Cowart's spirit.

"Seventeen years..." Deland sighed with praise. "In the entire history of the Ernst Institute, based on age, amongst all of the students to attain the seventh rank, you, Linley, are the youngest. The previous record holder, a genius who attained the seventh rank at age 19, went on to become a Saint-level Grand Magus."

A silver-haired elder next to him spoke out. "Let's not discuss the Ernst Institute for now. If we look at the Yulan continent as a whole, and look at the records of the continent as a whole, you are the second-youngest genius in all of recorded history to reach the seventh rank."

The Yulan continent as a whole had been around for countless years, and also covered a huge amount of territory. There was no way for the Ernst Institute to match it in terms of records.

“The second in history?” Linley was rather surprised as well.

How many countless geniuses had the Yulan continent produced, over these years? For himself to be able to be the second youngest in history was a terrifying accomplishment.

“The youngest magus in the entire history of the Yulan continent to reach the seventh rank was a Saint-level Grand Magus who lived over 8000 years ago. He became a magus of the seventh rank when he was 16 years old. The previous second youngest, who has just become the third youngest, became a magus of the seventh rank when he turned 18. In the end, he topped out at the ninth rank. This was because afterwards, he suffered a huge setback, and his personality changed. We can put it like this...aside from you, of those top ten young geniuses who reached the seventh rank earliest, six of them became Saint-level Grand Magi, while the other four became arch magi of the ninth rank.”

Generally speaking, a magus of the seventh rank was given the title of ‘Senior Magus’.

A magus of the eighth rank would be respectfully titled ‘Master Magus’.

A magus of the ninth rank would be honored with the title of ‘Arch Magus’.

And a Saint-level magus could be venerated as a ‘Grand Magus’.

“Put another way...based on your talent, becoming a magus of the ninth rank is going to be virtually no problem at all. All you need is time. But if you continue to strive hard, you have the great potential to become a Saint-level Grand Magus. After all, you are the second youngest magus of the seventh rank in all of history.” That silver-haired elder looked at Linley solemnly.

Linley had some degree of eagerness towards eventually becoming a Saint-level magus, but that eagerness wasn't too excessive.

This was because Linley knew very well that it was even harder for a magus to advance in power than it was for a warrior.

True, warriors and magi both needed spiritual energy. But they had different requirements as to how much spiritual energy was needed.

Magi didn't train their bodies, focusing exclusively on spiritual energy. The vast majority of their time was spent building up their spiritual energy, because spiritual energy impacted their ability to gather mageforce, as well as to direct and control elemental essences. A mighty magus also needed a terrifying amount of spiritual energy.

But warriors were different.

To a warrior, the most important thing was still their body. Spiritual energy and battle-qi were both secondary. Only once they had a powerful body would they be able to contain lots of battle-qi. Spiritual energy was only used to more finely control the usage of that battle-qi.

If you compared a magus of the seventh rank and a warrior of the seventh rank, the different in spiritual energy could be as much as ten times more for the magus.

“Even if in the future, I reach the level of Saint-level Grand Magus, I surely would have taken a tremendous amount of time. By contrast, based on my inherent talent as a Dragonblood Warrior, I will reach the Saint-level at a much faster pace.” Linley knew very well his clan’s history. Dragonblood Warriors usually only needed a few scant decades to reach the Saint-level of power.

What’s more...

A Dragonblood Warrior who had reached the Saint-level in power was extremely formidable. Even amongst Saint-level combatants, a Dragonblood Warrior would be considered an ultimate-tier combatant.

“Linley, you are the most successful student in the entire history of our Institute. For these next few days, we ask that you please remain here at the Institute. We will invite some the absolute best painters and sculptors to come and paint paintings and carve sculptures of you, which we will keep in the Institute as mementos.” Vice Chancellor Deland immediately said.

As the second youngest magus to reach the seventh rank in the entire history of the Yulan continent, Linley naturally was the pride of the entire Ernst Institute.

“A painting?” Linley was stunned.

He realized that in front of these painters and sculptors, he would have to stand still for a very long period of time. As he realized this, Linley couldn't help but think to himself, becoming the second youngest magus to reach the seventh rank in the entire history of the Yulan continent was perhaps not as wonderful as it sounded.

.....

The number one genius in the history of the Ernst Institute, and the number two genius in the history of the Yulan continent. A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. This astonishing news quickly spread across the entire Ernst Institute.

"A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank? How is that possible?"

"There's no way this news is fake. So many of the Institute's teachers were present at that time, and Vice Chancellor Deland has even invited painters to come and paint pictures of Linley, with the intention of forever enshrining his image within our Institute."

"My heavens, a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. Based on this speed, he should reach the eighth rank in ten years, and the ninth rank in twenty. He'll be ninth-ranked Arch Magus in his forties. Most likely, within a century, he will become a Saint-level Grand Magus."

"I just flipped through some of the books in the library. Aside from Linley, of the top ten geniuses in history, six became Saint-level Grand Magi, while the other four all became Arch Magi of the ninth rank. Linley is way too incredible.”

.....

The entire Ernst Institute was shaken upside down by this news. If a student was perhaps just slightly better than his peers, perhaps he would be viewed with jealousy. But once a student’s achievements reached a level as high as this, becoming the second youngest magus to reach the seventh rank in the entire history of the Yulan continent, they would only be filled with respect and veneration.

In their eyes, Linley’s future prospects were limitless. There was no way for them to compare with him.

In the past, there were still some people who claimed that Dixie was the number one genius of the Institute. Now, no one said such a thing.

Without question, the number one genius of the Ernst Institute was Linley. And it wasn’t just now; Linley was the number one genius of the Ernst Institute in all of its five-thousand-year-long history. Dixie was currently just a magus of the sixth rank. Who knew how long it would take before he could reach the seventh rank?

“Linley, a magus of the seventh rank?” Having just completed his meditative training, Dixie fell silent upon hearing this news from his sister Delia.

After having ‘surpassed’ Linley when he became a magus of the sixth rank, Dixie had felt some sense of satisfaction. But this new bit of news seemed to push him into a deep abyss. Linley's speed of improvement was simply too astonishing. Even when he chased after Linley with all his might, it seemed like he was still being thrown farther and farther behind by Linley.

"Big brother." Delia said in a soft voice. She was a bit concerned about her big brother.

Delia knew all too well that ever since he was young, her big brother had been an extremely proud person. He was very cold to others, and also extremely strict with himself. Her big brother never submitted to anyone, but ever since Linley had rocketed up from the fourth rank to the fifth rank, her big brother had felt threatened.

Her big brother had worked extremely hard, and in the previous year had managed to cross the threshold of the sixth rank.

But Linley actually...

"Don't worry. I'm fine." Dixie slowly shook his head. "Delia, I suddenly feel as though there's not that much point in remaining here at the Institute. I also plan to apply for graduation. In the upcoming days, I'll return to the Empire and return to the clan."

Delia was startled.

.....

Within a private area inside the Huadeli Hotel, there were four bedrooms and two living rooms. It was quite large. Linley and his three bros were currently living here.

Ever since the news that Linley had become a magus of the seventh rank had spread out, dorm 1987 hadn't had a single peaceful day. Huge amounts of people came to pay their respects to Linley, forcing Linley to hide here, within the Huadeli Hotel. Due to the deep background and connections possessed by the Huadeli Hotel, few people dared to trespass here.

"Third Bro, when you are quiet, you are very low-key, but when you finally make your move, by the heavens do you cause a ruckus!" Yale sighed.

Linley chuckled.

Actually, this was a decision which he had arrived at after serious discussions with Doehring Cowart. After all, currently, the Baruch clan was still weak. If they wanted to strengthen it rapidly, the best way to do so was to quickly spread the word that he already possessed the might of a magus of the seventh rank."

A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank! This would cause every organization in the continent to send people inviting him to join them. Naturally, they would offer exceptional conditions as well.

And thus, Linley would do better and better in the future.

“Third Bro, I’m no longer going to hide this information from you. The Dawson Conglomerate, one of the three great trading unions in the Yulan continent, belongs to my clan. Are you interested in joining the Dawson Conglomerate?” Yale looked at Linley. In all honesty, Yale was very much hoping that Linley would become a member of the Dawson Conglomerate.

The number two genius in the entire history of the Yulan continent. If a genius like this entered the Dawson Conglomerate, his future status would unquestionably be very high. Naturally, this would also be hugely beneficial to Yale’s status within his clan.

“The Dawson Conglomerate?!” Reynolds let out a startled yelp. “Wow, Boss Yale, I always knew you were a member of the Dawson clan, but there are way too many clans with the name ‘Dawson’. But the Dawson clan you belong to is actually the Dawson clan behind the Dawson Conglomerate? The Dawson Conglomerate! My goodness, you are rich!”

George also looked at Yale.

“Boss Yale, this...” Linley hesitated.

“Don’t worry. You are my bro, first and foremost. I won’t force you.” Yale laughed. “I can’t guarantee other things, but what I can guarantee is that if you do decide to join the Dawson Conglomerate, then money will not be an issue. At the very least, we can provide you with a hundred million gold coins.”

“A hundred million gold coins?!” Linley, George, and Reynolds were all flabbergasted.

A hundred million gold coins. What a terrifyingly large sum that was.

Perhaps all of the combined assets of the richest clan in Fenlai City wouldn't add up to a hundred million gold coins.

"Linley, the clan of this bro of yours is really too wealthy. A hundred million gold coins, damn..." Even Doehring Cowart was stunned.

Even a master sculptor's most famous, legacy-making sculpture would only be worth a million gold coins at most. This was already a terrifying sum of money, and how many master sculptors were there?

"Third Bro, I can honestly tell you that aside from the other two trading unions, in the entire Yulan continent, not even the Four Great Empires or the two major alliances would be able to produce such a vast amount of money at once. As for those kingdoms...hmph." Yale was very certain of his words.

The Four Great Empires and the two major alliances both had their own Saint-level combatants. But the Four Great Empires and the two major alliances had to pay the upkeep for their huge armies as well as provide for the entire country. Although they were wealthy, asking them to produce a hundred million gold coins all at once would be very difficult for them. At the very least, it would require lengthy, complicated internal deliberations.

For someone who wasn't (yet) a Saint-level combatant? They wouldn't be willing to do it.

Only the three major trading unions, with their terrifying amount of wealth, would. Although they possessed a staggering amount of money, in terms of military power, although they were strong, they were much weaker than the Four Great Empires and the two major alliances. Thus, they all urgently needed experts to join their ranks.

"Knock!" "Knock!" "Knock!"

Suddenly, the sound of their door being knocked on could be heard.

Yale frowned and walked over to the door. Opening it, he said, "I thought I gave instructions for us not to be disturbed?"

The manager of the Huadeli Hotel said awkwardly, "Young master Yale, a Cardinal of the Radiant Church, along with three clerics and a troop of Knights of the Radiant Temple, have arrived outside the hotel."

Yale started.

One of the Cardinals, whose position and authority in the entire Radiant Church was second only to the Holy Emperor himself? The rank of each and every Cardinal was much higher than that of one of the kings of a kingdom. If a Cardinal had personally come, leading a troop of people, there was no way that he, a young master of the Dawson Conglomerate, could possibly block the way.

"Looks like Third Bro has quite a powerful appeal!"

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 8, The Upper Classes of the Yulan Continent

Within the formal reception area for the Huadeli Hotel, two seventh-ranked Knights of the Radiant Temple were standing on each side of the main hallway, while Linley and the other three entered the formal reception area from another entrance. Their footsteps on the smooth marble floor, so polished that it could serve as a mirror, produced clear, ringing sounds.

When Linley, Yale, and the others stepped into the reception area, the seven people already inside the reception area turned to look at them.

“A Cardinal, three Vicars, and three Knights of the Radiant Temple.” Linley immediately could tell each person’s status, and could also immediately sense that all seven of these people were extremely powerful. Based on what Linley already knew....

Within the Radiant Church, the position of the Cardinals was second only to the Holy Emperor himself. In order to become a Cardinal, one needed to not only have sufficient fame, but also have the power of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

“An Arch Magus of the ninth rank?” Linley couldn’t help but carefully scrutinize this Cardinal in front of him.

This Cardinal appeared to be a middle-aged man, with a head full of curly silver hair. His nose was high and sharp, while a hint of a smile played about his lips. He seemed quite amiable.

“Hello, Linley. And you, young Yale.” The Cardinal smiled as he rose to his feet. “Let me make some brief introductions. These three Vicars are my assistants, while these three Knights of the Radiant Temple belong to the ‘Glory’ division. They are, respectively, Commander Marcus [Ma’ku’si] and his two Deputy Commanders. As for myself...you can just go ahead and call me Guillermo [Ji’er’mo].”

Cardinal Guillermo.

Linley had previously heard that the Holy Union had a total of eight ace regiments of knights. One of them was the ‘Glory’ division. Each of these Eight Ace Regiments was extremely powerful and possessed astounding offensive ability.

“Lord Guillermo, Lord Marcus. All the other lords present. Might I ask why you have come?” Linley said with humility, while at the same time, Linley began to check out Marcus.

Marcus was an extremely powerful-looking bald man. Sitting there, the impression he gave was that of a mountain at rest, immovable by any outside force. In this seven-man delegation from the Radiant Church, Marcus and Guillermo held the highest ranks. Marcus, in his capacity as the Commander of one of the Eight Ace Regiments, most likely was not any weaker than Guillermo, and his personal status was roughly on the same level as well.

Marcus’ lips cracked open, and his deep, weighty voice rang out. “I heard Guillermo say that our Holy Union has produced an incredible genius. A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. I was very much curious what this genius looked like. Today, now that I've had a chance to see for myself...haha...I like what I see."

Based on Marcus' experience, at a glance, he naturally could tell that Linley was a warrior as well.

"Kid, what rank are you as a warrior?" Marcus asked directly.

Guillermo just sat there 'obediently', seemingly not at all displeased by Marcus' interruption.

Linley modestly said, "This year, I just reached the sixth rank as a warrior."

"Oh." Marcus' eyes lit up. "A seventeen year old warrior of the sixth rank. That's already extremely impressive. I, Marcus, rarely am in awe of anyone, but I must admit that you definitely are a genius. Not only have you become an incredibly talented magus, you are an excellent warrior as well."

Linley smiled very humbly.

The two Knights seated to each side of Marcus also had looks of surprise on their faces.

Guillermo chuckled. "Enough, Marcus. Yes, it is quite impressive that Linley is a warrior of the sixth rank at age seventeen, but let's be honest, we can find one or two of those in virtually every single warrior academy. His true worth still lies in his talent as a magus."

The training difficulty for a warrior was somewhat lower than that of a magus to begin with.

For those who trained hard and worked out since they were young, and (if they came from good families) trained in battle-qi since youth, becoming a warrior of the sixth rank at age seventeen wasn't too difficult.

"Linley, as a member of our Holy Union who possesses such astounding abilities, you make me, a Cardinal of the Radiant Temple, feel extremely proud. I want to ask you, have you given any consideration to joining the Holy Union? I think, based on your natural ability, if you join us, I can guarantee that you will immediately receive the rank of Vicar of the Radiant Temple. In the future, becoming a Cardinal should not be a problem." Guillermo put his offer directly on the table.

The number two super-genius in all of history. There should be a better than 90% chance that Linley would end up becoming a Saint-level Grand Magus. The 10% chance only existed because it was possible that due to suffering some sort of mental setback, Linley would decide to stop improving.

A potential Saint-level combatant. Even if Linley didn't train very hard, becoming an Arch Magus of the ninth rank should be guaranteed. A talent like this had to be absorbed.

"Lord Guillermo, to me, this news is a little too sudden." A modest, shy smile had appeared on Linley's face. "I'm only seventeen years old this year. I haven't given a lot of thought to these affairs. A high rank and great power also symbolize heavy responsibilities which I'm currently afraid to take on. Could I...wait a few years?"

Linley was declining.

Guillermo frowned.

The number two genius in the entire history of the Yulan continent, a person who most likely would be a Saint-level combatant in the future. Even if they couldn't make use of him, they wouldn't allow enemies to make use of him either.

"Linley, I know that you are young, but you are a member of the Holy Union, and you are a genius. As a genius, you should get used to and accept the fact that your dazzling brilliance will bring you burdens, rather than try and decline them." Guillermo reproved him kindly.

"In addition, you can become a Vicar under my direct authority. I can guarantee that you will have the freedom to do whatever you please. As long as you do not act against the interests of the Radiant Temple, I definitely will not interfere with your freedom of action. Is this acceptable to you?"

"In addition, you can also join any single kingdom belonging to the Holy Union, and we can even guarantee that you will receive a Dukedom." Guillermo, it must be said, was acting in a very sincere manner.

Linley was silent for a while.

Guillermo's three assistant Vicars were beginning to frown, but Guillermo continued to smile, watching Linley with a gaze filled with hope.

This gaze alone made it very hard to refuse him.

Next to Linley, Yale, Reynolds, and George were all silent. At a point in time like this, even Yale didn't dare to make a noise. This was a Cardinal of the Radiant Church!

In the pyramid-like hierarchy of the Holy Union, the Cardinals stood at the very apex. Their power exceeded that of any king, and even Yale's father wasn't comparable to them. How would he, a young master of a trading union, dare to butt in?

Linley was thinking nonstop, while Doebling Cowart had begun advising Linley as soon as they had entered this room.

The Four Great Empires and the two major alliances were constantly struggling for advantage in very fierce, cruel ways. 'If I cannot have it, I cannot allow my enemies to have it either.' This was a fairly common point of view.

"Lord Guillermo." Linley finally spoke.

Guillermo's eyes lit up. Smiling, he said to Linley, "You've decided?"

Linley nodded. "Lord Guillermo, I've grown up in the Kingdom of Fenlai since I was a child, so naturally, I am a member of the Holy Union. I can guarantee that as long as the Holy Union doesn't turn its back on me, I definitely will not betray the Holy Union either. I definitely will not join any foreign power, no matter who they are."

"What do you mean to say?" Guillermo looked questioningly at Linley.

Linley continued, "What I mean to say is, right now, I don't want to make a decision in a hurry. Please allow me to discuss this matter with my father, and then I'll tell you my choice. What I can guarantee is...I definitely will not join with the Four Great Empires, or the Dark Alliance."

Smiling, Guillermo nodded slightly. "Right. Such an important decision must be discussed with your father. I'll wait for your reply."

As he spoke, Guillermo rose to his feet. The three Vicars by his side, as well as Marcus and his two Deputy Commanders, also stood up. "Since we've come to an agreement, then I won't disturb you any further. The Radiant Temple's sincerity is true and genuine, and so is our patience. I only hope that you, Linley, won't end up making me wait ten or twenty years for your decision. Haha..." As he spoke, Guillermo began to laugh.

Linley and the other three stood up as well, watching Guillermo and the others leave.

Only after the delegation from the Radiant Temple had departed did Linley and his bros finally calm down.

"Whew. I was scared to death just now. I didn't even dare to breathe out loud." Reynolds let out a long sigh.

George nodded as well. "Although that Cardinal behaved in a very friendly fashion towards us, I still felt that my heart couldn't settle down."

Yale began to laugh. "Naturally. After all, he is a Cardinal, one of the most powerful people in the entire Holy Union. Hey, Third Bro, what are you thinking? The Radiant Church isn't easy to fend off. After all, we are in the territory of the Holy Union and are under their control."

"No rush, no rush." Linley laughed. "When you see the power of others, you also need to see your own strengths. Although I can't compare to them, as long as I don't throw in with those five other groups, the Radiant Church won't move against me. After all, I did say I was going to discuss it with my father. As long as I don't go meet with my father right away, then I can drag this out a while longer, right?"

As he spoke, he looked at Yale. "Yale, I want to ask a favor of you."

"Speak." Yale looked at Linley.

Linley said in a low voice, "This is somewhat humiliating to say. One of the ancestral heirlooms of the Baruch clan, the weapon of our very first clan leader, the warblade 'Slaughterer', should be in the hands of one of the larger noble clans of the Kingdom of Fenlai. I hope that you can help me investigate who is currently in possession of the warblade 'Slaughterer'."

"An ancestral heirloom? This absolutely must be found. Third Bro, do you want me to directly acquire it for you?" Yale immediately said.

Linley laughed. "Boss Yale, if you can help me locate it, that would be more than enough. What's more, right now, money is not a problem for me." By nature, Linley hated owing others.

.....

Two days later. Early morning.

Part of Linley's room was covered with a layer of earth-colored light. This earth-colored light did not cover a very large area, only perhaps a circle with circumference of two or three meters. Anyone who stepped into that area would sense a tremendous gravitational force.

Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field!

Having reached the seventh rank as a magus, the power of Linley's Supergravity Field was now much stronger than before. The strength of the local gravity field within the circle was four times normal gravity. Under four times the normal gravity, even the blood vessels in one's body would suffer severe damage, to say nothing of the rest of the body.

Linley wasn't using any earth magic to counteract the force of this gravity field. Instead, he was using his body's physical strength alone to resist that terrifying gravity. Right now, his entire body was upside down, and he was holding himself up with his fingers alone, constantly exercising his finger strength and wrist strength.

"...725. 726."

"Drip. Drip." Beads of sweat were constantly rolling down from Linley's temples, falling onto the ground.

The door to the room suddenly banged open, and Yale excitedly charged into the room. "Hey, Third Bro, I have news regarding the search for the 'Slaughterer' that you entrusted me with." As he spoke, Yale accidentally entered the area of the Supergravity Field.

"Yale!" Slapping the floor with his palms, Linley immediately flipped himself upright and immediately pulled Yale out of the Supergravity Field.

"Huff...puff..." Yale was breathing heavily. Staring at Linley in surprise, he said, "Third Bro, you created a Supergravity Field within your bedroom? I got caught by it. That feeling just now was absolutely terrible. It felt like my heart was about to stop."

Fortunately, the time he had spent within the field was miniscule, as otherwise, Yale's body would indeed have suffered negative consequences.

"Right, Boss Yale, didn't you just say something about the 'Slaughterer'?" Linley's attention was totally fixated on that mention of his ancestral heirloom. For his father's entire life, his father's greatest desire was the recovery of this ancestral heirloom which had been passed down from five thousand years ago.

Yale nodded slightly. "Oh. I just received word that your clan's warblade, 'Slaughterer', is in the hands of a large clan within Fenlai City itself. That clan is called....uh..." Yale couldn't help but frown, as he momentarily couldn't recall the name of the clan.

"Hey, Third Bro, Boss Yale, that Director Maia came in person again."
Reynolds voice called out from beyond the doorway.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 9, Abduction

Within the living room.

“My deepest apologies, Director Maia,” Linley said humbly, “But for now, I really do not wish to put this sculpture on auction, nor do I wish to display it. But I can guarantee that if in the future I do desire to auction it off, or to put it on exhibit, I will beseech the Proulx Gallery to assist me.”

Leaning on his cane, Director Maia smiled at Linley. “Oh, that’s fine. This time, asking you to consider displaying your sculpture in our gallery was only a secondary purpose. My primary purpose was to come see this sculpting genius, the likes of whom we might see once in a trillion years.”

Just at this time, the manager of the hotel came over.

This manager humbly smiled towards Director Maia, then turned to Linley and Yale. “Young master Yale, young master Linley, representatives from the Rhine Empire are outside the hotel. They wish to meet with young master Linley.”

“Haha.” Laughing, Director Maia stood up. “Linley, seems like you’re quite busy nowadays. Then I won’t disturb you for now. I’ll take my leave.”

As he spoke, Director Maia led his attendants out of the hotel.

Linley looked at the hotel manager. “Please help me block them. Right now, I do not wish to meet with representatives of the Four Great Empires or the Dark Alliance.” Linley very bluntly refused to meet with any of the people who had come to see him. Linley knew very well that if he were to meet with representatives of the Four Great Empires or the Dark Alliance, that would cause great dissatisfaction with the Radiant Church.

After all, as soon as he met with them, even if he refused their offer in the end, the Radiant Church would still be suspicious of him, as they would have had no one present during the meeting.

And the Radiant Church had tremendous power throughout the Yulan continent. It was no weaker than any of the Four Great Empires. There was no need for Linley to join with the Four Great Empires or the Dark Alliance.

.....

Three days later. Within a carriage headed towards Fenlai City were Linley and Yale, while Reynolds and George remained at the Institute.

“Third Bro. You are wise indeed. These past two or three days, representatives from the Dark Alliance and the Four Great Empires constantly tried to meet with you.” Yale laughed. The people who had come to meet with Linley were all people with some authority and influence within their respective organizations, albeit they were based in the Holy Union.

None of those people, however, were major figures. After all, the news of a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank would take a fairly long period of time before making its way to the Four Great Empires and the Dark Alliance. This was because the distance was simply too far.

All of those people who attempted to meet with Linley had made the decision to contact him on their own authority.

Unfortunately, all of them were stopped at the door by Linley's directive.

"Yale, that family which collected the ancestral heirloom of my clan, that "Lucas" [Lu'ka'si] clan...if I try to get back the 'Slaughterer' from them, is it really going to be that difficult?" Linley was heading off to Fenlai City for the express purpose of taking care of this affair.

Yale nodded. "Right. At first, I so eager to share the news that I didn't look any deeper into this clan. But now, it appears this Lucas clan is quite extraordinary."

Linley nodded slightly.

A clan which had purchased his own clan's ancestral heirloom hundreds of years ago clearly was not a recent established, minor clan.

"The Lucas clan is also a fairly ancient clan, with about a thousand years of history. In the entire Kingdom of Fenlai, their wealth can only be considered middling, but in terms of influence amongst the nobility, they are quite powerful. Most importantly of all...the clan leader of the Lucas clan is an extremely obstinate old man, and a serious hoarder. That ancestral heirloom of your clan was the personal weapon of the very first Dragonblood Warrior. Although it's been over a thousand years since a Dragonblood Warrior has appeared, this weapon is still something quite special. And what's more, that weapon of your clan is worth at least a few hundred thousand gold coins."

"But even if you had the money, based on the obstinate nature of the clan leader of the Lucas clan, you most likely will still find it hard to acquire it."

Yale sighed as he spoke.

Some people couldn't be moved by money alone.

"Linley, if my Second Uncle lends a hand and utilizes the connections that our Dawson Conglomerate has, giving that old geezer some pressure, then the level of difficulty would drop significantly." Yale suggested.

Linley knew that Yale spoke out of good intentions, but Linley truly did not wish for anyone else to assist in this matter.

"Let me try first. If I absolutely cannot convince him, then I'll ask you, Boss Yale, to help out." Linley laughed.

Suddenly, Linley felt a shudder next to him. And then, Bebe's tiny form popped out from the side, staring sleepily at Linley and Yale. At the same time, Bebe mentally said to Linley, "Boss, this carriage is so slow. I've slept for a good while now, but we still aren't at Fenlai City yet."

Hugging Bebe, Linley said, "Alright, that's enough. After a while, we'll be there."

Suddenly....

"Aaaah!" A miserable scream. The carriage came to a sudden halt.

Seated with the carriage, Linley and Yale both felt the carriage suddenly shake. The look on Yale's face changed. "Not good."

"We would like to invite young masters Linley and Yale to step out." A rather piercing voice emanated from outside.

Linley and Yale exchanged glances. For their opponent to be able to surround and stop them without them even knowing demonstrated that the opponent clearly was more powerful than them. Without any resistance, they stepped out of the carriage.

Right now, their two bodyguards of the seventh rank had both collapsed onto the ground, staining it with their blood. Even the carriage driver had collapsed. For a warrior of the seventh rank to be killed without even being able to react was a clear indication of their opponent's strength.

"Young masters Linley and Yale, we come without any ill intentions. We just want to invite Linley to come be our guest for a little while. As far as you, young master Yale, naturally we won't harm you." Not far away, three men were standing in greenish-black clothes. Their leader, a man covered in knife scars, was the one who had spoken.

Yale was furious at the deaths of his bodyguards of the seventh rank, but he didn't give vent to his rage. After all, he could tell how much stronger these opponents were.

The scarred man smiled towards Linley. "Linley, don't resist. My subordinates can easily capture you, let alone myself. Right now, the only thing you have to do is to obediently follow us. Are you willing? Or must we use force."

Linley glanced alongside at Yale. Linley really did not want to cause Yale any misfortune.

"Third Bro, don't go with them." Yale said frantically.

In his heart, Linley knew very well that these three combatants were either from the Dark Alliance or the Four Great Empires. Based on their strength, even if he and Bebe went all out to resist them, it most likely wouldn't be enough. What's more, the purpose of these people in seeking him out was to have him join them, so they probably wouldn't go so far as to harm him.

"Alright, I'll follow." Linley nodded.

The knife-scarred man couldn't help but grin. "That's great to hear. Young master Yale, we hope you'll forget all about what just happened here." As he spoke, the knife-scarred man glanced at the two next to him. Those two instantly scurried at high speed next to Linley.

"Let's go." The knife-scarred man instructed.

.....

Holding onto Bebe, Linley began heading southeast under the escort of those two men by his side.

"Boss, let's kill these two guys. I'm confident in my ability to kill the two surrounding you. But as to that knife-scarred guy, I'm not so sure." Bebe said mentally.

Linley knew that Bebe's senses were usually extremely accurate.

He, too, was able to extrapolate that these two people by his side were most likely warriors of the eighth rank. And that knife-scarred leader of theirs was most likely a warrior of the ninth rank. An organization capable of sending out a warrior of the ninth rank and two warriors of the eighth rank was no ordinary organization.

"Bebe, don't be rash." Linley held him back.

"Where on earth did all these experts start popping out from?" Linley felt helpless.

Doehring Cowart appeared by his side, grinning as he glanced at Linley. "Right now, your status is different from the past. Naturally, the experts you encounter will now also be at a higher level. I told you long ago that only upon attaining the seventh rank will you be considered to have entered the countless ranks of the strong. In each and every one of the Four Great Empires, there might only be a few Saint-level combatants, but there will be at least a few dozen combatants of the ninth rank.

Mobilizing one of them for the purpose of dealing with you is no big deal."

An Empire or one of the major alliances would have hundreds of millions of citizens.

For there to be a few dozen combatants of the ninth rank amongst hundreds of millions of people meant that for every ten million or so, there was one combatant of the ninth rank. In honesty, combatants of the ninth rank were still quite rare.

"Where are they heading to?" Linley stared questioningly at Doehring Cowart.

"If my guess is correct, these three should belong to the Dark Alliance. Most likely, they are trying to first enter the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and then change directions from within to go directly south, hurrying towards the border with the Dark Alliance." Doehring Cowart said quite confidently.

Linley thought for a while, then agreed.

The Four Great Empires and the Dark Alliance both had stationed some military units in each other's territory, but none in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. After all, to most magical beasts, the ordinary soldiers were nothing more than food.

To an ordinary warrior, the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was extremely vicious.

But to a warrior of the ninth rank and two warriors of the eighth rank? It was a very easy path to traverse. As long as the three of them didn't enter the central areas of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, there shouldn't be any danger.

.....

Where the battle had occurred just now, Yale remained, staring at the corpses of the three men. Letting out a long sigh, he began to head towards Fenlai City. But just as he left, a man dressed in black suddenly appeared. The man in black glanced in the direction where Linley had been taken, then immediately withdrew a vertical black flute from his clothes.

"Swiiiiish." A strange, piercing sound emanated from the flute.

This sound was extremely strange. If four people in four different locations were to hear it, the one standing in the direction of Fenlai City would hear it a thousand times more loudly than the one standing on the opposite side, away from Fenlai City.

This flute seemed to concentrate all sound in one direction, and it in fact didn't seem to rely on sound; rather, it relied on a unique vibratory mechanism.

....

Holding Bebe, Linley very obediently followed those three men. The knife-scarred man was very satisfied with Linley's cooperativeness.

But once they reached a location approximately three kilometers away from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the expression of the knife-scarred man changed.

"Huh." The knife-scarred man instantly retreated to Linley's side, and then icily stared at his surroundings. "Come out."

Instantly, six men in tight black clothes. The knife-scarred man didn't seem to care too much about these six men, as his gaze was fixed upon the distance, where an old man dressed in black and an old man dressed in burlap slowly were making their way over.

"Linley is a member of our Holy Union. You, a Judicator of the Dark Alliance, dare to seize a member of the Holy Union? Aren't you disrespecting the Radiant Church just a little too much?" That old man dressed in black said icily.

The knife-scarred man chuckled. "I didn't expect to draw your personal attention, Deputy Arbiter. Oh, and you've even invited an Ascetic to come as well. And several judicial Executors. Looks like you fellows really value this Linley very highly."

The knife-scarred man was very clear as to the power of his opponent's, but he didn't seem frightened at all.

"All I wanted to do was invite Linley to come have some fun with us in the Dark Alliance, but since all of you have come to prevent that, then forget it." The knife-scarred man looked at the black-robed elder. "Deputy Arbiter, I want you to agree to something. I'll spare Linley, and you spare my two subordinates. What do you say?"

The black-robed man knew very well that the knife-scarred man in front of him was a Judicator of the Dark Alliance, someone with tremendous power which would be extremely hard to kill by himself. But this time, he had also invited an Ascetic of the Radiant Temple to come along with him. To kill this opponent wouldn't be too hard.

But...Linley was in the opponent's hands.

"Fine. I guarantee by my own personal honor that you and your subordinates will be permitted to leave. But Linley must stay behind." The black-robed old man didn't really want to get into a major fight with these opponents right now either.

"Fine. We'll go."

The knife-scarred man immediately turned to leave, while at the same time saying warmly to Linley, "Linley, if you have some free time and the opportunity, you can come visit us at the Dark Alliance whenever you wish. Haha...our Dark Alliance will always welcome you."

After finishing these words, the knife-scarred man and his subordinates suddenly moved at high speed, transforming into three human-shaped blurs as they vanished.

Linley turned to look at his group of saviors. That leader, the black-robed elder, and the 'Ascetic' by his side were both exceedingly strong. Otherwise, that Judicator of the Dark Alliance wouldn't have fled without even fighting.

The black-robed elder seemed to emanate a chilling aura.

"Deputy Arbiter? After all these years, it seems like the Radiant Church hasn't changed its internal structure. This Deputy Arbiter should belong to the 'Ecclesiastical Tribunal'." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind. "Comparatively speaking, that 'Ascetic' fellow is more formidable."

Ascetic?

Linley couldn't help but turn his gaze towards the 'Ascetic'.

Wearing clothes made from rough hemp, that barefooted, long-haired old man emanated a simple, ancient aura. When this 'Ascetic' looked at Linley, Linley seemed to sense the warmth of the spring breeze.

"Truly powerful." Linley thought to himself.

Looking at Linley, a rare smile appeared on the face of the black-robed elder. "Linley, why don't you come back with us to the Holy Capital. When you reach the Holy Capital, those organizations will not dare to bother you.”

Fenlai City, the Holy Capital of the Holy Union. The Radiant Church was based in Fenlai City. Both in the open as well as in the shadows, it possessed tremendous latent power. Neither the Dark Alliance nor the Four Great Empires would dare to cause trouble in the Holy Capital.

....

East Fenlai City. Within a manor on Greenleaf Road, Linley and Yale were seated in the living room discussing the issue of the warblade ‘Slaughterer’.

“Third Bro, I’ve already sent some people to make inquiries. That clan leader of the Lucas clan is totally unwilling to sell the ‘Slaughterer’. Per his words, his clan doesn’t lack for money.” Yale frowned. “I think it might be better if you personally went and paid a visit. But of course, first he would have to be made aware of your status.”

The second greatest genius magus in the history of the Yulan continent, someone who had a high chance of becoming a future Saint-level Grand Magus, was someone whom perhaps even the clan leader of the Lucas clan, no matter how obdurate, would have to give some face to.

“Then tonight, I’ll pay a visit to this leader of the Lucas clan.” Linley viewed the warblade ‘Slaughterer’ as something which absolutely had to be claimed.

How could the ancestral treasure of the clan continue to remain outside the clan? What's more, recovering it was the long-standing desire of both his father and his ancestors.

The words which his father had said to him when Linley had first left his home and headed to the Ernst Institute still rang out in Linley's mind.

"Linley. Remember the centuries-long desire of generations of the Baruch clan. Remember the shame of the Baruch clan!"

"After you graduate, you will at least be a magus of the sixth rank. As long as you work hard, becoming a magus of the seventh rank won't be too hard. What's more, you are a dual-element magus! A dual-element magus of the seventh rank is definitely going to be a major figure in the Kingdom of Fenlai. In the future, you will definitely have the potential of recovering our ancestral heirloom. If you do not recover it, even in death, I will not forgive you."

.....

"Even in death, I will not forgive you." His father's words hammered at Linley's consciousness.

Linley did not dare to forget these words. As long as he had the ability to do so, he would recover the warblade 'Slaughterer', no matter the cost. This wasn't just for the sake of the clan. It was also for his father's sake.

"No matter what, I have to reclaim it." Linley's mind was set.

If soft persuasion didn't work, he would take harder measures.

But of course, it would be better if he could reclaim his ancestral heirloom openly and above-the-board. He would do his best to have the current owners hand it back.

"Boss. How about you just have me act instead and just take it back." Bebe suddenly piped up in Linley's mind.

Linley glanced at Bebe, napping on Linley's legs. He couldn't help but pat Bebe's little noggin. "Don't make trouble." Bebe couldn't help but wrinkle his nose. With a hmph, he laid back down on Linley's leg and went back to sleep.

At this moment, footsteps could be heard from outside. A blue-robed middle-aged man entered and bowed. "Young master Yale, a Minister of Fenlai Kingdom, Lord Calvin [Ka'li'wen], is outside. He wishes to meet with young master Linley."

"Calvin? Who's that?" Yale frowned.

Yale generally didn't bother with meeting an ordinary kingdom's Minister.

"Young master Yale, recently, haven't you been focused on the Lucas clan? This Calvin is a member of the Lucas clan as well." The blue-robed man chuckled. "The current leader of the Lucas clan is, in fact, his uncle."

Yale's eyes lit up. "Quick, let him in."

"Third Bro, it seems as though your chances of recovering your clan's ancestral heirloom just went up." Yale chuckled at Linley.

In his heart, Linley was feeling rather pleased as well.

Linley was looking towards the door as well. A short moment later, a golden-haired man stepped inside the room, smiling. Upon seeing Linley and Yale, he immediately bowed courteously. "Calvin pays his respects to young masters Linley and Yale."

"Calvin, why have you come to meet with my bro?" Yale asked bluntly.

Calvin didn't mind in the slightest. Smiling, he said, "The purpose of my visit was to serve as the representative of his Majesty. Young master Linley, have you given any consideration to serving as a court magus for the Kingdom of Fenlai? His Majesty would be also willing to enfeoff you with the title of Marquis and the territory to match."

Linley laughed.

He still remembered the conditions offered by that Cardinal of the Radiant Church; he could choose to serve in any kingdom of the Holy Union, and even receive a Dukedom. He didn't have to have any responsibilities, just to enjoy life.

"Calvin, I must say, when I was at the Ernst Institute, a Cardinal of the Radiant Church personally came to invite my bro to join the Radiant Church, and the conditions he offered were much higher as well!" Yale smirked.

Calvin chuckled and continued, "Conditions can always be negotiated. His Majesty only hopes that Linley can remain within our Kingdom of Fenlai."

After all, each of the six kingdoms in the Holy Union had different amounts of power. If the Kingdom of Fenlai acquired Linley's support, then in the future, Fenlai's status within the Holy Union would be further solidified.

After all...

The Radiant Church had the authority to depose any king within the Holy Union, or even exterminate an entire royal clan! The power of the Church far exceeded the power of the royals.

Thus, it was extremely important for a royal clan to have a powerful base of support.

"Calvin."

Linley finally spoke.

Calvin immediately bowed slightly, appearing to listen very carefully.

"You belong to the Lucas clan, correct?" Linley immediately went to the principal topic for him.

Calvin nodded. A trace of pride on his face, he said, "Correct. The clan leader is my uncle."

"I belong to the Baruch clan." Linley looked at Calvin. "An ancestral heirloom of my Baruch clan, known as the warblade, 'Slaughterer', has been lost to my clan for centuries now. Right now, I hope to recover this warblade, 'Slaughterer'. Based on what I know, my clan's ancestral heirloom is currently residing with your Lucas clan."

After saying these words, Linley no longer spoke.

Calvin couldn't help but frown.

"The warblade 'Slaughterer', the weapon of the original Dragonblood Warrior?" Calvin looked at Linley.

Calvin was silent for a while, then said, "Young master Linley, honestly speaking, the person with the most authority in the clan is my uncle, but my uncle is getting on in his years. He isn't responsible for most of the clan's affairs. His biggest hobby is being a collector. This warblade, 'Slaughterer', is an item which he often shows off to visitors. This treasure which is worth nearly a million gold coins is the most valuable item in our clan's collection as well. It would be fair to say my uncle values this item as much as his life. To have him give it up...this will be difficult."

Linley frowned.

The warblade 'Slaughterer' had originally been sold for only 180,000 gold coins. Although due to inflation, the value of gold centuries ago was much more than it was now, at most the selling price would be equivalent to nearly 400,000 today. But Calvin had just claimed the value was nearly a million gold coins.

From the looks of it...

That 'disgrace to the family' who sold the warblade, had sold it far too cheaply.

"Calvin. This warblade, 'Slaughterer', is after all the ancestral heirloom of my clan, passed down over five thousand years. You can imagine the importance my clan places upon it. To outsiders, it might merely be a collectible item, but to my clan, the loss of this heirloom is a humiliation." Linley's face was dark and forbidding as he spoke.

"I absolutely must wipe this stain off of our clan's honor. In order to recover this warblade, 'Slaughterer', I am willing to pay any price. Do you understand what I am saying?" Linley stared at Calvin.

Calvin sensed that things were heading in a very wrong direction.

He, too, had heard of the history of the Baruch clan. After all, his clan had several items related to the Baruch clan.

To a clan which had once dominated the entire Yulan continent, the importance of their ancestral heirloom could be imagined. In the past, the Baruch clan was too weak and could be ignored with impunity. But now, this Linley had appeared out of nowhere...forget about the future Linley, even the present Linley would not find it too difficult to deal with their clan.

If Linley said just a few words to the Radiant Church, suggesting that he wanted to recover the 'Slaughterer' to cleanse this humiliating stain on his clan, most likely the Lucas family would have to obediently hand it over.

But once the Radiant Church got involved in this matter, things would get more complicated for everyone involved.

"I understand your meaning, young master Linley." Calvin was growing a bit nervous.

Smiling, Linley looked at Calvin. "I hope the Lucas clan can understand the difficult position I am in. As a descendant of the clan, I have no choice here. Calvin, why don't you go back and have a chat with your uncle first. Tonight, I will personally pay a visit to your clan."

"Our Lucas clan will gladly welcome young master Linley's arrival." Calvin was already beginning to mentally map out the way by which he would persuade this obstinate uncle of his.

Watching Calvin depart, Linley felt a slight sense of superiority.

Although he hadn't taken up any official position, just based on his fame, with a few words, he was able to unsettle a kingdom's Minister's mind. This was all due to his status, and his status came from his personal power.

....

That very night.

The welcoming room of the Lucas clan was extremely tastefully adorned, and the ten people within it were, without a doubt, ten extremely important people within the Kingdom of Fenlai. The lowest ranked amongst them was a Count. And the reason all of them were here, was to meet with Linley.

Linley, the newest star of the Kingdom of Fenlai.

Although Linley was only seventeen, and although Linley had not received a writ of nobility, not even the Dukes of the kingdom dared to treat him lightly.

After all, no matter how high their stations were, they were only capable of displaying their power within the Kingdom of Fenlai. But Linley? This was a person who was highly valued by the Four Great Empires and the two major alliances. Perhaps a few decades from now, Linley would become a Cardinal of the Radiant Church, with a status higher than even their king.

It was best for them to build good relations with Linley while he was still of comparatively low rank. And building good relations with Linley was naturally an important matter.

Amongst those ten or so people, only the clan leader of the Lucas clan, Marquis Jebbs, [Je'bu], felt rather uncomfortable. He was already getting on in years, and didn't have any other hobbies. The thing which he loved the most was that weapon of the first Dragonblood Warrior. It was his pride and joy.

But...the descendants of this weapon's clan had come to retrieve their treasure.

"Mr. Linley, please enter."

"Mr. Yale, please enter."

The voices of the attendants outside could be heard. Instantly, all of the ten or so people in the room turned to smile at the door. Even the unhappy Marquis Jebbs squeezed a smile onto his face.

This was the first time Linley had been addressed as 'Mr.', a title he was a bit unused to. He saw an old man with gleaming silver hair walk over to him, beaming as he said very courteously, "Very happy to welcome Linley and Yale to my clan's home. As the leader of this clan, I, Jebbs, feel deeply honored."

Linley couldn't help but show a hint of a smile on his face.

Looked like there was a chance!

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 11, A Lack of Money

Within the audience hall of the Lucas clan, the room was dazzlingly lit, and beautiful serving girls brought out tray after tray of delicacies. Everybody was toasting each other and chatting quite amicably.

Since he was young, Linley had received strict instruction from his father, and so he knew how to comport himself. On the surface, he was engaged in idle conversation with the nobles, but in his heart, he was still rather impatient with it all.

“Duke Bonalt [Ba’na], by your leave.”

Linley bid a farewell to this Duke Bonalt in front of him, then headed directly to the Lucas clan’s leader, Marquis Jebbs. Seeing Linley walk in his direction, he knew that he could no longer avoid the topic of the warblade, ‘Slaughterer’.

Linley and Marquis Jebbs both took seats at a table in the corner of the audience hall.

“Marquis Jebbs, I expect your nephew has already informed you as to why I came here today.” Linley said courteously.

Marquis Jebbs sighed. “Linley, I’m already an old geezer. I really can’t bear to part with my collector’s items.”

“Marquis Jebbs, my Baruch clan has over five thousand years of history, and I have always been proud of the fact that I am a descendant of the Baruchs. But for the ancestral heirloom of our clan, the warblade 'Slaughterer', to be lost to us, is a humiliation. Marquis Jebbs, I can openly assure you that for centuries now, our clan has labored to recover the warblade 'Slaughterer'. One of the main reasons why I trained so hard since my youth was out of my desire to recover our ancestral heirloom."

Although Linley's voice was very calm, the 'absolute resolve' in his voice was unmistakable.

"I understand, I understand." Marquis Jebbs, with a major effort, produced a smile.

Of course the Baruch clan would want their ancestral heirloom back. Marquis Jebbs also understood that if he was dead-set on refusing to return the warblade 'Slaughterer', then his Lucas clan would truly draw the ire of this seventeen year old young man.

Marquis Jebbs was fully aware of how much influence this young man now possessed.

Even putting aside the Radiant Church for now, the Dawson Conglomerate alone could easily devastate his family.

"Linley. The warblade 'Slaughterer' is an extremely valuable treasure. In the past, someone offered me a million gold coins to buy it from me, but I couldn't bear to part from it." Marquis Jebbs turned to the subject of 'money'. "Our Lucas clan is an ancient one, but to be frank, we actually don't have a huge amount of money."

Linley understood this point quite well. Based on what Yale said, the Lucas family was a very old one, with a great deal of influence within Fenlai City. But in terms of financial resources, they were far and away less wealthy than, say, the level of Kalan's Debs clan.

To force a not-so-wealthy clan to suddenly hand over a treasure worth a million gold coins as a gift wasn't too realistic.

"So he wants money for it?" Linley relaxed.

If it was just a matter of money, things wouldn't be too difficult.

"Marquis Jebbs. In the past, your clan spent good, solid gold in order to acquire this warblade, 'Slaughterer'. Naturally, I too must give you a figure that would satisfy you. But of course, I do hope that Marquis Jebbs won't try to take a huge lion's bite out of me." Linley chortled as he spoke.

A hint of a smile was revealed on the face of Marquis Jebbs.

No matter what, eventually he would have to hand over the warblade 'Slaughterer'. At the very least, though, he had to get some gold for it.

"Linley, since you have acted so sincerely towards my Lucas clan, then my Lucas clan also has to give you face. Although this warblade 'Slaughterer' is worth around a million gold coins, as long as you can offer us six hundred thousand gold coins, then you can take the 'Slaughterer' away with you." Marquis Jebbs said forthrightly.

Six hundred thousand gold coins?

Compared with the actual value of the warblade, 'Slaughterer', this really was not a high price.

But right now, Linley had only managed to procure around 200,000 gold coins from his work as a sculptor. This trip to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he did indeed obtain a large amount of magicite cores. But the value of these cores was only around a 100,000 gold coins or so. He didn't have enough money.

The most valuable thing Linley possessed was...

Blueheart Grass and the magicite core of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear!

Linley had over a hundred clumps of Blueheart Grass left, and each clump was worth several tens of thousands of gold coins. But of course, the price of the Saint-level magicite core was incomparably more valuable. A Saint-level magicite core was an invaluable, priceless treasure, worth far more than the magicite core of a magical beast of the ninth rank.

In the past, according to what the books Linley had read said, the standard valuation of a magical beast of the ninth rank's magicite core was around five million gold coins. In reality, these days the price would nearly reach ten million gold coins!

But as far as a Saint-level magicite core went, perhaps even if one tried to offer a hundred million gold coins, it still wouldn't be enough.

A priceless treasure!

Naturally, Linley was not willing to simply sell off the Saint-level magicite core. At the same time, the Blueheart Grass was going to be very important to the future of his clan. Every single clump was to be cherished.

The sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'!

Linley's mind suddenly drifted to the stone sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. Linley felt very torn about it, and in fact usually didn't even want to look at it. This was why Linley continued to let Yale safeguard it.

"Sell it." Linley suddenly came to this decision, and in fact, in the bottom of Linley's heart, this thought flashed by: "I wonder what Alice would think, once she sees this sculpture?"

Linley consulted with Doehring Cowart.

"Linley, it's best if you go ahead and sell off this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'," Doehring Cowart advised. "You don't want to look at this sculpture, but if you keep it with you, you'll always have it on the back of your mind. Best to just sell it off. Also...this will serve to broaden the fame of the Straight Chisel School that I founded."

Linley chuckled.

"Marquis Jebbs, rest your mind. Very shortly, the 600,000 gold coins will arrive. I only hope that while you are waiting for me, you won't sell off this warblade, 'Slaughterer', to anyone else." Linley said with sincerity.

Marquis Jebbs hurriedly replied, "Linley, be at ease. Even if someone else offered me two million gold coins, I still wouldn't sell it."

Indeed, if it weren't for Linley's particular status, how could Marquis Jebbs bear to part with it?

.....

Within the office of Manager Austoni at the Proulx Gallery.

"What?! You are willing to auction off that sculpture?" Austoni's eyes were wide with amazement and wild joy.

Linley nodded slightly. By his side, Yale cast a helpless look at Linley.

Yale had grown up alongside Linley, and so he understood Linley's temperament very well. Linley was a person who cared deeply about friends, and was extremely loyal to them. But at the same time, Linley hated owing others. This time, Yale was preparing to loan Linley a few hundred thousand gold coins.

But as Linley put it, "I don't want to see this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', anymore. Best that I sell it."

Yale secretly thought to himself that if this sculpture was auctioned off, Linley's fame would be broadcast far and wide, which would also improve Linley's status. This was a good thing. Thus, Yale didn't try to force Linley to accept his money.

"Wonderful. Wonderful." Austoni was extremely excited. "Linley, don't worry one bit. For this sculpture of yours, our gallery won't collect so much as a single gold coin in transaction fees."

"I need to auction this sculpture off within the next seven days." Linley directly stated his requirements.

Austoni said confidently, "Be at ease. Starting tomorrow, our Proulx Gallery will arrange for a five-day major exhibition event, as well as spread the news of this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', to every single wealthy clan. On the seventh day, we will begin the auction."

Linley nodded.

"Boss Yale, let's go." After formally handing the sculpture over to the Proulx Gallery, Linley could feel something missing in his heart, but at the same time, Linley also felt as though his mind was a bit more relaxed now.

....

Within the main hall of the Proulx Gallery.

Count Juneau still visited the Proulx Gallery virtually every morning.

First, he would admire the sculptures in the main hall, before progressing to the hall of the experts and the hall of the masters. But this morning, once Count Juneau stepped into the main hall, he discovered....

"Hey, why are there so many people congregating over there at the hall of the masters?" Count Juneau felt a bit puzzled.

The hall of the masters always had just those few sculptures that everyone had seen before. After being on display for so long, the number of viewers had become rather low. Unless, of course, a new work had been produced by a master sculptor. Only then would the hall of the masters be a bit more lively.

"Can it be that a new work has been produced by a master?" Excited, Count Juneau also headed directly to the hall of the masters.

Currently, it was eight in the morning. Logically speaking, there shouldn't be many people at the Proulx Gallery. But there were already several dozen people squeezed into the hall of the masters. What's more, all of these people were staring in astonishment at a sculpture placed dead center in the hall of the masters.

What's more, this exhibit had eighteen powerfully built guards standing around it.

"So popular? I wonder which master has produced a new work?" Count Juneau forced his way to the front to take a closer look.

Count Juneau's eyes immediately widened, and his gaze locked onto the sculpture in front of him. For an instant, Count Juneau thought that he was looking at five living persons. A person madly in love, an adorable person, a shy person, a mesmerizingly beautiful person, and an icy, heartless person.

Count Juneau remained in that half-drunken stupor for a long moment before awakening.

"What a godly sculpture! The work of a Grandmaster!" Count Juneau's mind instantly became agitated.

Based on Count Juneau's hundred-plus years of appraising art, he naturally could sense how spiritually stirring this sculpture was, but upon taking a closer look, Count Juneau's eyes began to shine. "This sculpting style...isn't it that of that genius magus of the Ernst Institute, Linley?"

Just from the sculpting style alone, Count Juneau could tell who had carved this sculpture.

Count Juneau was very familiar with Linley, because the first time Linley had placed three sculptures for sale in the Proulx Gallery, he had been the one to purchase them. And then, when Linley's artworks began appearing in the hall of the masters, the price of each sculpture had reached six thousand gold coins.

The genius of the Ernst Institute who was only seventeen years old!

On that business transaction alone, Count Juneau had turned a profit of over ten thousand gold coins. Naturally, Count Juneau would pay tremendous attention to Linley.

"It really is him." Count Juneau saw the two characters for 'Linley' written on the lower corner of the statue.

And on the placard next to the sculpture, there was an explanation of who Linley was...

"The sculptor of this sculpture is named 'Linley'. This year, he is seventeen years old, a graduate of the Ernst Institute, and a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. In this day and age, he is, without a doubt, the number one genius magus in the entire Yulan continent, and even if we look at the history of the Yulan continent as a whole, he is still the number two genius magus in all of history."

"But Linley isn't just a genius magus. In the field of sculpting, he also has made amazing accomplishments. Although only seventeen, this sculpture of his, 'Awakening From the Dream', already carries the grandeur and the spirit of a Grandmaster level sculpture, especially considering the fact that this sculpture is so huge. Naturally, its value is all the more priceless. When you factor in the reality that this seventeen year old sculptor is also an ultimate genius magus...the value of this sculpture is simply unimaginable."

"Our Proulx Gallery has the privilege to be authorized by Linley to exhibit this sculpture for five days. On April 21st, after the exhibition has completed, the Proulx Gallery will carry out the auction."

Seeing this introduction, Count Juneau understood...

"The various nobles, magnates, and royals will all be moved and intrigued..." Count Juneau knew very well that this sort of sculpture definitely wasn't something which a person of his level could hope to purchase.

"A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank?" Upon rereading this part of the introduction, Count Juneau couldn't help but sigh in amazement as well.

At the same time, Count Juneau's admiration of this Linley deepened.

A person who was able to achieve such accomplishments in two different fields was definitely worthy of admiration.

"This sculpture should be on roughly the same level as the sculptures of Grandmaster sculptors. Adding the fact that it is huge...and the status of the sculptor, a seventeen year old who is the number two genius magus in the entire history of the Yulan continent...the price is going to be sky-high." Count Juneau made a mental prediction.

"April 21st!" Count Juneau was already beginning to anticipate this day.

As time passed, the people coming to visit this hall of the masters grew more and more in number. Many of the extremely wealthy families in the Holy Capital began to receive word of this as well.

....

Within Austoni's office.

“Please inform his Majesty, King Wylder, that I don’t have the authority to make this decision. If his Majesty really would like to purchase this sculpture, we would like to invite him to attend on the 21st.” Austoni sent off the royal herald from a king.

When that herald left, Austoni’s face sank.

“What a joke. He actually dared to offer just a million gold pieces to directly buy this sculpture? In his dreams! Just yesterday, his Royal Majesty, King Clayde of the Kingdom of Fenlai, offered three million gold coins!”

After being on exhibition for just three days, over ten important personages had made offers to directly buy the sculpture.

“On the 21st, I’m afraid that we really are going to see a sky-high price.” Austoni secretly mused.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 12, Rage

Within the Debs clan's private garden, Alice and Kalan were sitting together and discussing the question of marriage.

"Alice." Kalan's face was all smiles. "I've already discussed this with my father. Our engagement ceremony will be on June 18th, and our actual wedding ceremony will be on January 1st of the next year. Which is to say, it will be on the Yulan Festival day of next year."

A hint of a smile appeared on Alice's face as well.

"Next year, next year will be year 10000 of the Yulan calendar, right? For us to hold our wedding on the Yulan Festival of year 10000 of the Yulan calendar, that'll be...so, so perfect." The more she spoke, the happier she felt. Alice, too, began to beam.

Seeing Alice smile so happily, Kalan felt very content.

"Alice, hurry up and discuss this with your father, then prepare the list of guests from your family's side for me so I can make arrangements as soon as possible." Kalan urged.

"Okay." Alice nodded slightly.

Kalan gently stroked Alice's soft hair, his heart content.

But when he thought about the dire circumstances his clan was in,

Kalan's heart began to grow frantic. Not long after him and Alice started their relationship, the Debs clan suffered a painful blow like they had never suffered before. The Dawson Conglomerate had cut them off!

The current success and glory of the Debs clan was inextricably linked to their relationship with the Dawson Conglomerate.

But then, last December, the Dawson Conglomerate publicly announced the dissolution of their business relationship with the Debs clan. What's more, they also reached out to every business union and trading clan within Fenlai City and informed them that they were looking for someone to replace the Debs clan in their previous position.

Additionally...

The Dawson Conglomerate's actions weren't just limited to that. The Dawson Conglomerate even began to suppress the business activities of the Debs clan, causing every single business operated by the Debs clan to suffer losses.

"Why is the Dawson Conglomerate suppressing my clan like this? The Debs clan hasn't offended the Dawson Conglomerate." Kalan felt extremely vexed. As the next heir and successor to the clan, Kalan naturally cared greatly about this affair.

And because these issues occurred soon after Kalan and Alice started their relationship, there were quite a few clan members who now believed that Alice was the bearer of disastrously bad luck.

Otherwise, why would the Dawson Conglomerate, whom they had worked alongside with for so many years, suddenly turn on them?

Fortunately, over all these years, the Debs clan had managed to accumulate massive wealth. Although their losses were great, the foundation of the Debs clan was still intact. But the leader of the Debs clan was aware that, due to unclear reasons, the Dawson Conglomerate was now suppressing their businesses. This was causing the Debs clan to have lost all hope in the 'business' side of their activities.

After all, no one was willing to offend the massive behemoth which was the Dawson Conglomerate.

Thus, the only choice the Debs clan had was to embark on a certain other route.

Shaking his head and casting these thoughts aside, Kalan laughed as he looked at Alice. "Alice, I heard that yesterday, the Proulx Gallery began to exhibit an extremely incredible work of art. Supposedly, it's on the Grandmaster level. Many people have gone there to take a look. Would you like to go with me?"

Alice was feeling bored as well. "Alright."

.....

Kalan and Alice were riding in a carriage towards the Proulx Gallery.

"This sculpture is supposedly extremely extraordinary. These past few days, I've been so busy arranging our engagement and wedding that I haven't had the chance to take you to check it out." Kalan was the first to leap off the carriage, and then, in a very gentlemanly fashion, helped Alice out as well.

Side by side, Alice and Kalan walked towards the Proulx Gallery.

"Big brother Kalan, look at all those people!" Alice's eyes were shining as she pointed.

Deep within the Proulx Gallery, at the hall of the masters, there was a sea of people. But within the hall of the masters, everything was extremely orderly, entering from one door and exiting from another. Every person was only permitted three minutes or so of viewing time.

After three minutes, the people currently in the hall of the masters were forced to leave. If they wanted to view it again....

Fine! Go back and wait in line again!

"What a long line." Kalan felt somewhat amazed as well. In all these years, he had never seen the Proulx Gallery so packed with people before.

Kalan and Alice both obediently got in line and waited for nearly twenty minutes. Only then was it their group's turn to go and enter the hall of the masters. In one large group, they were ushered into the hall of the masters. Immediately, all of them headed towards the front.

Curious, Kalan and Alice naturally rushed to the front as well.

But that moment when Alice first spotted the sculpture, she froze as though she had been struck by lightning. Standing there, she stared stupidly at that enormous sculpture. Those five beautifully, immaculately carved female figures, each of them carrying a unique aura of their own.

Others were absorbed in contemplating the meanings hidden within this 'Awakening From the Dream'.

But when Alice saw this giant sculpture, her mind couldn't help but begin to replay memories of every single event she had previously experienced with Linley.

The first time, just as she was despairing, Linley had descended like a god from the heavens.

On the balcony, the two of them hiding in the corners and chatting an entire night away.

....

One scene after another played in her mind. Alice was totally dumbstruck. She really had no idea that this famous Grandmaster-level sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', had her as the subject.

"Lin....Linley..." Alice's current emotions were extremely complicated.

She stared at the introductory text on the side.

"The sculptor of this sculpture is named 'Linley'. This year, he is seventeen years old, a graduate of the Ernst Institute, and a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. In this day and age, he is, without a doubt, the number one genius magus in the entire Yulan continent, and even if we look at the history of the Yulan continent as a whole, he is still the number two genius magus in all of history."

"But Linley isn't just a genius magus. In the field of sculpting, he also has made amazing accomplishments. Although only seventeen, this sculpture of his, 'Awakening From the Dream'..."

Seeing those lines of words, Alice was dumbfounded yet again.

"It's Linley. It's Linley." Alice stared at the placard unbelievably. "A dual-element magus of the seventh rank? He's already a magus of the seventh rank? But...but just last year, he was just a magus of the fifth rank."

Alice had no idea that before they had broken up, Linley had become a magus of the sixth rank. Only...Linley had never been given the chance to let her know.

"Awakening From the Dream. This sculpture is called, 'Awakening From the Dream'." Staring at the five female figures in the sculpture, especially that last one with the slight aura of heartlessness, Alice suddenly understood the true reason why Linley had given this sculpture the name, 'Awakening From the Dream.'

"The dreamer...has awakened?" Alice felt that her mind was a total mess.

As the first man she had ever truly cared for, in the bottom of Alice's heart, there was always a special place reserved for Linley. But when she discovered that Linley had given this sculpture the name, 'Awakening From the Dream', she suddenly felt as though something had disappeared from her heart.

That sort of feeling...was very difficult to bear.

Alice suddenly noticed that by her side, Kalan's fists were knotted, and an extremely unpleasant look was on his face. His veins were bulging out, and his face was terrifyingly grim. His eyes flashed with dark light as he stared a deathly gaze at this sculpture.

"Big Brother Kalan!" Worried, Alice called to him.

But Kalan paid her no mind.

"Linley, you...you go too far." Kalan was filled with boundless, fiery rage. In the past, Kalan was rather well-disposed towards Linley. But in the depths of his heart, Kalan somewhat looked down on Linley. As far as Kalan was concerned, no matter how hard Linley worked, he could never be able to match Kalan's clan.

After all, his clan was hitched to the enormous war machine that was the Dawson Conglomerate.

But in what, just five months?

His Debs clan had been abandoned by the Dawson Conglomerate. And Linley? Out of nowhere, he became a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. What's more, he was acclaimed as the number one genius magus of this age.

Even in the long history of the Yulan continent, there was only one person slightly better than Linley.

"A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank, and a sculptor approaching the level of the Grandmasters." Kalan suddenly felt enormous pressure.

This person was simply too incredible.

But shortly after, Kalan only felt boundless fury.

Because the inspiration for this sculpture was his fiancée!

"Hey, take a look. Isn't this girl really similar to the woman in this sculpture?" A voice suddenly rang out within the hall of the masters, and instantly, over ten heads turned to stare at Alice. The hall suddenly became a hotbed of commotion and discussion.

Linley's sculpting abilities were simply too amazing. He had totally captured Alice's grace and charm in this sculpture.

From their very first glance at Alice, those viewers had the feeling...that the girl in front of them and the female carved into 'Awakening From the Dream' were incredibly similar. In fact, they could totally be considered the same person. That unique gaze. That slightly sharp, arched nose.

"Miss, dare I ask what your relationship is with Master Linley?" An old man with a head full of white hair, at least a century old, asked very courteously towards Alice.

In the field of sculpting, Linley had already reached the level of master.

Linley's skill in sculpting was enough to cause these collectors who had decades or centuries of experience in sculpting to prostrate themselves in admiration. Respectfully addressing him as 'Master' was something which came from their hearts. Based on this old man's century-plus years of experience in appraising stone sculptures, he naturally could tell that the woman carved into the sculpture was most likely a person whom Linley had shared a period of turbulent love.

Alice felt rather awkward, and couldn't help but turn to look at Kalan.

"Oh, Kalan, you are here as well." The old man looked at Kalan. Old people naturally being as sly as a fox, the old man naturally could tell that Kalan and Alice's relationship was not a simple one. "Kalan, who is this young lady?"

Although Kalan felt extremely unhappy, he still modestly bowed and said, "Milord Duke Berner [Ba'na], this is Miss Alice, my fiancée."

"Fiancée?" Duke Berner cast a meaningful glance at Kalan and Alice, then laughed, asking no more.

....

Pulling Alice by the hand, as through running for his life, Kalan quickly fled back to the Debs clan's manor.

The leader of the Debs clan, Kalan's father, Bernard, stared at his son in disbelief. "What did you just say? The inspiration for that sculpture being exhibited in the Proulx Gallery is Alice?"

Bernard was generally rather doting towards his son.

When his son said he was going to marry Alice, Bernard didn't object. But just a few days after his son had firmed up his relationship with Alice, the Dawson Conglomerate had suddenly decided to break off relations with the Debs clan for no apparent reason at all. With regards to this affair, Bernard had been constantly begging to meet with the upper level management of the Dawson Conglomerate for a meeting.

Over the past few months, Bernard had been busy dealing with this issue, and was so busy that he hadn't even had the free time to bother going about to viewing the sculptures at the Proulx Gallery.

"Alice. The inspiration is Alice?" The expression on Bernard's face immediately grew ugly.

Kalan nodded. "Yes, father. Although Alice and I haven't yet gotten formally engaged, once we do, Alice will be formally introduced to many of the nobles in the Holy Capital. That sculpture of Linley's, 'Awakening From the Dream', will definitely make us the laughingstock of the city."

Bernard was silent for a while, and then frowned as he asked Kalan, "How bad is it? Is there anything shameful or degrading about this sculpture?"

"Father, in the past, between Linley and Alice, they had a period of..." Kalan explained in a fuzzy manner. "And this sculpture is about the affairs of Linley and Alice."

Bernard no longer spoke. He only began to frown severely.

After a while, Bernard said to his son, "Kalan, if I ask you to give up Alice, would you be willing?" Kalan resolutely shook his head. After all, he was only eighteen years old.

Bernard nodded slightly. "Don't worry about Alice. I will handle this matter. You don't need to worry about it."

Kalan nodded, then suddenly he gritted his teeth. Staring at his father, he said, "Father, Linley is definitely unhappy at the fact that Alice and I are together. What's more, Linley's potential is too great. I think...that we should perhaps consider if we can figure out a way to kill Linley?"

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 13, The Old Master

“Kill Linley?” Bernard looked at his son. “Kalan, why should we kill this Linley? He’s just a master sculptor. Will he impact the Debs clan somehow?”

The news of Linley becoming a magus of the seventh rank hadn’t been widely publicized in Fenlai City yet. In addition, recently Bernard had been absorbed in dealing with the frustrating affairs of his clan, which was why he didn’t know anything about Linley.

Kalan nodded. “Father, Linley is seventeen years old this year, but he’s already produced a Grandmaster-level sculpture. More importantly...he is currently the number one genius magus of the Yulan continent. Even looking back at all of history, he is still the number two genius magus of all time of the Yulan continent. Because he...is a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank.”

“A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank?”

Bernard sucked in a cold breath of air. His intuition was telling him that this Linley would be a threat to his clan.

“This Linley cannot be permitted to live.” Bernard immediately said.

Hearing these words from his father, Kalan couldn’t help but smile. But then, a heartbeat later, Bernard frowned. “Wait. The number two genius magus of all time will definitely be an extremely incredible person in the future. How could the Radiant Church, the Cult of Shadows, and the Four Great Empires possibly let someone like this slip through their fingers? It's quite possible that Linley has already struck up a relationship with the Radiant Church."

"Kalan, this Linley, cannot be killed by us." Looking at Kalan, Bernard spoke in a serious tone.

"Father, he's just a dual-element magus of the seventh rank." Kalan's face was a mask of urgency. Suddenly, he lowered his voice. "Father, we don't need to necessarily dirty our own hands to get rid of Linley. We can spend some money to invite others to do the deed. Just like when we killed that Court Minister."

Bernard was silent for a moment. "Kalan, you don't need to interfere in this matter anymore. I will handle everything."

Bernard wasn't saying that he would kill Linley. This made Kalan extremely irritable and unable to be at ease.

.....

The dark of the night. Bernard had arrived at a pre-reserved deluxe room within a hotel, and there was a white-haired old man there waiting for him.

"Mr. Bernard." Upon seeing Bernard, that white-haired old man couldn't help but grin at him.

Bernard nodded. "Mr. Bayonet. This time I have come to see you for the purpose of asking your assistance.”

“Speak, speak. You are an old customer.” The white-haired old man was still beaming.

Bernard spoke bluntly. “Two things. First, I hope you can destroy for me that ‘Awakening From the Dream’ sculpture currently on display within the Proulx Gallery.” Bernard was quite clear that actually spiriting this sculpture out of the Proulx Gallery was an impossibility.

But destroying it was a task of much lower complexity.

“Destroy the sculpture, ‘Awakening From the Dream’?” The white-haired old man said, startled.

“What, is your organization, ‘Saber’, not capable of carrying this mission out?” Bernard laughed lightly.

Of the four major assassin’s guilds of the Yulan continent, each was unique in their own way. This one, Saber, possessed an exceedingly strong force. As long as the price was enough, they would even dare to assassinate a Cardinal.

But of course, if the contract was to assassinate a Saint-level combatant, that was perhaps a level of difficulty that was a bit too high.

“Could it be that even you are afraid offending the Proulx Gallery?” Bernard was somewhat suspicious.

"No. Of course we don't care about a branch of the Proulx Gallery. Go ahead and advise us as to your second requirement." The white-haired old man suddenly said.

An assassin's guild, by its very nature, was going to offend people. They even dared to offend the Radiant Church. Who wouldn't they dare to offend?

Bernard suppressed the curiosity in his heart. "The second matter is, I hope that you can assassinate Linley."

The white-haired old man finally laughed helplessly. Shaking his head, he said to Bernard, "Mr. Bernard, please forgive us, but we won't be able to accept either of your two missions. My deepest regrets."

"Unable to accept?" Bernard rose to his feet violently, staring at the white-haired old man in disbelief. "Mr. Bayonet, I know how much strength your organization has. Since when did you become unwilling to dare to accept a small mission such as this?" Bernard totally could not accept that this was the end result of his trip here.

After all, this organization dared to even assassinate senior ministers of the Four Great Empires and Cardinals of the Radiant Church. But they didn't dare assassinate Linley?

"It isn't that we don't dare, it's that we don't wish to accept this mission. As for the reason why, our organization has no need to tell you, right?" The expression on the white-haired old man's face had turned cold.

Bernard hurriedly smiled. "Forgive me, Mr. Bayonet. Since you are unwilling to accept this mission, then I must take my leave."

The white-haired old man nodded.

After Bernard departed, the white-haired old man slowly rose to his feet, mumbling to himself, "This Bernard. Out of all the missions he could ask us for, why did he have to try and destroy a sculpture? And he even wants to assassinate Linley? I absolutely must report this affair to the Old Master. I imagine once the Old Master learns that we turned this mission down, he will be quite pleased."

The white-haired old man was one of the founding elders of the Saber organization.

However, precisely because he was too old, he didn't carry out any missions anymore. Most of his time, he spent his life enjoying everything this megacity, Fenlai City, had to offer. On occasion, he would receive visitors from some of the wealthier nobles.

But as for the 'Old Master' he was referring to...

Within the Saber organization, the Old Master was a person of legend. Even when the guild leader of Saber met the Old Master, he would very respectfully hail him as 'Old Master'. In the entirety of this organization, there was perhaps no one who was more senior than this Old Master.

.....

Within the Proulx Gallery. The fourth day of the exhibition of the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream.'

In the middle of the hall of the masters, something quite bizarre was happening. Based on the usual rules of the Proulx Gallery, each visitor to the hall of the masters should only be allowed three minutes of viewing time per visit before leaving to allow someone else to come in. If they wanted to view the sculpture again, they would have to get in line again.

But within the hall of the masters, one particular guest had already been there for nearly two hours. This was totally against the rules!

This guest appeared to be thirty or forty years old. He wore a loose-fitting long robe, and his arms were hidden by the sleeves of the robes and crossed over his chest. That long, black robe was casually loosened, and he appeared to be very much absorbed in viewing the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream.'

And right now, the several extremely powerful-looking guards standing in front of 'Awakening From the Dream' were all discussing this black-haired man in a low voice.

"What sort of relationship does this man have with Mr. Austoni? We were actually instructed not to shoo him away. For him to be here for such a long period of time in the hall of the masters is against the rules."

"Don't worry about it. Let's just quietly protect the statue."

"What are you afraid of? The Gallery has set up a magical defensive formation around the sculpture. It is totally impossible for someone to attempt to steal it, especially given how large it is. Who can possibly steal such a large sculpture out from under our eyes?"

The guards were all in a relatively relaxed mood.

After all, stealing this huge sculpture would be an extremely hard task, while damaging it was of no benefit to anybody. Who would do such a thing?

"Wow, what an excellent sculpture. It really has flavor." The thirty to forty year old man knitted his brows as he carefully inspected the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. And then, he glanced once more at the introduction. "A seventeen year old kid. I really anticipate his future progress."

Time passed. One group of people after another entered the hall of the masters.

But this man continued to stand in that one spot, carefully viewing and enjoying the sight of this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"What smoothly flowing lines and marks, so clean without any sign of hesitation." A slightly enchanted look was on this man's face. "How absolutely mesmerizing. And this girl! Her unique characteristics were completely drawn out by the sculptor, to the point of being more attractive than a real person."

Within the hall, groups of visitors continued to arrive and depart.

Many of the visitors were lining up multiple times and viewing the sculpture multiple times. A Grandmaster-level sculpture such as this, to those genuine aficionados of sculpture, was something they could admire for an entire day without feeling bored.

"Time's up! Next group!" The employee of the Proulx Gallery called out loudly. Instantly, a large group of people began heading for the exit obediently, while the next group of people began to come in. But just at this disorderly moment...

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!"

Several explosive sounds could be heard, and suddenly, the hall of the masters was covered with a layer of thick fog. The previous guests totally began to run wild, screaming in fear or cursing angrily. The air was filled with noise.

At this time, the guards charged with protecting the sculpture also grew nervous.

"Not good." Seeing this spectacle, the guards knew that something was happening.

"Goddamit."

The man dressed in a loose robe frowned, cursing in an annoyed manner. His previously drowsy eyes cleared and scanned forwards. At this time, four blurs suddenly charged towards that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

When these four blurs made their charge, the guards had already drawn their weapons, while at the same time, many experts of the Proulx Gallery hidden around the area came charging forward as well. If the sculpture currently on display within the Proulx Gallery was destroyed, then this would be an unmitigated disaster!

"Whoosh!"

One of the four blurs, a white blur, moved in an extremely bizarre manner. Like a piece of white paper, he floated about, easily dodging past the attempted blockade by the guards. At the same time, he stretched out with his black dagger, aiming a stab at the sculpture.

Based on his attack power, with this stab, the entire sculpture would be shattered.

"Thud!" 'Awakening From the Dream' suddenly glowed. The dagger landed on the glow surrounding the sculpture, but did not damage it.

"Lightguard?" The white blur muttered. The dagger in his hand suddenly flushed with a layer of blood-red color, and he stabbed at the sculpture with it once more. Instantly, a clear ringing sound could be heard as the Lightguard spell was totally shattered.

"Not good." The four guards were getting desperate. Even the protective magic set up by a light-style magus of the seventh rank had been so easily broken. And, because the situation was too chaotic, many of the Gallery's experts were not able to reach or block in time.

But these guards next to the sculpture were being blocked in turn by the other three blurs.

That man in a loose-fitting robe who hadn't moved this entire time, suddenly radiated a fierce look from his previously drowsy-looking eyes.

"Swish!"

A very soft noise could be heard, while at the same time, the white colored blur suddenly twitched. Then, with a 'rip' sound, he suddenly split into two pieces, and fresh blood spurted out from his bifurcated body. Even the three people entangling the bodyguards suddenly split into two pieces. All of them were as dead as dead can be.

.....

Shortly afterwards, the Proulx Gallery returned to normal, while that man in a loose robe slowly departed from the Proulx Gallery. Outside the Proulx Gallery, there was a carriage waiting for him, and another person as well.

It was the person whom Kalan's father, Bernard, had addressed as 'Mr. Bayonet'.

Upon seeing this thirty or forty year old man come towards him, the elder immediately said in a voice of respect, "Old Master."

"Mm. You did a good job this time." The thirty or forty year old man laughed as he praised. But then, he said in an unhappy voice, "I didn't expect that the Bloodrose organization would sink to such depths. Could it be that they don't know what a huge sin it is to attempt to destroy such a precious work of art?"

The Bloodrose organization, like the Saber organization, was one of the four primary assassin's guilds.

"Old Master, where should head to, today?" That Mr. Bayonet asked.

The man thought for a while, then said, "It's been a year or two since I've visited the Jade Water Paradise. In the past, I've always had those girls come out to my place instead. This time...I shall visit the Jade Water Paradise in person. Only when I spend some time with young ladies will I, as well, feel young at heart. Haha..." He began to laugh loudly.

"Yes, Old Master." The white-haired old man said courteously. In Mr. Bayonet's heart, he actually was always curious about one thing; how old, exactly, this middle-aged man was. This was because, amongst all the assassins produced by the Saber organization, he himself was in the final group of assassins to be personally trained by the Old Master himself.

As for the very first group of assassins trained by the Old Master, either they had all been killed, or they had died of old age!

"What are you thinking about? Move it!" From within the carriage came the sound of the man's voice.

Mr. Bayonet immediately began to drive the carriage forward, heading towards the Jade Water Paradise.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 14, The Auction

Within the private reading room of Bernard, leader of the Debs clan.

“What? You failed?” Bernard stared at the woman in the red robes. “Even if you failed, why can’t you continue making further attempts? Since when did the Bloodrose organization give up so easily?”

Bernard was extremely dissatisfied.

When he went to ask for the help of the Saber organization, he was refused. He successfully enlisted the services of Bloodrose, but Bloodrose was only willing to agree to destroy the sculpture, ‘Awakening From the Dream’. As for killing Linley, the price they demanded was far too high, as high as the price for an assassination of a Cardinal! Such an astronomical price, the Debs clan was unable to pay.

Per the words of Bloodrose, assassinating Linley would cause them to simultaneously offend both the Radiant Church as well as the Dawson Conglomerate.

What’s more...

Nowadays, Linley was a master sculptor. A master sculptor held an exalted societal status, and many people with rank and power esteemed master sculptors. Killing Linley meant killing a master sculptor, which would generate a degree of hatred towards Bloodrose amongst those sculpture aficionados.

This was why the cost they demanded to assassinate Linley was actually on par with the cost to assassinate a Cardinal.

"We are no longer willing to accept this assignment. We are willing to return the compensation you gave us." The red robed woman said, her face cold.

"Can you tell me the reason why?" Bernard had no idea what was going on.

The destruction of a sculpture shouldn't be too difficult. How could they give up after failing just a single time?

"If we tell you the reason, then we will no longer return the fees you provided to us. Do you agree?" The red robed woman said calmly.

An assassination organization was also a type of information broker. They were willing to sell information as well.

"Done." As the leader of the Debs clan, Bernard could be magnanimous.

That red robed woman said softly, "I can tell you this. Amongst the admirers of that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', there is a person whom our organization definitely does not wish to offend. And this person is not someone whom your Debs clan is able to offend either."

"Alright. My report is complete." With a smile, the red robed woman immediately departed.

Bernard was incredibly angry.

This red robed woman wasn't even willing to disclose the identity of this person Bloodrose didn't wish to offend. But Bernard understood one thing: Someone capable of causing trepidation for Bloodrose was definitely an incredible person. A report on such a person would definitely also be incredibly expensive.

.....

Year 9999 of the Yulan calendar, April 21st. Within the dedicated auction hall at the Proulx Gallery.

This auction hall was split into three levels. The first level had ordinary seats, while the second level had stand-alone booths which only major nobles and extremely wealthy people were qualified to enter. The price to enter those booths was terrifyingly high. As for the third level, it was just a single, extremely large hall, also decorated very lavishly.

At this moment, the hundreds of seats in the first level were beginning to get filled up, despite the fact that the price of each seat here was a hundred gold coins. As for the ten or so private booths on the second level, based on the locations of the seats, the prices varied from a thousand to ten thousand gold coins.

But the third level? That wasn't opened to the public at all.

The fame of this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', was extremely resounding now. Many of the people currently in the auction hall were some of the wealthiest, most powerful noble families in the Yulan continent. But precisely because there were only so few seats while there were so many nobles present, these standard seats, which supposedly cost a hundred gold coins each, were being sold by scalpers outside for a ridiculous sum of money.

The Debs clan, as a local clan, had a special relationship with the Proulx Gallery, and were able to acquire seats in the private booth with the poorest positioning.

In truth, aside from the Debs clan, all of the others who were present in the second level booths belonged to extremely famous and wealthy clans throughout the Yulan continent. They were far more powerful than the Debs clan, for example...the Dawson clan of the Dawson Conglomerate. Even they were only on the second level. But of course, the representatives of the Dawson clan here were not members in the direct line of descent and succession.

"Alice, walk on the inside."

This time, six people had come from the Debs clan. Alice was walking between Kalan and Kalan's mother, and was even wearing a hat that was pressed down on her head. Very quickly, the six of them reached the second level.

Within this second level were the greatest clans of the Yulan continent.

Upon seeing who was in the second level hallway, Bernard, leader of the Debs clan, immediately began to modestly greet everyone present. Here, the Debs clan meant absolutely nothing. It was like the evaluation Yale had once given them in private; they were a 'minor clan'.

Right. In the eyes of these clans whose influence spanned the entire Yulan continent, if a clan's area of influence was limited to a single kingdom, then that clan was nothing more than a minor clan.

The six people from the Debs clan entered their booth.

"There will come a day when my Debs clan will be like those clans. No; we will be even stronger." Kalan said to himself.

For the Debs clan, during this trip, failure was not an option.

No matter what, it was better to have this sculpture located within their own manor, rather than the manor of an outsider. After all, in June, Kalan would be having his engagement ceremony with Alice, and by then, many people would know that Alice was becoming a member of the Debs clan. But even though 'failure was not an option', in reality, their financial ability to succeed was a major issue as well.

"Big Brother Kalan." Alice took a seat next to Kalan.

In a place like this, surrounded by hugely powerful clans, Alice, too, felt rather constrained and pressured. After all, in this place, even the Debs clan counted for little, much less a minor noble like Alice and her clan.

"Don't worry. Inside this booth, the people below won't be able to see you at all. That Linley really has gone too far. He actually..." Whenever Kalan thought of that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', he would burst with rage. Anyone with some understanding of sculpture would be able to guess that Linley and Alice had a romantic history together.

After all, if they hadn't shared a period of true love, how could Linley have produced such a godly work of art?

If Kalan were to really marry Alice, there would most likely be many people who would secretly speculate about what the relationship between Alice and Linley was like. For someone of Kalan's social status, how could he bear such embarrassment?

.....

The third level of the auction hall.

Inside, there were only four people. The Proulx Gallery's Managing Director Maia, Austoni, Linley, and Yale.

"Haha, Director Maia, which one is Linley?" A loud, exuberant laugh boomed out.

Leaning on his cane, Director Maia went over to welcome the man, while Linley and Yale both immediately went to welcome him as well. "Your Majesty!"

The person who had come was the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai. He was the pride of the kingdom; the Golden Lion, King Clayde. Being both the king of Fenlai as well as mighty warrior of the ninth rank was indeed something worthy of admiration.

Linley carefully inspected this Clayde.

This king was built extremely muscularly, and his head of long, golden hair billowed about him wildly, giving off the aura of a lion with enormous explosive power. His entire person naturally radiated a domineering aura that made hearts quail in fear.

Clayde looked at Linley. "If my guess is correct, this one must be Master Linley."

"Your Majesty, please, just call me Linley." Linley immediately said.

As a matter of fact, Linley felt quite helpless. Ever since the sculpture 'Awakening From the Dream' had been put on display, many people, upon seeing Linley, would humbly address him as 'Master Linley'. This was not feigned courtesy. Even Marquis Jebbs of the Lucas clan, who really was not willing to part with the warblade 'Slaughterer', was still filled with the utmost admiration for Linley.

"Good enough." Clayde was extremely blunt. "And this must be Yale, right? Yale, how's your father doing?"

"My father is doing very well. Unfortunately, he isn't currently within the Holy Union, as if he was, he definitely would've come in person." Yale said modestly.

Clayde nodded slightly.

"Director Maia, who else has come today?" Clayde called out casually.

Director Maia smiled. "Let's wait a while longer. I expect that Cardinal Lampson [Lan'pu'sen] and Cardinal Guillermo will be arriving as well."

Generally speaking, the third level was only used for welcoming guests which the Proulx Gallery held in the highest regard.

The windows of the third level were made with a special type of glass. Those on the outside were unable to see inside, but those on the inside could clearly see the outside. This sort of glass was specially designed and produced by alchemists, and was extremely expensive. Most places weren't able to afford such materials.

"Lords Guillermo and Lampson have arrived." Director Maia's position allowed him to see the outside hallway.

Linley, Yale, and even King Clayde all went to welcome these two men with great warmth and enthusiasm. In a group, they went to greet these two Cardinals of the Radiant Church. Cardinal Guillermo and Linley had met once before, while Cardinal Lampson was rather pudgy. When he laughed, his eyes turned into a thin slit. He seemed very adorable.

"Linley. Right?" Lampson immediately gave Linley a big, warm hug.

"Lord Lampson." Linley said respectfully.

And then, the seven people within the third floor, being Cardinal Lampson, Cardinal Guillermo, Maia, Yale, Austoni, King Clayde, and Linley all sat down together, peering out of the windows at the spectacle below.

From their vantage point, they could even see into what was going on in the booths on the second level.

"Third Bro, look." Yale lightly nudged Linley by the arm and nodded below.

Following Yale's gaze, Linley looked over as well. Suddenly, he discovered that within one of the second level booths, Kalan and Alice were both present. Right now, Alice and Kalan were holding hands while seated together on a sofa, engaging in conversation.

"I didn't expect her to come." Yale said softly to Linley.

Linley only smiled calmly.

"Linley, what are you guys talking about?" The pudgy Cardinal Lampson chortled at Linley.

"Nothing." Linley shook his head.

Guillermo patted Clayde on the shoulder. "Clayde, I must say, your management of the Kingdom of Fenlai has been stellar. You've actually managed to produce an incredible talent like Linley. Before this, I really had no idea that this genius magus, Linley, also had reached such an incredible level of achievement in the art of stonesculpting."

Yale, Linley, Clayde, Guillermo, Lampson, and Director Maia continued to engage in idle conversation while watching the activities below.

All of the seats on the first floor of the auction hall were now filled.

On the main platform, the sculpture 'Awakening From the Dream' was placed, covered with a piece of cloth. On the platform, a beautiful serving girl stood on each side of the sculpture, while a golden-haired gentleman walked onto the platform with a smile. Looking around himself, he said in a bright voice, "Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to welcome all of you to this auction for Master Linley's sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'."

This middle-aged man behaved extremely leisurely. Slowly, he said, "Every single guest who has come today has a grand reputation. In particular, our Gallery was fortunate enough to be able to invite Lord Cardinal Guillermo to attend as well." This middle-aged man bowed slightly towards the third level.

Instantly, everyone below rose to their feet, filling the auction hall with the sound of their applause.

"We also have Lord Cardinal Lampson present." Another round of energetic applause.

"His Majesty, the ruler of our Kingdom of Fenlai, has arrived as well."

"Additionally, the genius magus and genius sculptor, Master Linley, is present today."

This auctioneer rattled off one name after another, and each time he did, there was a storm of applause. To these nobles, a Cardinal of the Radiant Church, the ruler of a Kingdom, and that genius of a level which the Yulan continent would rarely see in its entire history, all were worthy of their admiration.

"Master Linley?"

Within her booth, Alice stared out of the window at the third level, but unfortunately, all she could see was black glass.

But on the third level.

Linley could clearly see Alice's face...and the slightly lost look in her eyes.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 15, A Sky-High Price

Standing in the middle of the platform, that golden-haired, middle aged man continued to boast, "When discussing the Ten Masterpieces, in this day and age, the lowest valuation of one of the Ten Masterpieces is 5.28 million gold coins, while the highest is the 'Bloody-eyed Maned Lion', which recently was auctioned off in the Proulx Gallery branch at the Yulan Empire for a price of 13 million gold coins!"

All of the nobles and wealthy merchants below grew silent.

These prices were downright terrifying.

"The materials for the sculpture, 'Bloody-eyed Maned Lion', were collected from an actual, Saint-level 'Bloody-eyed Maned Lion', while the sculptor was Grandmaster Hoover from over a hundred thousand years ago. In the past ten thousand years, our Yulan continent has produced just two Grandmaster level sculptors; Master Proulx, and Master Hope Jensen. These two both reached the level of Grandmaster."

The golden-haired man let out a sudden laugh.

"However, from what I know, every single Grandmaster sculptor in history....no...let's not discuss Grandmasters for now...even the vast majority of master sculptors were only acclaimed as 'masters' after their first century of life. Even if they hadn't reached a hundred, they were at least in their seventies or eighties. Has there ever been anyone who became a master before the age of thirty?"

The golden-haired man looked at his audience. "In the past, no. But now? There is."

"The incredible Master Linley is a genius. He is seventeen years old! He is a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank. In the field of magic, he is the number two genius in the entire history of the Yulan continent. But his accomplishments in the field of sculpting, despite only being seventeen years of age, is well known by everyone here as well."

As he spoke, the golden-haired man turned to stare at the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

The two female attendants stepped forward and removed the covering cloth, revealing the actual sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"This is the sculpture produced by Master Linley. Based on the investigation performed by our Gallery, this sculpture was completed last December, during the days of that huge blizzard. In other words, it was completed when Linley was still sixteen years old." The golden-haired man laughed. "At the time, I had been wondering why that blizzard was so unnaturally fierce. But now, thinking back, I imagine it must have had something to do with the impending birth of this sculpture of Master Linley's."

Instantly, all of the nobles and magnates below laughed.

"Alright, enough with the small talk." Pointing at the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', the golden-haired man said, "This sculpture has absolutely reached the Grandmaster level. More importantly, this sculpture is extremely large. To be absolutely honest, we could actually chop it into five pieces and auction each piece off separately."

The wealthy nobles below all roared in laughter as they began to chatter.

"I'm just joking, of course. Each of the figures pictured in this sculpture has its own aura and charm. When put together, they seem to form a wondrous love story. I believe many connoisseurs of stonesculpting who are present can sense the sad but beautiful love story behind this sculpture."

The golden-haired man sighed. "Each of these five figures have been carved at the Grandmaster level. When put together, they will give the viewer a very unique, very special sensation. I am absolutely unable to guess what the price for this sculpture will be."

"And most importantly of all, when Master Linley finished this sculpture, he was sixteen! Just sixteen years old!" The golden-haired man's voice began to boom. "I have never, in my life, found myself at such a loss for words. I have no way of verbally expressing the admiration I feel for Master Linley. He...is a true genius!"

These words caused yet another commotion amongst the watching nobles.

For a sixteen year old to complete a sculpture like this was nothing short of a miracle.

But in their booth, the Debs clan was totally silent.

"That detestable bastard." Kalan was filled with rage and hatred towards this golden-haired auctioneer. After that little speech of his, the bidding war for this sculpture was sure to become even more extreme.

"I simply cannot imagine Master Linley's future accomplishments. And that is precisely why this sculpture, the first sculpture made by Master Linley to shock the world, is so valuable! Alas...unfortunately, I myself don't have much money, as otherwise, even if I had to sell off all my family's possessions, I would still buy this sculpture." The golden-haired man said with a laugh. "Alright, let's start the auction. Bids will start at 1 million gold coins. I trust no one will object?"

A million gold coins!

That was the starting point for this auction?

Many of the lesser nobles who had been hoping to get lucky were suddenly brought to their senses. If they weren't members of an extremely wealthy, powerful clan, they shouldn't even think about trying to fight over this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"Each bid must be at least 100,000 gold coins higher than the last." The golden-haired man added. "Alright. The auction for Master Linley's sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', now officially begins!"

Immediately, the auction hall fell silent.

"1.5 million!" A noble seated in the bottom row immediately made a bid.

Linley was watching the bidding going on below from the third floor. From Linley's clothes, the little Shadowmouse, Bebe, also stuck his head out to watch the proceedings.

"Boss, in the future, I can eat all the roast chicken and roast duck that I want, and drink all the wine I want as well." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

"No problem." Linley rubbed Bebe's little head.

As far as he was concerned, Bebe was just like a brother to him.

"Yeah! In the future, life will be sweet." Bebe was so excited that his eyes gleamed. Craning his neck, he leaned over to look down. "Whoah. Two million gold already. Higher, higher please." Bebe constantly urged the price to go higher. Watching Bebe, Linley couldn't help but laugh.

King Clayde, the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai, warmly clapped Linley on his back. "Linley, let me help give you a boost!"

"Austoni, five million gold coins!" Clayde instructed Austoni.

Austoni walked over to a speaking platform, then said in a bright voice, "His Majesty, Clayde, bids five million gold coins!"

"Thank you, Majesty." Linley immediately said.

"Haha, no worries." Clayde put his arm around Linley's shoulders in a friendly manner. "Linley, regardless of whether or not you choose to join me, there's no reason for us to constantly maintain decorum as ruler and subject." Clayde spoke very casually and freely.

Linley was beginning to feel well-disposed towards Clayde.

He truly was a very magnetic, charismatic leader.

"Your Majesty, please forgive me, but I would like to go back and consult with my father first. If nothing out of the ordinary happens, I intend to remain in the Kingdom of Fenlai." Linley said with a smile.

"Yes, you absolutely should talk this over with your father." Clayde frowned very slightly. "But Linley, from what I hear, your father has left Wushan township. I spent some time investigating, but couldn't figure out where your father has gone to. It is as though...he's disappeared."

As soon as Linley's fame had exploded, as part of his plan to pull Linley to his side, Clayde sent some people to meet with the family of Linley.

But Hogg was no longer at Wushan township.

"My father isn't currently at Wushan township?" Linley felt a bit suspicious, but then he laughed. "Perhaps my father has gone somewhere else for a while. Father can't always be at Wushan township."

"Perhaps." Clayde didn't continue with this topic.

Hogg truly had hidden himself quite well. Otherwise, if the ruler of a kingdom wished to find someone, how could they fail to?

.....

Within a private booth on the second level.

"Five million gold coins?! Dogshit!" Kalan swore foully, something he rarely did.

Bernard, clan leader of the Debs clan, had a gloomy look on his face. He said in a low voice, "Kalan, you should know what sort of situation the clan is currently facing. Right now, the clan's future is uncertain. We can't waste too much money on this affair. Based on our clan's deliberations, at most we can spare eight million gold coins for you. This is our bottom line."

Kalan nodded.

Kalan knew very well that his clan's entire total net worth was only around a hundred million gold coins, and most of that net worth was bound up in illiquid assets. Their liquid assets were, at most, around twenty million gold coins or so. The clan couldn't possibly waste all of their liquid reserves on a single sculpture.

It was already very kind of the clan to not force Kalan and Alice to separate.

"5.3 million gold!" Someone in another second-level booth made a bid.

That golden-haired, middle-aged man began to grow excited. "5.3 million gold coins! The lowest valuation of one of the Ten Masterpieces was 5.28 million gold coins, but now, the list of the Ten Masterpieces has changed. I can formally announce that the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', has officially joined the ranks of the Ten Masterpieces!"

"Young master Yale of the Dawson Conglomerate bids six million gold coins!" Austoni once again announced from the third level.

Upon hearing this price, Kalan's face was beginning to turn black.

The price had reached six million gold coins so quickly. This truly had exceeded Kalan's expectations. Based on Kalan's predictions, given that the cheapest of the Ten Masterpieces was valued at 5.28 million gold coins, the eight million gold coins he had prepared should have been more than enough.

But...

Kalan wasn't a true collector. He didn't have a deep understanding of the field of stonesculpting.

Those true connoisseurs could totally sense the unique, soul-stirring aura of this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', especially when viewing all five images together. Such a thing was extremely rare. In the entire history of the Yulan continent, there had never been a case of five figures carved into a single sculpture, especially in such a manner as to evoke a sad, beautiful feeling in the viewer.

What's more, the sculptor was only sixteen years old when this was completed. And he was a genius magus!

"I cannot allow the price to continue rising like this." Kalan frowned.

He knew that if the price continued to rise slowly, his chances of winning the auction would grow slimmer and slimmer.

"Eight million gold coins!" Kalan's loud voice announced his bid.

From six million gold coins to eight million gold coins. A sudden increase of two million gold coins. This sort of explosive increase was enough to stun everyone present. After all, even the Ten Masterpieces were only worth so much. Even those three precious sculptures by Proulx were only worth around seven million gold each.

True collectors didn't collect just for the sake of collecting; they had a keen eye for value as well.

Otherwise, if they just wildly threw their money around, they would bankrupt the clan.

The golden-haired, middle-aged man immediately shouted loudly, "The Debs clan bids eight million gold coins! Such a nice, tidy, neat increase to eight million gold coins. From this, one can tell that they are determined to win this auction for this sculpture! I can already imagine how, in the future, once Master Linley becomes a Saint-level combatant, this sculpture's price will no longer just be eight million gold coins. Most likely, by then, it will be worth sixteen million gold coins!"

This golden-haired man's promotion ability was really very fierce.

But none of those who were present were fools. All of them were pondering...after all, even if they had money, it had to be spent in a meaningful way.

....

On the third level of the auction hall, Linley, Yale, King Clayde, Cardinal Guillermo, and Cardinal Lampson were all engaged in idle chatter and laughter as they watched the below events.

"Third Bro, that Kalan has made his bid." Yale said in a low voice.

Linley couldn't help but turn to look at Kalan's booth. He could clearly see Kalan holding hands with Alice inside their booth. Judging from Kalan's expression, he was very agitated.

"Third Bro, let me give him a bit of pressure. No matter what, we can't allow your sculpture to fall into his hands." Yale said in a soft voice.

"No need." Linley slowly shook his head.

Linley was staring directly at Alice. Sitting there in the booth, Alice looked like a pitiable little girl who had suffered some sort of mistreatment. All of the other members of the Debs clan were looking at Alice with a hint of dissatisfaction in their eyes. After all, their clan was spending an enormous amount of money for Alice's sake.

"If they really want it, let them have it." Linley said emotionlessly.

Sitting next to him, Guillermo and Lampson exchanged glances, then chuckled.

.....

Within the private booth.

All the members of the Debs clan were feeling very nervous. But of course, Alice and Kalan were the most nervous of all.

"Relax, Alice. Eight million gold coins is already an extremely high price. It won't get any higher." Kalan comforted Alice...but who was going to console him? Because the clan had only authorized him to bid up to eight million gold.

That golden-haired middle-aged man lifted up a small hammer. "The Debs clan has bid eight million gold. Is anyone going to outbid them? If not...I am going to begin the countdown."

“Ten million gold.”

A rather lazy voice sounded out from one of the seats in the middle of the first level. Up till now, virtually all of the bids for this sculpture, ‘Awakening From the Dream’, had come from those extremely powerful clans seated in the second level. They were the ones who were really engaged in this bidding war. Those nobles sitting below were just there to watch the excitement. Nobody expected one of them to make a bid as well.

“None of you have any insight. From what I can tell, this ‘Awakening From the Dream’ can be considered to be the start of an entirely new style of stonesculpting. Its carving style is totally different from every other sculpture, and what’s more, it has five images with totally unique yet connecting auras. It definitely is worth ten million gold coins.” That man who bid ten million gold coins said casually.

From the loose, baggy long robes of this thirty to forty year old man, everyone could sense his lazy, indolent nature.

“Ten million gold coins?”

Within their private booth, Alice and Kalan were both stunned.

“Big brother Kalan.” Alice called out in a low voice, while looking at him with urgency in her eyes.

Perhaps others would feel pride at being the inspiration for a Grandmaster-level sculpture. But this ‘Awakening From the Dream’ of Linley’s was different. Anyone who had ever spent any time analyzing sculptures would be easily be able to tell from the aura given off by those five figures that there was a romantic history between Linley and Alice.

If Alice had just married into a small clan, that wouldn’t be as much of an issue.

But...she was marrying into the clan of Kalan Debs.

Kalan was the future successor to the leadership of the Debs clan, and the Debs clan was one of the top three clans of the entire Kingdom of Fenlai.

“Calm down, calm down.” Kalan comfortingly held Alice’s hand.

But Alice could feel that Kalan’s hand was covered in sweat.

“Father...” Kalan turned towards his father, Bernard, then looked at his mother. His parents both doted on him exceedingly, which was why they were willing to spend eight million gold coins on Kalan’s behalf. After all, even to the Debs clan, eight million gold coins was an exceedingly large sum.

"Kalan, don't even think about it. The clan can't possibly hand over ten million gold coins just for the sake of your fiancée." Bernard said, his face extremely solemn.

Kalan was stunned. Even Alice turned her head to look at Bernard, her eyes filled with worry and a hint of supplication.

"We'll act in accordance with our previous discussion." Bernard totally ignored Alice's silent appeal as he coldly pronounced his judgment.

Kalan froze for a long moment, while by his side, Alice tightly clutched his hands, staring into Kalan's eyes. Alice fully understood what Bernard meant by his words just now. Alice was extremely unwilling to accept this result.

Kalan glanced at Alice. He let out a helpless sigh, then slightly shook his head.

"Big brother Kalan, I'm not willing..." Alice said in a small voice.

Kalan clasped Alice's hands. He gently shook his head again. "There's no other way. Alice...I am the heir to our clan. I have to put the considerations of the clan first. I hope you are willing to sacrifice a little bit for me as well. I promise you that my heart towards you will never waver."

Alice fell silent.

The heir to the clan!

These five simple words guaranteed that every single action of Kalan's would reflect upon the honor and glory of the Debs clan. Although Bernard loved and doted on his son very much, no matter what, he could not permit Alice to become Kalan's principal wife.

That's right. There was no way she could become the principal wife.

In other words, any children which Alice bore Kalan in the future would not be able to become a heir, or be considered to be direct line of descent.

In truth, ever since the 'Awakening From the Dream' had been viewed by many people, the elders of the Debs clan had been constantly urging Kalan to give up Alice. Even if Kalan insisted on marrying her, they didn't wish for Alice to become his principal wife. But Kalan had remained steadfast.

In the end, Bernard, the doting father, compromised. He decided that if they were able to purchase this 'Awakening From the Dream', then this matter would more or less be at an end.

But from the looks of it...

"Big brother Kalan!" Alice looked at Kalan, her eyes turning moist. At the same time, she turned to look at the other members of the Debs clan. But at this moment, neither Kalan, nor Bernard, nor Kalan's mother, paid

Alice any mind.

At that moment, Alice felt her heart grow cold.

She suddenly thought back to everything she had experienced with Linley, how Linley had protected her and unstintingly cherished her. In the past, she had always taken Linley's constant yielding to her for granted, but at this moment, how she longed for that feeling!

Raising her head, her gaze passed through the glass window to stare at the third level. But all she could see was the black glass.

"Ten million gold! Ten million gold! Is anyone willing to bid higher?" That golden-haired man was calling out from the platform.

The man dressed in the loose robes casually glanced around. And then, he directly addressed that golden-haired auctioneer. "Hey, stop wasting time. Hurry up and start counting." The nobles nearby all began to laugh.

How could an auctioneer possibly obey the commands of one of the bidders below?

Based on their understanding of this golden-haired auctioneer, they knew him to be someone who would constantly escalate the bidding wars until the price reached an extremely high level.

But upon hearing the words of the man in the loose robes, the auctioneer seemed to have been hypnotized. Very naturally, he said, "Okay, then I'll start counting! Three, two..."

"10.1 million gold coins!"

An ancient-sounding voice rang out from one of the second-level private booths.

Everyone's attention turned towards that booth. Even that man dressed in the loose robes turned to stare at that booth in astonishment. In that second level booth, aside from the Debs clan, every single clan present was one of the major, world-spanning clans of the Yulan continent.

The wealth of those clans was far higher than that of the Debs clan.

"Whoah, so there's someone here who appreciates value after all. But raising it by just 100,000 is a bit too stingy. 10.3 million gold coins." The man in the loose robes said casually, grinning.

Linley and the others on the third level all noticed the man in the loose robes now, but from their current angle, they could only see the man from the side, and were unable to see his face clearly.

"Hrm?"

Cardinal Guillermo and Cardinal Lampson of the Radiant Church both suddenly rose to their feet. Frowns on their face, they walked to the opposite end of the glass, carefully looking down at the loosely-attired man below.

Just at that moment...

The loosely robed man seemed to have discovered the presence of the two Cardinals, as he raised his head upwards and glanced towards them.

"Him?"

The faces of the two Cardinals suddenly turned bone white.

Guillermo and Lampson exchanged glances, then they both shook their heads. In truth, the Radiant Church had already come to a decision about this auction. They had decided to spend a very large sum of money to purchase this sculpture, and thus improve the relationship between them and Linley.

But upon seeing this man, both Guillermo and Lampson silently decided to change their course of action.

"It's best that we not get into a bidding war with this madman." Cardinal Guillermo said softly.

Cardinal Lampson nodded as well. "I definitely don't want to agitate that madman either."

Although they both referred to this person as a 'madman', the fear they felt towards him was fear which was etched into their bones. Both Lampson and Guillermo were very much aware as to how terrifying that thirty or forty year old man could be. Lampson, in particular...

Because if it wasn't for this madman, Lampson probably wouldn't have had the opportunity to be promoted to the rank of Cardinal.

There were only five Cardinals at any time within the Radiant Church. Precisely because this madman had casually killed one of the previous Cardinals, Lampson had the opportunity to be promoted to his current position. But even though he had killed a Cardinal, the Holy Emperor was still unwilling to be enemies with this madman.

"10.4 million gold coins." That old voice rang out once again from the second level.

The loosely robed old man raised his head up, glancing up with a frown. "You really are irritating. 11 million gold coins."

"11 million, this gentleman is willing to bid 11 million gold coins. Is anyone willing to bid any higher?" That golden-haired auctioneer was growing excited. After all, even the 'Bloody-eyed Maned Lion' sculpture, the greatest of the Ten Masterpieces, was only worth 13 million.

On the third level, Guillermo asked Lampson quietly, "Lampson. Do you know which clan is situated in that booth? They actually dare to struggle with that madman? Are they tired of living?"

"Director Maia." Lampson called over Director Maia, seated not too far from them.

Director Maia immediately came over.

"Director Maia. Do you know which clan is located within that booth?" Lampson asked. "The one where the leader is a young woman, I believe." Being on the third level, Lampson naturally could see the people seated on the sofas in the second level booths.

As for that elderly man, he seemed to be that woman's servant.

Director Maia took a glance, then laughed. "Lord Lampson. Lord Guillermo. This young lady is a female in the principal line of inheritance for the Leon clan of the Yulan Empire. This booth was reserved under the name of the Leon clan."

"The Leon clan?" Lampson and Guillermo were both startled.

In the Yulan Empire, the most ancient Empire in the Yulan continent, the Leon clan was ranked fifth amongst the major clans. A clan which could rank in the top five of the Yulan Empire was capable of easily destroying the Debs clan.

What's more, the majority of the descendants of the Leon clan all lived within the Yulan Empire, and thus in the Yulan Empire, they had an enormous web of influence.

"Guillermo, I believe that in our Ernst Institute, there was someone formerly known as the number one genius of the Institute by the name of 'Dixie'. He seems to be from the Yulan Empire's Leon clan, correct?" Lampson asked.

Guillermo was comparatively more familiar with the affairs of the Ernst Institute.

"Right, and not just Dixie. He has a sister as well, whose name I can't recall. These two siblings both requested to be allowed to study at our Ernst Institute. Just a few days ago, though, this Dixie applied to graduate." Guillermo directly revealed what he knew.

Lampson nodded as well.

"Seems like this girl is Dixie's younger sister." Lampson looked towards that booth.

Within the Leon booth in the second level. Dressed in violet and blue, and seated on the sofa, Delia had a tranquil expression on her face. Through the window, she stared down at the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"Miss, stop fighting. That person below isn't someone that you can afford to anger." The old man was beginning to grow frantic.

As one of the elite clans of the Yulan Empire, the Leon clan was very clear as to the various super experts as well as hidden powers. They knew very well that although they were an elite clan, there were some people whom they simply could not afford to offend.

For example...that thirty or forty year old man below.

The old man knew very well that although he himself was already four hundred years old, even before he had been born, the loosely attired man below looked the way he currently did.

“Don’t worry, Grandpa Shaw [Xiu]. Just help me send this letter to him, ok?” Delia took out a pen and quickly wrote a few words down on a piece of paper, before handing it to this old man.

The old man received the piece of paper. Upon seeing its contents, he was stunned.

“Miss, you...this...” The old man was totally flabbergasted by this letter.

“Don’t worry about it. Just hand this letter to him.” Delia didn’t hesitate in the slightest. The old man did, but after a moment, he still left the booth and headed to the first floor.

“12 million gold coins!”

Delia’s clear voice rang out from within the booth.

The loosely attired man below frowned, and a baleful aura seemed to gather between his furrowed brows. But just at this moment, the old man named ‘Shaw’ walked over to the loosely attired man. Upon reaching his side, he respectfully bowed. “Milord, I am a servant of the Leon clan. This is the letter my young mistress has sent to you.”

Furrowing his brows with surprise, the loosely attired man accepted the letter with some curiosity.

"Uh..." Upon seeing the contents of the letter, the loosely attired man's eyes lit up, and then he began to laugh.

"Fine, fine, I won't fight it, I won't fight it." The letter in the loosely robed man's hands turned directly to dust, and then he sat back down again, grinning. He even raised his head to look up at Delia, seated on the sofa within her booth on the second level.

At this moment, within the third level of the auction hall.

Upon hearing that clear voice call out the words '12 million gold', both Linley and Yale were stunned. That voice was simply too familiar. Linley had known the owner of that voice since the first day he had entered the Ernst Institute.

"It's Delia." Yale said with amazement.

Linley immediately walked forward towards the glass, to a vantage point where he could look into Delia's booth. Indeed, Delia was dressed in a conservative violet outfit and seated on a sofa, staring at the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"Three...two...one..." "Bang!"

The golden-haired man slammed the mallet down, then excitedly called out, "Congratulations to the Leon family for using 12 million gold coins to win this auction and acquire this sculpture of Master Linley's. I now have the honor of announcing that this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', has the third highest price amongst the Ten Masterpieces. Only Master Hoover's 'Bloody-eyed Maned Lion' and Master Proulx's 'Hope' have valuations surpassing that of 'Awakening From the Dream'."

The entire auction hall began to be filled with commotion, and a raucous applause could be heard as well.

But Linley continued to stand there, next to the window on the third level, staring at Delia. And then, he turned to look at Alice, seated in the other booth. Both of these women were seated on sofas, but on Delia's face, there was a hint of a smile, while Alice's face was drained of all color.

Book 5, The Godsword, Bloodviolet – Chapter 17, Going Home

Both sides of the auction hall were filled with wealthy nobles. The groups of nobles separated into two sides in order to open a corridor for the departure of the Cardinals Guillermo and Lampson of the Radiant Church, King Clayde of Fenlai, Director Maia of the Proulx Gallery, young master Yale of the Dawson Conglomerate, and of course, the genius magus and genius sculptor, Master Linley.

These people walked in the middle corridor, chatting and laughing amongst themselves as they headed towards the exit of the Proulx Gallery.

“Lord Guillermo. Lord Lampson.”

“Your Majesty.”

“Master Linley.”

.....

All of the surrounding nobles and magnates were smiling and greeting them with modesty and goodwill. The Debs clan, however, had been squeezed into a corner. Her head covered firmly by her hat, Alice couldn't help but to raise her head and take a peek at Linley, who was buried within a sea of well-wishing nobles and magnates.

In this day and age, Linley had become a legendary genius.

A seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank whose achievements in the field of sculpture rivaled that of Proulx, Hope Jensen, Hoover, and the other Grandmasters. A genius such as he was would naturally be viewed as the most glittering star in the sky, worthy of everyone's admiration. Slowly, the two Cardinals, King Clayde, Linley, Yale, and the others disappeared in the distance.

Only then did all of the nobles and wealthy moguls leave as well.

"You must be Alice." A clear voice suddenly rang out.

Several members of the Debs clan looked behind them into the hall.

A beautiful, golden-haired woman walked over to them, while by her side was an old man with a warm smile on his face. But both this woman and the old servant had an aura of nobility that emanated from their bones, naturally making others feel inferior to them.

Seeing her, Bernard immediately said modestly, "Lord Shaw, this must be Miss Delia. I've long heard that the Leon clan's legendary Miss Delia is so devastatingly beautiful that she can cause the downfall of a kingdom. Today, upon seeing her, I must say that she is even more beautiful than the legend."

The influence of the Debs clan was limited to the Kingdom of Fenlai. Compared to the continent-spanning Leon clan, they were incomparably minute.

"Oh, clan leader Bernard of the Debs clan?" Delia glanced at Bernard.

Bernard modestly nodded.

"And this must be your son Kalan's fiancée, correct?" Delia looked at Alice, who was hiding behind Kalan.

Bernard immediately smiled. "Her? No, she's not the principal wife of my son Kalan."

"Not the principal wife?" A cold smile appeared on the face of Delia, and she slowly walked towards Alice. Bernard didn't dare to block her way. When Delia neared Kalan, Kalan actually puffed out his chest and tried to courageously block her path.

But when he met Delia's frosty gaze, Kalan suddenly felt his heart grow cold.

When he reminded himself that this was a young mistress of the Leon clan, Kalan felt all the more uneasy. Right now, the relationship between the Debs clan and the Dawson Conglomerate was already terrible. If they offended the Leon clan as well...it would be simply too easy for the Leon clan to deal with the Debs clan.

"Alice." Delia stared into Alice's eyes.

Alice raised her head, forcing herself to match Delia's gaze, doing her best to calm her beating heart.

But Delia only laughed. In a soft voice, she said, "Alice...I really don't know why Linley fell for you?" Alice's face grew pale, but she replied, "That's none of your business!"

"None of my business?" Delia let out a calm chuckle. "Right. It's none of my business. But I really feel pity for you. You actually gave up Linley, but the result of that was? You aren't even going to be a principal wife within this Debs clan. I imagine you feel regret...but unfortunately, you'll never have that chance again. Because a person like you will never, ever have the chance to interact with Linley again. In the future, you two will belong in different worlds. Do you understand?"

Delia totally ignored the ugly look on Kalan's face, and she turned directly to look at Bernard.

"Forgive me for disturbing you." Delia said extremely courteously.

Bernard immediately bowed modestly. "Miss Delia, by your leave."

That old man by Delia's side cast a look at Kalan, who still had that ugly look on his face. With a cold sneer, he followed Delia out. But Bernard continued to watch them leave with a courteous smile on his face. Only after Delia and her servant had left did he turn, fixing Alice and Kalan with a deadly glare.

"Absolutely disgraceful!" Bernard viciously snapped at them.

Neither Kalan nor Alice dared to make a sound. Under this aura of oppressiveness, the Debs clan returned home.

.....

Within the Lucas clan's mansion in Fenlai City.

"Master Linley, no, no, there's no need." Marquis Jebbs was hurriedly trying to refuse Linley. "There's really no need for the 600,000 gold coins. Master Linley, I am so incredibly sorry. I really had no idea that you had reached such an incredible level in the field of sculpting."

Jebbs, that obstinate old man. Right now, when he looked at Linley, his eyes were filled with something akin to veneration for an idol.

Marquis Jebbs didn't have many hobbies. The one thing he loved to do was collect items.

Naturally, he felt deep veneration for those Grandmaster-level artisans of each field. Perhaps even if the King of Fenlai was present, he wouldn't feel as much awe as he did now towards Linley.

"How about let's just name the price at 180,000 gold, is that fine? My clan originally bought it for 180,000 gold coins, so that would still be fair. Master Linley, I really am not willing to make money off of you. If I took advantage and earned money from you, Master Linley, I wouldn't be able to sleep well at night."

That adorable old man, Master Marquis, was extremely stubborn.

“Marquis Jebbs, in the past, when your Lucas clan bought this warblade ‘Slaughterer’ from my clan, the price you paid was 180,000 gold coins, true. But after all these centuries, due to inflation, the 180,000 gold coins you paid then is worth much more now.” Linley wasn’t willing to take advantage of the Lucas clan either.

But Marquis Jebbs only stubbornly stared at Linley.

“Haha, you guys...you guys are just so...” Next to them, Yale was laughing so hard that he was clutching his belly. “The seller is frantically trying to lower his product’s price, and would rather give it away for free. But the buyer is trying to raise the price higher. I have never seen something like this before.”

Linley let out a helpless laugh as well. “Marquis Jebbs, how about this. Centuries ago, that 180,000 gold coins had a purchasing power comparable to around 360,000 gold in this era. Let’s just go with 360,000 gold coins. Don’t refuse any longer! If you do, I’ll just throw down my magicrystal card and leave.”

Linley withdrew his magicrystal card from his breast pocket.

Marquis Jebbs looked unhappily at Linley, but finally nodded. “Fine, then.”

Linley couldn’t help but laugh.

Marquis Jebbs suddenly laughed a bit shyly as well. “Master Linley, I have a small favor to ask, if I might?"

"Go ahead." Linley laughed, looking at the Marquis.

Marquis Jebbs gestured at his servants, who quickly carried over an erect stone tablet from deeper within his mansion.

"Master Linley, I only hope that you can put your signature on this tablet. If you do, I will treasure this forever." Marquis Jebbs looked at Linley with hopeful eyes.

Linley chuckled, then withdrew his straight chisel from his breast pocket.

With a casual flick of the wrist, the chisel began to fly about in a blur as stone dust began to fall off from that stone tablet. In the time it took to take three breaths, Linley was finished and withdrew his chisel. Gently blowing air on the tablet, all of the remaining dust flew away from it, revealing a name artistically written, as though it were a flying dragon or a dancing phoenix.

LINLEY

Staring at that word, Marquis Jebbs' eyes were shining. "What an elegant carving technique, and what beautiful letters. This word is far more valuable than 360,000 gold coins."

Hearing this, Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

.....

On the road from Fenlai City to Wushan township, the path was lined with redwood trees on either side. Riding a large stallion, Linley was galloping forward with a huge case on his back. This case was several hundred pounds heavy. Fortunately, this stallion was a particularly fine one that had been provided by the Dawson Conglomerate. Normal horses wouldn't be able to move quickly when carrying such a burden.

Behind Linley, a troop of over a hundred Knights was following him.

This troop had been gifted to Linley by the Radiant Church via Cardinal Lampson and Cardinal Guillermo. What the Radiant Church claimed was that Linley's safety was of paramount importance to them, which could be seen from the recent abduction attempt. The weakest member of this troop was a warrior of the fifth rank. It belonged to one of the ace regiments of the Knights of the Radiant Temple.

Over a hundred warhorses galloped behind, kicking up a cloud of dust.

From far away, the image of Wushan township drew closer and closer to Linley's sight. In his mind, he couldn't help but think back to the events of his youth, such as the training he had undergone in the training grounds, as well as that terrifying sight of the Velocidragon.

In the past, in Linley's eyes, a Velocidragon was the symbol of utter invincibility. But now, to Linley, a Velocidragon was no longer much of anything.

"Rumble, rumble."

The earth shook as this troop of elite knights and warhorses continued on their way. The shudders could be felt from far away.

"What a mighty troop."

While walking in the middle of Wushan township, Hillman couldn't help but turn and stare. The sound of the hoof steps was orderly, fast and forceful, striking fear into Hillman's heart. Even when he was in the army, he had never encountered such a high-quality force of knights.

The lowest of the knights present was a warrior of the fifth rank. How could a troop belonging to one of the ace regiments of the Radiant Church be of low quality?

The sound of their warhorses galloping alone could strike fear into many.

"Who is that?" Hillman instantly saw that there was a person riding ahead of the troop.

"Linley." The expression on Hillman's face changed, and he quickly ran at high speed towards the Baruch clan manor.

After entering the bounds of Wushan township proper, Linley instructed his troop of knights to lower their speeds. Linley, only, continued to move at a relatively fast speed towards his clan's manor. Seeing from afar that vine-wrapped, scarred wall, Linley thought back to one event after another of his youth.

"The Baruch clan, my roots, my foundation!" Carrying the warblade, 'Slaughterer', on his back, Linley's heart was filled with pride.

Linley could still clearly remember, the first time he had left for the Ernst Institute, what his father had said to him. Linley believed that he would never, ever forget these words from his father.

"Linley, remember the centuries long desire of generations of Baruch elders. Remember the shame of the Baruch clan!"

"After graduating, you will at least be a magus of the sixth rank. As long as you train hard, becoming a magus of the seventh rank shouldn't be too hard. In the future, you will definitely have the ability to regain our clan's ancestral heirloom. If you fail to do so, even in death, I will not forgive you."

"Even in death, I will not forgive you!"

.....

That voice reverberated in Linley's mind. But this time, feeling the weight of the 'Slaughterer' on his back, Linley only felt a surge of pride.

"Father, I'm coming back"!

"Father, I have brought back our warblade, 'Slaughterer'!"

Linley flew off his horse's back and directly charged into his clan's courtyard.

"Father!" Linley shouted loudly.

"I'm back! I brought the warblade 'Slaughterer' back!" Linley was filled with joy and excitement. The elders of his clan had labored for centuries. His father had pined for it his entire life. And now, he had finally fulfilled his father's desire!

"The warblade, 'Slaughterer'?" A voice rang out.

Linley turned and looked behind him. It was Hillman.

"Uncle Hillman, where's father? Quick, have him come out. Haha, I've finally brought back the warblade 'Slaughterer'. Honest! I have the ancestral heirloom of our Dragonblood Warrior clan. I've finally brought it back. Quick, tell me where my father is. Once my father finds out, he will be so ecstatic. Tonight, we are absolutely going to get drunk. Uncle Hillman, don't worry, tonight, I'm not going to shirk my duty. I'll definitely get drunk with you. If we aren't drunk, we won't stop!"

Linley was so excited, he continued to babble without stopping. He even removed the case from his back, holding it in his arms as he stared at Uncle Hillman.

But....

There was no hint of joy in Hillman's face. In fact, there was a hint of misery.

"Un....Uncle Hillman?" Linley began to frown. Staring at Uncle Hillman, he said, "Uncle Hillman, where is my father?"

Looking at Linley, Hillman forced out a smile. "Linley, you've brought back the warblade, 'Slaughterer'? If your father knew, he definitely would be ecstatic. Definitely."

"Where is my father?"

"Your father. He. He passed away three months ago." Hillman took a deep breath, then finally, slowly said these words. As he did, his eyes turned moist.

Linley suddenly felt as though countless thunderbolts had went off by his ears. His brain went blank.

"CLANG!"

The case in Linley's hands fell heavily to the ground. The lid to the case flew open, revealing a giant warblade which emanated a killing aura and was tinted with a slight, bloody red color. That cold, killing aura and that bloody aura filled the entire hall in an instant.

"Dead?"

Linley stared disbelievingly at Hillman.

Hillman nodded slightly.

Suddenly, Linley laughed. "Haha, Uncle Hillman, you must be lying to me. Haha, I've brought back the warblade 'Slaughterer'. Look, Uncle Hillman, I've brought back the warblade 'Slaughterer'. How could my father be dead? He is going to view this warblade first."

With one hand, Linley reached out and picked up the warblade 'Slaughterer'. Instantly, that bloody aura filled even Hillman's heart with trepidation.

"Uncle Hillman, look. I brought back the 'Slaughterer'. And I have to tell my father that I am now capable of transforming into a Dragonblood Warrior." Scales began forming around Linley's hands, and in a short while, Linley's hands transformed into draconic claws.

Grabbing onto Hillman's shoulders with his two draconic claws, Linley stared into Hillman's eyes. "Uncle Hillman, look, I can already transform into a Dragonblood Warrior. I've brought home the warblade 'Slaughterer' to our clan. It's true. Where is father? My father!"

"I am going to show the warblade 'Slaughterer' to him!"

"I haven't yet had the chance to tell him that I can become a Dragonblood Warrior!"

Those draconic claws gripped Hillman by the shoulders, but the owner of those claws, Linley, stared beseechingly into Hillman's eyes.

"Uncle Hillman, I'm begging you, tell me, where is my father?" Like a poor, lost orphan child, Linley stared at Hillman, his eyes begging. Like a drowning man clutching at a stalk of grass, Linley clutched at Hillman.

Hillman gently shook his head. "Linley, your father...is dead!"

Linley laughed. Laughed so desolately. "No...no way. I have to show him the warblade 'Slaughterer'. I have to tell him that I can transform into a Dragonblood Warrior. And tonight, I'm going to drink wine with him."

As he spoke, tears began to cover Linley's face.

Staring at Linley, Hillman couldn't help but lower his face, and then two rivers of tears began to flow down his own face.

"Impossible. Impossible!"

Gripping onto Hillman fiercely with his two claws, Linley stared a deathly stare at Hillman. His eyes even took on that same, icy, dark golden color of the Armored Razorback Wurm. The entire hall was suddenly filled with a baleful aura that was even more terrifying than the one emitted by the warblade 'Slaughterer'.

A low, hoarse growl emitted from Linley's throat...

"Tell me....where is my father?"

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 1, The Dusty Affairs of the Past

Hillman was being gripped so tightly by Linley's claws that his clothes were torn open. Scarlet blood slowly leaked out, staining his clothes red.

But Hillman didn't notice in the slightest.

Staring at Linley, Hillman said in a downcast voice, "Linley, calm down first."

"Tell me." Linley was staring at Hillman.

Hillman said solemnly. "The troop of Knights following you is about to arrive. For now, let's not allow others to know about the affairs of your clan. Come with me first." Hillman shook his shoulders loose of Linley's claws, then grabbed Linley's scaled arms and with the intention of pulling him to the ancestral halls...only to find that he was unable to budge Linley.

"Linley!" Hillman turned his head, a spark of anger in his eyes.

"Uncle Hillman, I know how to act."

Linley's face was deeply sunken, but he took a deep breath, retracting the scales on his arms into his body, returning to normal. Just as he once more returned the 'Slaughterer' to his case and held it, Linley could hear the sounds of hoof steps outside drawing near.

The troops of Knights of the Radiant Temple had finally arrived.

Linley turned, glancing at them coldly, but paid them no mind. He said directly to Hillman, "Uncle Hillman, lead the way."

"Alright."

Seeing that Linley was able to calm down, Hillman felt a little bit better. He immediately led Linley into the ancestral hall's direction. Linley's face remained sunken. At this moment, aside from Linley himself, perhaps nobody knew that beneath that calm expression, there lay hidden an incredibly deep, painful wound.

Neither the Shadowmouse Bebe nor Doehring Cowart made a sound.

They were connected to Linley's soul. Naturally, they could feel the unimaginable grief and pain which Linley was currently suffering.

The wind rose, catching up and hurling into the air countless leaves which had been lying on the unimaginably ancient stone tiled grounds.

"Creaaaak."

Hillman pushed open the door to the ancestral hall, then turned to look back at Linley. Holding the warblade 'Slaughterer', Linley stepped inside, his face calm. But his gaze was fixed upon those rows of spirit tablets placed in the middle of the ancestral hall. With Linley's current vision, he could clearly read the words on the newest spirit tablet, located at the front.

There were only two words on the front. "Hogg Baruch."

Linley felt his mind growing dizzy, as though he were having a hallucination. But he still stood there, unmoving. And then, still carrying the 'Slaughterer', Linley stepped forward to the stone platform in front of the spirit tablets, placing the 'Slaughterer' on top of the platform.

Linley looked at the spirit tablet, a peaceful smile appearing on his face. In a soft voice, Linley said, "Father. I'm back."

"I know that all your life, your greatest desire was that we recover our ancestral heirloom, as well as regain the bygone splendor of our clan, the Dragonblood Warrior clan." Linley spoke very carefully, as though he were afraid to startle someone. His voice was so gentle, so careful.

Linley stared at the spirit tablet. "I didn't disappoint you. I have already brought back to the Baruch clan, to the Dragonblood Warrior clan, our ancestral heirloom, the warblade 'Slaughterer'."

"Now...I have already brought back the 'Slaughterer'. And very soon, I will restore our Dragonblood Warrior clan to glory. I will make sure the entire Yulan continent knows of the splendor of our Dragonblood Warrior clan, and will make sure everyone in the Yulan continent knows your name."

"All of this, I will accomplish. I so swear."

Suddenly, a fiendish look appeared on Linley's face. "But of course, before I do all of these things. I will avenge you.”

There was no question at all in his mind. His father, Baruch, had been killed by someone.

Otherwise, based on his father’s prowess as a warrior of the sixth rank, as well as a man in the prime of his health, he couldn’t have died due to any ordinary illness. And what’s more, if he had died of illness, Hillman wouldn’t have acted so secretively. Linley’s intuition was telling him that his father’s death was no ordinary death!

“The person who caused you to die. I will make sure he dies as well!”

Within Linley’s eyes, once more there seemed to be a hint of that cold, dark gold color of the eyes of the Armored Razorback Wurm. That terrifying dark golden color.

Linley fiercely turned to stare at Hillman. “Uncle Hillman, tell me. How did my father die, exactly? In addition, where was my father buried? Also, you said my father died three months ago? Why didn’t you tell me?”

Hillman opened his mouth, but did not speak.

“Linley, first calm down,” Hillman finally said slowly.

Calm down?

How could he calm down?

"I wish so much that my father could be here and personally see this warblade, 'Slaughterer', with his own eyes. I long to tell my father that I have become a Dragonblood Warrior. I deeply desire to see my father's smile, hear his gratified laughter. See the pride on his face when I assume the Dragonform! However...all of this is now impossible."

Linley felt as though his heart had been sliced by knives.

And Hillman was asking him to calm down?

Linley wanted to angrily rebuke Hillman, but he restrained from doing so. Taking in a deep, unwilling breath, he swallowed his rage. Staring at Hillman, Linley said, "Uncle Hillman, tell me everything which happened. I want to know everything."

"Your father died three months ago. But before he died, his instructions to me were that only after you had the power of a warrior of the seventh rank could I tell you. Otherwise, I cannot tell you the circumstances surrounding his death." Hillman said solemnly.

"A warrior of the seventh rank?"

"Yes." Hillman nodded slightly. "This was the reason why I went to the Institute to look for you, but didn't inform you of your father's death or why he died. Your father's dying wishes were that I was not to allow you to know of his death, so that you could calmly focus on your studies."

Hillman looked at Linley. "Linley, it isn't that I'm not willing to tell you.

It's that this was your father's dying wish. I cannot go against it. Only if you are able to become a warrior of the seventh rank, would I be willing to tell you everything."

Linley understood.

A warrior of the seventh rank?

Linley withdrew a leather-wrapped book from his clothes and handed it to Hillman.

"This is?" Hillman looked at it with surprise.

"A magus' proof of rank." Linley's face was calm.

Every single magus, from the day he began to be evaluated, would be issued a certificate with his proof of rank. Each time he advanced a rank, there would be a record of it.

Hillman opened the book and saw that under the 'wind-style' and 'earth-style' entries, there were seven stars.

"Seventh rank...a seventh rank dual-element magus?" Hillman was stunned. He stared disbelievingly at Linley.

How old was Linley?

Only seventeen.

What did a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank represent? Hillman wasn't too clear on the specifics, but he knew that in the entire Kingdom of Fenlai, the most powerful magus present was a magus of the eighth rank. But that was an old man, well over a hundred years old.

Hillman remembered how, when he joined the army, there was a magus of the seventh rank who had arrived at the same time. He remembered the glory, the pomp of it all.

But now, little Linley, whom he had watched growing up, had become in the blink of an eye a dual-element magus of the seventh rank.

"This...this is real?" Hillman asked an extremely stupid question. Hillman knew very well that this certificate of rank definitely couldn't be fake.

"Uncle Hillman. Now you can tell me what happened, right?" Linley stared at Hillman.

Hillman nodded, then headed for the private room behind the ancestral hall. A few moments later, he came out. Walking over to Linley, he withdrew an envelope from his clothes. Presenting it to Linley, he softly said, "This was left behind by your father, right before he died. Once you read it, you will understand."

His hands trembling, Linley reached out and accepted the envelope.

There weren't any words on the envelope.

He opened the envelope and withdrew the letter. The letter had two full pages of content.

"Linley: By the time you actually read this letter, I most likely would have died a long, long time ago."

"Towards you and Wharton, my heart is filled with boundless remorse, but there is no way for me to do right by you two any longer. I only hope that you two will be able to live for a long period of time in peace, which is why I have instructed your Uncle Hillman to only provide this letter to you when you have become a warrior of the seventh rank."

When he read this, Linley's heart felt sour.

"Let me live for a long period of time in peace? I imagine that father never had expected me to become a magus of the seventh rank so quickly. After all, based on the normal rate of progression, from the sixth rank to the seventh rank would take a considerable amount of time."

"Linley, within my heart, I have held a secret for many years. Your mother did not actually die when giving birth to Wharton."

These words from his father caused Linley's heart to shudder.

Ever since he was a child, Linley had known that his mother had died when giving birth to Wharton. But apparently...that was a lie.

“That year, when your mother was pregnant with Wharton, both of us were very happy. But the medical facilities at Wushan township were simply too poor, so I went with your mother to Fenlai City. Within Fenlai City, your mother safely gave birth to Wharton. Little Wharton was very adorable, and both of us were overjoyed. Shortly after he was born, filled with joy, your mother and I took young Wharton to the Radiant Temple to pray for Wharton to be blessed. That day, both your mother and I were extremely happy. Afterwards, we left the Radiant Temple and stayed overnight at a hotel in Fenlai City.”

“That night, a group of mysterious people came to the hotel and forcibly abducted your mother. Totally outnumbered, I was only able to protect young Wharton...but I did see that on the arm of one of the assailants, there was a red, spider-like birthmark.”

As he read this, Linley himself felt as though he had been transported back to that night, ten years ago.

Under the combined attack of many assailants, unable to ward them all off, his father had only been able to protect Wharton, and could only watch powerlessly, unable to save his beloved wife.

“I know that this group of people was definitely not an ordinary group of people. The weakest of them was a warrior of the fourth rank, while the strongest was even stronger than me. Fortunately, their target was only your mother, as otherwise I would’ve died long ago. Someone capable of mobilizing a squad such as this, definitely would be a major figure in Fenlai City. I didn’t dare to go public on this affair. I took little Wharton back home and told everyone else that your mother died in childbirth.

Only your Uncle Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri know this secret.”

Seeing this, Linley’s mind was filled with questions.

Within that gang of people, the strongest was even stronger than his father, but they didn’t care about his father, only about abducting his mother. But why was his mother worth their time to abduct?

“I couldn’t let you know about this. During these past ten or so years, I have always buried this secret deep in my heart. I didn’t dare tell anyone...and I couldn’t even go by myself to investigate your mother’s whereabouts, or to find out if she was alive or dead, or who that group of people was. I didn’t dare.”

His father’s words caused Linley’s heart to feel so much pain that it clenched.

“I am the successor to the leadership of the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. At the very least, I had to raise you until you were grown. I cannot allow the Baruch lineage to come to an end in my hands. Year after year, I could only secretly endure...but every night, I found it difficult to fell asleep. The question of whether your mother was alive or dead constantly tormented me. I have endured...I have endured eleven years!”

“Linley, you have made me incredibly proud. First, you became a student at the number one magus institute in the Yulan continent. And then, you became one of the top geniuses there, at the Ernst Institute. I am filled with confidence towards you. What’s more, even little Wharton’s density of Dragonblood in his veins has reached the requisite level. I am extremely proud. For both of my sons to be so outstanding...I feel that I have done right by the ancestors of the Baruch clan! But despite all of this, I still did not dare to investigate your mother's whereabouts, because Wharton still needed a large amount of gold to sustain his costly studies."

"And so I have endured for eleven years. But when you came back from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and gave me that large sack of magicite crystals, I knew...finally, I could give up everything and go investigate whether your mother is alive or not. Although your mother has not come back in the past eleven years, and there is a probably 80% to 90% chance that she is dead, I am unwilling to give up. Even if I die, I will avenge her."

Seeing this, Linley's hands began to tremble again.

Linley understood now. In the past, because he had to support the burden of Wharton's tuition, his father didn't dare to risk his life in investigating his mother's whereabouts. But when he, Linley, had brought back that sack of magicite crystals worth 80,000 gold coins, his father no longer had any burdens left.

"Finally able to go investigating, I altered my appearance and put on a disguise as I snuck into Fenlai City. I began investigating what happened that year."

"But too much time had passed. Knowing that one of the assailants had a red spider birthmark on his upper arm, I spent an entire year searching. Finally, I found that man with the red spider birthmark. Following up on this clue, I continued to investigate. Slowly...I found out who it was that had stood behind this group of assailants."

“This group of assailants were directed by a member of the current royal clan of the Kingdom of Fenlai. And that person...is none other than the younger brother of the King of Fenlai: Duke Patterson [Bo'de'sen]!”

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 2, The Decision

In the Yulan continent, only an Emperor of an Empire had the authority to give his siblings the title of 'Prince'.

The status of a 'Prince' of an Empire was roughly equivalent to that of a 'King' in one of the kingdoms. At most, a King could confer the title of 'Duke' upon his siblings. That was the limit.

The 'Grand Dukes' ruling over the Duchies were in fact nothing more than Dukes as well.

Empire. Kingdom. Duchy. The ranks progressively went down at each level.

Duke Patterson?

The younger brother of the King of Fenlai?

Linley knew very well that the Boleyn clan, the royal clan of the kingdom of Fenlai, was an extremely powerful clan. Both of the Boleyn brothers were extremely powerful warriors. King Clayde was known as the pride of Fenlai, precisely because he was also a warrior of the ninth rank.

As for Patterson, although he couldn't match up to his older brother, he too was a warrior of the seventh rank. At the very least, he was considered a powerful person.

"Duke Patterson?" Linley's heart was filled with a hint of a killing intent.

Linley continued to read. "Disguising myself as a servant, I snuck my way into Duke Patterson's manor. After experiencing countless dangers and using a few special methods, I was able to kidnap the leader of that mysterious group, a warrior of the seventh rank. After I used some special interrogation methods, he finally confessed...that his actions were done at the direction of Duke Patterson. But according to what this man said, after they kidnapped your mother Lina, she was sent away under Duke Patterson's orders via a different troop. Clearly, behind Duke Patterson as well, there was another figure controlling things."

"Before I was able to finish the interrogation, the disappearance of the warrior of the seventh rank aroused the suspicions of Duke Patterson. Although I had made preparations, over the course of killing several experts and fleeing from Fenlai City, I was heavily wounded as well. I carefully snuck back home. Aside from your Uncle Hillman, I didn't let anyone else know. I knew that my injury was too severe, and that I wouldn't have too much time left. That's why I ended up leaving this letter for you."

"Linley, your father wasn't a good father. I've always been too cold and severe with you. I don't ask for your forgiveness; I only hope that you will be cool-headed. Now that you have the power of the seventh rank, most likely you will have the ability to do some investigating. But you must be careful, careful, careful. Neither I nor your mother Lina wish for you to die because of us."

"Linley, I'll be leaving now. As of now, you are the leader of our Baruch clan. I entrust the clan and everything in it to you."

"At this moment, how dearly do I desire to see the warblade, 'Slaughterer', with my own eyes. But I know now that this was just a wild hope. Linley...work hard. The clan now depends on you and little Wharton. In your father's life, the thing which he is the most proud of is you, and little Wharton. Two wonderful sons."

On the signature, there was a bloodstain.

Flames erupted from Linley's hands.

"Hiss..." In the blink of an eye, this letter was burnt to ashes.

Hillman, standing off to the side, looked at Linley.

Linley had just burnt the last testament of his father to ashes. But Hillman wasn't angry; in fact, he secretly nodded in approval. Although this letter was a legacy, it also contained many secrets. If it fell into the wrong hands, it would be catastrophic.

Linley turned his head to look at Hillman. "Uncle Hillman. I want to entrust you with something."

"Go ahead." Hillman looked at Linley.

Hillman had already made up his mind to assist Linley in getting vengeance.

Linley stretched his arms out, picking up the warblade 'Slaughterer', then turned to look at Hillman. "Uncle Hillman, this warblade, 'Slaughterer', is the ancestral heirloom of our Baruch clan. I hope that you can hand this warblade, 'Slaughterer', to my little brother Wharton in the O'Brien Empire. I want you to personally deliver it!"

"O'Brien Empire? Then here..." Hillman was beginning to worry about Linley.

Linley said seriously, "Uncle Hillman, don't be worried. As a dual-element magus of the seventh rank, even the Radiant Church holds me in extremely high regard. Even King Clayde, the ruler of Fenlai, was extremely courteous to me. My safety is not something you need to be concerned about."

Hillman was just a warrior. He didn't fully understand the what being a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank truly meant.

In fact, he didn't even know that Linley was now a master sculptor approaching the level of Proulx and Hope Jensen, with an extremely high status.

"If that's the case, then..." Hillman frowned.

"After you hand this warblade, 'Slaughterer', over to my younger brother, assist Grandpa Hiri and stay by my younger brother's side. Everything here, I can and will handle by myself." Linley's voice was deep, and it carried a hint of frost.

In the entire Holy Union, he was alone now. He had no family here anymore. What did he have to fear?

Linley had already made up his mind to avenge his father, as well as find out what happened to his mother. Was his mother alive or dead? In the depths of his heart, Linley was still hoping that his mother was alive. Although the chances were beyond slim, Linley was not willing to give up.

"Stay in the O'Brien Empire?" Hillman was quiet for a moment. After all, he had family here in Wushan township.

But for him, as a warrior of the sixth rank, anywhere in the world he went, he would be able to make a living for himself.

"Uncle Hillman, you can take your entire family with you. In addition, take this magicrystal card with you. This magicrystal card has not been imprinted yet, and has a million gold coins within it. Take this magicrystal card with you, all the way to the O'Brien Empire."

From within his clothes, Linley withdrew a single magicrystal card and handed it to Hillman.

"A million gold coins?" Hillman stared at Linley in astonishment.

A million gold coins was an absolute fortune. When Hogg was still alive, for the sake of a few thousand gold coins, he had to sell off his clan's possessions. Even if he sold off the entire ancestral home, he might not be able to come up with much more than a hundred thousand gold coins. But now, in the blink of an eye, Linley was handing over a magicrystal card with a million gold coins on it.

"Linley, you...where did you get this money from?" Hillman had to ask.

"Uncle Hillman, you don't need to ask. In the future, you will know."
Linley's heart, at this moment, was filled with grief and rage. He was in no mood to brag about his accomplishments as a sculptor.

Hillman nodded slightly.

"Linley, wait a moment." Hillman once more ran into the private room, then came back out with an urn, handing it to Linley.

"This is?..." Linley's gaze couldn't leave the urn. He seemed to have already guessed what this urn contained.

Hillman instructed, "Linley, these are your father's ashes. When your father died, we didn't dare to publicly announce it. We didn't even dare to bury him. Our only choice was to place his cremated ashes within the private room as we awaited your return."

Linley accepted the cremation urn. He felt that it was heavy. So heavy.

.....

The desolate wind howled. Not too far from Wushan township, there was a cemetery filled with countless tombs. At this time, though, an extremely lavish tombstone had just been erected. The short-haired Linley was currently quietly seated cross-legged in front of it.

Linley had spent a full night erecting this tombstone. Based on Linley's current level of ability, carrying a few boulders was child's play. And, given that Linley already had reached the level of a master in sculpting, naturally he was able to carve the boulder into a lavishly beautiful tombstone.

The desolate wind howled. Linley just sat there quietly.

"Linley." Hillman was carrying the warblade 'Slaughterer' on his back in the case. He appeared in front of Linley.

Linley didn't open his eyes. He only said, "Uncle Hillman, I've entrusted the warblade 'Slaughterer' to you. I entrust my younger brother, Wharton, to you and Grandpa Hiri as well. Be safe on your way there. I won't send you off."

Hillman looked at the back of Linley, still seated cross-legged. Then he took another look at the tombstone. Finally, he nodded, then silently departed.

Hillman left.

He had left, taking the warblade 'Slaughterer' with him.

From this day forward, with the ancient ancestral manor of the Baruch clan, there was no one left aside from Linley and the servants.

Suddenly...Linley opened his eyes. He stared at the tombstone.

"Father. I swear to you that I will make them pay a heavy price." Linley immediately turned and left. The Shadowmouse, Bebe, still stood on Linley's shoulders, but he seemed to be afraid to make any noise at all.

"Lord Hogg has passed away? This...this is..." A group of citizens of Wushan township were currently in mourning for Hogg's passing.

"What a wonderful nobleman he was. How could he die like this? Who knows what the future of Wushan township will be like, now. All these years, Lord Hogg has maintained such a low taxation rate. Sometimes, he would even have to pay out of pocket to the kingdom. Where will anyone possibly find another such wonderful noble?" All of the citizens of Wushan township remembered and were thankful for Hogg's benevolence.

Currently, in front of the Baruch manor, strips of white funeral cloths were hung. Linley was dressed in a set of mourning clothes as well. He was silently kneeling in front of the memorial spirit tablet set up in front of the main hall. The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was also kneeling next to Linley, not making a sound. It was as though he could feel the pain Linley was suffering.

Seven days of ritual filial mourning.

Despite the filial mourning being late.

This was the first day of mourning.

"Master Linley, Lord Guillermo is currently waiting for you." The captain of that squad of Knights of the Radiant Church said softly by Linley's side.

Linley turned his head, glancing at him coldly. The captain couldn't help but feel his heart shudder.

"Seven days of ritual filial mourning. Within these seven days, I will not pay attention to anyone or anything." Linley said coldly, and then he fell silent again.

The captain couldn't help but feel helpless.

But he knew what Linley was feeling right now. His father had just died. For his son to observe the ritual filial mourning rites was heaven's law and earth's principle; a matter of course. The captain of the knights immediately left the main hall, then instructed his subordinates to head to Fenlai City and report Linley's current situation to the Radiant Church.

"Young master Linley, don't be too sad."

The citizens of Wushan township came through in a steady stream to kowtow in front of Hogg's memorial spirit tablet. All of them remembered the benevolence Hogg had shown when he was alive.

Linley didn't speak. He only bowed in thanks to every single visiting citizen.

.....

This news quickly reached the Radiant Church, but Cardinal Lampson and Cardinal Guillermo weren't too shocked.

"Linley's father has passed away?" Guillermo nodded slightly. "No wonder back when Linley became a dual-element magus of the seventh rank, when I sent people to inquire about Linley's father, we weren't able to find anything. So he had already passed away."

The Radiant Church had a total of five Cardinals. Linley's matters were mostly handled by Cardinal Guillermo and Cardinal Lampson.

"Guillermo, let us quickly prepare some things, then go and pay our respects to Linley's father." Lampson suggested.

Guillermo nodded as well.

Actually, based on Hogg's own status, how could a Cardinal of the Radiant Church go to pay their respects to him? But Hogg was Linley's father, after all, and Linley's future prospects were unlimited. He had already been designated as an important future cornerstone of the Radiant Church by the church.

"Alright. It's already dark now. Then...let's head off early in the morning, tomorrow."

Once Hogg's death became openly known, due to the fact that the Kingdom of Fenlai had already designated Linley as a highly important figure, the news of his death quickly reached the royal palace of Fenlai. The speed by which they received this news was only slightly slower than the Radiant Church.

"Linley's father died?"

Clayde nodded to himself as well. When Linley had become a dual-element magus of the seventh rank, he too had sent people to inquire about Linley's father, and he had in fact even told Linley that his father had gone missing. As it turned out, Linley's father really had passed away after all.

"Tomorrow morning, I'll go pay my respects." Clayde reached the same decision.

Aside from Clayde, many of the most important people in Fenlai City received this news from the royal palace. Many of them venerated Master Linley, while others wanted to make friends with him. Every single one of them decided to go early next morning to that little backwater, Wushan township, to pay their respects to Linley's father.

While all of this was going on, Linley remained within his ancestral home in Wushan township, quietly observing the rites of mourning.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 3, Assembling at the Township

Late at night. Linley's bedroom.

The sound of muscles and bones rumbling could constantly be heard coming from Linley's body, while Linley's very skin was rising, then falling. Beads of sweat were pouring out of every single pore on Linley's body, but Linley's face was very calm and peaceful.

At this moment, Linley was training in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Manual.

The first time Linley activated the Dragonblood in his veins, he was vaulted directly to the rank of warrior of the sixth rank. According to the records contained within the Secret Dragonblood Manual, the first time one trained is when one's Dragonblood would be at the highest density, which is why the improvement would be so fast.

The further down the road the training continued, the harder it would become.

Especially upon reaching the ninth rank, if one wished to break through to the Saint-level, the amount of time that would be needed was probably more than all the other time spent combined.

"Right now, the Radiant Church highly values me. Given my status as a master sculptor, my personal status has dramatically increased. But my own personal power isn't enough yet. Although they are courteous to me, that is primarily because of my potential. If I am to gain revenge, I don't yet have enough personal power.”

Linley knew full well that he currently didn’t have enough power. After all, he couldn’t afford to assume the Dragonform and transform into a Dragonblood Warrior when he wanted to kill someone.

Unless the situation was critical, Linley definitely did not want to enter the Dragonblood Warrior forms. Because once it was discovered that he could transform into a Dragonblood Warrior, it would become very dangerous for him. After all, the fame of the Dragonblood Warriors was simply too great.

Once a Dragonblood Warrior entered the Saint-level, he would definitely be a peak-tier Saint-level combatant.

“Boss, you’re working too hard.” Lying on the bed, Bebe was watching Linley train.

Aside from Bebe, Doehring Cowart was also watching from the side. Doehring Cowart could clearly tell what sort of mental state Linley was in. His father had suddenly died, and he had also found out that his mother hadn’t died in childbirth after all, and had been abducted. These two pieces of news had suddenly descended upon Linley.

This sort of mental blow was far more vicious than Alice’s change of heart.

Doehring Cowart could feel the boundless hatred and murderous desires in Linley’s heart. Doehring Cowart knew very well that if Linley didn't find an outlet for that hatred, he could very well turn into a murderous demon.

"I hope that Linley will be able to get his vengeance quickly. Otherwise, if he remains in this state for too long, the changes to his heart will become greater and greater." Doehring Cowart was beginning to worry.

.....

The next morning.

Within the Baruch clan's manor, many servants were preparing all sorts of edibles. As soon as Linley stepped out of his bedroom, he saw them bustling about.

"Linley, the people who are coming today are most likely important people. Is this how you intend to receive them?" Doehring Cowart appeared by Linley's side.

Linley and Doehring Cowart had both guessed correctly. The important people of Fenlai City and of the Radiant Church had quickly received word of Linley's father's death. 80% to 90% of them had come to pay their respects to Linley's father, so naturally, Linley would have to receive them.

The materials that Linley had prepared could be considered not bad, but the skill of the chefs was too poor. There were only two chefs in the entire Wushan township whose cooking skills could be considered adequate.

"You are going to have these two chefs of this small township receive these major personages?" Doehring Cowart laughed.

"Let them taste some of the local dishes of my homeland. This is already quite enough." After speaking, Linley immediately went to eat breakfast. After breakfast, Linley continued to kneel in front of the memorial spirit tablet, observing the rites of filial mourning. By seven in the morning, hoof steps could be heard from outside the Baruch clan's manor.

An extremely lavish carriage parked itself outside the manor.

"Third Bro!" A familiar voice called out.

Still kneeling in the main hall, Linley turned his head and saw Yale, George, and Reynolds rush inside. Having suffered two heavy blows, Linley was currently feeling extremely depressed. But upon seeing those three bros whom he had grown up with at the Ernst Institute, a hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face.

Upon entering the main hall, Yale, George, and Reynolds all knelt down on prayer mats in the middle.

"Third Bro, I got the news last night about your father's passing. Overnight, I called over Second Bro and Fourth Bro to come along with me. I guessed that today, there are going to be many nobles present, so I also brought along several chefs from Fenlai City to come overnight as well." Yale said in a soft voice.

"Thank you." Linley could imagine how busy his three bros must have been in the past few hours.

Recruiting chefs, preparing the carriage convey. Most likely, Reynolds and George had hurried over to here directly from the Ernst Institute, meeting Yale on the road at night and then arriving here together.

"Third Bro, don't be too heartbroken." George gently patted Linley on the shoulders.

Reynolds was also by Linley's side. "Linley. No matter what happens, you will always have us three bros. No matter what happens, don't allow yourself to be struck down. Remain strong."

Linley looked at Reynolds, a hint of a smile appearing on his face.

Linley felt very warm in his heart upon hearing Reynolds, normally the most mischievous of them all, saying such words.

No matter what or when, he would always have these three bros.

"Thank you all." Linley looked at Yale. "Boss Yale, I'd like to hand over the responsibilities of hosting these nobles to you. I have no experience in this area."

Yale nodded. "Don't worry. I've brought quite a number of people over. They will definitely do a good job of receiving them."

....

The quiet little Wushan township was not quiet at all this day. Time after time, the citizens of Wushan township would gather together and discuss the nobles who had just passed by.

"That group in the morning had at least four horses, and that carriage was huge and magnificent. All of those brave knights, wow...I've never seen such an awesome looking troop of knights." An old man sighed with praise as he stared at the troop stationed outside the Baruch clan's manor.

The locals nearby also nodded in praise.

In such an ordinary little town, how often would they have the chance to encounter a wealthy noble? That troop of knights which Linley had brought with him when he had returned, by itself, was already a source of endless discussion amongst the locals.

"What do you guys think? Is young master Linley also a powerful nobleman in the outside world?" A woman guessed. "Two days ago, I saw Linley lead that powerful troop of knights on his return."

Wushan township was filled with constant chatting and speculation.

And then, in the middle of the day, around eleven or so...the earth began to shake again. All the denizens of Wushan township could feel that dense, orderly sound of galloping hoof steps.

This time, the density of the hoof steps was far heavier than when Yale came.

Wearing brilliantly gleaming armor, an extremely powerful mounted unit first galloped through. Behind them were two extremely lavish carriages which were being pulled by four handsome stallions. The people driving the carriages were all extremely powerful-looking warriors.

Behind these two carriages were a series of carriages filled with gifts, also under escort by a unit of knights.

All of the citizens of Wushan township craned their necks to watch.

The majestic aura of the ace regiment of Knights of the Radiant Church charging through made all of the citizens of Wushan township feel like a mountain had been pressing down on them. All of the citizens felt their heart was trembling, and all of the beautiful, lavish carriages gleamed so much, it made them squint their eyes.

“What sort of people are these?” The citizens of Wushan township were filled with shock and surprise.

This carriage procession finally came to a halt in front of the Baruch clan’s manor.

At the Baruch clan’s manor, there were many people who were prepared to station and stable these horses and carriages.

“Lord Cardinals Guillermo and Lampson, have arrived!”

That loud, high-pitched voice rang out from within the Baruch clan's manor, causing a huge commotion amongst the denizens of Wushan township.

It was actually two Cardinals!

In the eyes of the citizens of the Holy Union, the Cardinals of the Radiant Church were all lofty figures. In their hearts, the Cardinals were like the stars in the night sky, beautiful to behold, but untouchable. But today, two Cardinals of the Radiant Church had actually come to Wushan township.

"Clatter!" "Clatter!" "Clatter!" Hoof steps could be heard yet again. Shortly after the troop with the Cardinals had entered the township, another very similar troop arrived as well, with carriages that seemed even more lavish, with beautiful female attendants and palace attendants with skin as white as any woman.

The carriage was golden and extremely extravagant.

The mighty knights were exhibiting their top-notch riding skills. The hoof steps were so much in lockstep, they sounded like a single great drumbeat, shaking the hearts of the citizens of Wushan township.

The denizens of Wushan township were stupefied.

"Who...who are these people?" Many denizens hadn't seen these people in their entire lives.

When this new troop arrived outside the Baruch clan's manor, that voice once more rang out from within the manor. "His Majesty, King Clayde of Fenlai has arrived!"

"His Majesty the King!"

All of the citizens of the town looked at each other.

To the citizens of a kingdom, the king of a kingdom was the brilliant sun shining in the sky, with the power over life and death. But his Majesty the King, who should have been in his palace, had actually come to the tiny little Wushan township.

The nonstop clatter of hoof steps.

One troop of soldiers came after another. One carriage after another pulled up in front of the Baruch clan's manor.

"Duke Bonalt of the Kingdom of Fenlai has arrived!"

"Marquis Jebbs of the Kingdom of Fenlai has arrived!"

"Count Juneau of the Kingdom of Fenlai has arrived!"

"Miss Delia of the Leon clan of the Yulan Empire has arrived!"

“Lord Bernard of the Debs clan of the Kingdom of Fenlai has arrived!”

That voice rang out again and again, causing the citizens of Wushan township to be totally speechless. What was going on? Why were so many members of the upper class congregating here at Wushan township? But the citizens of Wushan township could guess the reason.

The only major event which had occurred at Wushan township was Hogg’s death.

But Hogg was just the noble of a minor township. Could his passing cause his Majesty the King as well as two Cardinals of the Radiant Church to come? These citizens couldn’t help but think back to the triumphant image from a few days ago of Linley returning with a troop of knights at his back.

“All of this must have something to do with young master Linley.”

Although these common citizens didn’t know the specifics of Linley’s situation, they were able to guess.

.....

Within the Baruch clan’s main hall, Linley was still kneeling on one side.

The Cardinals, the King, the Dukes, the Marquises, the Counts, all either bowed or knelt down with sincerity, paying their respects. Although the likes of Cardinal Guillermo only bowed, without question, the only people they ever even bowed to were tremendously important figures.

But today, they were bowing to the departed Hogg.

"Linley, don't be too heartbroken." Guillermo said softly by Linley's side.

"Thank you." Linley bowed fractionally.

"Linley, your father's passing truly fills us all with regret." King Clayde also comforted Linley.

After a while.

"Linley, don't be too heartbroken." A clear voice.

Raising his head, Linley saw that Delia, dressed in simple clothes, was there, her face filled with concern.

"Thank you." Linley said in a soft voice.

Delia nodded fractionally before being led away by servants as well. One noble after another came in to pay their respects to Linley's father. Even that Bernard, leader of the Debs clan, had come to pay his respects.

"Master Linley, don't be too heartbroken." Bernard said courteously.

Linley responded with the same courteous thanks. "Thank you."

.....

"Duke Patterson of the Kingdom of Fenlai has arrived!" Suddenly, the announcing voice rang out from outside.

Linley frowned very slightly.

His father's death was linked to this Duke Patterson. But Linley knew very well that his father had disguised himself before entering Duke Patterson's manor. Most likely, Duke Patterson had no idea that Linley's father was the person whom had succumbed to the severe injuries caused by his subordinates.

Patterson looked extremely similar to Clayde. Both of them had long, golden hair, with eyes that seemed hawk-like. His waist was straight as a ramrod, and he had the aura of a noble.

Entering the main hall, Patterson bowed respectfully in front of Hogg's memorial spirit tablet.

"Master Linley, don't be too heartbroken." Patterson walked over to Linley and said with sincerity.

Linley raised his head and glanced at Patterson. Seeing the sincere look on Patterson's face, he still responded with the same courteous, "Thank you." From the surface, one couldn't tell that Linley's treatment of Patterson was any different from his treatment of anyone else.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 4, A Nighttime Chat

“Patterson!”

Linley silently uttered this name to himself. His mother had been taken away by Patterson’s men years ago, and now, eleven years later, his father had been injured and killed by Patterson’s men as well over the course of his investigating his mother’s whereabouts.

The murderous intention in Linley’s heart was hidden, like the lava in the bottom of a primed volcano. But one day, it would erupt.

“Boss, let me kill this Patterson for you.” Kneeling next to Linley, the little Shadowmouse spoke mentally.

“Don’t move.” Linley shouted back mentally.

Linley remained kneeling inside the main hall, while one noble after another came inside, paying their respects to Linley’s father.

.....

That night’s banquet, Linley didn’t attend for a single moment. He remained kneeling inside the hall, observing the rites of filial mourning.

Many of the nobles eventually left Wushan township late in the afternoon, hurrying back to Fenlai City. But there was still a number who remained behind at Wushan township.

For example, Cardinal Guillermo. For example, Delia.

.....

Ritual filial mourning had to last for seven days.

That night, Linley ate some random food, then returned to his bedroom, preparing to begin his training.

"Linley, do you plan to take revenge for your father?" The white-robed Doehring Cowart appeared by his side.

Linley glanced at Doehring Cowart. "Grandpa Doehring, I absolutely must take vengeance for the death of my father. Although I know that it was Duke Patterson who sent people to pursue and kill my father, aside from taking my revenge, I also need to investigate what happened to my mother, and find out if she is alive or dead."

Killing Patterson was easy.

But killing him in a way which would prevent anyone from finding out was much harder. After all, after killing Patterson, Linley needed to continue searching for his mother.

Doehring Cowart nodded slightly. "You can make your own decisions in your personal affairs. Only, I hope you won't act rashly. After all, your current strength is still too weak, compared to the real top-tier combatants. Even Patterson...all of his soldiers combined are a force that you cannot handle."

Linley nodded slightly.

Patterson was the younger brother of Clayde. How could he not have a large number of subordinates?

"I expect within a year or so, I should be able to reach the seventh rank as a warrior. I can't waste any more time." Linley sat cross-legged on the ground. The Dragonblood battle-qi in his body once more began to circulate throughout his entire body, and all of his muscles and bones began to tremble.

Linley could feel his muscles and his bones slowly rise in power, as the tiny Dragonblood cells also began to merge with his muscles and bones, raising their durability and toughness.

Once one first began to train in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Manual, their pace of their improvement was very fast.

In this training state, Linley didn't notice the passage of time at all.

At roughly around eleven at night.

"Knock!" "Knock!" "Knock!"

The sound of knocking on the door. At the same time, a familiar voice.

"Linley. It's Delia. Can I come in?"

Linley was startled.

"Whew." Linley let out a deep breath. All of his trembling muscles returned to normal, and the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body was once more retracted to his dantian region. Linley looked towards the direction of the door. In his mind, he couldn't help but question, "Why did Delia come here to speak with me so late at night?"

As he wondered to himself, Linley verbally responded, "Come in."

Pushing the door open, Delia stepped inside.

Upon seeing Delia, Linley's eyes couldn't help but brighten. At this moment, Delia's golden hair was bound in a simple way. Those few tassels hanging down made her light purple dress seem all the more graceful. Linley had to admit...Delia was a very mesmerizing person.

Especially given that she was in the primary line of descent for the Yulan Empire's Leon clan. Delia had an aura of nobleness which Alice couldn't match.

"Linley, are you okay?" Delia asked in a gentle voice as she walked over to Linley's bed and sat down. She stared at Linley with concern.

Linley couldn't help but feel warmth in his heart. Smiling, he said, "I'm fine."

Delia nodded. "In Fenlai City, I heard about your father's passing. I was a little worried. But...you really are as resilient as I've always felt you are."

"Thank you."

Linley continued, "Delia, is there something you wanted to discuss, this late at night?"

"You idiot." Next to him, Doebling Cowart was secretly cursing at Linley.

A beautiful girl had come over this late at night to talk with you and comfort you. And you actually were asking her what she wanted?

Delia laughed, slightly nervously. But then she regained her usual calmness. "What, if I don't want something, I can't come over to chat with you? I've known you since our very first year together at the Ernst Institute. Since when did you decide to keep me at such a distance?"

"No, that's not what I meant." Linley hurriedly said.

Delia couldn't help but laugh in delight, but then she let out a long sigh. "Linley, there really is something I want to talk to you about, which is why I came over so late at night."

"Go ahead." Linley couldn't help but begin mentally guessing at what Delia was going to say.

Delia said helplessly, "Linley, you should know that this is year 9999 of the Yulan calendar. In eight more months, it will be year 10000 of the Yulan calendar. The first day of each year, the entire Yulan calendar celebrates the Yulan Festival. You can imagine how important an event the celebration of the 10000th Yulan Festival will be."

Linley nodded.

But Linley didn't understand why Delia was saying these things.

"Although the entire Yulan continent holds the Yulan festival in high importance, our Yulan Empire holds it in even higher esteem." Delia continued.

Linley understood why. After all, the first year of the Yulan calendar was the year when the Yulan Empire had unified the continent. The 10000th Yulan Festival would naturally be an extremely important day within the Yulan Empire.

"My clan has sent out an order. For this Yulan Festival, I must return home. For this Yulan Festival, our Yulan Empire will carry out an empire-wide celebration. Naturally, we main-branch descendants of the Leon clan must return to participate." Delia looked at Linley. "Linley, the Yulan Empire is very far away from the Holy Alliance. This round trip will most likely take one or two years. Tomorrow, I'll have to leave and return to my motherland."

Linley understood Delia's meaning.

In other words, within this next year or so, he probably wouldn't have a chance to meet with Delia again.

Staring at Linley, Delia bit her lips, then suddenly said, "Linley. Before I leave, can I hug you?"

"Hug?" Linley was stunned. He stared at Delia.

Linley knew very well how Delia felt towards him. But because the two of them interacted too often, ever since the first year they studied together at the Ernst Institute, in Linley's mind, Delia had become a close female confidante. And especially after that affair with Alice, Linley's heart had been frozen and locked.

Seeing the look in Delia's eyes, Linley nodded.

A smile appeared on Delia's face, and she immediately reached out with her arms, embracing Linley by the neck, then pulled herself firmly against Linley's body. Delia pressed her face gently against Linley's face as well.

Linley seemed to be able to feel their mutual breaths...

He could also smell the enchanting fragrance on Delia's body. In particular, when their faces touched, he could feel the warmth of her skin...all of this caused Linley to feel a very unique sensation.

"Linley. Thank you." Delia murmured into Linley's ear.

Linley didn't make a sound.

Releasing him, Delia slowly rose to her feet, her eyes still locked on Linley's. But halfway to her feet, Delia came to a halt. There was only two inches of distance between her eyes and Linley's.

Suddenly, Delia bent down.

Delia's lips just so happened to land and brush against Linley's, causing Linley to be stunned.

Delia didn't give Linley the chance to react, as she then quickly stood up. Taking one last look at Linley, she quickly ran out of Linley's bedroom.

"Boss, you just got kissed by force!" From the opposite side of the blanket, Bebe popped his tiny head out, staring at Linley.

"You. Go back to sleep." Linley mentally shouted at Bebe.

Bebe let out a few disgruntled squeaks before returning to the blanket. But Linley still stared at the closed door through which Delia had left. His nose still seemed to be filled with the fragrant aura of Delia's perfume. His face seemed to still feel the warmth of Delia's face.

Rubbing his lips, Linley felt a soft, warm feeling in his heart. The feeling was very similar to the feeling he had that night, when he had hidden with Alice on her balcony and talked the night away.

"Delia..."

Shaking his head, Linley cast away all of these extraneous thoughts.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart looked at Linley with interest. "When you were young and first entered the Ernst Institute, and first saw this Delia girl, didn't I say to you, then and there, that this was a beauty in the making? I told you from the very beginning to chase after her. Feeling regretful yet?"

Linley frowned as he looked at Doehring Cowart.

"Alright, I'll stop talking now." With a twirl of his beard, Doehring Cowart transformed into a beam of light and retreated into the Coiling Dragon ring.

Linley didn't think about this anymore. Once more seating himself cross-legged, he entered the meditative trance to distill mageforce.

Early the next morning, Delia led the delegation from the Leon clan away from Wushan township, but Linley didn't send her off. He continued to kneel there in the main hall, maintaining his vigil and observing the rites of filial mourning.

In the blink of an eye, the seven days of filial mourning had passed.

In the Wushan township, aside from Linley's bros, there were only two other major personages remaining: Cardinal Lampson and Cardinal Guillermo.

As Cardinals of the Radiant Church, Lampson and Guillermo didn't have anything they had to attend to. After all, most small matters could be handled by their subordinates, making their lives very relaxed. These few days, they spent their time sightseeing around Wushan township, while occasionally going into Mt. Wushan itself.

Morning. The citizens of Wushan township were all watching on each side of the street.

The delegation from the Radiant Church and from the Dawson Conglomerate were beginning to depart.

"Boss Yale, Second Bro, Fourth Bro. There's something I need to go discuss with Lord Guillermo's party." Linley told his bros, and then left the Dawson Conglomerate's carriage, then entered the carriage of Lord Cardinal Guillermo."

Lampson was in the carriage as well. The two Cardinals and Linley shared the carriage amongst themselves.

But this carriage had been specially designed for the Cardinals of the Radiant Church. It was extremely spacious. There was enough space for all three of them to even lie down and sleep, if they so desired.

"Linley, you've made up your mind?" Guillermo laughed as he looked at Linley.

Previously, Linley had told Guillermo that he needed to discuss the matter of joining the Radiant Church with his father. But now, his father had passed away. Naturally, there was no one else for Linley to discuss this with. By now, he should have an answer for them.

"Lord Guillermo, Lord Lampson. I am still young. I wish...to temporarily assist his Majesty, King Clayde. For now, I think it would be best that I not take up a formal position within the Radiant Church. If in the future, the Radiant Church has need of me, I can be enlisted into your service at any time." Linley said.

Both Guillermo and Lampson laughed.

Serve King Clayde? Clayde was the ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai, while the capital of Fenlai, was also the Holy Capital of the Holy Union. What's more, the ruler of Fenlai was under the direct authority of the Radiant Church.

For Linley to serve King Clayde was the same thing as declaring his allegiance to the Radiant Church.

"Very good." Lampson was the first to begin laughing. "Linley, this is an extremely wise decision."

But neither Lampson nor Guillermo knew that the reason Linley had come to this decision was because he wanted to investigate his mother's whereabouts. Only through inserting himself into the national affairs of the Kingdom of Fenlai would he have even more opportunities to deal with Duke Patterson in the future.

Guillermo laughed as well. "Then from this moment forward, you can be considered a member of our Radiant Church. Oh, right. You don't have any incantations for earth and wind style spells of the seventh, eighth, or ninth ranks, or any of the forbidden spells, right?"

"Correct." Linley nodded. "I was only able to develop the incantation for the Soaring Technique through analyzing magical theory."

Guillermo said with satisfaction, "It isn't too hard to extrapolate the incantation for the Soaring Technique, but it is still quite impressive that you were able to extrapolate it from the incantation of the Floating Technique. Linley, don't worry. Once we return to the Church, we will send people to deliver all the incantations for spells of the seventh rank and higher to you."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 5, Writ of Nobility

The Ernst Institute did not make public high level magical incantations of the seventh rank or higher.

If you wanted to learn these higher rank spells, you would have to decide to join a faction.

“Thank you, Lord Guillermo, Lord Lampson.” Linley said thankfully.

Linley couldn't help but think back to the power of the higher ranked wind spells as described in the books he had read. The higher ranked the spell, the more terrifying its offensive potential, especially in the wind-style. Its offensive spells, in fact, could be considered the number one amongst all styles.

For example, the forbidden-level 'Dimensional Edge' spell, or the ninth-ranked spell "Void Extermination" spell.

“Linley, how about this. When we return to Fenlai City, I will send someone to inform Clayde of your decision. Clayde will, in short order, confer a writ of nobility upon you, and grant you a manor as well.” Guillermo laughed.

Linley nodded.

“Linley.” The nearby Lampson patted Linley on the shoulders. “You don't need to worry about any official matters for now. The only thing you need to do is train hard. I very much want to see our Radiant Church have yet another Saint-level combatant in our midst within fifty years."

"Fifty years?"

Linley was confident that within fifty years, he could become a Saint-level Dragonblood Warrior. But as for becoming a Saint-level Grand Magus in fifty years, the difficulty was too great.

"Work hard." Guillermo also patted Linley on his shoulders in a friendly way.

As the resplendent carriages made their way through the village roads, the nearby trees and lakes soon receded into the distance. In front and behind the carriages, there were rows of knights. Under this resplendent escort, they reached Fenlai City by lunchtime.

Fenlai City. Within the Debs clan's manor.

"Alice, can you forgive me?" Kalan was holding Alice's hands, staring into her eyes.

A look of helplessness was on Alice's face. She gently nodded.

What else could she do?

"Rowling [Luo'lin] is about to arrive." Alice said softly. "I'm about to go back."

Despite everything, as of right now, Alice and Kalan still were not formally man and wife. Even if they got engaged, they still would not yet be husband and wife. Only after the formal ceremony would they become husband and wife. Before the wedding, Alice still had to observe the proprieties. Every day, she would go back to her own home.

"Rowling?" Kalan couldn't help but frown upon hearing this name.

Rowling was Kalan's principal wife.

Because of the fame of the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', that female figure who was the inspiration for the sculpture had also been deeply imprinted into everyone's mind. Once Kalan formally announced his engagement, many people would be able to recognize Alice as that inspiration. In a very short period of time, the Debs family had already selected a principal wife for Kalan.

"Kalan."

A happy voice rang out. A golden haired girl, her hair in pleats, ran over to them happily. This girl looked extremely pure and innocent, yet still possessed the aura of nobility. Especially those large, liquid eyes; they made her seem all the more adorable.

"Rowling. You came." Kalan forced a smile on his face.

Kalan had to admit that Rowling was a very adorable girl. Perhaps nobody would refuse to be together with Rowling. Only, in Kalan's heart, the one he truly loved really was Alice.

"Where's Uncle Bernard?" Rowling swept the area with her big eyes.

"Father went out to handle some affairs. I expect he'll be back soon." Kalan replied.

Kalan knew exactly where his father had gone and what he was doing. Thanks to the pressure of the Dawson Conglomerate, the businesses of the Debs clan in the city of Fenlai had reached the point of collapse. Every day, they were losing money. If they continued suffering such losses, they might be able to hold out for another year or half year, but as time went on, even their deep pockets would eventually run dry.

What's more, the clan couldn't just sit there and do nothing. After all, many of the other clans in Fenlai City were eying them covetously and circling around them.

Thus...his father, Bernard, had made a very dangerous decision. To engage in the illicit mining and smuggling of water jade.

Water jade was a type of extremely valuable gemstone. Generally, it was inlaid on top of magistaffs, and was very beneficial to water-style magi. In the Kingdom of Fenlai, there was a fairly large amount of water jade deposits, and the Kingdom of Fenlai had generated an astonishing amount of wealth through water jade mining.

Because water jade was so precious, naturally there were many people who tried to engage in water jade smuggling.

But his Majesty, King Clayde, bitterly detested the smuggling of water jade. Every single merchant whom had been discovered to be smuggling water jade, King Clayde had ordered to be put to death. But because the profit margin for the smuggling of water jade was simply too enormous, perhaps 500% to 600%, there were still always merchants who were willing to brave this risk.

In the past, there was no need for the Debs clan to take such a dangerous route. But now, things were different.

Since all normal business paths had been sealed off by the Dawson Conglomerate, the only choice for the Debs clan was to smuggle!

"There shouldn't be any problems." Kalan said to himself. "The business partner which father has selected is the Minister of Finance for the Kingdom of Fenlai, the younger brother of his Majesty, Duke Patterson. With him as our partner, the chance of there being any problems should be fairly low."

Patterson was the Minister of Finance for the entire Kingdom of Fenlai.

Clayde naturally had selected the person he himself trusted the most to assume the weighty responsibility of being in charge of managing the finances of the entire kingdom.

"Uncle Bernard is back." Rowling's bright voice sounded out.

Kalan raised his head.

Bernard, his face covered with smiles, walked through the door. Seeing Rowling, he laughed. "Rowling, you are here? Have you had dinner yet?"

"Not yet," Rowling replied.

Bernard nodded. "Tonight, stay here and have dinner with your big brother Kalan. Oh, right, there's something I need to discuss with your big brother Kalan. Why don't you and Alice have a nice chat? Later, I'll have your big brother Kalan spend some time with you." As he spoke, Bernard flicked a glance at Kalan.

Kalan obediently followed by Bernard's side as the two entered a private room.

Closing the stone door, they lit the lamps.

"Father, what is it?" Kalan asked hurriedly.

A hint of satisfaction was on Bernard's face. "I've already completed my discussions with Duke Patterson. He's already agreed. But we will have to split the profits on this endeavor, fifty-fifty."

"Fifty-fifty?" Kalan stared. "Father, this Duke Patterson is too greedy. Our clan is carrying out the actual smuggling work and spending all of the upfront costs. We are even paying for the horses out of pocket. All he's doing is arranging some safe smuggling routes for us."

It wasn't that Kalan didn't understand the importance of these smuggling routes.

But for this project, the Debs clan truly had invested a massive amount of money, while Duke Patterson didn't have to spend a single coin. All he had to do was to use some of his official powers, and he would earn a huge amount of money.

"Fifty-fifty is within our range of acceptability." Bernard laughed calmly. "Duke Patterson isn't just providing us with safe smuggling routes. More importantly, he's betraying his country and betraying his elder brother. If King Clayde found out, even though Duke Patterson is his own younger brother, he most likely wouldn't be merciful to him."

Kalan nodded slightly.

Their partner was a Duke and the Minister of Finance. With him taking on such enormous risks for the sake of arranging a safe smuggling route for their clan, it was fair that he claimed half of the profits.

Bernard and Kalan exited the secret room and returned to the living room. Alice and Rowling were currently engaged in conversation.

"Oh, right. Kalan. I just heard from Patterson that in three more days, his Majesty will personally confer a rank of nobility upon Linley in the royal palace." Bernard instructed, "Prepare a gift for me. In a few days, I will give it to Linley."

Kalan nodded.

Alice, who was chatting with Rowling not too far away, couldn't help but turn her head and glance at them.

"Big brother Linley is being conferred a rank of nobility?" Alice murmured to herself.

Within the royal palace of Fenlai City.

Dozens of important ministers were lined up in orderly fashion in the court, while King Clayde was sitting up high, overlooking at everyone below.

"Everyone. Today, I have something important to announce." The smile on Clayde's face was radiant, and he spoke in a bright voice. The major ministers who had received the news in advance all knew what King Clayde was going to say. Clayde glanced at an attendant by his side. Instantly, the attendant shouted in a loud voice, "Linley Baruch, enter the palace!"

His voice echoed in the palace. Shortly afterwards, Linley, dressed in black and gold magus robes, entered the palace. All of the nobles and ministers in the palace turned to look at him.

"I pay my respects to his Majesty." Linley bowed as he spoke.

Clayde looked at Linley, and a smile appeared on his face like a flower blooming. "Linley, for you to be willing to labor on behalf of our kingdom is something I am extremely gratified about. I now confer upon you the title of Prime Court Magus, and also bequeath upon you the rank of Marquis."

"Does anyone have an objection?" Clayde swept the court with his gaze.

All the nobles and ministers stared enviously at Linley, but none of them voiced any objections.

"Your Servant thanks you, Majesty!"

Actually, per what Cardinal Guillermo of the Radiant Church had originally said, the Radiant Church could let Linley instantly become a Duke. But Linley had felt this would be too amazing and draw too much attention to himself, especially given that he previously never had a rank of nobility. If he rose in rank too fast, that wouldn't necessarily be a good thing.

That's why they decided to go a step lower and confer the rank of Marquis.

"Linley, as the Prime Court Magus and as a Marquis, naturally you can no longer reside as a mere guest of the Dawson Conglomerate. I have already arranged for an extremely peaceful, secluded estate to be granted to you. It is on the Greenleaf Road, not too far from the palace." Clayde said with a smile to Linley.

Linley immediately once more thanked the king for his generosity.

In reality, Clayde had already discussed the question of conferring rank and land to Linley with Linley. Today, they were simply openly announcing it in court.

Upon leaving the palace, Linley engaged in some idle conversation with the other ministers.

The highest level of power in the Kingdom of Fenlai was mostly occupied by the Minister of War, the Left Premier, the Right Premier, the Inspector General, and other people on the similar plane. These people virtually governed the entirety of affairs in the Kingdom of Fenlai.

Most of these people had the rank of Marquis. Even the lowest ranked amongst them, the Inspector General, was a Marquis.

On Greenleaf Road.

Linley was seated within his carriage, closing his eyes while quietly training.

"Lord Linley, we're here." The servant's voice rang out from outside the carriage.

Linley opened his eyes, then pushed the curtain to his carriage open. Bebe directly leapt from the carriage seat onto Linley's shoulders.

"Wow, what a big estate!" Bebe's eyes were gleaming as he stared at the mansion.

Linley was also carefully inspecting the estate which the ruler of Fenlai had gifted him. This estate took up a vast expanse of land, and the main gate alone was over ten meters wide. Through the open gate, Linley could see there were many male servants, female servants, and also many Knights of the Radiant Temple.

"Not bad." Linley nodded as he entered.

"Milord." Seeing the gatekeeper bow respectfully, instantly all of the male and female servants in the courtyard suddenly stopped whatever it was they were doing and bowed respectfully towards Linley.

It was important for them to give Linley a good first impression. These servants all knew how incredible their new master was.

"Master Linley, congratulations, congratulations!" Suddenly, a very familiar voice rang out from not far away.

Linley turned his head. "Mr. Bernard."

The person who had come was the leader of the Debs clan, Bernard Debs. Bernard smiled at Linley. "Master Linley, what a coincidence. My clan's manor is also on Greenleaf Road. We're only one house over. In the future, it will be quite easy for us to visit each other."

"Oh." Thinking back to when he had first rescued Alice and delivered her and Kalan back to Fenlai City, it did seem as though Kalan's manor was not too far away.

“But Master Linley, your manor is much larger than mine. This manor of yours used to be where his Majesty himself lived.” Bernard said admiringly.

Linley also felt that this manor was astonishingly large, much larger than his ancestral mansion. To have such an enormous estate in Fenlai City, where each inch of land was as valuable as an inch of gold, was not something which simply having money could accomplish. So it turned out this was the former residence of his Majesty, King Clayde. No wonder it was so large.

“Mr. Bernard, I have to head back now. In the future, we’ll be able to chat quite often.” Linley smiled modestly, then turned his head and walked towards his own manor.

Right at this moment, at the gate to the Debs clan’s manor, Kalan, Rowling, and Alice were standing and watching from afar.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 6, Tomes of Magic

In terms of both furnishings and layout, this estate was definitely first rate.

Linley was particularly fond of the Hot Springs Garden.

The Hot Springs Garden within the estate was the place where his Majesty would engage in training when he lived here. Clayde was a warrior of the ninth rank. In order to become such a mighty warrior, naturally he didn't rely solely on his personal ability. He also spent years of painstaking effort.

The right half of the Hot Springs Garden was covered of a large, grassy area, filled with all sorts of exercise equipment.

On the left side of the Hot Springs Garden, next to a man-made hill, was a hot springs pool. The hot springs within this pool came naturally from underground. After a day of wild training, spending some time relaxing in the hot springs pool definitely was a godly, wonderful feeling.

Linley was currently bathing nude within the pool. The bubbling hot water rushed against his skin, making Linley feel so comfortable that his eyes began to close.

"Boss, when are we going to kill that Patterson guy? Last night, during the dinner, I really wanted to kill him for you already." Bebe hopped out of the pool, all the fur on his body wet.

"Don't be impatient."

Exiting the hot springs, Linley changed into a clean set of training clothes, then walked over to the grassy area while beginning to mumble the words to a spell. After a few moments, an earthen glow began to cover the ground beneath Linley in a certain area as earth elemental essence began to swirl about him.

Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field.

Linley immediately leapt into the air, then inverted himself, head pointed down, feet pointing up. Using his two hands, he kept himself upright. Next, he moved to holding himself up with just one finger on each hand. Relying on just one finger, under the pressure of the Supergravity Field, Linley began to push himself up and down.

"One. Two..."

Linley counted silently. Each time he reached a thousand, Linley would change to a different finger.

The most important thing for a fighter was the quality of his body. Only a strong body would be able to accommodate a high amount of battle-qi. Only through this method would he be able to quickly grow strong! Even though he was now a Dragonblood Warrior, he still needed to maintain his daily training regime.

"Hrm?"

After training for about half an hour, Linley returned to the normal upright position. Linley stared coldly at the attractive female attendant who had just entered the Hot Springs Garden, carrying a tray with tea and fruit on top of it.

"My...my lord, this is your tea and fruit." The female attendant was made somewhat uneasy by Linley's stare, and she stammered a bit.

"Who instructed you to come in?" Linley said coldly.

The female attendant started. Stammering, she said, "Milord, I...I was worried that you were thirsty."

"Thirsty?" Linley glanced at her expressionlessly.

"Attend to me!" Linley shouted.

Instantly, four burly warriors rushed in from outside the Hot Springs Garden. These four warriors all belonged to the Radiant Church. After all, the Radiant Church had dispatched over a hundred knights to safeguard Linley.

"Mercy, milord!" The attendant was so scared, she fell to her knees.

In the Yulan continent, nobles had a much higher status than commoners, especially high ranking nobles, who could casually kill a commoner without repercussion. As for Linley, whom even the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai treated courteously, without question Linley was one of the highest ranking nobles in the Kingdom of Fenlai.

Linley glanced at the attendant. In a cold voice, he said, "Remember, in the future, when I am in the Hot Springs Garden, no one is permitted entry. Anyone who does enter will be punished with twenty strikes of the military rod."

"Twenty strikes of the rod?" The attendant's face turned pale.

Military rods were extremely heavy. Even most muscular warriors would not be able to move for ten days or half a month after receiving twenty strikes of a military rod. A physically weak female attendant might very well die from such a beating.

"Mercy, milord, mercy!" The female attendant hurriedly pled.

Linley continued, "Since this is your first time committing this offense, I sentence you to twenty lashes of a rattan whip. If you make this mistake again, I definitely will not be merciful."

"Thank you milord! Thank you milord!" The female attendant felt relieved.

In terms of pain, the strikes from a rattan whip might even be more painful than that of the military rod, but it would cause nothing more than a superficial wound. It wouldn't cause any harm to the bones or to the organs. It would hurt, but it wouldn't kill.

"Remove her." Linley ordered the four warriors.

"Yes, Lord Linley." Two of the warriors stepped forward, pulling the attendant away and frog-marching her out. As for the tea and the fruit on the tray, those were all left on the floor.

Linley turned and once more returned to the grassy area.

The Bloodviolet Godsword was one of Linley's secret weapons. Although whenever he trained with it, Linley usually made sure to keep it straight and hard, on occasion, Linley would also let it remain flexible and wield it in a bizarre, flowing manner. Linley had to make certain that this secret of the Bloodviolet Godsword was not discovered by anyone.

Naturally, he could not allow anyone to watch him train.

With his right hand, Linley stroked his waist. Instantly, with a cold, violet flash, an extremely thin, violet blade appeared in Linley's hands.

"Swish!"

From within the Hot Springs Garden, one ray of violet light after another began to appear, while Linley roved back and forth within the garden like a wandering dragon. Having totally merged the support of the wind-style Supersonic spell with his own power, not only was Linley's movement speed fast, it was also extremely agile.

Through the usage of the Secret Dragonblood Manual, Linley trained his body. When he was relaxed, he would engage in the carving of sculptures to raise his spiritual energy, while he would enter the meditative trance in the middle of the hot springs to refine his mageforce.

His training permeated his every daily activity.

Only, Linley still had not been able to find the best time to make his move against Patterson. After all, he had relatively few encounters with Patterson. If Linley went directly to Patterson's manor, or Patterson came to Linley's residence, once Linley killed Patterson, within perhaps just half a day, King Clayde would know what had happened.

No matter how great Linley's potential was, if he murdered King Clayde's own brother, Clayde definitely would not be gentle with him.

Within the main hall, Linley was gracefully eating lunch.

After he finished his lunch, Linley once again began thinking about Patterson. "This Patterson fellow hasn't come to visit me at all. Seems like I'll have to personally pay a visit." Linley decided to no longer be the hunter setting a snare for the rabbit. He would head directly to the Patterson manor.

"Milord." Just at this moment, an attendant ran over from outside. "Milord, Lord Cardinal Guillermo of the Radiant Church has arrived."

"Guillermo?"

Linley's body trembled, and then he immediately headed for the door, going out to personally welcome Guillermo.

Within the main hall.

“Linley, I hear that recently, your life has been leisurely and carefree. Every day, either you are training, resting in the hot springs, or engaging in stonesculpting. This sort of life really makes one envious of you.” Guillermo said with a laugh to Linley.

Linley nodded and laughed as well.

“But Linley,” Guillermo said solemnly, “I must remind you that although your sculptures are worth money, the thing which truly determines a person’s status is power! Just look at that nearby Debs clan. Don’t they have money? But in terms of status, they are inferior to you.”

Linley understood this rationale as well.

True, money was a useful thing.

But when one’s power reached a certain level, the uses of money would grow fewer and fewer. For example, to a Saint-level combatant, money was nothing more than a worldly possession. This was also why the Dawson Conglomerate had been willing to offer a hundred million gold coins to acquire Linley and have him join them.

To these trading unions, the support of a super-combatant was simply too vital.

"Lord Guillermo, I thank you for your reminder." Linley said with a smile.

Linley didn't say, of course, that it was stonesculpting that was the true reason behind him becoming a seventeen year old dual-element magus of the seventh rank.

"I'm just making small talk. After all, when you need to rest, you should." Guillermo glanced at one of the Vicars behind him, who immediately opened the package he had been carrying on his back. After opening the silver-white package, a stone case was revealed within.

The Vicar then placed this stone case between Linley and Guillermo.

"Lord Guillermo, this is?" Linley already had an idea as to what this was.

Guillermo laughed with self-satisfaction. "Linley. Open it up yourself."

Linley slowly opened the stone case, lifting up the lid. Within the stone case, there were two tomes made from silk thread. Both of these two tomes appeared to be colored a dark gold color."

"This is?..." Linley looked towards Guillermo.

"Linley, didn't I previously say that I was going to give to you books regarding magical incantations for wind-style and earth-style spells? That's what these two tomes are." Guillermo laughed.

Linley couldn't help but feel excited.

Magical incantations and the proper method by which one cast the spell were both very important. Otherwise, even if one had enough spiritual energy and mageforce, one still wouldn't be able to cast more powerful spells.

Linley immediately withdrew one of the two books and opened it up.

"Wind-style!" Upon reading the first page, Linley saw that the first page was a general summary regarding this tome.

After the summary, it began to describe one wind-style spell after another. This tome explained everything in great detail, and also clearly explained what to focus on for every single spell.

Linley flipped directly to the section on spells of the seventh rank.

Linley felt astonishment as he read about one powerful, intricately designed spell after another. Linley had to admit, the bygone people who had invented these spells in the past were, without a doubt, absolute geniuses.

"Spell of the ninth rank – Windshadow Technique. It was derived from a combination of the 'Supersonic' spell and the 'Airwings' spell. It possesses the special effects given by the Airwings spell, great speed, and great agility. It can be described as perfect..."

Seeing the deep, in-depth explanation of the Windshadow spell within this tome, Linley felt all the more excited.

A brand new world of magic was beginning to open up in front of him.

In the future, with his prowess in earth-style and wind-style magic, as well as the power of a Dragonblood Warrior, his future offensive potential would be enough to cause anyone to shudder in their heart.

Seeing how Linley had become totally absorbed with these magical tomes, Guillermo didn't make a sound as he quietly left by himself.

....

Within the Hot Springs Garden.

Linley was seated cross-legged on the grass, all of his muscles and bones quivering as that special Dragonblood battle-qi was permeating every part of his body with its force, causing Linley's entire body to experience a constant strengthening.

"Boss, Patterson will be arriving tonight. You still are in the mood to train?" Bebe mumbled, lying next to Linley.

Linley opened his eyes and looked at Bebe.

"In the mood?"

Linley felt bitter in his heart. Early this morning, that Duke Patterson had sent word via messenger that tonight, he wanted to come have a one-on-one visit with Linley. As the Minister of Finance, naturally Duke Patterson felt the need to have good relations with all the other important nobles. These past few days, he had been handling and worrying over the issue of illegally mining and smuggling water jade, which was why he hadn't had the time to visit Linley yet.

"I'm not in the mood, no, but I must train. Only when I have enough strength will I have confidence." Linley said to himself.

Per his current plans.

Within the next half year, he would kill Patterson as well as find out who the person behind Patterson was.

After finding out who the person behind Patterson was, Linley would, before the next anniversary of his father's death, find out what happened to his mother, or kill the person behind Patterson.

"Swish! Swish!"

"Ahhhh!" Outside the Hot Springs Garden, a miserable scream.

With a leap, Linley jumped atop the man-made hill within the Hot Springs Garden. Standing on the top of the hill, he could clearly see that the bodies of those ten or so Knights of the Radiant Church had begun to decay. They screamed in agony nonstop as their blood began to stain the ground.

At the same time, from every direction, a dense black fog began to billow at high speed towards the Hot Springs Garden. Wherever this black fog passed, everything, be it animal or human, would begin to corrode, then die.

Linley looked up into the sky.

The sky above him, as well, was now covered with that dense black fog. The surrounding black fog swept towards him at high speed.

"Someone's here."

Linley could sense that within that dense black fog, there were several black blurs that were charging towards him at high speed.

At this moment, there was nowhere for Linley to flee!

"Haaaargh!"

At a high speed, Linley descended from the man-made and, as though he were a fish, jumped into the hot springs pool.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 7, Heavy Casualties

The hot springs water bubbled about. By now, Linley was at the bottom of the hot springs.

This hot springs pool wasn't very deep, at most around two meters or so. Right now, Linley was pressing his body against the bottom of the pool. The water of the springs was very clear, and Linley could vaguely see what was going on outside.

"Who are these people? Why were the warriors of the Radiant Church outside unable to take a single blow from them?" Linley's mind was full of suspicions. No matter what, at the very least the warriors of the Radiant Church outside were of the fifth rank. Every one of them possessed the ability to use battle-qi.

Could it be that for some reason, these warriors were not able to use battle-qi to block that black fog?

Linley didn't understand what was going on, so for now, he did not dare to come out and directly resist the black fog!

"Linley, that black fog should be a fairly common darkness-style spell known as the 'Corrosive Fog'. You can definitely use battle-qi to resist its effects." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

"But those warriors of the Radiant Church..."

"They should have been attacked by a different sort of spell that bewilders the mind, preventing them from utilizing their battle-qi in time to defend against the spell." This was Doehring Cowart's deduction.

"Gurgle, gurgle."

From around Linley's body, a gust of wind began to billow outwards. It was the wind-style spell, Windscout. Linley could totally sense everything which was going on outside.

"Quick, no matter what the cost, we have to kill Linley." The leader in black said coldly.

The other five black robed men all nodded, charging towards the hot springs at high speed.

Right at this moment...

"Swish!"

Like an arrow, Linley shot out of the pool into the air, splattering beads of water everywhere. And then, Linley descended from above them like a fierce tiger leaping down from the mountains, his five fingers formed into claws as he ripped towards the head of one of the black robed men.

"Hmph." That black-robed man's body quivered slightly, as he prepared to use his left arm to forcibly block Linley's claw attack, while stabbing out with the sharp knife in his right hand.

A hint of a vicious smile appeared on Linley's face.

Suddenly, a bluish-black Dragonblood battle-qi covered the right arm of Linley, which was attacking with a claw hand. The layer of Dragonblood battle-qi was very thin. Given its thinness and the fact that the surrounding area was full of the dark 'Corrosive Fog', it wasn't very visible at all. Most importantly...sharp claws suddenly appeared from where Linley's fingernails had been.

"Shiiiiirk!" Linley's right hand easily pierced through the black-robed man's shoulder blade. At the same time, Linley once again used force on his right hand, giving it a fierce twist.

"Crack!"

The entire left chest of the black-robed man exploded, casting fresh blood everywhere. The black-robed man instantly died, but right before his death, he stared in disbelief, because his knife had stabbed Linley's body but didn't leave a mark at all.

"A seventh rank Earthguard armor is made out of jadestone. Do you think jadestone is so easily overcome?" Linley said to himself. "Much less, aside from the layer of jadestone armor, the skin on my body can instantly transform into the Dragonblood Warrior's scales."

Right now, when under the full Dragonblood Warrior state, Linley had the power of a warrior of the early eighth rank.

And when using the 'Dragonform', Linley had inherited the hallmark property of the Armored Razorback Wyrms; incredible defensive powers. Linley's black scales were much stronger than the jadestone armor. Judging from the power of that stab by the black-robed man, he had most likely been an expert of the seventh rank.

Unfortunately, the defensive abilities of that expert of the seventh rank were totally unable to defend against this claw attack by Linley. Those were the draconic claws of a transformed Dragonblood Warrior. And what's more, this was only the Demidragon state.

"How is that possible?" The other four black-robed men were stunned.

Based on their information, Linley was a dual-element magus of the seventh rank, and his warrior abilities were far weaker. They didn't expect that an assassin of the seventh rank couldn't withstand a single blow from him.

"Our intelligence was wrong!" The leader of the black-robed men standing in the very back cursed in his heart.

But Linley only nodded mentally to himself. "It seems that when using a partial transformation, one can catch the opponent off-guard and make them suffer a serious loss."

"You Cult of Shadows bastards!" Furious roars could be heard ringing out from outside, travelling at high speed towards the Hot Springs Garden. Linley understood that another group of the Knights of the Radiant Church charged with his protection had arrived. Only ten or so people had been killed just now, while his total guard numbered over a hundred.

The expression on the face of the leader of the black-robed men changed.

"No matter the cost, kill Linley!" The black-robed leader shouted.

And then he led the four remaining black-robed men to surround and attack Linley. The black knives in their hands gleamed with a dark aura, as they seemed to have infused every last bit of their power into the knives in their hands.

An attack which they were willing to give up their own lives to make!

"Warriors of the seventh rank, right?"

Seeing the group attack of these black-robed men, Linley didn't dodge or hide at all. With his right hand, Linley gently touched his waist. Suddenly....

A cold, fierce, brilliant violet light flashed.

At the same time, Linley retreated at high speed towards the back. Of the five people attacking Linley, four remained at their original spots, while the fifth, the leader, hurriedly retreated at high speed.

"Shirrrrrrrrrrk!"

The stomachs of those four black-robed men were sliced open. Their stomach and intestines fell to the ground, and blood sprayed everywhere.

“Fast. And sharp.” The leader of the black-robed men stared in astonishment at Linley.

A single sword stroke killing four warriors of the seventh rank. This example was really too terrifying.

Linley knew very well how sharp this Bloodviolet Godsword was, but just based on Bloodviolet’s natural sharpness alone, it might be difficult to penetrate the defense of a magical beast of the seventh rank. Similarly, if a warrior of the seventh rank was to use battle-qi to protect his body, at the very most, Linley would only be able to heavily injure them, not kill them.

But just then, those four black-robed men had been using all of the energy on their attacks!

They didn’t expect Linley to have such a sword on him.

“If I want to enhance the power of Bloodviolet, I would have to activate it via my Dragonblood battle-qi. But if I use the Dragonblood battle-qi, the speed of Bloodviolet will be slower than if I used my wind-style mageforce to activate it.” At this moment, Linley was pondering the pros and cons of each.

Just then, it was true that Linley had used a single strike to kill the four of them.

What he relied on was his astonishing speed, an attack so fast that his opponents weren't able to respond to it!

But just relying on speed and the sharpness of his sword would generally only be enough to kill a warrior of the sixth rank, or to heavily wound a warrior of the seventh rank. Only if the warrior of the seventh rank were to act like these four assassins and concentrate all of their battle-qi on their attack, not caring about their lives and sparing nothing for defense, would he be able to kill them.

"But the leader didn't suffer much of an injury." Linley looked at the leader of the black-robed men.

This black-robed man's power should most likely have exceeded the seventh rank.

Using wind-style mageforce on Bloodviolet could make Bloodviolet move faster and make its movements more smooth. But it couldn't raise the attacking power! But if he were to use Dragonblood battle-qi on Bloodviolet, he could increase the attack power but wouldn't be able to increase his attack speed.

"You pieces of trash!"

Angry roars erupted from right outside the Hot Springs Garden. Clearly, these Knights of the Radiant Church had just seen the corpses of their companions and were all furious now.

"Linley, you are even more formidable than we thought you were. But unfortunately, you have sided with the Radiant Church. Thus..." The black-robed leader seemed to pay no attention at all to those who were outside, as he spoke in a soft voice to Linley.

The black-robed leader's voice seemed to carry a certain unique timbre to it. At first, Linley didn't notice anything, but by the time the black-robed man was halfway through his words, Linley could feel his mind grow a bit blurry and his focus waver.

"You must die!"

The black knife of the black-robed man arrived almost instantly at Linley's chest.

"Linley!" Doehring Cowart's mental roar echoed in Linley's mind, instantly bringing Linley back to his senses.

"Crunch!"

The black-robed leader stared at his waist in astonishment. His waist had suddenly been bitten almost in half. His exposed muscles were still trembling, and blood was pouring out in a torrent. The black-robed man could clearly feel that his entire body had lost all strength. His life-force was quickly draining away.

"This Shadowmouse..."

The black-robed leader stared stupidly at the black Shadowmouse by Linley's side.

A black Shadowmouse should at most be a magical beast of the third or fourth ranks. To this black-robed leader, as a warrior of the eighth rank, a black Shadowmouse shouldn't be able to injure him at all. This was why the black-robed leader hadn't paid any attention to it.

But...

Just then, that little black Shadowmouse had flown over, quickly transformed his jaws into a larger size, then taken a vicious, giant bite out of his waist.

"Hmph! Let's see you be cocky now. You should consider it an honor to have died by the hands of I, Bebe." Bebe stood near the corpse of the black-robed leader, his little head raised proudly.

Linley couldn't help but laugh.

Bebe was a freak of nature that could even withstand the dying final blow of an Armored Razorback Wurm. Bebe was capable of even biting and breaking the tough, massive plated scales of a Velocidragon of the eighth rank! In terms of both offense and defense, Bebe was now extremely powerful.

The only weakness was...his size was too small.

Even if Bebe was able to bite those giant magical beasts, Bebe might not be able to totally chew through their thick massive scales or skin at one bite.

"Bastard!"

Those angrily howling Knights of the Radiant Church charged to Linley's side. Just as they prepared to do battle with their opponents...they saw the ground littered with corpses.

"Milord, are you alright?" The leader of the knights immediately asked.

Right now, Linley's appearance was very frightening. Both his face and his body were covered with blood.

"I'm fine. I only suffered some light wounds." Linley said. "You dispose of the corpses. I'll go take a rest." As he spoke, Linley immediately walked out of the Hot Springs Garden. And now, when the knights lowered their head to stare at the corpses, they couldn't help but begin to frown.

The corpse of the black-robed leader was missing half of his waist, as though it had been bitten off, or perhaps cut off by claws.

The other four black-robed assassins had been cut cleanly in half, while for the last one, it seemed as though his left chest had entirely exploded, revealing his bones.

"What...how..."

The group of knights stared dumbly, their jaws slack. They didn't imagine that Linley, a magus, could cause his enemies to die like this.

.....

At the top level of the Radiant Temple.

The long, skinny form of the Holy Emperor was covered by a long, whitish-silver robe. He reclined on a chair, leisurely flipping through some books. His bald head shone dazzlingly like the sun.

"Holy Emperor." The red-robed Guillermo bowed obediently in front of him.

"Hrm?" The Holy Emperor twitched his eyelids, glancing at Guillermo.

Being watched by the Holy Emperor was like being under pressure from a thirty thousand pound boulder. Guillermo respectfully said, "Holy Emperor, just now, the Cult of Shadows made an assassination attempt against Linley. But fortunately, Linley's abilities as a warrior are quite profound. He managed to kill all of the attackers, suffering only a light wound."

"Killed them?"

The Holy Emperor looked at Guillermo with his jade-blue eyes. With a light laugh, he said, "Guillermo, the Cult of Shadows is aware that Linley is a dual-element magus of the seventh rank. Could it be that they didn't send a sufficiently competent force?"

"Holy Emperor, this group of assassins was quite powerful. The lead assassin should also have been a specialist at using mind-bewitching darkness-style magic." Guillermo hurriedly said.

The Holy Emperor didn't say anything else, only faintly smiled as he looked at Guillermo.

"Guillermo, are you proposing....?"

Guillermo nodded. "Right. Linley is an important individual who needs to be trained well by the Radiant Church. More importantly, not only does Linley possess high natural talent, he is also an extremely hard worker. I believe that after another fifty years, it is very likely that Linley will become a Saint-level combatant. And in a hundred years....Linley will be one of the ranked Saint-level combatants of the Yulan continent."

If a man did not prepare for the future, his present would be filled with problems.

Both the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows had existed for many years now. Even back when the Yulan Empire had unified the Yulan continent, they had existed.

The reason they were able to last for so long, was because they both understood the importance of one thing: Cultivating talent!

Constantly expanding, constantly converting believers, constantly cultivating talent.

Perhaps right now, Linley wasn't too powerful, but a century later? Perhaps he would be an individual approaching the level of the Holy Emperor. To a Saint-level combatant, a hundred years was nothing at all.

"That's why I wish for Linley to receive even better instruction, as well as better protection. In other words...I wish for Linley to go train alongside Lord 'Fallen Leaf'." Guillermo said.

"Fallen Leaf?"

The Holy Emperor was startled, but then he nodded. "Fine, then. But first, you must go seek his approval. I certainly am not able to make a decision on behalf of Fallen Leaf."

"Yes, Holy Emperor."

Guillermo paid his respects and left.

The Holy Emperor glanced at the departing Guillermo with his jade-blue eyes, and then stared at the sky outside the window. "He killed all of the attackers? Baruch...Baruch....hrm. It seems as though the Baruch clan was one of the clans of the Four Supreme Warriors. The Dragonblood Warrior clan."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 8, An Excessive Desire to Kill

During the recent assassination attempt, Linley's side suffered the losses of eighteen Knights of the Radiant Church, four female attendants, and two male attendants. As a result of this, the Radiant Church further strengthened and enlarged the security detail within the estate.

That same night of the assassination, within the manor.

"Linley, are you okay?" King Clayde asked solicitously.

"I'm only slightly wounded, your Majesty." Linley's arm was wrapped with medical gauze.

Actually, Linley hadn't been injured at all during this attack, but he didn't want others to know exactly how powerful he was. Thus, he lightly injured himself on purpose, using his straight chisel to cut himself on his arm.

To Linley, who had previously suffered the pain of the initial Dragonform transformation, this sort of pain was nothing.

"As long as you are fine, Linley." Duke Patterson, who was by King Clayde's side, laughed.

Linley looked at Duke Patterson.

Tonight should have been the night for the meeting between Linley and Duke Patterson, but because of the assassination attempt, the two of them no longer would have the chance to have a private conversation tonight.

"Second brother, it's best that we don't disturb Linley any further. Let's allow him to have a good rest." Clayde turned his head and said.

"Yes, your Majesty." Patterson glanced at Linley, and then followed King Clayde out.

Linley felt as though there were a hint of helplessness in the look Patterson had given him. Clearly, per Patterson's original plan, there were some things he wished to discuss with Linley in private during their scheduled one-on-one meeting.

But clearly, this was no longer an appropriate time.

In the next few days, the estate once more returned to normal.

"Boss, today is May 18th, right?" Bebe, who was enjoying lunch alongside Linley, suddenly spoke mentally to Linley.

"Right. What is it?" Linley looked at Bebe.

Bebe wrinkled his little nose. Quirking his mouth, he mentally said, "Boss, have you forgotten? That Bernard fellow, the leader of the Debs clan, told us that June 18th would be the date of his son's engagement ceremony. He invited you to attend as well. It's now May 18th. You only have a month left."

"Engagement?"

Linley was startled.

A month from now, Alice and Kalan would be getting engaged.

"That's none of my business." Linley quickly returned to his usual calm demeanor, lowering his head and continuing to eat.

Bebe's beady little eyes rolled around three times, and then he used his tiny little paws to rub at his chin. A look of suspicion on his face, he said, "Could it be that I, Bebe, am mistaken? Shouldn't be the case. I'm so awesome, after all. My judgment is excellent. In his heart, the Boss certainly cares about this affair. If it were me, Bebe, I would smash that little Kalan's skull in with a single paw."

"Lord Linley."

One of the guardian knights entered the main hall. "Lord Linley. Cardinal Guillermo has come."

"Guillermo?" Linley hesitated for just one moment, then he immediately put down his utensils and went to the door.

In the entire hierarchy of the Radiant Church, the person whom Linley was most familiar with and had the best relationship with was probably Cardinal Guillermo. When someone treated Linley as courteously as Guillermo did, Linley naturally wouldn't act in a high, arrogant manner, as though he thought himself better.

"Linley, there's something I must tell you." Upon seeing Linley, Guillermo began to chuckle with joy as he spoke.

Linley looked at Guillermo questioningly. "What is it?"

Beaming, Guillermo said, "Linley, are you aware that within our Radiant Church, we have a special group of people known as...Ascetics?"

"Yes, I am." Linley nodded.

Previously, when he had been kidnapped by those experts from the Cult of Shadows, it was the Deputy Arbiter of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal as well as an Ascetic and several Executors who had scared the opponents away. Only then had he been able to return to the city of Fenlai.

"Within our Radiant Church, there have been many people obsessed with magic or fighting skills who have enlisted within the ranks of the Ascetics. Put another way, neither the Knights of the Radiant Temple, nor the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, have as many experts amongst their ranks as the Ascetics do."

Guillermo beamed as he patted Linley on the shoulders. "What I am about to tell you is that you have the chance to become the disciple of a legendary Ascetic."

"A legendary Ascetic?" Linley frowned.

Guillermo smiled faintly. "This legendary Ascetic is considered to be at the highest levels, even amongst the Ascetics. He also possesses an extremely high status within our Radiant Church. As for his power, even if we look at the Yulan continent as a whole, there are perhaps only those three freaks of nature who can surpass him in power."

"Three freaks of nature?" Linley instantly grew curious. "Lord Guillermo, who are these three freaks of nature that you speak of?"

While chatting, the two of them walked back to the main hall.

Guillermo didn't reply right away. He glanced at the Vicar next to him, and the Vicar instantly escorted everyone present away, then obediently stepped out himself, closing the door.

In the entire main hall, only Linley, Guillermo, and Bebe were now present.

"Linley, in the future, it's possible that you will meet with these people, so it isn't a big deal if I tell you about them now." Guillermo said, putting on a mysterious air.

Linley looked at Guillermo curiously.

Guillermo sighed. "Here in the Yulan continent, there are three individuals who have surpassed the existence of the Saint-level combatants. The three 'freaks of nature' I talked about, are precisely those three freaks."

"Those who ascended past the level of Saints? That would make them Gods?" Linley was shocked.

"Right. You can refer to them as Gods." Guillermo nodded.

Linley immediately perked up his ears to listen closely.

Guillermo slowly said, "Across the entirety of the Yulan continent, there are only three such freaks. The first freak is the 'High Priest of the Living Temple' of the Yulan Empire. Many people simply refer to him as the 'High Priest'. I, at least, have no idea how old the High Priest is. He has been alive for simply too long."

Linley nodded.

"This second freak has been alive an extremely long time. He is the true ruler of the third most dangerous place in the Yulan continent, the Forest of Darkness. This freak is supposedly a magical beast in nature, but he has already reached the level of being able to transform into a human. Linley, you should already know that when a magical beast reaches the Saint-level, he can transform his body enough to speak in human tongues, but is not able to transform into a human form. You can imagine for yourself how terrifying a magical beast who can transform into a human must be."

Linley nodded slightly.

He had previously heard Doehring Cowart speak of these two individuals. Even back when Doehring Cowart was alive, these two had been invincible presences.

"And the third person?" Linley asked.

Guillermo sighed. "This third person is also someone who I revere greatly. He was the founding Emperor of the O'Brien Empire, the most militarily powerful empire in the Yulan continent. People call him the 'War God O'Brien'."

"O'Brien?" Linley memorized this name.

Given that the O'Brien Empire was named after this person, one could imagine how amazing he was.

"Five thousand years ago, the War God quickly rose to prominence, defeating one Saint-level combatant after another. In that era, there were many super-combatants, such as the Four Supreme Warriors, who appeared during that time period." Guillermo smiled at Linley.

Linley thought back to his own ancestor, Baruch.

The first leader of the Baruch clan had appeared almost exactly five thousand years ago as well.

"Back then, the Four Supreme Warriors were extremely powerful, but their brilliance was totally eclipsed by the War God. The War God defeated one powerful Saint-level combatant after another, and in the end, even engaged in a great battle with the High Priest, in the air above the Yulan River. During the course of their battle, the shockwaves alone killed over ten thousand people. In the end, both the O'Brien Empire and the Yulan Empire gave up a large amount of territory, allowing it to form into three independent kingdoms which served as buffer zones between these two great Empires." Guillermo sighed emotionally.

"Linley, in the minds of many, the High Priest is the most powerful human alive. But the War God was actually able to fight to a stalemate with the High Priest. But how few years had the War God been alive for? This is why so many people are in awe of him. Who knows what level of power the War God is now at, after five thousand years of training." Guillermo sighed with praise.

Linley secretly nodded as well.

"This War God. He fought the High Priest to a stalemate?" Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind. "How is that possible?"

Back in Doehring Cowart's era, the High Priest's brilliance eclipsed everyone in the world.

In Doehring Cowart's heart, the High Priest was invincible and undefeatable.

"Grandpa Doehring, every era will see super-combatants emerge. If you, Grandpa Doehring, hadn't died back then and had continued to train, perhaps one day you would've also broken past the Saint-level and become an expert on the same level as the High Priest." Linley mentally said.

Doehring Cowart let out a low sigh and no longer spoke.

"Enough talk about those three freaks. The person I am about to have you meet is only inferior to those three. If you can become his disciple, it will be of great benefit to you as you attempt to increase your power in magic." Guillermo said.

Linley laughed inside.

As far as someone who was only inferior to those three freaks...wasn't his own Grandpa Doehring someone who was at the peak of the Saint-level?

"What is the name of this Ascetic?" Linley asked.

"His name is...Fallen Leaf."

Within one of the slums of Fenlai City. Only now did Linley realize that within Fenlai City, one of the largest, most prosperous cities in the Yulan continent, there was such an impoverished, desolate place. It was far worse off than even his own hometown of Wushan township.

At this moment, Linley and Guillermo were walking shoulder-to-shoulder within a foul, dirty alley.

"Lord Guillermo, the Lord Fallen Leaf that you spoke of lives here?" Linley couldn't believe it.

"Right." Guillermo nodded. "Linley, remember, this Lord Fallen Leaf detests those nobles who think themselves better than others. Thus, you must be modest and courteous, even towards these poor people."

Linley glanced at the poor people lining the streets.

Not too far away, he saw a seven or eight year old child, malnourished to the point of being skin and bones, who wore a foul, oily black rag as his clothes. This child was staring at Linley with fear in his eyes.

Due to his skinniness, his sunken eyes seemed particularly large.

Those innocent eyes made Linley's heart tremble.

Linley didn't do anything, just continued to walk forward alongside Guillermo. On the road, Linley saw one poor child after another. None of them wore any proper clothes, and all of them were extremely poor.

"Here we are." Guillermo suddenly said.

Linley couldn't help but turn his head to look.

They were standing in front of a casually erected metal frame-like dwelling. An old man who looked like a beggar sat in the middle of the building. The old man was so skinny that it made one's heart quiver, and all the skin on his body was sagging down. His hands were like the claws of a chicken, only skin and bone.

This old fellow was looking at Linley with curiosity.

"Lord Fallen Leaf." Guillermo said respectfully.

"He really is Lord Fallen Leaf?" Linley wasn't sure in his heart, but seeing Guillermo behave in such a manner, he was forced to believe it.

But could this old man in front of him, who looked like a beggar that could be blown down by a good gust of wind, really be the high Saint-level combatant, Lord 'Fallen Leaf'?

"Guillermo, this is the one you mentioned to me, the so-called kid with talent?" The old beggar asked.

"Yes, Lord Fallen Leaf." Guillermo said respectfully.

"Grandpa Fallen Leaf, Grandpa Fallen Leaf, quick, help save my mother. She was beaten and injured by someone!" A youthful voice rang out, then a girl came running in, carrying her skinny mother on her back.

The old beggar immediately turned around and stretched his right hand out.

Surrounded by a holy light, that heavily wounded woman began to heal at an astonishing speed.

The old beggar turned back to look at Linley. "I will only teach those with kind hearts and pure souls. But you...your heart is filled with an excessive desire to kill. I will not teach you."

Guillermo couldn't help but be astonished by these words.

"An excessive desire to kill?" A hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face.

The need to seek vengeance on behalf of his parents had caused unspeakable pain and torment to Linley. Every minute, he desired to kill Patterson, but he continued to force himself to be calm and to not be rash. But this sort of constant self-repression did indeed cause Linley's killing urge to only grow greater and greater.

"Then, Lord Fallen Leaf, I take my leave." Linley bowed slightly, then turned and left.

The old beggar had originally wanted to say a few extra words. Upon seeing Linley turn and leave so cleanly and bluntly, he couldn't help but be startled. But then, a hint of a smile appeared on his face.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 9, The Engagement

“Lord Fallen Leaf.” Seeing how impolite Linley had been, Guillermo hurriedly apologized, “Lord Fallen Leaf, this Linley is only seventeen years old this year. Lord Fallen Leaf, please forgive his discourtesy.”

Guillermo knew very well what a great amount of influence this Fallen Leaf had within the Radiant Church. This Lord Fallen Leaf could be considered the spiritual leader of the entire Ascetic branch. Even the Holy Emperor himself didn’t have the ability to force him to go against his own will.

Using his skinny, chicken-claw like right hand, Fallen Leaf stroked his straggly beard. With curiosity, he watched Linley’s departing back. “Discourtesy? No, no. He wasn’t exactly discourteous. It can only be said that this kid acts very firmly and unwaveringly.”

Guillermo was startled.

He didn’t expect that this Lord Fallen Leaf, who initially had a poor impression of Linley, would now praise him.

“Guillermo.” Fallen Leaf looked at Guillermo.

“Lord Fallen Leaf, I await your instructions.” Guillermo said respectfully.

Smiling, Fallen Leaf said, “This Linley’s heart is filled with murderous intent, and he is firm and unwavering. I think a person like him will never hesitate in his actions, whether it be in killing or in anything else. A person like this is very much suited to be the sharp sword of the Radiant Church.”

Guillermo understood what Fallen Leaf meant.

Although the Radiant Church urged people to follow their better natures, towards the followers of other religions, the Radiant Church was ruthless and merciless. Naturally, this would require ruthless and merciless people. This was why the Ecclesiastical Tribunal of the Church was originally formed.

“Perhaps in the future, this kid, Linley, will become the new Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.” Fallen Leaf said softly.

Guillermo couldn't help but turn to look at Linley's departing back.

Become the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal?

Guillermo knew very well that the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal could be considered the second highest ranking person within the Radiant Church. In fact, from some standpoints, it could be considered that the position of the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal was on par with that of the Holy Emperor.

The Holy Emperor was, on the surface, the leader of the Radiant Church who wielded the most power.

But the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal was the dark underside of the Radiant Church, the leader of the most powerful military force within the Church!

"Lord Fallen Leaf, are you willing to guide him?" Guillermo suddenly asked.

But Fallen Leaf still shook his head.

"Why?" Guillermo was confused. Since Fallen Leaf appreciated Linley, why wasn't he willing to train him?

Fallen Leaf shook his head. "My training methods are not suited for him. My way requires a pure heart, and is suited for someone whose heart faces the light. But as for him...the path he walks is the path of slaughter."

Guillermo nodded.

"Guillermo, there's no need for you to find another master for him. A truly powerful person will rely on himself to find a path most suitable for himself. The teachings of others are, after all, based on their own ways."

Fallen Leaf looked at Guillermo. "You are an Arch Magus of the ninth rank. Why, then, have I never instructed you? It's precisely because of this reason. Even if I tell you about what I have comprehended and my insights, you still will not succeed, because only after countless personal experiences will your soul transform, allowing you to comprehend deeper levels of mysteries. Only then will you succeed."

"Remember. Rely on yourself." Fallen Leaf smiled.

Guillermo nodded.

He hadn't yet entered the Saint-level, so there was no way for him to comprehend what the difference between the Saint-level and the ninth rank was. Although at times, he wondered if Fallen Leaf was intentionally withholding valuable guidance from him, upon seeing Fallen Leaf's sincere gaze and hearing his sincere voice, he believed him.

"Perhaps I really do have to rely on myself."

Guillermo had been held at the ninth rank as a magus for a long time, now. He deeply desired to make a breakthrough.

After all, between the ninth rank and the Saint-level, the difference between the two was like that of the heavens and the earth.

Within Linley's manor. The Hot Springs Garden.

Next to the hot springs pool, Linley was quietly seated in the meditative trance.

"Shudder, shudder." Linley's entire body was constantly emitting strange noises, as his bones and muscles continuously shuddered. Beads of sweat constantly flowed down his body.

Training in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Manual was ten times more effective than using ordinary battle-qi training methods.

But this was only natural. After all, the requirements for one to be able to use the Secret Dragonblood Manual were also extremely intense.

“Why is training for humans so difficult? You even require all sorts of secret manuals that require different body types.” Lying next to Linley, Bebe’s little head turned to look at Linley, his mind full of questions.

He was a magical beast, and his training was very simple. He would directly absorb darkness-style elemental essence from the outside world, drawing it into his body and into his magicite core.

There weren’t any secrets. It was just a very natural absorption process.

.....

Linley continued to live this sort of quiet life, spending most of his time each day in training.

Using several high quality training methods at the same time, he pushed his body’s capacity for punishment to the maximum.

In the blink of an eye, over ten days passed.

“Whoosh!”

Wielding the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands, Linley tested out one attack after another.

Which angle allowed the sword to strike out the fastest?

How to control the vibrations of Bloodviolet to reduce the hindrance of the natural air friction, and to make his sword move faster?

Time and time again, he painstakingly trained in striking with his sword.

Each time Linley made his move, a brilliant violent flash would appear.

The speed of these blows was enough to make one's heart quail.

But Linley was still not satisfied. He constantly pursued improvement, perfection. Using his understanding of wind elemental essence which was granted to him by his wind magic, he trained hard to make Bloodviolet move even quicker and more fluidly.

"Milord!" A voice called out from outside the Hot Springs Garden.

Linley paused. With a movement of his hand, the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hand disappeared. Nobody could notice that this Bloodviolet sword had wrapped around Linley's waist now.

Even if a normal person paid attention to his belt, they would only think it to be a purple belt.

"Enter." Only now did Linley speak.

Instantly, a beautiful maid came running in at high speed. A look of worship on her face, she looked at Linley, and then immediately lowered her head and said respectfully, "Milord, the Debs clan has sent someone over with an invitation card." As she spoke, she offered the invitation card to Linley.

Linley looked at the invitation card.

The invitation card was red in color, while the trimmings were golden. The words 'invitation card' were written on top in bright, bold characters.

"Invitation card?"

Linley accepted the invitation card, and then opened it. Indeed, the contents of the card were exactly what he had thought it would be.

"On June 18th, Kalan, Rowling, and Alice will carry out their engagement ceremony. Who is this Rowling?" Staring at the invitation card, Linley frowned.

"You can leave now." Linley said calmly.

"Yes, milord." The attendant said respectfully, then she departed from the Hot Springs Garden.

"Boss, is that Debs clan arranging the engagement ceremony for Alice?" Bebe leapt onto Linley's shoulders, then stretched his little head out to peer at the card.

"Uh, Rowling? Who is Rowling?" Bebe looked at Linley suspiciously.

Doehring Cowart also appeared next to Linley. Seeing the invitation letter, a hint of a smile appeared on his face.

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley turned to look at Doehring Cowart.

"Are you wondering who Rowling is?" Doehring Cowart really was someone who had only gotten craftier with age. He instantly understood. "It's simple. Your sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', made many people familiar with Alice's appearance. Although they don't know who Alice is, once the engagement ceremony is publicized, many people will see Alice. By then, they will definitely recognize her as being the mold for your creation of 'Awakening From the Dream'. The love story contained within your sculpture is clearly visible to anyone who has ever analyzed stonesculpting. And precisely for this reason, the Debs clan definitely is not willing to allow Alice to become Kalan's principal wife. This Rowling is most likely going to be Kalan's principal wife."

Linley was stunned.

Alice. Wasn't going to be Kalan's principal wife?

In the Yulan continent, the principal wife held a high status in the household, while the secondary wives held a much lower status.

"Because of me?" Instantly, Linley's emotions grew complicated.

Because of his sculpture, Alice could no longer be Kalan's principal wife.

"Linley, do you intend to go to this engagement ceremony?" Doehring Cowart asked.

"Yes. Of course." Linley's eyes hardened, and then he laughed. "Bernard has invited me several times now. This time, he specially sent over an invitation card. How could I refuse?"

Linley stared up at the blue sky, where wisps of silk-like clouds were floating about.

Long ago, he had sat on the grass alongside Alice and stared up at this sort of blue sky.

June 18th.

According to the priests of the Radiant Church, this was an extremely propitious day. Thus, the Debs clan chose to hold the engagement ceremony on this day.

This day, the front of the Debs clan's manor was jam packed with carriages and people.

Major nobles, wealthy magnates, beautiful noblewomen, dazzling young noble ladies, handsome noble youths...today, it could be said that the Debs clan's manor had more nobles present than any other place in Fenlai City.

"Lord Marquis Linley has arrived!"

The voice of the receiver for the Debs clan shot up two octaves as Linley, dressed in a black gentleman's outfit, strode into the main hall of the Debs clan.

Virtually all of the nobles within the main hall stopped their conversations and turned to look at Linley.

Linley glanced around the room, a slight smile on his lips. Linley's demeanor was totally in keeping with the magnificent presence of the upper nobility.

"Lord Linley, welcome!"

Bernard, who was previously chatting with some other guests, quickly walked towards Linley's direction. Kalan, who was the leading role for this event, came by as well at Bernard's side.

"Mr. Bernard." Linley smiled. "Congratulations on your son's engagement, to two beautiful women, no less."

"Thank you, thank you." Bernard said warmly.

Kalan also said respectfully, "Lord Linley, welcome to our home. I hope you will enjoy yourself today."

Linley glanced at Kalan, but only nodded. Without speaking to him, Linley looked back at Bernard. "Lord Bernard, please feel free to take care of your other guests. I'll just find a place to stand."

...

The main hall of the Debs clan was extremely large. Hundreds of nobles and magnates were within it, but they didn't feel the slightest bit crowded. The rich noblewomen and the rich young noble ladies were all attired beautifully, strutting through the crowd like proud peacocks.

Especially after Linley arrived. Many of the rich young noble ladies 'unconsciously' drew closer to him.

"Lord Linley, you are so amazing. I've trained in stonesculpting for three years now, but I'm not even able to sculpt a basic shape yet." A young noble lady with a head of beautiful brown hair said warmly to Linley. "Lord Linley, you are really so incredible. You are only a bit older than us, but you've already approached the level of Proulx and Hope Jensen. Lord Linley, can you help teach me?"

This young noble lady looked hopefully at Linley with her big, beautiful eyes.

"Stonesculpting requires sufficient wrist strength. For such soft, beautiful ladies like yourself, it's actually better if you just learned how to paint." Linley said with a superficial smile.

As he spoke, Linley felt helpless.

Perhaps it was because all of these young noble ladies all knew that Linley was not yet married, but they all came to bother Linley, one after another.

And of course, the parents of these young noble ladies were more than happy to just sit and watch.

Because virtually all of the nobles within the Kingdom of Fenlai knew that if someone could become in-laws with Linley, their clan would rise in stature by leaps and bounds!

What sort of a figure was Linley?

He was already the Prime Court Magus, but virtually all of the nobles knew that he was only serving the Kingdom of Fenlai in name. In the future, he would definitely become an important figure within the Radiant Church. In the future, his position might be higher than that of even the ruler of Fenlai!

"Linley." A bright voice rang out.

Linley turned around. "Your Majesty."

The young noble ladies surrounding him all made their curtsies, no longer daring to entangle him. Only now did Linley secretly let out a breath as he headed towards Clayde. When he was alongside the king, at least those young noble ladies wouldn't dare to bother him.

"Linley, see anyone you fancy?" Clayde whispered teasingly into Linley's ears as Linley drew near.

Linley couldn't help but cast a helpless glance at Clayde. "Your Majesty, there's no need to tease me like this, is there?"

"Haha..." Clayde couldn't help but break into a loud laugh.

Suddenly, the entire main hall fell silent. Clayde also turned his head to stare at the door to the main hall, his eyes shining. "Hey. There's the leading females for tonight."

Linley turned to look as well.

Kalan was holding a beautiful woman's hand on each side. Both of these women were wearing beautiful full dresses, while the beautiful adornments in their golden hair shimmered brightly.

One was Rowling. The other was Alice.

"Alice."

Linley's gaze rested for a moment on Alice. Alice was more beautifully made up today than she had ever been before. But this time, the person holding her hand was Kalan.

"Oh, my goddess! Isn't this the 'goddess' which Master Linley carved into 'Awakening From the Dream'?" Suddenly, a noble let out a startled shout.

The main hall was instantly filled with clamorous discussion.

Aside from the few people who already knew what Alice looked like, the vast majority of the people present had no idea what Alice's appearance was. But they had seen the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. Many of the people had even designated the woman within the 'Awakening From the Dream' as the goddess of their dreams.

But at this moment, their 'goddess of their dreams' suddenly appeared before them at this engagement ceremony.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 10, Captured

The main hall of the Debs clan was in an uproar.

“This...this...”

Many nobles were absolutely stunned upon seeing Alice. Linley’s extremely high level of sculpting abilities, unfortunately, was to blame for them to so easily be able to recognize Alice as the inspiration for ‘Awakening From the Dream’.

Linley had already surpassed the level of ‘skill’; through his sculpture, he totally was able to bring out this woman’s charm and mesmerizing qualities. All of these nobles, at the very first glance, were able to be absolutely certain that Alice was the ‘goddess’ of their dreams.

Many nobles looked at Alice, then turned to stare at Linley.

Silence!

All of a sudden, the entire main hall became deafeningly quiet, as though all of the nobles present suddenly understood something, while also understanding that now was not the time to discuss this.

But this silence...made Alice all the more embarrassed and frantic.

From the corner of her eyes, Alice glanced at Linley. Linley, who was standing right next to the King of Fenlai. Still as calm as ever. He was just quietly looking at her.

Towards Linley...

Alice's emotions towards him were very complex. There was regret. There was hatred. Hatred for the fact that Linley's sculpture had prevented her from being the principal wife, and also for making her feel so embarrassed now. But at the same time, that sculpture...had also let her truly understand how Linley had felt towards her.

Kalan felt extremely awkward as well.

"Everyone, let me make the introductions." Bernard's voice rang out, his face all smiles. "My son Kalan is now becoming formally engaged with Miss Rowling and Miss Alice."

As he spoke, Bernard walked over to Kalan's side. Pointing at Rowling, he said, "This is Miss Rowling, the principal wife of my son Kalan. And this is Miss Alice."

Instantly, the main hall became filled with quiet murmurs. Every so often, someone would sneak a furtive look at Linley.

"Everyone, let's begin the banquet!" Bernard laughed merrily.

All of the nobles in the main hall entered the banquet area. During the banquet, the members of the Debs clan were extremely friendly and warm to everybody. But nonetheless, there were still many nobles who would continue to glance at Alice, then glance at Linley.

Holding a glass of wine, Linley walked over to a secluded corner of the main hall, casually seating himself in a sofa.

"Boss, I can hear so many people chatting about you." Bebe leapt onto Linley's legs.

Linley gently sipped the wine in his glass. "Let them talk if they wish to. I'm fine with it. Only...Alice most likely is suffering."

Nowadays, towards Alice, Linley's emotions were calm and peaceful.

Only now did he understand what a huge influence this sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', had upon Alice's life.

Seated in that corner, Linley quietly watched as Kalan, Alice, and Rowling moved from table to table, meeting with guests. He quietly drank his wine by himself.

"Lord Linley, why are you here drinking wine all by your lonesome?" A beautiful young lady with jade hair and snow white skin walked over, sitting down quite naturally next to Linley while extending her glass of wine towards him.

Linley clinked glasses with her.

"My name is Sasha [Shasha]. Before the banquet began, I had been hoping I would have a chance to chat with you, Lord Linley. But it seemed as though you attracted quite a lot of attention from the girls. I didn't have a chance at all." Sasha laughed.

Linley looked at Sasha.

Sasha was very tall and slender, and her laughter was rich and vibrant. Her eyes also held a bewitching, intoxicating gaze. Compared to those young noble ladies, a female like this had a more feminine charm.

"The girls? Can it be that yourself aren't a girl, Sasha?" Linley asked with engrossed 'curiosity'.

Sasha took a light sip of wine, then laughed. "A girl? I've been married for eight years now. How could I be a girl?"

Linley couldn't help but be startled.

"However...my husband died on the day of our wedding." Sasha glanced at Linley as she spoke in a soft voice.

"Uh..." Linley stared at Sasha in astonishment.

Seeing the look on Linley's face, Sasha couldn't help but begin to laugh a charming laugh, and then she raised her glass and had another sip of red wine. Smiling, she said to Linley, "Lord Linley. You really...are too cute."

Linley couldn't help but laugh as well.

This Sasha really was an interesting person.

"Sasha. What are you doing here?" Duke Patterson walked over with a laugh.

Sasha glanced back at Duke Patterson. Feigning anger, she said, "Lord Duke, I just started chatting with Lord Linley. Fine, fine. Go ahead and have your talk with him." As she spoke, she winked at Linley, then left.

Duke Patterson stared at Sasha's departing silhouette for a moment before sitting down next to Linley.

"Linley, what do you think?" Duke Patterson said to Linley.

"What do I think about what?"

"Sasha, of course." Duke Patterson looked at Linley suggestively. "Linley, amongst the circle of nobles, Sasha is a beautiful lady who is chased after by many. Look at Sasha's figure, her eyes, her little mouth. Oh..."

Linley could only laugh.

"Let me tell you, Sasha should be very interested in you. If you seize this opportunity, you should be able to get her into your hands." Patterson patted Linley on the shoulders.

Linley glanced at Patterson. "Not interested."

Patterson stared at Linley in surprise.

"Linley." Patterson lowered his voice as he spoke to Linley. "Tonight, after this banquet is over, don't leave in a rush. There's something I wish to discuss with you."

Linley was startled.

As secretive as that?

"You wouldn't not give me face, right?" Patterson feigned anger.

Linley glanced at Patterson, musing to himself, "I want to see what you are up to." Linley rather wanted the chance to get a bit...closer...to Patterson as well.

"Lord Duke, don't worry. Tonight, I will wait a while for you." Linley smiled as he replied.

Eight o'clock that night. Many of the nobles had already left, but Linley was in no hurry. He still remembered his appointment with Patterson.

"I want to see what you are up to."

Linley waited quietly in the main hall.

"Linley, I'll leave now." Clayde said to Linley as he left. The people in the main hall grew fewer and fewer. Getting rather impatient, Linley left the main hall, stepping onto the outside balcony to enjoy the cool night wind.

Right at this moment, a manservant quietly walked up to him.

"Lord Linley. The Lord Duke is inviting you for a walk." The manservant said quietly.

"As secretive as this?" Linley was a bit surprised.

"Lead the way." On the surface, Linley looked calm. Bebe remained curled up inside Linley's robes. The manservant led Linley to a very dark, secluded alley. Judging from the appearance of the road, this was a place where people rarely came.

"Where are we going?" Linley said in a low voice.

The manservant said respectfully, "Lord Linley, this is in accordance with the Lord Duke's instructions. No one is to see you, Lord Linley."

"Oh?"

Linley furrowed his brows. But Linley wasn't afraid. He continued to follow the servant forward, as the two of them made their way through the dark, secluded alley, then passed through a small copse of trees. A secret door was opened, and they arrived at a small building.

"So the Debs clan has a place as secretive as this." Linley said to himself.

Unless someone was capable of flight, it would be quite difficult indeed to spot this hidden little building.

The manservant led Linley directly into the main hall.

"Lord Duke, Lord Linley is here." The manservant called out respectfully as they reached the main hall's doorway.

"Haha, Linley is here?" Dressed in a long black robe, Duke Patterson stepped out of the main hall. Seeing Linley, a gleam of excitement appeared in Duke Patterson's hawk-like eyes, and he hurriedly walked over. "Linley, come in, quick."

The manservant respectfully said, "Lord Duke, I'll be leaving then."

"Yes, you can go." Patterson said casually.

The manservant respectfully bowed and turned to leave. But then, the smiling Duke Patterson suddenly shot out his right arm at high speed, viciously piercing through the manservant like a knife, from his back to his chest.

"Ah!" The manservant disbelievingly turned his head and stared at Duke Patterson. He totally couldn't understand why the powerful Duke Patterson would stoop to killing someone like him!

Unfortunately, with his heart totally shattered, in just a few seconds, the light fled from his eyes.

"Lord Duke, the meaning of this is...?" Linley, off to the side, still managed to maintain his calm.

Duke Patterson was a warrior of the seventh rank. For him to kill a manservant who was at most a warrior of the first or second rank was indeed very easy.

From within his clothes, Duke Patterson drew out a handkerchief, using it to wipe off the blood from his hand. And then, he casually tossed it on the ground.

"Linley. It's nothing. I just didn't want anyone to know that you and I met." Duke Patterson chortled.

Linley looked suspiciously at Duke Patterson. "You don't want anyone to know?"

Duke Patterson nodded confidently. "Don't worry at all. This secret meeting place was arranged by Bernard per my instructions. Bernard only knows that I'll use this place, but he doesn't know who I meet with. The only servant who knows that we have met is dead now. Thus, no one will know that we have met."

Linley made up his mind. He stepped into the main hall.

"Duke Patterson. This matter seems to be quite important." Linley smiled at Duke Patterson.

Patterson nodded. "Of course. And, I have arranged for a decoy as well. In the eyes of others, I have returned to my estate long ago. Aside from Bernard and my housekeeper, I'm afraid you are the only one who knows I am here."

"A decoy?"

"Duke Patterson, what exactly do you intend to do, for you to meet with me here so secretively?" Linley asked with some curiosity.

Duke Patterson looked around the area, then closed the door to the main hall.

"Come. Let's chat inside." Pulling Linley by the hand, Duke Patterson headed for a room within the main hall. After entering the room, Duke Patterson activated a mechanism. With a grinding sound, the stone wall began to move, revealing a stone passageway.

So within this secret little building, there was a secret underground room as well.

"Linley. Come in." Patterson smiled at Linley.

Linley nodded and stepped inside.

The inside of the underground room was pitch dark. Patterson lit three candles, then turned to smile at Linley.

"There's nothing for it. Neither my Duke's manor nor your own manor is suitable. There are too many spies in both places. It's not safe." Duke Patterson let out a long breath.

Linley also knew that his manor was under constant surveillance from the Radiant Church as well as Clayde.

Because this manor was gifted to him by Clayde. The servants belonged to Clayde as well. It was quite normal for the place to be filled with Clayde's spies. At the same time, his guard corps belonged to the Radiant Church. Frankly speaking, Linley's actions within his manor was under the constant, watchful eye of these two parties.

"Duke Patterson. Today, the topic of our conversation seems to be quite important. Go ahead, tell me what this is all about." Linley smiled.

Patterson withdrew a magiccrystal card from his clothes. "Linley. There are ten million gold coins in this card."

"Ten million gold coins?" Linley waited for Patterson's explanation.

Patterson said helplessly, "Linley, I'll tell you the truth. After my elder brother tasked me with the position of Minister of Finance for the kingdom, I have used my authority to accumulate wealth for myself. Up until now, my activities have been hidden perfectly, but this time, the smuggling activity I engaged in with another clan was simply too large-scale. Based on what my sources tell me, my elder brother...may have already found out.”

Patterson still held to his, as he did not reveal that the clan in question was the Debs clan.

“The smuggling was on too large a scale? But does this have anything to do with me?” Linley laughed as he looked at Patterson.

Patterson hurriedly said, “Of course this has something to do with you. Although I am King Clayde’s younger brother, I know very well that when he makes his move, he never shows any mercy at all. I must find a path of retreat. After all, over the course of all these years, I have done too many things. Once this affair comes to light, many other affairs will be dug up as well.”

“Thus...I want you to speak on my behalf with young master Yale of the Dawson Conglomerate. I know that you are good friends with Yale.” A hint of a smile appeared on Patterson’s face.

“Yale?” Linley began to understand Patterson’s intentions.

Patterson said helplessly, “In the future, when these events come to pass, there are not many local powers capable of rescuing me from Fenlai City. But the Dawson Conglomerate is definitely one of them. The Kingdom of Fenlai does not dare to offend the Dawson Conglomerate! At the same time, the Radiant Church will not go to loggerheads against the Dawson Conglomerate for the sake of a minor corruption scandal.”

“As long as the Dawson Conglomerate is willing to act, they can easily rescue me. However, I spoke with the Dawson Conglomerate, and they were not willing to offend King Clayde on my behalf." Patterson looked hopefully at Linley.

"Linley, Yale is the son of the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate. His words are extremely influential. What's more, the Dawson Conglomerate values you quite highly as well. As long as you are willing to help me, there definitely won't be any problems." Duke Patterson begged. "If you don't help me, I most likely am going to die. I beg of you, please help. No one will know that you and I have spoken."

"As long as you are willing to save me, these ten million gold coins are yours, Linley. I beg you." Patterson's words were very sincere. His eyes were filled with hope!

Linley laughed.

"No one will know?" Linley's smile was incandescent.

"Right. No one will know." Patterson hurriedly nodded. A look of joy had already appeared in his eyes.

Suddenly, Linley's body began to transform at a high speed. Black draconic scales began to come out of his body, while a single black horn sprouted out of his forehead. His two hands transformed into draconic claws. His pupils also transformed from their original color to the dark, golden color of the Armored Razorback Wurm.

"You..." Duke Patterson's face changed. Knowing that something was wrong, he hurriedly roused his own battle-qi, and all of the muscles of his body began to tighten.

"Whoosh!"

Linley's iron-whip-like tail slashed through the air with a terrifying howl. Given Duke Patterson's reaction time and speed, he was unable to avoid it, and it landed a vicious blow on his body.

"WHACK!"

Patterson, warrior of the seventh rank, was sent flying. Blood splattered everywhere.

But then in the next instant, that whip-like tail wrapped around Patterson. The sounds of bones clattering could be heard as Patterson's entire body was bound tightly, preventing him from moving in the slightest. Patterson struggled as much as he could, but his arms were unable to break free from his bonds.

Linley controlled his draconic tail to pull Patterson towards himself.

Linley was now under full Dragonform. His cold, merciless, dark golden eyes stared death directly into Patterson's eyes. A hint of a cruel smile played about the corners of Linley's lips. "You say....no one will know? Haha. That's just perfect. I've waited so very long for this opportunity."

"You...you..." Patterson had been absolutely scared stupid by this sudden development.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 11, The Man Behind the Curtain

His entire body was covered in black scales, while sharp black spikes jutted out from his elbows and his knees. His entire back was lined with a row of sharp spikes coming from his spine. And his eyes had turned a dark golden color. Just seeing that cold, dark, golden set of eyes staring at him was enough to terrify Duke Patterson.

“Who are...who are you?” Duke Patterson was so terrified that his face was ashen white. His mouth flapped for a long while before he managed to say these words.

What was this monstrosity in front of him?

“Who am I?” Linley’s cold gaze was fixed on Patterson.

“Squeak, squeak.” The sounds of bones chattering emanated from throughout Patterson’s body, as Linley continued to apply force through his iron-whip-like tail in constricting Patterson. No matter how hard Patterson struggled, he couldn’t budge at all.

Pain began to spread from his arms to the rest of his body.

“You are from another plane?” Patterson’s eyes were filled with terror. From what he could tell, based on Linley’s current appearance, only a different species from another plane could do what Linley had just done. “Linley, I beg you, spare me, spare my life. I definitely will keep your secret, definitely.”

Transfixed by Linley's dark golden gaze, Patterson had totally lost his equanimity.

"Spare your life?" A hint of a cold smile appeared on Linley's face. "That's not impossible. I want to ask you something. Around twelve or thirteen years ago, did you send some people out to kidnap a woman."

Patterson was startled.

He immediately frantically tried to recollect the affairs of twelve or thirteen years past, but twelve or thirteen years was an extremely long period of time. Most importantly... "Linley, no, Lord Linley, I...I can't remember." Patterson said frantically.

"That was a long time ago, and I often would have women I took a fancy to captured and brought to my mansion. I don't know exactly which one you are talking about."

That murderous intent in Linley's heart began to grow.

This Patterson actually often abducted women?

From Linley's face, Patterson had no idea as to the transformation that was currently occurring in Linley's heart. Having completely undergone the Dragonform, Linley appeared totally cold and emotionless, terrifying sinister.

"A woman who had just given birth not long beforehand, who had just finished a pilgrimage to the Radiant Temple, and then returned to her hotel." Linley still stared icily at Patterson. His voice didn't rise at all.

Hearing Linley say these things, Patterson's entire body went stiff. And then he stared at Linley in astonishment.

"You remember now?" Linley said coldly.

Of course Patterson remembered now. Throughout all these years, he had only abducted women who had just given birth on two occasions. His memories of these affairs was quite keen. Especially that one time, thirteen years ago. That time, the person whom had instructed him to act had severely warned him to maintain secrecy.

"I really can't remember." Patterson said, terrified. "Lord Linley, I beg you, spare me. I really don't know. You must be mistaken."

Linley's dark golden eyes flashed.

"You want to die?" Linley's voice grew even colder.

"Ahhhh!" Patterson's screamed in torture as Linley's tail increased the pressure around him. This greater pressure was causing all of the bones in Patterson's body to moan in protest.

"Clatter. Clatter." The sound of bones nearly cracking was enough to make one's heart shudder.

But Linley still only stared coldly at Patterson.

"Crunch!"

"Ahhhhh!"

The crisp sound of a bone snapping, mixed with the tortured screams of Patterson. His left arm bone had actually been snapped clean by this terrifying pressure.

"Not bad." Linley's lips quivered slightly. As though he were smiling.

But Patterson didn't view it as a smile. Under the Dragonform, the slight curve of Linley's lips only filled Patterson's with even more fear.

"You know what matters and what doesn't. The vast majority of your battle-qi has been used to protect your vital organs. Only a small amount of battle-qi was used to protect your arm. It's true. A broken arm isn't a life-threatening condition. But if your organs were to rupture, then you really will lose your life." Linley's voice was very calm.

Patterson felt his throat go dry.

He had never imagined that Linley would have such a terrifying side.

"Now, do you remember yet?" Linley asked again.

Patterson really wanted to answer him, but when he thought about the punishment which would await him if he spoke, he couldn't help but shudder. His face growing still more pitiful, he cried out miserably, "Lord Linley, I beg of you, don't torture me. I really don't know. Even if you kill me, I still don't know."

Patterson firmly believed that, with this affair having been over thirteen years ago and Linley being so young, there was no way Linley could be certain about what had happened.

Most likely, Linley had received some sketchy details and was not absolutely certain. As long as he clenched his teeth and refused to speak, perhaps Linley would believe him in the end.

"Lord Linley, if I knew, I would've told you long ago, and avoided all this suffering. Lord Linley, I beg of you, please investigate this matter clearly." Tears began to pour out of Patterson's eyes, and his face was a picture of sincerity. If it weren't for the fact that Linley had read that letter from his father, he might really have hesitated.

Staring at Patterson, Linley's lips began to curve upwards even more.

Patterson's heart felt a sudden chill.

"Good. Wonderful." Linley's tail was still wrapped around Patterson. Suddenly, the draconic tail sent Patterson smashing directly, viciously into the stone floor. Fortunately, though, Linley smashed Patterson feet-first, rather than head-first.

Linley gave full reign to the power of his draconic tail!

Patterson's two legs smashed against the stone floor.

"Crush!"

The sound of bones splintering instantly, mixed with Patterson's terrifying, high-pitched howls of agony.

On Patterson's left knee, the shattered white bone was visible to the eye, piercing both through his leg and his pants. His right leg, even worse off, simply lay limply on the ground, while blood stained his pants around the ankles in particular.

"Ahhh! Ahhhh! Ahhhh!" Patterson was screaming nonstop.

This level of pain was killing him. Fortunately, though, his organs had been protected by his battle-qi, and so his life was not yet in danger.

"Demon. Demon." Patterson was cursing nonstop in his heart. He knew what a tremendous force Linley was using. Based on his strength as a warrior of the seventh rank, he was only just barely able to protect his internal organs with his battle-qi, and couldn't protect the rest of his body.

Patterson didn't want to die.

Crippled legs?

Not a problem. With enough money, he definitely could invite a Grand

Magus of the ninth-rank of the Radiant Church to use the 'Song of Life' on him. As long as he didn't already die, any wound, no matter how serious, could be healed!

"Do you remember yet? That woman you abducted?" Linley's voice was still very calm, not rising in the slightest.

But the terror in Patterson's heart was growing.

"I remember. I remember." Beads of sweat were flowing down Patterson's face. Not from pain. From fear.

Patterson knew very well that in this sealed underground room in which he and Linley were currently in, nobody outside could hear anything, no matter how loud the screams. Perhaps someone directly outside, leaning against the stone door, could just barely hear something.

But who would be outside of this secret little room, pressing their ears against the stone door?

No matter how loud he screamed, no one would know.

"If you said so earlier, wouldn't you have suffered less?" Linley's dark golden eyes stared peacefully at Patterson. "Speak, then. Explain what happened to me."

Patterson hurriedly nodded. "Lord Linley, that year, that woman was extremely beautiful. I was bewitched, and hatched an evil plot to abduct that woman and bring her back to my place. I wanted that woman to sleep with me, but she was too headstrong. She committed suicide by ramming her head against the stone wall."

Stuttering as he spoke, Patterson looked at Linley.

In Patterson's opinion, there were very few people who knew what had really happened to that woman. Linley shouldn't have had any clue.

"You continue to lie!!!"

Linley finally grew angry. Those dark golden eyes seemed to slowly turn red. Using his draconic tail, Linley brought Patterson directly before him. Linley all but pressed his face directly against Patterson's, coldly staring into his eyes.

Pressed against Linley, seeing Linley's black scales and the black horn on his forehead, Patterson grew even more terrified.

"I'm not lying! I'm not lying!" Patterson hurriedly said.

Linley's hands, already transformed into claws by the Dragonform, suddenly delivered a mighty slap to Patterson's face.

"THWACK!" Five pieces of flesh were ripped from Patterson's face, and blood began to flow out in a steady stream. Fortunately, Linley wasn't trying to kill him. Otherwise, he would've crushed Patterson's brain to a pulp with this blow.

"Sob...sob...sob..." Patterson was in so much pain that his voice changed.

Linley stared coldly at Patterson. "Patterson, listen closely. I already know very much about what had happened, which is why it's best for you not to lie to me. Otherwise, the torment you will suffer definitely will not be limited to just this. Let me tell you this. The woman that you abducted was my mother!"

"Mother?" Patterson was stunned, even forgetting his pain for the moment.

"I am very clear about what happened that day with my mother, and I have been investigating this entire time. Thus, it's best if you tell me everything about what happened to my mother. Otherwise...you will definitely die." Linley's voice grew even more freezing.

Actually, no matter what Patterson said, he was still definitely going to die.

Because Linley's father had been pursued and heavily injured by Patterson's men, and had died as a result. Patterson didn't yet know that the person he had sent people out to hunt and kill was Linley's father. If he had known...perhaps Patterson would be reacting in a totally different way.

"Tell me. Who did you give my mother to?" Linley stared at Patterson.

"You knew?" Patterson's face turned pale.

Linley actually knew that he had given the woman away to someone else?

"Tell me his name, but you'd best not lie to me. If I discover that you have lied to me, I will make your life worse than death." Linley's voice was very calm again, not rising in the slightest.

Patterson hesitated for a moment.

"There's no use for me to tell you. You can't kill him." Patterson said in a low voice.

"Can't kill him?" Linley stared coldly at Patterson. "Patterson, listen to me. All you have to do is tell me who that person is. As for whether or not I can kill him, that's none of your concern. Do you think you know what my real level of ability is?"

Hearing these words, Patterson secretly agreed.

The 'Linley' in front of him was too terrifying. The power he had previously displayed had already made others believe he was an absolute genius. But apparently, Linley's real power was far greater than that of a warrior of the seventh rank. In front of Linley, he didn't have the slightest ability to resist.

Patterson began to furiously calculate in his mind.

Linley didn't rush him, only fixing Patterson with his dark golden gaze.

After pondering a long time, Patterson gritted his teeth and looked at Linley. "Linley, I'll tell you who he is, but you have to guarantee that you definitely won't let anyone know that I was the one who told you! And, you have to promise you won't kill me."

Linley's face was still as cold as ever. "Fine. I guarantee that I will not tell anyone that you were the one to tell me. And, I guarantee I will not kill you."

Only now did Patterson secretly let out his breath.

"About twelve years ago, on one occasion, we members of the royal clan of Fenlai went to pay a visit to the Radiant Temple. Within the Radiant Temple, we saw your mother. Afterwards, I sent people to abduct your mother." Patterson immediately said, "But that wasn't actually my own intent. I was obeying the orders of another."

"Who?" Linley asked.

Patterson glanced at Linley. He slowly said, "The orders came from my elder brother. The current ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai. King Clayde."

"Clayde?" Linley was startled.

The pride of the Kingdom of Fenlai, the 'Golden Lion', Clayde? The warrior of the ninth rank, Clayde?

"Yes. It was Clayde." Patterson said with certainty. "But I know that Clayde valued your mother highly. He even told me that no matter what, I couldn't let this information out, as if I did, I would definitely die."

Linley looked at Patterson.

"He should be telling the truth." Doebling Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind. "I can sense the vibrations of his soul."

Linley made up his mind.

Patterson looked beseechingly at Linley. "Linley, can you spare my life? I guarantee that I definitely won't say a single word about what happened today to anyone." Patterson's eyes were filled with hope.

"Fine. I'll keep my promise." Linley's draconic tail loosened.

Patterson's body dropped to the floor. A look of wild joy appeared on Patterson's face, and he looked at Linley with eyes filled with gratitude.

Right at this moment, a black blur flashed by.

"Crunch."

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, bit Patterson's neck. Patterson stared with terror at Bebe. He had just escaped from death's door, but now, he could already seem to feel the call of the Netherworld. Patterson could tell that the little Shadowmouse was the one which was always on Linley's shoulders.

Disbelievingly, Patterson stared at Linley.

"I said I wouldn't kill you. But I never said my magical beast wouldn't kill you." Linley looked coldly at Patterson, whose throat was spurting out blood. "Let me tell you something else as well. Several months ago, there was a man who snuck into your Duke's mansion. Afterwards, you sent people after him to kill him. And that man...was my father!"

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 12, The Investigation

Just before his death, Patterson finally understood.

He had, after all, participated in Linley's father's funeral. He knew that Linley's father was already dead.

The funny thing was, just now, he had been hoping that he could leave with his life. But now, he completely understood why Linley had done what he had done. Deep in Patterson's heart, he was unwilling to be resigned to dying like this. Based on his prowess as a warrior of the seventh rank, it wouldn't be too hard to live for another two or three hundred years.

His life should still be long.

"I'm dying, but Clayde, your life won't be much better." As Patterson's soul was drawn to the Netherworld, it contained a thread of hatred, hatred for his brother Clayde.

.....

After watching Patterson die, Linley returned to his normal form.

"Clayde. So the man behind this event was Clayde." Linley frowned deeply.

Clayde himself was a combatant of the ninth rank. Even if Linley was in full Dragonform, he would be at most an early eighth rank combatant.

Clayde was on a totally different level compared to him. Even if Linley were to ambush him, he simply could not harm a warrior of the ninth rank. The gap between them was too great.

And Clayde had tremendous power at his disposal as well.

As the revered ruler of Fenlai, how could he not have many fighters under his banner? And, having been the ruler for many years of the Kingdom of Fenlai, the leading kingdom amongst the six kingdoms of the Holy Union, he had a very close relationship with the Radiant Church. His roots were extremely deep.

In terms of both strength as well as forces available, Linley could not compare to Clayde.

"Perhaps my only advantage right now is that I am operating hidden in the shadows." Linley constantly pondered how to deal with Clayde.

Doehring Cowart appeared from within the Coiling Dragon ring. He immediately urged Linley, "Linley, don't waste any more time here. What you need to do right now is to destroy anything that might reveal you were here. Get back to your own estate immediately, otherwise, if you return too late, when they begin investigating who killed Patterson, they might suspect you."

Linley was startled awake.

Right!

His only advantage was that he was operating from within the shadows. No matter what, he couldn't allow Clayde to be on guard against him.

"Time to burn the evidence to ashes." Linley immediately generated several dozen fireballs which surrounded Patterson's body. Based on his current spiritual energy, the temperature of his fireballs was quite high.

Patterson's body quickly began to burn, while at the same time, an extremely foul odor began to fill the air. After a while, only a few charred yellow bones and ashes remained.

That foul odor made Linley frown.

"Linley, your clothes." Doehring Cowart reminded.

Linley looked down at his clothes. Indeed. After having gone through the Dragonform transformation, his clothes had been totally ripped apart. Linley retrieved his things, and then removed his outer jacket and pants without the slightest hesitation. Instantly, he burnt his clothes to ashes as well.

Linley immediately activated the mechanism.

"Rumble rumble." The stone door once more opened, and Linley hurriedly walked out, then closed the door again.

No matter what, it was best for the stone door to be closed. Otherwise, with the door open, that smell of burnt flesh would quickly draw people's attention.

"There should be clothes within this room." Linley glanced down at his underwear. Clearly, he couldn't walk out just in his ruined underwear like this. That would definitely arouse suspicion. Linley immediately went to another room on the side, opening up a dresser.

The dresser was filled with sets of clothes.

Linley selected a set of black clothes, rather similar to the outfit he had worn to the engagement ceremony. Putting the clothes on, Linley then once more used his wind-style spells to blow away the nearby specks of blood as well as that foul odor of burning flesh.

"Best to go back early. Can't let anyone notice anything." Moving at high speed, Linley leapt straight through the courtyard, arriving at the front courtyard in a matter of minutes.

At this point in time, there were still a few nobles remaining, engaging in idle conversation.

"Oh, Lord Linley. You haven't left yet?" Count Juneau was heading out as well. Seeing Linley not too far away, he warmly greeted Linley.

Linley smiled. "Right. Just then, my stomach felt a bit queasy, so I went to the privy."

Count Juneau walked out shoulder-to-shoulder with Linley.

“Lord Linley, I must say that I am a big fan of your sculptures. I was the one who bought your very first three sculptures that you exhibited at the main hall of the Proulx Gallery.” Count Juneau said proudly to Linley. The thing which Count Juneau was proudest was most likely the fact that he had been the one to purchase the first three sculptures which Linley had put on display.

Those three sculptures of Linley’s, just judging from the outside, was perhaps only worth six or seven thousand gold coins.

However...Linley’s status was now very different. He was the master sculptor who had carved ‘Awakening From the Dream’. In terms of status, he wasn’t too much off from the levels of Proulx and Hope Jensen. How could the price of the very first three sculptures a person such like this exhibited be low?

Based on his calculations and the implicit value, these three sculptures which Count Juneau had collected were most likely each worth at least a hundred thousand gold coins!

This was perhaps the collection which Count Juneau was the most delighted over, ever. Count Juneau had decided that these three items needed to be kept in his collection. He believed...as Linley’s future accomplishments became greater and greater, the value of these three sculptures would rise as well.

“Lord Linley, have a safe trip.” The housekeeper for the Debs clan said respectfully at the gate for the Deb’s clan’s manor.

Linley nodded. Bidding farewell to Count Juneau, he entered his own carriage.

"Go back." Linley gave a calm command upon entering the carriage.

"Yes, milord."

The Radiant Church warrior of the seventh rank who served as a driver bowed in acknowledgment, then immediately began driving the carriage towards Linley's manor.

"I probably spent around fifteen minutes or so with Patterson." Linley took out his pocket watch and took a glance.

This was one of the gifts that the many well-wishers of his had sent him upon him being conferred the rank of Marquis.

"Fifteen minutes or so. Count Juneau and the rest were amongst the last pack of guests to leave. If they don't investigate extremely carefully, it shouldn't be possible for them to suspect me." Linley said to himself. "The other problem is, Patterson said that his housekeeper knew that he was going to meet with someone, but not exactly who."

Linley frowned. "But I can't totally trust his words. Perhaps his housekeeper did in fact know he was going to meet me, but Patterson wanted me to relax and trust him and thus claimed no one else knew."

Linley had considered this possibility.

Patterson's housekeeper!

This definitely was a flaw.

What's more...if there really was an investigation, people might discover that Linley had disappeared for fifteen minutes at the end. But during that period of time, all the nobles were engaged in casual conversation and were leaving haphazardly. It would most likely be extremely difficult to clearly investigate a single person, given those circumstances.

"At least no one personally witnessed my meeting with Patterson. The one attendant who did see was killed by Patterson." Linley said to himself.

At most, others might suspect him. But there was no actionable evidence against him.

"Boss, what are you thinking about?" Bebe was lying on Linley's legs. Raising his little head, he looked at Linley.

"Nothing." Linley rubbed Bebe's little head, having totally calmed down.

"Milord, we have arrived."

Linley pushed open the carriage curtains, then raised his head and stared up at the boundless sky. Right now, the night sky was filled with stars. Linley couldn't help but feel a carefree joy in his heart, while at the same time, his resolve to kill Clayde grew still more firm. "Patterson died today. Next one up is Clayde."

Patterson had disappeared for a day or two. Aside from Patterson's housekeeper, no one noticed that something was amiss.

Within the Debs clan's manor, there was only Bernard and a jade-haired middle-aged person.

"Bernard, on the night of Kalan's engagement, did the Lord Duke depart from your manor?" The jade-haired middle-aged man asked. This man was Duke Patterson's housekeeper, named Lodi [Luó'di].

Bernard was forced to hold in his aggrieved feelings and refrain from saying, "Your Duke disappeared, and you are asking ME about it?" That night, Patterson hadn't even told Bernard whom he was going to meet, nor did he say a word when he left. How would he, Bernard, know anything?

"The Lord Duke left. The Lord Duke is not in my manor." Bernard replied directly.

The very day after the engagement ceremony, Bernard had sent someone over to dispose of the servant's corpse. His servants didn't find any trace of Patterson within that small building.

"Oh." Lodi frowned, then stared at Bernard. "Bernard, if you find any trace of my Duke, you must let me know immediately. This affair might be minor, or it might be major. If it becomes a major affair, even the smuggling affairs of your Debs clan might come to light.”

Bernard’s face changed.

“Alright, I’ll go back now.” Lodi left with a heavy mind.

Seeing Lodi’s departing back, Bernard felt somewhat unsettled, and made the decision to immediately go visit that building which Patterson had used.

Within that secretive building inside the Debs clan’s estate.

Bernard had entered alone. The corpse of that dead servant had long since been removed and disposed of by the people Bernard had sent. Looking at the building, Bernard frowned. “Duke Patterson said he was going to meet with a guest, but in the end, he didn’t return home. Could it be...”

Bernard suddenly thought of one possibility.

Very few people even in the Debs clan knew about the secret underground room. Naturally, those people he had sent to dispose of the corpse wouldn’t know either, nor would they go investigate.

But Bernard had told Duke Patterson of the secret underground room. He had also told the Duke that there was definitely no one who could eavesdrop on any conversations within.

"Impossible. There's no way something like that could've happened." Bernard hurriedly ran into the main hall, then directly went to the mechanism and activated it.

"Rumble, rumble."

That wall-like 'stone door' slowly opened, while at the same time, a foul, bloody odor that smelt like burnt flesh wafted out.

The look on Bernard's face grew ugly.

Hurriedly walking into the secret room, he saw that on the granite floor, there were still traces of blood and scratches. To the side, there was a pile of charred human bones as well as ashes.

"Someone died here." Bernard was absolutely certain.

And then, the person who died had been burnt to ashes. But there was no way for Bernard to tell who it was for certain.

"Ring!" Bernard suddenly saw within the pile of ashes a dirty, grayish-silver ring. Upon seeing the ring, Bernard felt that it looked extremely similar to the ring which Duke Patterson liked to wear.

Instantly, all the blood fled from Bernard's face.

"Patterson is most likely dead." Bernard's thoughts were a chaotic mess.

The Debs clan had spent over half of their capital and a large amount of manpower in order to carry out this water jade smuggling operation with Duke Patterson's help. This was an extremely important business operation for the Debs clan. But if the smuggling became exposed...it wouldn't just be a problem of losing money. Most likely, the entire Debs clan would be exterminated by the furious King Clayde!

The entire Debs clan....was quite possibly finished.

"No, not possible. Duke Patterson was a warrior of the seventh rank. How could he die so easily? Given his careful personality, there is no way that he would meet in private with someone who was more powerful than him." Bernard couldn't accept what he was seeing.

It was true. Patterson was an extremely cautious man. Sadly, Patterson didn't have an accurate understanding of Linley's power.

.....

The entire city of Fenlai was peaceful. Linley continued to train quietly at his manor every day. But then, after Duke Patterson had disappeared for half a month, the previously calm and sedate King Clayde finally began to issue orders. The first step was to capture the Duke's housekeeper, Lodi. The next was to investigate the Duke's whereabouts on a wide scale.

Within the main hall of Linley's manor.

"Lord Linley, per his Majesty's decree, he would like Lord Linley to pay a visit to the palace.”

Staring at the royal decree brought by the palace attendant, Linley felt a bit unsettled. Why was King Clayde summoning him?

“Please wait a moment. Allow me to change my clothes, and I’ll head to the palace immediately afterwards.” Linley smiled as he replied.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 13, Secrets Exposed

The night was pitch-dark.

The sound of the carriage could be heard on the quiet road leading to the palace. Linley was sitting alone in the carriage, with Bebe on his legs. Next to the carriage, there were over ten knights on fine stallions, and leading them was the palace servant who had come.

Within the carriage.

Linley was frowning as he considered. "It's quite late already. But King Clayde suddenly summoned me to his palace. What is this about?" As the saying goes, only those who were blameless would always be relaxed.

Linley had just killed Patterson, and now he was very much aware that in the past, it was Clayde who had instructed Patterson to send people to abduct his mother. In other words, there was a deep enmity between him and Clayde.

Naturally, Linley was very careful around Clayde.

"I heard two days ago, Clayde seized the housekeeper of the Duke's manor, and has begun a wide scale investigation of Patterson's affairs. Patterson said that he hadn't told anyone about his meeting with me. But can I trust those words?" Linley felt uncertain.

Perhaps that housekeeper already knew about Patterson and Linley's meeting.

If that Duke's housekeeper informed King Clayde of the meeting, then naturally, Linley would be at the precipice of danger.

"Linley, don't worry."

Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind, reassuring him. "Linley, even if that Duke Patterson told his housekeeper that he was meeting with you, you would still be fine."

"Fine?" Linley looked questioningly at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart nodded confidently. "Naturally. Even if Clayde guessed that you killed Patterson, he still won't openly address it."

"Because...Clayde doesn't know the reason why you killed Patterson." Doehring Cowart's face was filled with confidence.

Linley was startled. Even if Clayde didn't know why he killed Patterson... he still would know Linley was the killer, right?

"It's simple. Judging from the conversation you had with Patterson in that underground room, his relationship with Clayde wasn't very good. While he was the Minister of Finance, Patterson engaged in widespread corruption. In his heart, Clayde probably didn't feel much affection for Patterson. What's more...Clayde doesn't know that there is enmity between the two of you. Thus, he won't act against you without cause. Because if he wishes to punish you, or to kill you, he would have to first get permission from the Radiant Church." His eyes gleaming, Doehring Cowart looked at Linley.

"Hrmph, can that Clayde really be considered a king? The Radiant Church has the authority to depose him from his rule. But you are someone whom the Radiant Church values highly. Would he dare to casually act against you?" Doehring Cowart consoled Linley.

Linley nodded.

He understood this logic.

However...

Linley truly did not wish for Clayde to be on his guard against him. If Clayde became wary of Linley, how would Linley investigate his mother's whereabouts or take revenge on behalf of his mother?

"Open the door! It's me!" The palace attendant shouted in a shrill voice.

Hearing this, Linley immediately knew that they had already reached the palace gates. Like a giant beast, the gates squatted there, hulking. In just a half hour's time, countless carriages had entered and left the palace.

One of those carriages was Linley's. Another belonged to Bernard. And still others were carrying other nobles.

Within the business discussion hall of the palace.

Aside from the two guards standing at the door to the hall, everyone else present in the hall were nobles of high rank. In total, there were eight people present. These were Bernard, leader of the Debs clan. The Prime Court Magus, Linley. The Left Premier, Duke Bonalt. The Inspector General, Hampton [Han'pu'dun]...

"Linley, you came." Bernard greeted him warmly.

All of the nobles already present instantly greeted him as well. Seeing all of these nobles, Linley couldn't help but suddenly feel calm. It seemed that he had not been specially summoned after all.

"Milords, I wonder if any of you know why his Majesty has summoned us?" Linley immediately asked.

Duke Bonalt, as the Left Premier, knew a great deal of information.

"Most likely, this summons is related to the disappearance of Duke Patterson." Duke Bonalt replied with a warm laugh.

Bernard, off to the side, immediately asked, "Lord Duke, what does Duke Patterson's disappearance have to do with me? I don't have any important responsibilities at court."

"Today, his Majesty isn't summoning his entire court, merely investigating a matter. Otherwise, why would I be here, but not the Right Premier, and only a single Inspector General?" Duke Bonalt saw things quite clearly.

Bernard nodded.

But Bernard still felt very uneasy.

Ever since Patterson had disappeared, Bernard had been filled with unease. He feared that the involvement between his Debs clan and Duke Patterson in the water jade smuggling operation would be brought to light. If this affair was revealed, then the Debs clan would really be finished.

"His Majesty has arrived!"

Suddenly, the shrill voice of the palace attendant sounded out. From a side door to the hall, Clayde walked in, heading directly for a seat in front and sitting down, two palace attendants respectfully at his side.

"All hail his Majesty!"

All of the nobles present bowed and chanted.

Clayde glanced at the nobles. He calmly nodded, then said, "It's quite late at night already. I originally didn't wish to disturb all of you, but this issue regarding the disappearance of my second brother, Patterson, is too important. I was forced to summon all of you to come here."

"Might I ask, your Majesty, what Duke Patterson's disappearance has to do with your summons for us?" Linley immediately asked.

Of the eight people present before Clayde, perhaps only Linley would dare to speak to him in such a manner. Because while everyone else present was subordinate to Clayde, in reality, Linley was the subordinate of the Radiant Church, and was only a servant of the Kingdom of Fenlai in name.

"Linley, I just wish to clearly investigate this affair." Clayde smiled, and then said in a loud voice, "Bring out the Duke's housekeeper, Lodi."

Lodi? The Duke's housekeeper?

Both Linley and the Deb clan's leader Bernard felt their hearts start to pound.

The entire meeting hall was silent. Everyone quietly awaited Lodi being brought forward to testify. Linley still stood there, with the Shadowmouse Bebe on his shoulders.

After a short while...

Under escort by palace guards, a middle-aged man with jade-like hair walked in. This man looked very fragile, with mussed hair and a bewildered look on his face.

Bernard recognized this man at a single glance. This man in front of him was indeed Lodi, the housekeeper for Duke Patterson.

"Lodi, explain everything in detail." Clayde shouted towards Lodi.

Lodi clearly had already explained once to Clayde already. This explanation clearly was for the benefit of Linley and the others. Lodi said very honestly, "Your Majesty, on June 18th, when the Debs clan held that engagement ceremony, the Lord Duke also went to attend. But after the ceremony, the Lord Duke never came back."

"Lodi, stand to one side." Clayde said coldly.

"Yes, your Majesty." Lodi clearly was terrified. He hurriedly scurried off into a corner.

Clayde swept the eight nobles with his gaze.

"Based on the information from my investigations, the night of the engagement ceremony at the Debs clan, you all were amongst the last to leave. What I want to ask is, did any of you encounter Duke Patterson?" Clayde's question was very simple.

"Right after the banquet, Patterson departed." The Left Premier, Lord Bonalt, said in a loud voice.

Linley nodded as well. "I, too, saw Patterson departing quite early."

The others either said they didn't see him, or that Patterson left very early.

Hearing everyone speak, Clayde smiled and nodded, and then turned to Lodi again. "Lodi, continue."

"Yes." Lodi continued. "That night, before going to the Debs manor, Duke Patterson told me that he was going to be meeting with an extremely important person, but to the importance of the discussion topic, nobody could know about it. Thus, he ordered me to arrange for a double to impersonate him and leave the manor. In truth, the Lord Duke would remain within the manor."

"The Lord Duke also said that the Debs clan would arrange for a safe, secret place for his meeting." Lodi added.

Upon hearing these words, Bernard Debs' face immediately turned white.

"Your Majesty! Your Majesty!"

Bernard hurriedly said, "This has nothing to do with me. The Lord Duke told me he wanted to meet with someone, so I arranged a meeting room for them. I couldn't refuse him."

"Bernard. Don't be hasty. I won't wrongly blame someone." Clayde smiled.

"Thank you, your Majesty." Bernard quickly stepped back, but his face was still pale.

Clayde turned to look at Linley and the others. "If Patterson was going to meet with someone, the person he was going to meet with should have some status. Who would that person be? I think...it must have been one of the last guests to leave."

Linley's heart trembled.

Duke Bonalt, Count Juneau, Marquis Hampton, and the others all stared at Clayde in astonishment. By now, they could guess why the king had called them here.

His Majesty was suspicious of them!

"Your Majesty, I definitely did not meet with him." Count Juneau, Marquis Hampton, and the others hurriedly said.

Clayde smiled. "I only have my suspicions. If none of you did anything to be guilty of, why be so nervous? Look, Linley's the calmest one here."

Linley smiled but didn't make a sound.

Clayde glanced at this group of people, laughing coldly in his heart. "I couldn't give a damn about who made Patterson disappear. In fact, I'd rather thank that person for giving me such a wonderful opportunity to eradicate all the secret connections Patterson has built up."

As the long-time Minister of Finance, Patterson had erected an enormous, dense web of connections. His influence was extremely large. Clayde didn't dare to casually investigate Patterson either, as he didn't want to cause too many problems in the kingdom.

This was also the reason why the Debs clan had decided to work alongside Patterson.

But now, Patterson had disappeared. The group of dragons no longer had a leader.

Acting as fast as lightning, Clayde used various ruthless techniques to quickly clip off Patterson's wings and shatter the web of influence which Patterson had spent so long building up.

Without Patterson's guidance, those collaborators of his naturally would be in for a terrible time if they resisted. There was no way they could resist the pressure exerted by King Clayde.

Clayde looked at Linley and the others. Laughing, he said, "The disappearance of my second brother, Patterson, is something I must look into. But what surprised me was, I ended up discovering quite a few things. Lodi, in particular, spilled many secrets."

Linley couldn't help but look at Lodi.

"Lodi, tell them." Clayde smiled at Lodi.

Right now, Clayde was feeling extremely satisfied. The death of a brother, to Clayde, was no big deal at all. More importantly...all of the power within the Kingdom of Fenlai finally rested with him again.

Lodi respectfully said, "Your Majesty, that day, when Duke Patterson attended the engagement ceremony at the Debs clan, the reason he needed to meet with that mysterious person was that he wanted to start a relationship with the Dawson Conglomerate. Thus...the person he went to see absolutely has to have some sort of connection to the Dawson Conglomerate.

"The Dawson Conglomerate?"

Linley felt his heart shudder violently.

"Does everyone want to know why it was that my second brother wished to start a relationship with the Dawson Conglomerate?" Clayde laughed as he looked at the people present. "Lodi, continue."

"Yes." Lodi clearly had been totally cowed by Clayde, saying whatever he was told to. "Over these years, Duke Patterson had betrayed his country in many ways for his own profit and for his own selfish motives. In these past few months in particular, he initiated a large-scale water-jade smuggling program with the Debs clan. In the entire history of our kingdom, this is the largest water-jade program that has ever existed."

"Smash!"

The leader of the Debs clan, Bernard, immediately knelt down, his knees smashing into the ground. He hurriedly said, "Your Majesty, I am being framed! Our Debs clan has always operated our businesses in an open, aboveboard manner. We've never acted in a way which was against the best interests of the kingdom. Our Debs clan is being framed!"

"Framed?" Clayde flicked a cold glance at Bernard.

"Bring in the Lanseer brothers!"

Upon hearing the words 'Lanseer brothers', the face of Bernard, clan leader of the Debs clan, lost all blood.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 14, Imprisoned

For the sake of this water jade smuggling operation, the Debs clan had paid a very high price. Bernard ordered his Third Brother to be responsible for this affair, and the Lanseer brothers were his Third Brother's right and left hand men.

Standing in the middle of the meeting hall, Linley remained calm. The Shadowmouse, Bebe, also quietly stood on Linley's shoulders.

The man and the magical beast both just stood there as though nothing were happening, quietly watching it all. Even though he saw the begging look Bernard had trained on him, Linley didn't react in the slightest.

After a while...

The sound of heavy chains could be heard. Two golden-haired men in shackles entered the meeting hall, under escort from the palace guards. These two men were shackled by the feet and by the hands as well. Just judging from the thickness of those leg-irons, the shackles must have been one or two hundred pounds heavy.

Such heavy shackles were used expressly for collaring those warriors with powerful strength.

"Milord clan leader."

Upon entering the discussion hall and seeing Bernard who was kneeling on the ground, strange smiles appeared on their faces. They actually called out to Bernard respectfully.

Standing to the side, Linley understood.

Most likely these Lanseer brothers were two of the major leaders in the smuggling operation who most likely had some secret connection with the Debs clan.

"The Debs clan is going to be in trouble now." Linley just quietly watched.

Seeing those two shackled golden-haired men, Bernard reacted with confusion. "Uh? Lanseer and Langmuir [Lan'mu'er], why have the two of you been imprisoned by his Majesty? Didn't I give the two of you a 100,000 gold coins a few months ago and tell you to go enjoy life?"

Those two golden-haired men were briefly startled, then they laughed.

"Milord clan leader, are you jesting?" Lanseer laughed.

Next to him, Langmuir snickered as well. "What, lord clan leader, do you still think that you can lie and hide? Forget it. You might as well admit your guilt."

A look of rage appeared on Bernard's face. He suddenly rose to his feet, staring angrily at Lanseer and Langmuir. "Lanseer, Langmuir, my Debs clan has raised you and cultivated you since you were little. The two of you should know very well how I have treated you.”

“It’s true, you have treated us brothers very well. But the two of us have also risked our lives for the Debs clan for many years now.” The elder brother, Lanseer, said coldly.

Bernard’s rage grew. With a trembling hand, he pointed at the Lanseer brothers. “The two of you truly forget favors and violate justice. True, you two have worked on behalf of the Debs clan for many years now, but all these years, you have been acting corruptly so as to gain money that belonged to the clan. After that event half a year ago, considering that the two of you had worked for us for so long, I spared your lives and even gave you a 100,000 gold coins and told you to go home and enjoy your lives. But...but you...not only are you not grateful, you’ve now participated in smuggling? And after getting caught, you sully the Debs clan?”

Lanseer and Langmuir were totally caught off-guard, and they stared at Bernard in bewilderment.

“We...we were corrupt? You...you gave us 100,000 gold coins?” Lanseer and Langmuir were totally flabbergasted.

Bernard’s rage exploding, he suddenly turned and knelt before Clayde. His tears cascading onto the ground, he said, “Your Majesty, these two are nothing more than a pair of insatiable wolves. When they were young, I saw that they were two pitiable orphans and so I took them in, and later gave them important positions. But they only acted to shovel my clan’s wealth into their own pockets. Despite that, considering the many years of affection between us, I spared their lives and even gave them 100,000 gold coins. This can be considered to be extremely benevolent and merciful of me. But now? Now they actually come here to sully and frame my Debs clan. They want to destroy the Debs clan! How vicious! Your Majesty, my heart is broken. My heart is broken!"

Seeing the miserable cries of Bernard, many of the nobles in the meeting hall did indeed begin to wonder if Lanseer and Langmuir really were framing the Debs clan.

"Bernard, you...you..." Lanseer and Langmuir were so enraged that their faces turned red, but they weren't able to say a single word.

How much had these two brothers sacrificed for the Debs clan?

They were even willing to engage in smuggling for the clan, precisely because the two of them didn't fear death. If it weren't for the fact that this time, the offer from King Clayde was simply too enticing, they wouldn't have betrayed the Debs clan.

But everything which Bernard was saying now was false!

"Oh? There's an event such as this?" Clayde glanced at Bernard.

Clayde could sense that Bernard had come prepared, as otherwise, he wouldn't have suddenly come up with all these lies. If he were to investigate, most likely he wouldn't be able to find any flaws.

"Hrmph. It's a pity that Third Brother of Bernard's leapt into the river. We weren't even able to find his corpse. Otherwise, with his Third Brother in front of him, Bernard would have nothing to say." Clayde was furious.

Smuggling water jade.

Water jade mines were part of the national wealth of the kingdom. Which was to say, it was part of Clayde's wealth.

Illegally mining and smuggling water jade meant stealing from him, Clayde. Naturally, Clayde would feel furious.

But that Third Brother of Bernard's had leapt into the river to commit suicide, while Bernard had seemingly been prepared for Lanseer and Langmuir's betrayal.

"Bernard, I won't unjustly accuse an innocent man." Clayde said solemnly.

"Thank you, your Majesty! Thank you, your Majesty!" Bernard's face was covered with tears.

But Clayde announced coldly, "However, I also won't forgive a person who has betrayed the interests of his kingdom. Based on the intelligence that I have, it seems that the person responsible for this smuggling operating was your Third Brother."

"My Third Brother?" Bernard stared questioningly at Clayde.

Clayde stared coldly at Bernard. "What, do you have something to say?"

A wounded look on his face, Bernard said, "Of course I do. Your Majesty, I really don't know why you said what you just said, but over a year ago, my Third Brother left the Kingdom of Fenlai and began on a training excursion tour to various other countries. Just a few days ago, he sent a letter back to us."

Clayde's gaze grew colder.

His men had personally reported that when they were in the process of apprehending Bernard's Third Brother that the man, being heavily wounded, had elected to throw himself into the river. They couldn't find any trace of him.

"Your Majesty! Your Majesty! You must deliver justice!"

Bernard cast a furious glare at Lanseer and Langmuir. "You simply cannot believe the lies of these two despicable men and cast aspersions on the heart of a clan which is loyal to the kingdom."

"Bernard, you! You!" The furious and anxious Lanseer brothers didn't know what to say.

Clayde suddenly rose to his feet, staring coldly at Bernard. "I've already said that I will not unjustly accuse an innocent man, nor forgive a man who has betrayed the interests of his kingdom. Based on the evidence I have at hand, there is at least a suspicion that your Debs clan has betrayed the kingdom. Guards!"

Bernard's face instantly changed. "Your Majesty! Your Majesty! I am loyal and faithful to the Kingdom!”

Two palace guards rushed into the meeting hall.

“Bernard.” Clayde smiled at Bernard.

Bernard raised his head, looking beseechingly at Clayde, as though he were a child looking at his parents.

“Whether or not your clan is loyal is a question that will only be settled by evidence. I will give you a chance. I will not exterminate your clan right away.”

In his heart, Bernard let out a sigh of relief. What he feared the most was that the Debs clan would instantly be exterminated. “Fortunately, I found those ashes and those remains within the secret room. It gave me the chance to prepare.” Ever since that day, Bernard had been preparing. He had in fact made multiple levels of preparations.

“Guards, deliver Bernard as well as the successor to the Debs clan to the Blackwater Jails. As for this case involving the smuggling operations of the Debs clan, let the Right Premier Merritt [Mei’li’te] investigate.” Clayde ordered.

Immediately, those two guards took Bernard away.

“Your Majesty! I believe in your Majesty’s wisdom!” Bernard called to Clayde, even while being dragged away.

That night, the Greenleaf Road became a very energetic place.

Hoof steps and shouts unabated. Hundreds of knights directly surrounded the Debs clan's manor, terrifying all of the members of the Debs clan present.

"What are you doing? What are you doing? Do you know what place this is?" Kalan's second granduncle, the second uncle of Bernard, immediately shouted at those palace guards.

The leader of the knights said coldly, "Do you dare to go against the dictates of his Majesty?"

But this second granduncle only raised his head proudly. "The orders of his Majesty? Who knows if you are falsely claiming that you have an order from his Majesty? Speak! What do you want?"

"Second Granduncle, what's going on outside?"

By now, many of the members of the Debs clan had rushed over.

Even Alice and Rowling had gotten dressed and rushed over. In the Yulan continent, after the engagement ceremony, the fiancée normally would begin to live with the fiancé. But generally speaking, only after the marriage ceremony would the two of them enter their bridal chambers.

Naturally...

There were cases of people sharing a bedroom prior to the wedding as well, as long as both were willing.

"Big sister Alice, what's going on outside?" Rowling was holding onto Alice's hands.

Alice was bewildered as well. "I'm not sure."

The hundreds of people within the Debs clan's manor all streamed out, and most of them seemed bewildered. Only the core members of the clan who knew the truth about the smuggling operations began to feel frightened.

This smuggling operation of the Debs clan was an extremely large scale one.

Just to carry out the operation, they had used several tens of millions of gold coins. If they were successful, the profits would be several hundred million gold coins. What the Debs clan's elders thoughts were, once would be enough.

But it seemed this one operation had proved problematic.

"Big brother Kalan, what's going on?" Rowling asked Kalan as well.

Kalan shook his head, indicating he didn't know.

The squad of palace knights had assembled outside the manor. Their leader, the knight-captain, upon seeing so many members of the Debs clan present, withdrew the tablet of command from his clothes, shouting in a bright voice, "His Majesty orders that, as the Debs clan is under suspicion of engaging in the smuggling of water jade, the leader of the Debs clan as well as his successor are to be immediately jailed within the Blackwater Jails."

Instantly, the faces of every member of the Debs clan changed.

The faces of those core members of the Debs clan turned even more ashen, even paler. But Alice, Rowling, and those other members of the clan only felt astounded and bewildered.

Several guards stepped forward and grabbed Kalan.

"Take him away!"

The leader of the knights shouted.

At this moment, Kalan felt as though his limbs had gone soft. He allowed those guards to march him towards the gate. But once he reached the gate, he suddenly woke up and, turning his head, frantically called out, "Second Granduncle, Alice, you two have to save me, have to save me!"

Allowing Kalan to shout as much as he wanted, those palace guards emotionlessly escorted him off towards the jails.

Alice, Rowling, and the other members of the Debs clan could only watch as Kalan was taken away, unable to help. Their clan was powerful, true, but how could they resist against the king?

By the next morning, the news that the Debs clan was suspected of having engaged in water jade smuggling had spread across the entire noble circle of Fenlai City. Many of the nobles of Fenlai were paying special attention to this matter.

What's more, this case was being personally handled by the Right Premier of the Kingdom of Fenlai, Duke Merritt.

Within Duke Merritt's manor.

Lord Duke Merritt was already over seventy years old, but as a fairly powerful warrior, he looked as though he were only in his middle years. His short golden hair was slick and gleamed.

Right now, Duke Merritt was seated on a chair. He casually flicked a glance at his visitor from the Debs clan – the second granduncle of Kalan, Nimitz [Ni'mi'si].

"Lord Merritt, our clan has definitely been unjustly accused. I hope, lord, that you will be just to our clan."

As he spoke, Nimitz pulled out a book from his side. "Lord Merritt, I know that you love to collect holy scripts. This holy script was issued by the Radiant Church over three thousand years ago. It's a rather rare one."

"Oh, a holy script?"

Merritt casually accepted it, but while flipping through it, Merritt suddenly noticed that stuck within the pages, there was a flat card. A flat card produced by the Golden Bank of the Four Empires. A magicrystal card!

A hint of a smile appeared on Merritt's face.

Nimitz was carefully observing Merritt's reactions. Merritt closed the holy script, putting it to the side, then smiled. "Nimitz, you should know that aside from holy scripts, I'm also a big fan of sculptures. A while ago, when I saw that 'Awakening From the Dream', I liked it very much. During your clan's engagement ceremony, I saw that Alice. Oh, she looked so very similar to that person in the sculpture. I wonder...if it would be possible for me to have a private chat with Alice."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 15, To Be Wronged

Have a private chat with Alice? Whether or not the Debs clan had engaged in the smuggling of water jade, what use would a private chat with Alice be to make that determination? Clearly, this Merritt had other designs. Nimitz was a person with significant worldly experience. Naturally, he knew exactly what was going on.

Nimitz's eyes narrowed as he stared at Merritt.

But Merritt only casually reclined on his chair, even closing his eyes as he relaxed himself. He didn't even look at Nimitz. Merritt's attitude spoke for itself: If you want your family's 'grievance' to be washed clean, then have Alice come talk to me about it.

Nimitz was quiet for a moment, then laughed. "So Lord Merritt is a fan of Master Linley's 'Awakening From the Dream'. It is understandable if you want to have a chat with Alice. Fine, I'll go back and speak with her."

Upon hearing these words, Merritt opened his eyes, smiling at Nimitz. "Haha, then Nimitz, you can go back now. If Alice is willing to have a good chat with me, I think I will have a better understanding of your Debs clan."

Nimitz immediately stood up, bowing modestly. "Then Lord Merritt, I take my leave. I entrust the affairs of our Debs clan with you."

Merritt nodded slightly.

Nimitz immediately departed.

Leaving behind Duke Merritt, alone in that living room.

Toying with his wine cup, Merritt mumbled in a low voice, "My goddess...Alice..." There was a look of satisfaction and anticipation on his face.

As the Right Premier of the Kingdom of Fenlai, and as a Duke, Merritt had an extremely exalted status. The number of people with a higher status than him in the Kingdom of Fenlai could be counted on one hand.

A person like him had experienced virtually any sort of woman he wished.

Merritt really was a lecher, despite being in his seventies. Warriors of his level could live to be over three hundred. Right now, he was only in his seventies and in the prime of his life. Merritt publicly had twelve wives to his name, but there was a common viewpoint amongst nobles; one's own wives at home weren't as interesting as having lovers outside, but having lovers outside weren't as interesting as those you couldn't get. Those whom you couldn't get were the best of all.

But given Merritt's status, there were very few women he was unable to get. At the same time, there were very few women who could truly move him.

But Alice was definitely one.

Ever since that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream' had become famous, in the hearts of many, the woman of the sculpture had become an untouchable, lofty goddess. For someone of Merritt's stature, naturally he would deeply desire to get a goddess like Alice beneath his thighs. But this was really too difficult.

But now. An opportunity had come.

"Alice. The goddess?" Merritt was unable to repress his smile. Turning his head up, he drained all of the red wine from his glass.

Sitting within his carriage on the way home, Nimitz was frowning deeply.

Alice was Kalan's fiancée!

If he were to ask Alice to get meet privately with Merritt, then he definitely would be essentially pushing Alice into a disaster. In the future, when faced with Kalan's questioning, it wouldn't be a big deal. But if word of this were to spread, the impact it would have on the Debs clan's standing would be tremendous.

"Ugh. If the clan is finished, then what will its reputation matter?" Nimitz shook his head, sighing.

Right now, the Debs clan had reached a critical juncture. If the Debs clan was found to have been guilty of smuggling, then the entire clan would be exterminated, and all of its possessions would be taken by the King of Fenlai. Although the Debs clan had left behind some roots outside the kingdom, preventing it from being totally wiped out, almost all of its possessions were in the Kingdom of Fenlai.

If it was all lost, who knew how many years it would be before the Debs clan would return to its former glory?

Compared to the clan's future, a little bit of mockery and humiliation wasn't a big deal. After all, since when did the circle of nobles lack for embarrassing stories?

"But this has to be of Alice's own free will." Nimitz was a bit worried. "I can't forcibly deliver her to the Right Premier's manor, after all."

Nimitz didn't care at all about Alice's purity. She was just a woman, after all!

But Nimitz knew...

"This Alice has a special relationship with Linley. If I were to force her, and then Linley found out..." Just thinking about it made Nimitz frightened. Linley had a very special status within the Kingdom of Fenlai.

Although he had the rank of Marquis, in actuality, Linley belonged to the Radiant Church. In the past, when Clayde had invited Linley to join the ranks of the nobles in the Kingdom of Fenlai, he had even said that between the two of them, there was no need to observe the normal protocols between king and subject.

Clearly, Clayde desired to pull Linley closer to him.

And all of the nobles of the Kingdom of Fenlai knew that if Linley were willing, he could probably easily become a Vicar of the Radiant Church. In a few dozen years, it would be quite natural for Linley to become a Cardinal.

The status of a Cardinal was even higher than that of the King!

"Can't force her." Nimitz felt a headache coming. He was worried that Alice would refuse. He pondered things from Linley's point of view.

Alice was, after all, previously Linley's first love! If he, Nimitz, were to force Alice to meet Merritt, and she were to lose her chastity, how could Linley not explode with rage?

Within the Debs clan's manor.

The clan hall was filled with many members of the Debs clan. Alice and Rowling were there as well. All of them were awaiting the return of Nimitz.

They were all worrying about the future of the Debs clan!

"Second Uncle is back! Second Uncle is back!" A middle-aged man standing in the doorway saw Nimitz and began to call out.

Instantly, all of the members of the Debs clan rushed out towards Nimitz en masse. Alice and Rowling exchanged glances, then rose and went to welcome him as well.

"Second Uncle, what's the situation?"

Nimitz looked at the group of people in front of him. Squeezing out a smile, he said, "The situation isn't too bad yet. Everyone, go back to your residences. Alice, stay. I need to talk to you."

Within the clan, Nimitz had a great deal of authority. Hearing his words, everyone departed.

Alice was somewhat confused, confused as to what Nimitz wanted to talk to her about.

"Big sister Alice, I'll go back to my room now." Rowling waved towards Alice and said in a quiet voice. A short period of time later, the person left in the hall was Alice.

Nimitz stepped into the hall.

"Second Granduncle, what's wrong?" Alice stuttered.

Nimitz looked at Alice. Suddenly, he smiled warmly towards her. "Alice, don't be nervous. Sit down first. Let's have a good talk." As he spoke, Nimitz sat down as well.

Why was Nimitz, who previously was so stern to her, who seemed to always look down on her, being so warm to her now?

Alice couldn't help but feel suspicious.

"Come, sit." Nimitz's smile was so kind, so warm.

Alice nervously sat down.

Nimitz let out a long breath. Worry appeared between his brows. "Alice, we didn't expect that this would happen so soon after you and Kalan got engaged. I don't know who is secretly framing our Debs clan. If I did, I would kill him." A baleful aura appeared on Nimitz's face, but then it transformed into a look of helplessness. "But right now, the most important thing is to cleanse this stain from our name, and rescue Kalan and Bernard."

Alice nodded.

But in her heart, Alice was suspicious. "Why is Second Granduncle saying these things to me?"

Staring at Alice, Nimitz said with sincerity, "Alice, there is something I must beg of you."

"Beg me?" Alice was so startled, she rose to her feet.

Such as Nimitz's standing within the clan that even the clan leader would be respectful to him. But now, Nimitz was saying that he had to beg her to do something. How could Alice not be shocked?

"Alice, Lord Merritt is in charge of investigating this allegation that the Debs clan was engaged in the smuggling of water jade. Lord Merritt is very intrigued by you and wants to meet with you privately."

Nimitz said urgently to her, "Alice, this is a rare, wonderful opportunity to improve our relationship with him. Only by managing to have a good relationship with Lord Merritt would you be able to help our clan. Alice, you grew up alongside Kalan. You don't want to see him in jail either, right?"

Alice was stunned.

A private meeting?

Alice was someone who had lived in a noble clan as well, and knew all too well about the shameful things which occurred amongst the nobility. She instantly could guess that this meeting with Lord Merritt would be more than a simple meeting.

"I...I..." Alice stuttered.

Nimitz begged, "Alice, our entire Debs clan is relying on you. I can even guarantee that so long as you can pull Lord Merritt to our side, you will be Kalan's principal wife."

Alice felt as though her mind was in shambles.

Alice was still pure and chaste of body.

She had refused to cross that last barrier with both Linley and Kalan. Even after getting engaged to Kalan, Alice still insisted on being married before she would enter the bridal bed with him.

But now she had to go deal with Lord Merritt...

"Alice, I'm begging you." Nimitz gritted his teeth, leaving his chair and falling to his knees before her. "Alice, Kalan's life is in your hands."

"Kalan's life?" Alice trembled.

Kalan had grown up alongside her. In recent days, in the face of ridicule and scorn from the other members of the Debs clan, it had been Kalan who protected her.

"Alright. I agree." Alice gritted her teeth.

A look of surprised joy appeared on Nimitz's face, then he hurriedly said, "Wonderful. How about this. Tomorrow at dusk, I'll arrange for you to be brought to Lord Merritt's manor."

But right now, Alice's face was extremely pale. She didn't respond at all.

That next evening. Escorted by twelve knights, a carriage departed from the Debs clan's manor, slowly rolling towards the manor of Lord Merritt. Within the carriage was only one person. Alice.

Alice quietly sat within the carriage, chewing on her lips. Her nervous hands were tightly gripping her dress.

The carriage continued to roll forward. Quite soon, it arrived at the main gate to Lord Merritt's manor.

"Miss Alice, we're here." The voice of the carriage driver rang out from outside.

Hearing his words, Alice's heart trembled. Her right hand drifted down to her waist. The firmness of the steel dagger by her side helped to slightly calm her mind down.

Taking a deep breath, Alice pushed open the carriage to the door and stepped out.

Within the welcoming hall of Lord Merritt's manor.

Wearing a jacket on top and a skirt beneath, Alice was dressed relatively conservatively. Step by step, Alice managed to enter the hall relatively calmly. Alice looked around her, but saw nobody there within the hall.

"Hrm?" Alice couldn't help but frown.

Just at this moment, a female attendant ran over. Respectfully, she said, "Miss Alice, the Lord Duke is in his study and would like to invite you there as well."

"His study?" Alice shuddered slightly.

But under the urging gaze of the attendant, Alice still began to walk forwards with her.

The study was in a very quiet, secluded area. There were very few people here. Arriving at the door to the study, Alice saw a seemingly middle-aged, golden-haired man standing in front of a study desk, staring at some papers.

"This is Merritt?" Seeing Merritt, Alice's first impression was that this was a very fierce person. Even when he sat down at his desk, his back was ramrod straight, and his eyes were sharp.

"Lord Duke, Miss Alice has arrived." That female attendant said respectfully.

Only now did Merritt raise his head. Seeing Alice, he excitedly rose to his feet. "Haha, Miss Alice, you came? I've waited for quite a long time. Come, Miss Alice, please sit." As he spoke, he left his seat and walked towards Alice.

Alice stepped into the study.

Alice looked around her. Towards the right side of the study, there were many bookshelves, covered with countless books. On the left side of the study, there was a bed.

"Often, when I'm reading or taking care of government affairs, I'll get tired and will rest there." Duke Merritt said with a smile. At the same time, he walked towards the study door and shut it.

Seeing the door to the study shut, leaving behind only her and Merritt in the room, Alice grew nervous.

"Lord Merritt, it's better if we leave the door to the study open. I'm not accustomed to dark environments." Alice hurriedly said.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 16, Limits

As he closed the door to the study, Merritt heard Alice's words. He couldn't help but turn to Alice with a smile. "Miss Alice, we're going to discuss the affairs of the Debs clan. We can't discuss those openly and publicly, can we? If his Majesty were to find out, then I would be in serious trouble. You should know that I'm taking on serious risks on behalf of your Debs clan. Best we leave the door closed."

Alice was stunned.

In terms of wordplay, how could Alice match this Lord Merritt, who had engaged in the highest levels of court intrigue for so long?

Smiling, Merritt walked past her. In front of the bookshelf, there were two chairs around a round table. Merritt would often chat with some of his friends here.

Merritt first sat down, then looked at Alice. "Alice, you should sit."

"Thank you, Lord Merritt." Alice secretly let out a sigh of relief, then sat down on the opposite chair. The thing which made Alice the most nervous in this study was that bed.

"Please wait a moment."

Smiling, Merritt rose to his feet, then pulled out a bottle of red wine and two wine cups. He poured himself and Alice a cup of wine each.

"Alice, this is the Bluerain red wine from the Yulan Empire, a sixty-year old vintage. The flavor isn't bad. Have a taste." Merritt smiled as he raised his glass to her.

Alice was somewhat afraid that some sort of knockout drug had been mixed into the wine. But, under Merritt's gaze, Alice was forced to raise her own glass as well. Only, she just barely touched the wine with her lips.

Merritt didn't force her. Changing the topic, he said, "Alice, you and Kalan have already become engaged. I expect you know quite a bit about the affairs of the Debs clan. Did you know they were engaged in smuggling?"

"No, I didn't. I think Kalan wouldn't engage in smuggling." Alice hurriedly said. "Lord Merritt, the Debs clan is quite powerful. I think they wouldn't engage in this smuggling business."

With a smile that wasn't a smile, Merritt looked at Alice. "Hard to say."

"Ah!"

Merritt seemed to have seen something, and all of a sudden, he moved next to Alice, so close that his face was mere centimeters away from Alice's face.

Startled, Alice hurriedly retreated.

"Don't move." Merritt's shouted carried a hint of a command.

Born from long years of being accustomed to power, Merritt's commanding voice froze Alice in her tracks, as ill at ease as she was. Merritt carefully inspected Alice's hair, then looked down at Alice.

Upon lowering his head, his face was now only a few centimeters away from Alice's. This made Alice hurriedly bend her head away from him.

Seeing this, Merritt laughed, then returned to his original seat. He let out a helpless sigh. "Just then, I saw a single white hair on your head, but after you moved, I couldn't see it anymore."

A strand of white hair?

In her heart, Alice began to grow irritated. She lived together with Rowling now, and every morning, when they were bored, they would comb each other's hair. Often, she would find some white hairs on Rowling's head. But Rowling often expressed envy towards Alice, as she could never find white hair on Alice's head.

Rowling couldn't find any white hair despite combing Alice's hair every day. How could Merritt have found any?

But Alice didn't dare to say this.

"Alice, you are still young. Don't be too upset. If you are upset, you'll age faster, and thus have white hair." Merritt said solicitously.

Alice only quietly listened to him as he spoke.

Merritt nudged his chair in Alice's direction, then fixed his gaze upon Alice. "Alice, you are quite beautiful, you know. Your charm and aura of refinement is really quite mesmerizing to behold."

Alice couldn't help but feel shy and nervous.

Merritt leaned forward slightly, staring intensely at Alice. "Alice. Those wives of mine, all they care about are superficial things like money and glory. They seem so vulgar, so low. But you are totally different. Truly, you are, you know. The very first time I saw you, I was stunned."

"I very much regret that I ended up marrying women such as them." Merritt suddenly reached out and held Alice's hand. Alice's eyes suddenly widened. Merritt continued to look at Alice. "Alice, if I...if I were to tell you that I love you from the bottom of my heart, that I am smitten with you, would you believe me?"

Alice hurriedly stood up...but Merritt maintained his tight grip on her hand.

"Lord Merrit, Lord Merritt. I'm the fiancée of Kalan!" Alice struggled, and only after three attempts was she able to break free from Merritt's grip.

Merritt looked at Alice with a smile. "As you say, you are only a fiancée, which means you aren't married yet. You totally can marry another. As for Kalan, what does a kid like him know about having fun?"

As he spoke, Merritt once more moved nearer to Alice, while Alice continued to move back.

But in her nervousness, Alice didn't notice in the slightest that Merritt was pressuring her into the direction of the bed.

"Alice. I really have fallen for you. I swear!" Merritt stared soulfully at Alice.

Merritt wasn't lying. Over the course of admiring the sculpture 'Awakening From the Dream', and then upon seeing Alice herself, he really did fall for Alice. But this sort of 'falling for' was only a desire to possess.

"Lord Merritt!" Alice was growing frantic.

Suddenly, Alice's back legs collided with the bed. Knocked off balance, Alice fell backwards onto the mattress.

A hint of a smile appeared on Merritt's face. He immediately threw himself on top of Alice, all but pressing his body against hers. "Alice, my goddess, please satisfy the desires of this mortal who has been mesmerized by you. If you satisfy my desires, I'll satisfy yours as well and clear the unjust stains from the Debs clan."

Clear the stains of the Debs clan?

Staring at Merritt who was right on top of her, Alice couldn't help but suddenly think back to a night she had been with Linley at a small hotel. The two of them had entangled themselves lustfully, but at the very end, she had stopped Linley.

How could she give up her chastity to this man in front of her?

"My goddess, come to me." Merritt's voice was very soft, as though he was trying to hypnotize her.

"No. No!"

Alice suddenly pulled the dagger from her waist and thrust it at Merritt. At the same time, the stones on the floor flew at Merritt.

Alice was an earth-style magus, after all!

But Merritt himself was a powerful warrior. His reflexes were very fast, and he quickly dodged to one side while at the same time slapping the dagger out of Alice's hand.

Alice instantly dodged towards the other side, running for the door.

But with a flicker of his body, Merritt appeared between her and the door. With a smile that was not a smile on his face, he looked at Alice. "Alice. Do you still want to resist? Based on your prowess as a magus and that little knife, you want to resist me?"

"Lord Merritt, let me leave." By now, Alice was firm in her resolve.

"You no longer wish to save the Debs clan? You don't wish to save your fiancé, Kalan?" Merritt asked.

Alice's eyes were determined. Gritting her teeth, she said, "Although I do wish to save them, this is not the way to do it. You beast!"

"Beast?" The expression on Merritt's face changed. He coldly said, "Originally, I wanted for the mood to be a bit more romantic, but since you refuse to cooperate, then I'll show you what a beast really looks like."

Alice's face turned pale.

"Merritt. Don't go too far." Frightened, Alice quickly retreated, grabbing the chair next to her and smashing it at Merritt.

With a single fist, Merritt easily broke the chair apart.

"Don't resist. This place...is my manor." Merritt said with a soft laugh.

Watching Merritt draw step by step closer to her, Alice gritted her teeth and said wildly, "Merritt! You'd best not forget that I once was Linley's woman!"

These words halted Merritt in his tracks, stunning him.

Alice really did not want to say these words. She knew that her actions of the past had wounded Linley very deeply, and she didn't want to have anything more to do with him. But at this point in time, she could think of no other way.

"Linley?" Standing there without moving, Merritt frowned.

Biting her lips, Alice stared at Merritt. "Merritt, I can pretend that nothing at all happened today. But if you go too far, then don't blame me when I also go all-out afterwards. I trust you know how influential Linley is now."

Merritt looked at Alice.

He really had been enchanted by Alice, but Merritt knew very well that Linley's relationship with Alice was very special. Just from looking at that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', one could tell how deep Linley's affection for Alice had been.

"Linley's feelings towards Alice really were in the realm of true love. If Linley were to find out..." Merritt's head began to hurt.

Linley.

Very hard to deal with!

The current Linley already possessed incredible influence. Although he, Merritt, was powerful, in the end he was only the Right Premier of a single kingdom. To the Radiant Church, perhaps deposing one of the rulers of a kingdom was something it would do only after serious consideration, but they wouldn't even think twice before dealing with the Right Premier of a kingdom.

All Linley had to do was to ask the Radiant Church for their assistance. Dealing with him, a Right Premier, wouldn't be a problem.

But in the future, Linley would only be more formidable. This was one of the reasons why not a single member of the nobles of the Kingdom of Fenlai had dared to plot against Linley or make attempts against Linley's life, which was why, in front of Linley, they all behaved so courteously.

"Alas..." Merritt let out a long sigh. "Alice, I really, truly, have fallen for you from the depths of my heart, so much so that I lost my sense of rationality."

Merritt smiled apologetically at Alice. "I apologize. I've come back to my senses now. Since you aren't willing or able to have feelings for me, of course I cannot force myself on."

"Lord Merritt, I'll take my leave, then." Alice quickly scurried to the door, opened it, then rushed out.

Seeing Alice depart, the apologetic look dropped from Merritt's face, and his gaze grew vicious and cold. With a cold sneer, he spat out the word, "Bitch!"

By the time Alice had returned to the Debs clan manor, it was now totally dark.

Right now, all of the members of the Debs clan were in the middle of the main hall, eating dinner. Only, the atmosphere wasn't very good. The clan could be exterminated at any time, after all.

"Alice. You returned?" Rowling suddenly saw Alice running inside.

Nimitz and the others all stood up as well.

"As fast as that?" Nimitz frowned. Alice had come back far too early, much earlier than he had expected.

"Alice, eat dinner with us." Rowling immediately called to her.

On the walkway past the main hall, Alice glanced at the people inside and said apologetically, "I'm not feeling well. I'll go back to my room and rest first." Alice's voice was very low and hoarse.

Rowling felt that Alice wasn't acting normally.

"Let me go see how Alice is doing." Rowling smiled at everyone, then left the hall, leaving behind Nimitz, who was frowning with suspicion.

Alice and Rowling, in their room.

Upon entering the room, Alice had immediately thrown herself into her bed. She could no longer hold back her tears, which poured out. Her heart was filled with wrongs and injustices.

"What did I do wrong? Lord, why must you punish me so?"

Alice was howling with rage in her heart.

"I never asked for much, only that I could have a simple, peaceful life. I want my parents to have a peaceful life, for myself to have a peaceful life. Why, why must you punish me so?" Alice's heart was filled with misery. True, the Debs clan perhaps was going to be finished.

But what did that have to do with her?

Why did they have to send her to deal with Merritt?

Why did she have to be forced to the point where she had to shout out the words, "I once was Linley's woman?" How difficult had it been for her to force these words out! Alice truly hadn't wanted to say that!

"Big sister Alice, what happened?" Rowling ran into the room. Seeing Alice sobbing to the point where there was a huge wet spot on the bed, Rowling grew frantic with worry.

Rowling immediately went over and began to stroke Alice's back. "Don't cry, don't cry. Whatever it is, you can tell me. Tell me."

Alice immediately turned and threw herself into Rowling's arms, bawling even more fiercely. It wasn't as bad without anyone there to comfort her, but now that someone had come, Alice felt all the more aggrieved and wronged.

Rowling comforted Alice for more than half an hour before Alice finally became somewhat calmer.

"Big sister Alice, what exactly happened? Tell me." Rowling looked at Alice.

Alice took a deep breath, then slowly explained the injustice that had been done to her. "Little Rowling, you are also aware of the current situation with the Debs clan. Yesterday, Second Granduncle came and wanted to have a private chat with me. He wanted me to..."

The more she heard, the more fury Rowling felt.

She was angry at Nimitz's behavior. She was angry for what Alice had suffered. And she felt rage towards that beast-like Merritt's behavior. At the same time, she felt sympathy for Alice.

"I don't want to get involved, get involved anymore. I just want to live out a peaceful life." Alice said, sobbing sporadically.

Over these past few days, Rowling had been considering what the best way to help the Debs clan was. But upon hearing Alice's story, she suddenly understood a few things.

"Big sister Alice, don't be sad. No matter what, you definitely cannot let that Merritt destroy your chastity." Rowling comforted her.

Alice nodded.

"But we still have to come up with a way to save Kalan and the others." Rowling said. "Big brother Kalan is our fiancé, after all."

Alice also wanted to save him, but she didn't know how.

"We still have an option." Rowling looked at Alice. "But...I don't know if you would be willing to take it, sister Alice."

"Rowling..." Looking at Rowling, Alice had already guessed what she was going to say.

Rowling nodded. "Right. Go ask Linley for help. Today, as soon as you mentioned his name, that Merritt no longer dared to touch you. Clearly, Linley is extremely influential. Based on what I know, not only does Linley have a relationship with the Radiant Church, he also has a relationship with the Dawson Conglomerate. Even his Majesty, King Clayde, treats Linley as he would a friend, rather than an ordinary subject. If Linley is willing to speak out, we would have a much greater chance of rescuing big brother Kalan."

Currently, in the Kingdom of Fenlai, without question, people were more willing to defer to Linley than to anyone else.

Even the Left Premier and the Right Premier couldn't compare with him.

Because, as one could easily tell, in the future Linley would be a high level person within the Radiant Church. Even right now, he was viewed as an extremely important potential talent who needed to be cultivated and trained. For the sake of Linley, those two Cardinals of the Radiant Church had even gone to Hogg's funeral and paid their respects to him. From this, one could easily see how important they viewed Linley as being.

"Big brother Linley?" Alice's emotions were very mixed.

In truth, in Alice's heart, she knew this was a possibility long ago, but she didn't want to confront it. She truly didn't wish to go beg Linley. She felt that she didn't have the face to see him again.

She knew that she had wounded Linley too heavily. That moment when she had seen that sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', Alice understood how deeply Linley loved her. Or at least, how deeply he had once loved her.

She was ashamed to meet him!

"Big sister Alice, I understand your feelings." Rowling tightly gripped Alice by the hands. "But, big sister Alice, big brother Kalan and his father are very likely to lose their lives. I beg you, please just suffer a bit on our behalf. At least Linley won't act the way that Merritt did."

Alice's heart was filled with pain.

"No face? Is my self-respect more important, or are the lives of big brother Kalan and his father more important?" Alice asked herself this question. She had no other choice.

"Big sister Alice." Rowling stared beseechingly at Alice.

Alice took a deep breath, forcing herself to calm down. Looking at Rowling, she nodded. "Alright. I'll go see big brother Linley tomorrow."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 17, The Plea

At the manor of the Prime Court Magus. Within the Hot Springs Garden.

An earthen glow emanated from a patch of grass within the Hot Springs Garden. Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field. Right now, Linley was dressed only in a pair of long pants, his upper body bare as he trained in the grass.

Those muscles on his bare upper body rippled like water. There wasn't a trace of excess flesh. Right now, Linley's body, organs, veins, and arteries were all being forced to withstand a gravity four times stronger than normal.

Fortunately, after becoming a Dragonblood Warrior, Linley's body had reached new heights in power.

Linley's legs were arched in a bow-drawing stance, and his two hands were raised parallel by his sides, each holding up a giant boulder. Each of these boulders weighed over a hundred pounds. Under the quadruple gravity field, the two combined weighed nearly a thousand pounds.

His legs as taut as steel cables, Linley's body was as straight as a quill. His gaze, fixed in front of him, didn't waver either.

One drop of sweat after another rolled down Linley's body, covering his entire body in sweat. But Linley persevered....

Despite being designated the Prime Court Magus for the kingdom, Linley continued to train non-stop every day. His guards stood solemnly outside, alongside two female attendants who were ready to answer Linley's call at any moment. The door to the Hot Springs Garden, however, was closed.

Whenever Linley was training, no one was permitted to enter.

Once, his majesty King Clayde, ruler of Fenlai, had come to the manor. The palace attendant ignored the guards at the Hot Springs Garden and charged in directly, instructing Linley to meet with his Majesty. Linley immediately issued an order for that attendant to receive twenty strikes of the military rod. That physically weak attendant ended up being beaten to death.

But afterwards, King Clayde didn't blame Linley in the slightest. On the contrary, he berated his subordinates, telling them that while at the Hot Springs Garden, they absolutely must obey Linley's rules.

"Lord Linley always is so hard-working when he trains. He's spent an entire day in there. When he's not engaging in warrior training, he is engaging in magus training. I think the only time he ever rests is the time he spends in his stonesculpting." One female attendant said in a low voice. The other female attendant also nodded. "I've never seen such a hard-working noble before. In the previous household I worked for, the instructor for the warriors himself only spent four hours a day training."

The nearby guardian knights of the Radiant Church also felt a great deal of admiration for Linley. Most geniuses, after their initial glory, would begin to fall behind. Each year, the Radiant Church would train a good number of geniuses. However, not only were none of those geniuses as outstanding as Linley, once their status had risen, they would become totally distracted by the material pleasures of the world and fall behind.

“If Lord Linley continues like this, in all likelihood, he will be the youngest combatant of the ninth rank in history, and the youngest Saint-level in history as well.” One of the guardian knights said softly.

The other guardian knight also nodded.

All of these people very much admired Linley’s painstaking diligence in training.

Only....“Lord Linley is a bit too strict and severe.” One of the female attendants said in an unhappy voice.

In their hearts, Linley was handsome, young, had high standards for himself, and powerful. He had a future! A person like him could be considered to be all but perfect. Only, he was extremely severe towards others. Even when dealing with female servants like them, he didn’t act with any gentleness or affection.

What these people didn’t know was that although Linley did engage in stonesculpting, he wasn’t really resting; when he was stonesculpting, he was increasing his spiritual energy at the fastest rate possible! Linley’s was increasing his power at every moment!

Within the Hot Springs Garden.

“Whew.”

An hour of warrior's training had come to an end. Linley began to activate the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body, and that tired, weary feeling disappeared. From a nearby box, Linley withdrew a straight chisel, then walked over to one of those two boulders he had dropped onto the grass. These were used by Linley when stonesculpting.

Staring at these boulders and their internal lines and structure, Linley began to mentally design a sculpture. In the blink of an eye, a mental image of a warrior's face was formed.

A hint of a smile on his face, the straight chisel in Linley's hand began to move.

In a very rhythmic pattern, the straight chisel flew and chopped about, causing shattered bits of stone to fly everywhere. Linley knew exactly what he was doing, and so each chop was made with absolute confidence, and the strength he used was just right.

What a wonderful feeling!

Linley's spirit became submerged within the ebbs and vibrations of the surrounding earth elemental essence, allowing him to sense the lines and cracks of the stone. Linley's spirit also submerged into the surrounding wind elemental essence, allowing every single stroke of the knife to reach the peak of perfection in accuracy.

Nature!

Linley's soul had become one with nature, and like a benevolent mother, nature surrounded Linley's soul, allowing it to grow, to strengthen.

"Whew."

Letting out a breath, Linley withdrew his straight chisel.

After spending two hours, this giant boulder had been transformed into a rough outline. As for the fine details, Linley planned to finish those tomorrow. Every day, Linley set limits on how much time he could spend on his stonesculpting.

He had to use the right complement of training regimes to achieve the maximum effect in terms of raising his power!

Training started every day at five in the morning, while now, it was eight o'clock. It was time for Linley to eat breakfast.

Putting down his straight chisel, Linley stepped out of his pants and into the hot springs pool. Lying within the hot springs, feeling the hot springs water rush against his muscles, Linley closed his eyes comfortably, finally allowing himself some time to rest.

"Enter." Linley suddenly shouted.

Those two female attendants who had been quietly standing outside the door this entire time immediately entered with two trays. Those round trays were covered with all sorts of delicacies and fruits.

"Lord Linley." Those two female attendants put the two round trays down on the nearby table, then respectfully awaited Linley's commands.

While obediently standing to the side, those two female attendants couldn't help but sneak peeks at Linley. Linley's naked, muscular, reclining male body was indeed a source of fascination to them.

"You can go for now."

Linley said calmly.

"Yes, milord." The two female attendants immediately left respectfully.

From start to finish, Linley had not glanced at them even once.

Next, Linley stepped out of the pool, put on a set of clean underwear and clothes, then sat on a chair and began to eat breakfast.

"Swish." A black shadow rushed out from the faraway grassy fields. It was Bebe. Before this, when Linley was training and stonesculpting, Bebe was napping.

"Boss, it's time for breakfast, eh? Alright, this big piece of roast meat is mine." Bebe's eyes instantly were drawn to a particular large piece of roasted magical beast meat."

Linley chuckled.

“Grandpa Doebling, do we really have no method available to us to deal with that Clayde at present?” Linley mentally said to Doebling Cowart.

Doebling Cowart flew out of the Coiling Dragon ring. Seating himself on another chair, he smiled at Linley. “Linley. Clayde is a warrior of the ninth rank. The gap between the two of you is too vast. Even if you assume the complete Dragonform, you are only a warrior of the early-stage eighth rank. Oh, wait, now that you are currently a late-stage warrior of the sixth rank, when you assume the Dragonform, you can be considered to be a late-stage warrior of the eighth rank. But nonetheless, you are far from being a match for Clayde.”

Linley felt very unwilling to accept this. He knew, now, that the person who had instructed his mother to be abducted by Duke Patterson was King Clayde. But right now, he had no chance of dealing with Clayde at all.

“The only choice I have is to continue training hard.” Linley unconsciously balled his fists, with the fork in his hands warping from his strength.

In the early ranks, the extra boost provided by the Dragonform transformation was especially large. As a warrior of the late-stage sixth rank, based on his current training regime, in about half a year, there was hope for Linley to reach the seventh rank. Upon reaching the seventh rank of power, when using the Dragonform, Linley would be able to step into the early-stage ninth rank.

"Lord Linley." The voice of a female attendant could be heard from outside.

"Come in." Linley said calmly.

Only now did the female attendant rush in. Respectfully, she said, "Lord Linley, outside, there's a young lady named Alice who wishes to meet you."

"Alice?" Linley's eyelids flickered. He looked at the female attendant. "Bring her to the guest hall. I will be there shortly." Linley stood up as he spoke.

"Yes, Lord Linley." The female attendant didn't dare to tease Linley in the slightest. They all knew how legendarily severe Linley was with his subordinates.

.....

Alice was clutching a glass of water, seeming very ill at ease. For her to come beg Linley was asking a lot of her. But she had no other choice.

Footsteps could be heard.

Alice's entire body shook, and she immediately turned her head to look.

Dressed in a loose, long robe, Linley smiled as he entered from an inner hall. Seeing Alice look at him, he immediately nodded and smiled back.

"Alice, long time no see." As he spoke, Linley sat down at the host's seat.

Alice could clearly feel that Linley's attitude was now totally different from a year ago. A year ago, Linley was still very young and immature.

But now, Linley carried himself with the unconscious noble grace and poise. Just from that faint smile, one could sense his grandeur, a grandeur which only came from someone being assured of his high status.

"Big brother Linley." Alice forced her voice to sound calm, but even despite that, her voice still trembled slightly.

"Would you like to eat some fruit? I remember that you loved to eat olives." Linley glanced at one of his female attendants.

A short time later, the female attendant returned with a plate of fruit.

"Thank you." Alice picked up an olive and took a small bite. At this moment, Alice couldn't help but think back to when she and Linley had eaten olives together. Back then, Linley had fed them to her.

Alice couldn't help but turn to look up at Linley, only to find that Linley was smiling at her.

"Big brother Linley." Alice put down the fruit, looking at Linley. "There's something I want to ask your help with."

"You need my help?" Linley had already guessed at the reason behind this visit of Alice's.

"Go ahead." Linley said directly.

Alice took a deep breath, then looked at Linley seriously. "Big brother Linley, you already know about what is happening with Kalan's clan. I think...Kalan and the others are innocent. I hope you, big brother Linley, can help them and say a few words on their behalf to his Majesty. I hope you can wash away these unjust accusations and return their innocence to them. I know that his Majesty will definitely give you face."

Linley couldn't help but laugh helplessly.

Innocence?

Others might not be aware, but how could he, who had killed Patterson, be unaware? When he had killed Patterson, Patterson had personally told him about this smuggling affair. There was an 80% to 90% chance that this was with regards to the Debs clan!

"Wash away these unjust accusations? Why do you believe they are innocent? Alice, how much do you really know about the Debs clan?" Linley looked at Alice.

Alice was startled.

It had taken her a tremendous amount of courage to force out those words just now. But after Linley answered her with a question, she had a feeling...that Linley wasn't going to help!

She suddenly wanted to cry. She felt extremely miserable.

Alice stood up. Curtseying towards Linley, she said, "Big brother Linley, I'm sorry. I shouldn't have come here today. I know that in the past, I hurt you very deeply. For me to come now and ask you to help save the Debs clan is really excessive of me. It's okay if you don't help. I won't blame you." As Alice saw it, Linley and Kalan were rivals in love. It was already very kind of Linley not to throw more stones in the drying well, to kick him when he was down.

As he looked at Alice, Linley's heart was very calm

With regards to his failed relationship with his first love, Linley now regarded it only as a bygone dream. The current Linley had already experienced the battle in the Foggy Valley, the transformation into a Dragonblood Warrior, and the death of his father. And now, he had embarked on a dark road of vengeance!

On the road to vengeance, the thing which Linley had to do was to suppress himself, to be cruel, to be cold, to not slacken in the slightest. The current Linley was, mentally, far stronger than he had been a year ago, and far more mature as well. That young, naïve Linley of a year ago couldn't compare at all to the current Linley. He also wasn't the Linley that Alice thought he was.

After having experienced so much, he had matured! Linley had experienced far too much!

"Big brother Linley, I'll leave now." Alice immediately stood to leave, her tears at the precipice of coming out.

"Alice." Linley stood up as well, stretching his hand out and resting it against Alice's shoulders.

Alice turned her head to stare at Linley in amazement. Linley was gazing at her. In a serious voice, he said, "Alice, there's so much that you don't know. Whether or not the Debs clan is innocent isn't something that you can determine. However, since you made up your mind to come ask me for help, I won't just stand by and watch. But...whether or not I'll be able to succeed in saving them is another question."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 18, The Visit

Alice felt her heart suddenly tremble. A warm feeling suddenly rushed into her heart, a sensation of thankfulness mixed with a boundless regret.

“Big brother Linley, thank you. Thank you.” Alice couldn’t help but repeat herself. Her tears were already beginning to shimmer in her eyes. The tears of excitement.

Linley smiled. “Go back. This afternoon, I’ll pay a visit to his Majesty at his palace.”

Linley could feel that right now, his heart was very calm when he saw Alice. When seeing Alice, all he was seeing was a female friend whom he was on good terms with. Nothing more.

“Alright. Thank you.” Alice glanced at Linley one more time, then turned her head and left, her thoughts extremely complicated.

Originally, Alice was afraid that because in the past, she had hurt Linley, Linley would feel hatred for Kalan, which would cause Linley not to help save Kalan. But Linley’s reaction had been totally out of her expectations. Linley wasn’t agitated at all. He was very calm.

Watching Alice’s departing back, Linley sat down. Grabbing a fruit, he began to casually eat it. At this time, Bebe popped out as well.

“Boss, you’re gonna help that Alice? If it were me, I would’ve kicked her out long ago. Heck, it's enough that you didn't just slap her to death with one palm!" Bebe said unhappily.

Linley glanced at Bebe. "Bebe, humans aren't magical beasts."

At this time, Doebling Cowart flew out of the Coiling Dragon ring. Looking at Linley with an approving gaze, he said, "Linley, you performed very well. I was a bit worried that you'd have a child's temper and shoo her away, throwing another stone into a drying well."

"A child's temper?" Linley was startled.

In Doebling Cowart's eyes, such behavior was indeed that of a child.

"That's right. Women, psh. They are all over the place." Doebling Cowart chuckled.

Linley was instantly speechless. He was very much not in favor of Doebling Cowart's viewpoint on women, which was rather similar to the viewpoints of Yale and Reynolds.

"Alright, enough chat. I need to continue my training." Linley immediately rose and returned to the Hot Springs Garden.

As far as Linley was considered, Alice was nothing more than a side-episode, incapable of affecting his mood. Right now, the only thing Linley cared about was...avenging his father.

.....

"His Majesty is in his study, laboring over affairs of state. Lord Linley, please come with me to the study." The palace attendant said respectfully.

Linley nodded.

Bebe standing on his shoulders, Linley followed the attendant towards the study. After a while, they finally arrived.

"Your Majesty! Lord Linley has arrived!" The palace attendant called out loudly from outside the door to the study.

Clayde, who had been absorbed in reading some texts, raised his head. When his tiger-like gaze landed upon Linley, his eyes shone excitedly. Laughing loudly, he said, "Linley, quick, come in. There's no need for the two of us to stand on so much ceremony."

"Yes, your Majesty." Linley laughed faintly as he entered the study. Clayde, in Linley's eyes, really was a bold, straightforward man, and was incredibly polite when interacting with Linley, never using his position as the king to try and bully him.

"If it wasn't for my father's death," Linley mused to himself, "Perhaps you and I would've become friends. But there will come a day where I must kill you. Right now, the only thing I am lacking is an opportunity." Linley had never hesitated in his determination to kill Clayde.

As soon as he had the opportunity, he would definitely kill him.

Clayde clinked wine cups with Linley in a toast, took a sip, then said, "Linley. It is quite rare that you voluntarily come pay a visit to the palace. What business do you, my Prime Court Magus, have to discuss with me today?"

Linley chuckled.

The Prime Court Magus actually had quite a few responsibilities, but Linley had never undertaken any of them. He allowed the other court magi to assume many of the responsibilities, and Clayde had never given him any pressure. After all, Linley was only a servant of the Kingdom of Fenlai in name. All he was doing...was showing that he, Linley, considered himself to be on Clayde's side.

"It's true that I came here today to discuss something." Linley smiled as he looked at Clayde. "With the Debs clan under suspicion of smuggling water jade, your Majesty ordered that Kalan and Bernard be seized, right?"

"That is so." Clayde frowned as he looked at Linley. "What, you've also come to speak on their behalf?"

Over this period of time, quite a few nobles had come to speak on behalf of the Debs clan. The reason they had done this was because the Debs clan had made use of their fortune.

"If you really want to save their clan, I can indeed give you face." Clayde said forthrightly.

The only thing Clayde really wanted to do was to break the power structure that had been erected by his younger brother Patterson. As for the Debs clan, he was going to dispose of them just as a matter of course. He was totally willing to pardon the Debs clan in exchange for Linley now owing him a favor. After all, even if he were to pardon the Debs clan, he could also squeeze them for quite a hefty price in the process.

"No." Linley only shook his head. "I haven't come to speak on their behalf."

"What?" Clayde looked curiously at Linley.

Linley said casually, "Your Majesty, the question of whether or not the Debs clan engaged in the smuggling of water jade naturally has to be handled in a fair, aboveboard manner."

"Oh?" Clayde looked questioningly at Linley. "Then Linley, the reason you came today was because..."

Linley laughed. "I'm thinking that it's enough for you to have seized the clan leader, Bernard, due to your suspicion that the Debs clan engaged in the smuggling of water jade. As for his son, there's no need to seize him. After all, what's the point of seizing a successor? If you seize the first one, they'll still have a second one. As long as their clan isn't exterminated, someone will continue the line."

"Linley, you mean to say..." Clayde looked at Linley.

Linley looked back at Clayde. "Your Majesty, I hope you can release Kalan."

"Oh, release Kalan. I heard that you and Kalan...?" Clayde had done a very thorough investigation on Linley. Naturally, he knew of the complicated history between Linley, Kalan, and Alice.

Linley let out a helpless laugh. "Your Majesty, that was a long time ago."

Clayde reminded him, "Linley, I must remind you that based on my investigations, this Kalan fellow is a very vicious, narrow-minded person who can hold a grudge."

"I know." Linley nodded slightly.

Based on the few interactions he had with Kalan, Linley had already sensed that Kalan viewed him with hostility. And...Linley knew that during the seven day exhibition of his sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream', someone had desired to destroy it.

Destroying a sculpture was an act which benefited nobody.

Aside from Kalan, Linley couldn't think of anyone else who would want to destroy 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"Then why do you help him?" Clayde continued.

"Your Majesty. Do you believe a narrow-minded man of limited vision such as him is someone I would be concerned about?" Smiling, Linley looked at Clayde. Clayde blinked, then laughed as well.

"Right. In the past, it could be said that you and Kalan were old acquaintances. But now, not only does he not wish to befriend you, he even harbors enmity towards you. It is his father who continues to try and befriend you. Compared to his father, Kalan's vision really is very limited." Clayde laughed loudly.

Clayde patted Linley on the shoulders. "Don't worry. I'll instruct Merritt to handle this case fairly and to investigate everything thoroughly. The Debs clan definitely won't suffer any injustice. But if the Debs clan really was guilty of smuggling water jade, I won't allow them to escape punishment either." "Right. Handle the case fairly." Linley nodded.

On the way back home in the carriage, Bebe was lying atop of Linley's thighs.

"Wow, Boss, you are so evil. The leader of the Debs clan definitely engaged in smuggling. Later on, his clan will be finished. Even if Kalan is able to escape for now, in the future, he'll still be in terrible straits!" Bebe said excitedly.

Bebe had wanted to destroy Kalan a long time ago. Linley shook his head with a laugh. "Whether or not the Debs clan really will be finished is hard to say. For example, they could give the majority of their clan's fortune directly to King Clayde, and perhaps Clayde would give them a way out. But no matter what, now that they've fallen into Clayde's hands, even if they don't die, they'll lose several layers of skin and flesh."

Linley fully understood how dark the world of nobles could be. Although on the surface, they talked about handling things fairly, that was nothing more than a sham. "Compared to Clayde, the Debs clan is too weak." Linley shook his head.

That puny little Kalan was someone Linley had never worried about. Kalan simply wasn't even close to being on the same level as Linley. The one Linley wanted to deal with was Clayde!

"Milord, we have arrived." The driver said respectfully.

Linley pushed open the carriage door and stepped out. With a leap, Bebe hopped onto Linley's shoulders again. Just as Linley was about to enter his manor, a gate guard said respectfully, "Lord, a guest just came by. He's currently in the main hall waiting for you."

"A guest? In the main hall?" Linley felt suspicious.

There often would be nobles coming to visit Linley, but without his permission to come in, all of them would quietly wait outside. Only people with a very high status, such as Duke Patterson or King Clayde, or Cardinal Guillermo, would directly head to the main hall, instead of waiting outside.

"Who is it?" Linley couldn't help but ask.

"No clue, but in his hands, he was holding the medal of a Cardinal." The guard said respectfully. As a Knight of the Radiant Church, he was very familiar with the insignias of the Cardinals.

Each Cardinal only had a single medal. Naturally, some extremely powerful Ascetics had medals as well. Possession of a medal implied a certain status, representing that this person's position was no less than that of a Cardinal.

"An insignia?" Linley was startled.

Without hesitating at all, Linley immediately went towards the main hall. By the time Linley passed through the walkway and reached the main hall, he was shocked by who he saw.

Within the main hall was a middle-aged, black-haired man wearing a long, loose robe. Judging from appearances, he was in his thirties or forties. He gave off an indolent, lazy aura.

When Linley saw this middle-aged man, that middle-aged man seemed to sense him as well. He immediately looked over towards Linley, a look of excitement in his eyes. "Master Linley, you came?"

"Master Linley?" Linley's mind was full of questions, but he quickly entered the main hall.

"You are...oh, I remember now. You were that one who made the bid of ten million gold coins." Linley remembered now. During the sculpture auction of 'Awakening From the Dream', this middle aged man was the one who had bid ten million.

The middle-aged man nodded excitedly. "I didn't expect Master Linley to remember me. This makes me so excited. Oh, right. Let me introduce myself. My name is...Cesar [Xi'sai]."

"Cesar?" Linley had never heard this name before.

"Cesar?!" Doehring Cowart's voice suddenly boomed out in Linley's mind. "I didn't imagine that little freak Cesar would still remain on this plane, in the Yulan continent."

Linley was startled.

Grandpa Doehring knew this Cesar? Grandpa Doehring was from a long gone era! If he knew this man, then how old would this Cesar be?

"Linley, this Cesar is a total freak. His rate of improvement in strength is extremely fast, and he kills without blinking. When I was alive, he had already entered the Saint-level. Although back then, he was only an early-stage Saint-level, after five thousand years, based on his rate of improvement, he is most likely far more powerful now."

Linley's heart clenched.

The man in front of him appeared to be only thirty or forty, but was actually already a Saint-level combatant during Doehring Cowart's era. Doehring Cowart had only lived for a thousand years before dying, but this Cesar, if one were to count accurately, had been alive for nearly six thousand years now.

A six thousand year old freak!

"Master Linley, what is it?" Cesar said with concern. "Your face seems to have a rather unpleasant look."

"Nothing, Mr. Cesar. Please, sit." Linley forcibly calmed himself down, but whenever he thought of who this person in front of him was, he couldn't help but be stunned.

A six thousand year old freak, a super-combatant who had survived from the era of the Pouant Empire until the modern era. He had already been a Saint-level combatant back then. And now?

"Master Linley, I am very much in awe of your sculpting skills. If it weren't for the fact that Delia, that little girl, begged me, that day I definitely would've bought your sculpture." Cesar pursed his lips as he spoke, but then his eyes lit up. "So Master Linley, when are you and that Delia girl getting married?"

"Married?"

No matter how stunned Linley had been by Cesar, upon hearing these words, Linley's eyes bulged out of his sockets as he stared speechlessly at Cesar.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 19, The King of Killers

Cesar stared at Linley suspiciously. "What? Can it be that the little girl of the Leon clan isn't your fiancée?"

"Fiancée?" Linley mouthed the words.

Seeing Linley's reaction, Cesar seemed to understand something. Laughing, he said, "Haha, how amusing, how amusing! Master Linley, I must say, that little Miss Delia of the Leon clan has spent quite a lot of trouble on your half. She's spent a lot of time, a lot of effort, and also gold in order to buy that sculpture of yours, 'Awakening From the Dream'."

Linley stared questioningly at Cesar. "Mr. Cesar, can you perhaps tell me where you heard that Delia was my fiancée, and that we were going to get married?"

Cesar stroked his goatee. Delightedly, he said, "Mustn't say, mustn't say."

But in his mind, Cesar thought back to the contents of the letter which Delia had her servant deliver to him. He mused to himself, "For a girl to have the courage to act in such a way shows that her feelings towards Linley are genuine. Best I not say anything, lest I end up embarrassing that little girl, Delia."

Cesar knew that when a girl told him certain things, it would be rather morally wrong for him to spread it to others as well. He, Cesar...was a very principled man.

Linley buried his curiosity. After all, Cesar describing Delia as his fiancée was a small matter. This man in front of him was a six thousand year old freak. This was what mattered.

"Mr. Cesar, for you to be here with one of the medals of the Radiant Church, does that mean you have come to me on the business of the Radiant Church?" Linley intentionally tried to probe the reason the man had come.

Cesar sat down with a dramatic gesture, then shook his head. "The Radiant Church? Don't lump me in with those fellows from the Radiant Church."

"Then this medal?" Linley stared questioningly at Cesar.

Cesar casually said, "Oh. It's from back when I killed that Cardinal. I figured this medal would eventually come in handy, so I took it from his corpse. On occasion, I'd take it out and present it. I've got to say, it really has come in handy over the years."

"Killed a Cardinal, then casually swiped his medal?" Linley's heart trembled, and he couldn't help but feel cold.

This Cesar in front of him really was an extremely forceful person.

Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind again. "Linley, back when I was alive, Cesar had already entered the Saint-level. At that time, the Radiant Church wasn't too powerful. After five thousand years, Cesar is definitely at an extremely terrifying level of power. The Radiant Church wouldn't offend him just because he killed a Cardinal."

"After all...Cesar is a Saint-level assassination specialist. A Saint-level combatant such as him is far more dangerous than your ordinary Saint-level combatant. What's more, an assassination specialist, upon reaching the peak of the Saint-level, is even more dangerous."

After hearing Doehring Cowart's words, Linley began to understand.

In the past, when he was in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he had encountered assassins as well. Linley knew very well that despite only being of the sixth rank as well, a specially trained assassin of the sixth rank could be far more dangerous than other combatants of the sixth rank.

Because assassins specialized in 'ambush' and in 'one-hit kills'. When they killed someone, they acted with no scruples or honor at all.

Most Saint-level combatants, on the other hand, cared greatly about their personal honor and reputation.

A peak-stage Saint-level combatant who had no shame and who was an assassin possessed terrifying power.

"That's the reason why the Radiant Church has never tried to recover the medal from Cesar. This is also the reason why Cesar is able to live so openly in the Holy Capital, Fenlai City." Doehring Cowart sighed. "This Cesar is really living a rather comfortable life."

Hearing these words from Doebling Cowart, Linley couldn't help but feel admiration for Cesar.

"What, are you afraid?" Cesar saw that Linley had fallen silent. He couldn't help but grin at Linley. "Relax, that was a long time ago. It has been quite a while since I've last killed someone."

Quite a while? How long a period of time was that? Remembering that the man in front of him was a six thousand year old assassin, Linley wasn't too sure.

"I'm fine. I'm just amazed by Mr. Cesar's prowess, that you could kill a Cardinal of the Radiant Church, but still live openly here in the Holy Capital." Linley smiled.

Cesar's eyes lit up, and he clapped Linley on the shoulders, nodding. "Not bad, not bad. You really are a master sculptor; your mental fortitude is far stronger than most others. Despite knowing my power, you aren't frightened in the slightest."

"Master Linley, I've come to pay you a visit because I wish to ask something of you." Cesar looked at Linley, speaking with sincerity.

Linley quickly said, "Mr. Cesar, please speak. As long as it is within my capabilities, I will definitely assist."

But Cesar put on a stern look, saying, "Master Linley, I, Cesar, have always hated owing favors to others. Since I'm asking a favor of you, naturally I will assist you with something as well."

Linley felt joy in his heart.

A favor of an assassin who had reached the Saint-level over five thousand years ago was priceless. In Linley's mind, a thought quickly flashed by – Kill Clayde!

This entire time, Linley had been bitterly trying to come up with a way to deal with Clayde, or perhaps capture and interrogate him. Linley absolutely had to find out what happened to his mother. But in terms of both personal power and total forces available, Clayde was far more powerful than Linley. He had no way at all to deal with Clayde.

But now, Linley had a way.

"If I were to invite this Cesar to go kidnap Clayde, that shouldn't be too hard." Linley began to grow excited. This problem had already vexed him for a long time. It seemed as though he could resolve it now.

"Mr. Cesar, please tell me what you need." Linley said seriously.

Cesar said boldly, "Fine, then I'll just say it outright."

Rubbing his goatee, Cesar's attitude was that of chatting with an old friend. "I don't have too many hobbies. Women, I like. In the past, killing was also a hobby. But after I got bored of killing, I began to take an interest in art. And naturally, I am most infatuated by stonesculpting, that highest of art forms. Master Linley...last time, I felt a great deal of regret for being unable to purchase your sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. When I went back, I couldn't even sleep well at night. After tossing and turning many times, I decided to come pay a visit to you in person."

"Mr. Cesar, what are you trying to say?" Linley's brow was furrowed.

He had already sold off the sculpture, 'Awakening From the Dream'. Delia had been the one to buy it.

"I was hoping to ask you, Master Linley, to help me carve a sculpture." Cesar looked hopefully at Linley.

"Easily done." Linley quickly agreed. Every day, he spent a few hours training himself by carving sculptures. To spend some of that time carving one for Cesar was an easy task.

"I have a few secondary requirements for this sculpture." Cesar stood up, looking a bit embarrassed.

Embarrassed!

Right, this six thousand year old freak seemed a bit embarrassed.

"Mr. Cesar, feel free to explain." Linley looked at Cesar with curiosity.

Cesar chortled. "Master Linley, I hope...this sculpture will be of me, and will capture my unique aura."

"Use you as my model? Your unique aura?" Linley was startled.

Seeing the look on Linley's face, Cesar quickly said, "What, will that be hard?"

"No. That isn't it." Linley shook his head, frowning. "Using you as the model is very easy. Having seen you once, it's easy for me to remember what you look like. I can sculpt you without any problems. But it's a bit more complicated to imbue the statue with your unique aura as well. This is because every person has a different aura at different times, such as one aura for when they are angry, another when they are happy, still another when they are sad, or wounded, or both angry and sad..."

Cesar immediately laughed. "Easy. The aura I want...is the aura I have when I am at my manliest."

"Your manliest?" Linley looked questioningly at Cesar. "Mr. Cesar, when do you feel you are at your manliest?"

Linley was beginning to wonder if this six thousand year old freak had some mental problems.

Cesar said confidently, "I believe that I appear manliest when I am killing someone! My nickname is the 'King of Killers' for a reason, you know!"

Cesar, the 'King of Killers'!

This was a very terrifying name in the Yulan continent. Neither the Four Great Empires nor the two major alliances wished to offend this individual. Even the four major assassin's guilds, if they were forced to nominate the most outstanding person within their ranks, would without question select this person who had dominated the Yulan continent for over five thousand years. Cesar, the 'King of Killers'.

A peak-stage Saint-level combatant, and specialized in assassination techniques! In terms of the numbers and complexity of assassination techniques he possessed, he had already reached the pinnacle of perfection in this field. Those people who had received some training from Cesar went so far as to say his assassination techniques had reached the field of artistry.

The strongest assassin. The King of Killers!

Although there were quite a few people in the Yulan continent who had become peak-stage Saint-level combatants, such as the Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church, or the Dark Patriarch of the Cult of Shadows, or that Lord Fallen Leaf of the Radiant Church. And of course, the Four Great Empires each had their own peak-stage Saint-levels.

But without question, every single one of these combatants were wary of the King of Killers, Cesar.

Because in terms of assassination, none of them could match him.

The power of the peak-stage Saint-level 'King of Killers' was simply too terrifying. Even the Four Great Empires and the two major alliances held fast to the principle of, 'do not offend him if it is at all possible to avoid doing so', much less the other major clans of the Yulan continent.

Originally, during the auction, Cardinal Lampson and Cardinal Guillermo had been prepared to bid an extremely high price so Linley would feel grateful towards them. But upon seeing Cesar make a bid, they were so scared they no longer dared to bid at all. Even that old servant of the Leon clan, Shaw, had been terrified upon seeing Cesar, the King of Killers. Afterwards, only after Delia had wrote Cesar a letter and obtained his agreement did Delia dare to make another bid.

From this, one could tell how truly formidable this 'King of Killers' was.

Despite him having a medal of a Cardinal for so many years, the Radiant Church had never tried to regain it, and allowed Cesar to use it to deceive others as he pleased without a peep of protest. This was their show of goodwill towards Cesar. As for that Cardinal he had killed, the only thing that could be said was that he died in vain.

"When killing someone?" Linley shook his head. "Mr. Cesar, I've never seen you kill anyone. How would I know what you are like when you kill someone?"

At present, Linley still knew very little regarding the names of the Saint-level combatants of the Yulan continent. Even the world famous 'King of Killers', Cesar, he had never heard of before.

"That's easy. I'll just show you right now what it looks like when I kill someone. Watch carefully." Cesar's attitude instantly changed.

"Wait!" Linley hurriedly shouted out in alarm. "Mr. Cesar, please don't kill anyone in my home."

“Who said I was going to kill someone? I’m just going to show off the way I look when I kill someone, that’s all.”

Cesar glanced at Linley rather sourly.

Linley laughed awkwardly.

In his heart, he was filled with a great deal of trepidation towards this ‘King of Killers’, Cesar. When he heard Cesar say he was going to show how he looked upon killing someone, Linley was instantly frightened and wanted to stop him.

“Watch carefully. Pretend my target is that flower vase in front of us.” Cesar said calmly.

Cesar’s previous attitude had totally changed. He became calm. In the blink of an eye, that lazy, indolent aura of Cesar’s totally disappeared, and he became someone without a hint of an aura, without a hint of power, without a hint of emotion.

Cold. Calm.

Linley didn’t see anything at all. He only felt the air tremble slightly, and then the flower vase in front of Linley suddenly started to disintegrate, one inch at a time.

Right. As clearly as can be, the flower vase had disintegrated, one inch at a time!

This sensation totally stunned Linley.

“So this is the King of Killers?” In Linley’s mind, he firmly memorized this moment. When making his move, Cesar’s expression hadn’t changed in the slightest. At that moment, Cesar had seemed totally emotionless, and he had coldly stared at everything in the manor. It was as though in his eyes, all life was nothing more a blade of grass.

Killing someone was nothing more than cutting a blade of grass.

But Linley also had the feeling that, when Cesar had made his move, all of his attention had been focused on that flower vase.

As though the entire universe had been reduced to the flower vase, and nothing else had existed.

That strange, bizarre feeling made Linley want to vomit blood.

“Did you see it?” Cesar once more became energetic and animated. Casually sitting down, he crossed his legs and looked up at Linley. “What do you think? Do you agree that I look the manliest at that type of moment? I’ve relied on this technique to win the hearts of quite a few young ladies, you know.”

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 20, Poison

Linley firmly etched this scene into his mind.

Faced with Cesar's questions, Linley nodded. "Very charismatic. I've already committed that scene to memory. However, I'm afraid it will be quite difficult for me to make a carving on the same level of 'Awakening From the Dream' again."

A 'Masterpiece' level sculpture appearing in the world was a rare event indeed.

In the past, Linley had been thoroughly heartbroken, and had poured all of his emotions into that carving, allowing himself to forget everything else in the world and attain that most mysterious of states. Only then was he able to complete such a sculpture. For him, in his current state, to attempt to carve another sculpture of that level was virtually impossible.

"As long as you, Master Linley, are the sculptor, I'll be satisfied. I don't ask that it be on the same level as 'Awakening From the Dream', only that it is on the same level as most master level sculptures." Cesar said with a laugh.

Linley nodded.

If that was the case, Linley had total confidence in his abilities.

"Mr. Cesar, how about this. I will produce the sculpture you requested in about a month. What do you say?" Actually, Linley only needed three days, but he wanted to give himself sufficient time.

Cesar nodded. "Alright. One month is a very short period of time. I'm not in a hurry. I have all the time in the world. Haha."

"Master Linley, if you have anything you want me to help with, feel free to tell me. As long as I can accomplish it, I will definitely do it for you." Cesar said magnanimously.

Linley couldn't help but feel rather nervous.

With Patterson killed by him, the only target in Linley's mind now was Clayde. To kill or to capture Clayde wasn't something which Linley was currently capable of.

But Cesar, the King of Killers, definitely was capable!

"Mr. Cesar, if I were to ask you to capture one of the rulers of a kingdom belonging to the Holy Union, would you agree?" Linley resisted the urge to be rash, and instead first sounded Cesar out.

Cesar was startled. He stared questioningly at Linley. "Capture a king?"

Linley nodded heavily. "Yes."

Cesar frowned. After a short pause, he looked at Linley. "How about this. Let me ask you something first. If I were to help you capture this ruler, would you kill him?"

"Most likely!" Linley replied honestly.

Lying to a 'King of Killers' would most likely be quite unwise. As for killing Clayde, if his mother really had died in Clayde's hands, how could Linley not seek vengeance?

Linley had a dark premonition. There had been no trace of his mother for so many years. Most likely, she was dead, or perhaps imprisoned somewhere. No matter what the case, he would seek vengeance for his mother.

"Kill a king?" Cesar looked at Linley.

Linley looked back with hope in his eyes.

In Cesar's heart, he understood that although in terms of status, a Cardinal was somewhat more important than a King, the impact caused by the murder of a King would be greater than that caused by the murder of a Cardinal.

A dead Cardinal could instantly be replaced by the Radiant Church.

But the death of a King would cause countless battles and strife within a kingdom. At the same time, the Radiant Church would yet again be unhappy with him.

"This request of yours...forgive me for being unable to fulfill it." Cesar looked seriously at Linley. "Linley, the impact caused by the murder of a King is too great. And, this entire time, the Radiant Church has treated me quite well. I don't wish to set the Radiant Church and my Sabre organization up as enemies just for the sake of a sculpture."

Behind Cesar, the King of Killers, was the Saber organization, one of the four great assassin's guilds.

Cesar knew what was important and what was not.

A single sculpture wasn't worth allowing cracks to appear in the friendly relationship between himself and the Radiant Church. All these years, the Radiant Church had treated him with courtesy, something Cesar understood in his heart. He couldn't be a selfish wolf who repaid the Church's kindness by acting against one of their kings.

"Change your request." Cesar said apologetically.

Linley suddenly felt powerless. Perhaps in terms of power, Cesar didn't care about Clayde at all, but Clayde's status had convinced Cesar to stay his hand.

Linley forced himself to remain calm.

"Mr. Cesar, I would like to ask, do you have any method by which I, a magus of the seventh rank, can kill a combatant of the ninth rank." Linley asked.

Cesar glanced at Linley. After a short silence, he said, "I have quite a few assassination methods. But one which would allow a magus of the seventh rank to assassinate a combatant of the ninth rank? This...is challenging." As he spoke, Cesar began to consider this question. In the mind of this 'King of Killers' who hadn't killed anyone in a long time, one assassination method after another began to speed through his mind.

Linley didn't dare to disrupt Cesar's train of thought. He stood there quietly.

Suddenly, Cesar turned to look at Linley. "The combatant of the ninth rank, would this be a warrior or a magus? If this person is a magus, I have a method."

"Warrior." Linley immediately said.

Dealing with a warrior and dealing with a magus required totally different methods. Hearing Linley explain that this was a warrior of the ninth rank, Cesar's head began to hurt.

Linley could only wait there urgently.

"Oh. I have an idea." Cesar's eyes suddenly lit up, and he turned to Linley. "Haha, a long time ago, I stumbled upon this method by accident. I didn't imagine that eight hundred years later, I'd still remember it."

"What method?" Linley immediately grew excited.

Heavens!

This King of Killers actually had a way for a magus of the seventh rank to kill a warrior of the ninth rank.

"The King of Killers is full of assassination techniques. Indeed, he knows far more than I do in this field. Although, if I lived for five thousand more years, perhaps I would still know more than him." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley couldn't help but force a laugh. Grandpa Doehring never liked admitting inferiority to anyone.

"The method is..." Cesar smiled at Linley. "Using poison!"

"Using poison?"

Linley was startled. He thought it must've been some sort of good method...but a king's food was always tasted and tested. How could using poison be effective?

"Master Linley, don't underestimate the power of poison. The art of using poison is an extremely deep, subtle method of assassination. This world is filled with countless ingredients, which can be used to make countless types of poisons. Who in this world can dare say that he knows all of the poisons in the world? Or that he can detect any sort of poison?"

Linley couldn't help but nod.

He agreed with this. For example, Doehring Cowart knew about using Blueheart Grass to counteract the forceful effects of dragon's blood.

"This poison that I'm talking about was specially designed for use against warriors. As long as the warrior is not at the Saint-level, upon being affected by this poison, his strength will decrease by more than 90%. What's more, to this very day, there's been no antidote invented for this poison. Only by spending a year of time can one slowly use his battle-qi to purge the poison from his system." Cesar clearly had a very clear memory regarding this poison. "And this poison is both odorless and tasteless. There's no way to detect it at all. Only after having been poisoned would one realize that one had ingested it."

Less than 10% of strength would remain? No way to test for it?

Linley's eyes lit up.

Clayde was nothing more than a warrior of the ninth rank. Once he was impacted by this poison, based on Linley's current level of power, wouldn't he be able to easily trample Clayde into the ground?

"Do you have this poison, Mr. Cesar?" Linley quickly asked.

Linley could guess that this poison was extremely rare and valuable. That was without question. A poison which was effective against all warriors short of the Saint-level, and which was odorless, tasteless, and undetectable, would of course rare and precious. If not, all the warriors in the world would be dead already. "Master Linley, didn't you hear what I just said? This is something I recalled learning about eight hundred years ago. I just glanced at that recipe back then. After all, this poison was of no use or threat to me.” Cesar frowned. “I only know this poison was primarily formed from eight major ingredients, but I don’t recall the exact ingredients clearly.”

“You don’t remember?” Linley was so frantic, he could kill someone.

Cesar laughed towards Linley. “Master Linley, don’t worry. Although I’m not sure, the recipe for this poison was stored within my organization long ago. I can order some people to make a copy of it and bring it to me. However, the base of my Saber organization is in a place with very few people. From here to there and back, most likely it would take a month or two of time.”

A month or two. That was acceptable!

Linley nodded towards Cesar. “Mr. Cesar, might I ask if your organization has any of this poison already in stock?” Linley didn’t want to waste time looking for ingredients to mix the potion.

“We do not.” Cesar shook his head. “In this entire world, perhaps only the Deathgod’s Hands has this poison in stock.”

“Deathgod’s Hands?”

In the past, while chatting with Yale, the topic of conversation had turned to the four major assassin’s guilds. These were known as Saber, Bloodrose, Scarlet Moon, and Deathgod’s Hands. Each assassin’s guild had its own specialty. The Deathgod’s Hands specialized in using all sorts of queer, exotic assassination techniques.

"Right. In the past, if it weren't for the fact that the Deathgod's Hands had a favor to ask of me, perhaps they wouldn't have given a copy of such a precious recipe to my organization." Cesar nodded.

Something which could kill virtually any warrior below the Saint-rank. The value of such a poison was unimaginable.

"Then...would it be possible for me to purchase this poison from the Deathgod's Hands?" Linley said hopefully.

"Impossible." Cesar laughed. "The Ten Ultimate Poisons of the Deathgod's Hands is something they never give to any other organizations. The reason they gave us this recipe was probably because they expected that we would never actually use it."

"Never use it?" Linley looked questioningly at Cesar.

"Because the price is simply too high. It isn't worth it." Cesar chuckled. "Two of the ingredients, in particular, have already been totally cornered off the market by the Deathgod's Hands. The price of the poison would most likely be more than the commission of the assassination mission."

Linley understood.

But to him, no matter how much gold it cost, it would be worth it.

"How about this. I'll go back now, and arrange for some people to deliver a copy of this recipe to you. But Master Linley, a month from now, you need to have my sculpture ready." Cesar laughed as he spoke to Linley.

"Of course." Linley felt a knot in his heart unclench.

After sending off Cesar, Linley, who had been worrying this entire time about how to deal with Clayde, finally relaxed. That night, he finally had a sound rest and a beautiful dream, something very rare for him.

That next afternoon.

Linley was calmly seated cross-legged on the grass, cultivating his Dragonblood battle-qi. That azure-black Dragonblood battle-qi in his body was constantly roiling about, as the unique power of the Dragonblood constantly was drawn deep into Linley's bones, muscles, and tendons, causing his body to become more and more powerful.

Linley believed that if he continued at this rate, there would come the day that his body would be as powerful as that of a real, Saint-level dragon. He would resurrect the fallen glory of the Dragonblood Warriors.

"Lord Linley." A female attendant's voice from outside.

Linley took a deep breath, allowing the Dragonblood battle-qi to return to his dantian.

"Enter." Linley said calmly.

Only then did this serving woman come in. Respectfully, she said, "Lord Linley, there are several guests from the Debs clan outside. They say they have come to thank you, Lord Linley."

"Thank me?" Linley was momentarily stunned.

But then, Linley quickly understood. Clayde had given him face and freed Kalan Debs.

"Thank me? I'm afraid it isn't as simple as that." Linley said to himself.

There was a better than 80% to 90% chance that the Debs clan, seeing Linley help out once, had shamelessly come to ask for Linley's help to save the Debs clan yet again.

"Let them enter." Knowing of the existence of the poison, Linley now felt much calmer and more assured of himself. With his mind relaxed, he now had the leisure and patience to pay attention to the affairs of the Debs clan.

"The Debs clan? Even if they aren't exterminated, they'll be totally beaten down." Linley could already totally predict the future of the Debs clan.

Within the main hall.

Nimitz was the leader of this delegation. Kalan's two uncles, Kalan himself, Rowling, and Alice were the members of this six-person delegation. No one in Nimitz's delegation had dared to sit. They all were standing respectfully.

Seeing Linley walk towards them from afar, Nimitz and the others immediately smiled, and Nimitz even cupped his hands in salute. "Lord Linley!"

"I just finished my training exercises. If you could just wait a moment, I'll take a quick bath and change my clothes first." Linley said with a faint smile. And then, no longer paying any attention to the courtesies being paid to him by Nimitz and the others, he headed directly to another room on the other side of the hall.

Nimitz and the others were briefly stunned, but they could only smile and stand there, respectfully awaiting his return.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 21, The Trial

Nimitz, Kalan's two uncles, Kalan himself, Rowling, and Alice didn't dare to seat themselves with their host absent. They simply waited quietly in the main hall.

"Kalan, when Lord Linley returns, you must remember to be a bit more humble." Nimitz glared coldly at Kalan.

Kalan nodded. "Second Granduncle, I know."

In actuality, Kalan's heart was still filled with enmity towards Linley. After knowing the reason why he had been released from jail, he felt even more rage towards Linley!

"I would rather stay in that jail than have Alice go beg him!" Kalan's heart was filled with fury.

In the past, when Linley and Alice had been together, Kalan began to hate Linley. After he took Alice back, he felt a bit smug. In his eyes, although Linley was quite formidable, when compared to his Debs clan, Linley was not even close to being on the same level. But after just a few months, Linley's status had totally changed, becoming the brightest star within the Kingdom of Fenlai at one leap. Even his Majesty the King of Fenlai, and Cardinals of the Radiant Church, treated Linley with warmth. Even his own father acted so humbly towards Linley. All this filled Kalan's heart with even more hatred.

They were both young men. Why was he so inferior?

Especially this time!

He had languished in prison. Although he ended up escaping, it had required Alice, the woman he loved dearest, to go beg Linley to free him.

This caused Kalan to feel humiliated. He very much wanted to not accept Linley's kindness and continue to stay in that jail. How he wished he could angrily curse at Linley, or even kill Linley!

But for the sake of the clan, he, Kalan, had come humbly to Linley's manor, and couldn't even act the slightest bit disrespectfully.

Footsteps could be heard.

Kalan immediately cast aside his angry musings. Forcing a smile onto his face, he made himself appear courteous and modest.

"Forgive me for keeping everyone waiting." Linley's clear voice rang out.

Nimitz and the others all turned to look. Clearly, Linley had just washed. His hair was wet, and he was casually wearing a loose robe.

"You can all sit." Linley comfortably sat down, gesturing casually with one hand.

Nimitz and the others all quickly expressed their thanks, then sat down. Nimitz was the first to smile and say, "Lord Linley, the purpose of our visit this time was to thank you. If it wasn't for you, Kalan most likely wouldn't have been able to get out this quickly. Kalan, hurry up and thank Lord Linley!"

Kalan was forced to rise to his feet again. Suppressing the anger in his heart, he forced himself to act humbly. "Thank you, Lord Linley."

Linley smiled at Kalan. "Kalan. No need to thank me."

"Mr. Nimitz. Very shortly, I'll have to attend to some important affairs. I don't know if you had any other purposes behind this visit? If you do, I hope you can speak of them now." Linley smiled towards Nimitz.

In truth, Linley simply didn't want to waste any time with these people. His time was meant to be reserved for training.

Nimitz was startled, but then he quickly adjusted. In a low voice, he said, "Lord Linley, our Debs clan has been framed and falsely accused of engaging in the smuggling of water jade. At this point, it's very possible that our Debs clan will be entirely eradicated. Thus, our clan would like to beg you, Lord Linley, for your assistance. Once our clan overcomes this critical threat, we definitely will not forget your great kindness to us."

As he spoke, Nimitz pulled out a black box from his side.

"Lord Linley, this is a very small gift from us to you as our thanks for your rescuing of Kalan. If our clan manages to survive this tribulation safely, we will once again show our gratitude towards you." Nimitz sincerely held out that black box for Linley to look at.

"Swish."

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, suddenly scurried in front of Nimitz, and actually directly grabbed the box, then jumped onto Linley's legs, planning on opening it up.

"Bebe!" Linley let out a low shout.

Bebe raised his head, staring at Linley unhappily. He didn't open the box, only let out a few 'hmp' sounds, then fell silent.

"Mr. Nimitz, Bebe is rather naughty and mischievous. I'll accept this gift, then, and offer my thanks to you." Laughing, Linley put the black box off to one side, not even glancing at it.

Nimitz could sense that Linley was getting impatient.

Immediately, Nimitz glanced meaningfully at his companions, then was the first to stand up and bow. "Lord Linley, we won't disturb you any further. This case involving our Debs clan will be tried a month from now. I hope that at that time, you can assist us, Lord."

Linley casually nodded.

Nimitz and the others immediately left. That entire time, neither Alice nor Rowling had said a single word. Nimitz was the primary speaker.

Watching the group leave, Linley laughed coldly. "Nimitz, you old scoundrel. Did you think that by bringing Alice, I'd give you more face?" Linley flipped open the cover to the black box. Within it was a magicrystal card and a letter.

"A letter?"

As he toyed with the letter in his hands, a burst of flame suddenly erupted from his palms, incinerating it and turning it to ash. Linley couldn't be bothered reading the letter.

Time passed quickly. September arrived.

This entire past month, Linley had focused on his training. His strength, agility, and other aspects of his body had all improved. The Dragonblood battle-qi in his dantian had become more pure as well.

Linley had the feeling that he had reached the late-stage of the sixth rank.

As far as his growth in spiritual energy, although Linley's advancement rate was extremely rapid, even a genius would normally need around twenty years of training to advance from the seventh rank to the eighth rank. Despite his rapid improvement, a few months of growth wasn't very noticeable.

The path of the magus was indeed a long, difficult one.

Within the Hot Springs Garden, the shadow of a chisel could be seen, and a human-shaped sculpture was become more and more clearly defined. Bits of rubble flew about in every direction, falling onto the grass. Suddenly, Linley came to a halt, withdrawing his chisel.

“Whew. Finally done.” Looking at the sculpture in front of him, Linley nodded with satisfaction.

This sculpture, which Linley had named the ‘King of Killers’, had truly cost Linley a great deal of effort. Each time, Linley had forced himself to totally enter the right state, so as to more perfectly carve out the statue of Cesar making his move.

The statue in front of him was as tall as a person.

Those two cold, calm eyes in particular gave people the sensation of being watched by a god. The aura emanating from this sculpture was the aura of a God of Death. Under the gaze of this sculpture, viewers would unconsciously feel a terrible, cold dread.

“Although this sculpture isn’t comparable to ‘Awakening From the Dream’, it is the most perfect statue that I can make while in a normal state.” Linley was extremely satisfied with this sculpture. He had spent an entire month on it, carefully, attentively sculpting. At last, it was completed.

Putting down his straight chisel, Linley soaked for a while in the hot springs, then put on a loose robe and sat on top of a chair. He was eating the breakfast which his attendants had brought him.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart flew out by his side.

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley looked at Doehring Cowart.

Laughing, Doehring Cowart said, "Linley, there's two days left before the trial of the Debs clan's case. Do you plan to go watch?"

"The trial?" Linley was startled.

This month, he had been absorbed in his bitter training. Linley had totally forgotten about everything else, including the Debs clan's case. If it weren't for Doehring Cowart's reminder, Linley probably wouldn't have remembered it at all.

"Yes, of course I'll go." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face.

Year 9999 of the Yulan calendar. September 9th. Within the Blackwater Jail of Fenlai City.

The Blackwater Jail was the most famous jail in the Kingdom of Fenlai, and it was the most securely guarded jail. The cases awaiting trial at the Blackwater Jail were also the most important cases in Fenlai.

Within the Blackwater Jail's courtyard, today there were many nobles congregating. Even his Majesty, King Clayde, had arrived, and was seated to the side, watching. Naturally, Linley came today as well.

"Lord Linley." One noble after another greeted him warmly.

"Linley, come, sit with me." Seated in front, Clayde gestured toward Linley. Linley smiled at Clayde, then walked over.

Linley sat down next to Clayde.

Merritt, his hair gleaming, sat at the judge's seat. His waist and back were ramrod straight. He really did give the impression of being fair and impartial. "Everyone, please sit." Merritt nodded and smiled towards the noble spectators who had gathered here. In particular, Merritt smiled modestly towards the direction of Linley and Clayde.

The noble spectators all sat down quietly. Today, more than ten people had come from the Debs clan. All of them were seated together, nervously watching the proceedings.

"Bring Bernard." Merritt ordered directly.

Very soon, under escort by two soldiers, Bernard was dragged to the court, hands and feet both shackled.

Merritt glanced at a nearby official, who quickly strode forward. In a loud voice, he proclaimed, "Duke Patterson, when he was the Minister of Finance, acted in many ways against the benefit of the kingdom. In particular, he is suspected of colluding with the Debs clan in the smuggling of water jade. The scale of this smuggling operation is larger than any since the founding of our Kingdom of Fenlai. We have already discovered that the valuation of the smuggled water jade was greater than fifty million gold coins!"

In actuality, the Debs clan had just begun their smuggling program. Although the valuation was fifty million gold coins, in reality, the Debs clan had only spent a few million gold coins thus far. From this, one could tell what enormous profits lay in the smuggling trade.

But just as their smuggling activities had begun, Duke Patterson had died, resulting in this being revealed.

The official continued, "Based on our investigations, one of the main organizers of this smuggling activity jumped into the river, while the other two were the brothers Lanseer and Langmuir."

Finishing, the official sat back down.

Merritt looked at Bernard. "Bernard, do you have something to say for yourself?"

Bernard nodded. "Yes, lord, I do. First of all, it was not our Debs clan which engaged in smuggling. Secondly, the Lanseer brothers had been expelled by our clan long ago. Thirdly, the primary mover behind this smuggling operation should've been that person you said jumped into the river. There is no link to our Debs clan at all."

Merritt nodded and laughed. "The organizer of this smuggling operation was your third brother. And you say this has nothing to do with you?"

"Third brother? My third brother is still adventuring in the wilds. How would he have the chance to engage in smuggling?" Bernard continued to insist on this point.

"Your third brother is engaging in adventuring?" Merritt's face grew cold. "Then let me ask you, if your third brother is outside adventuring, then why, despite me ordering your Debs clan to summon him back, hasn't he returned after such a long period of time?"

Bernard said confidently, "My third brother is adventuring in other kingdoms. Most likely, he's travelled too far. It is normal for us to need more than a year to find him."

Merritt glanced at Bernard, chuckled, then said coldly, "Bring in Catson [Ka'te'sen] and the other two."

"Catson?" Bernard was suspicious. Who was Catson and who were the other two?"

Very shortly, three very cowering youths entered the court, falling to their knees immediately as they said respectfully, "Greetings, Lord."

These three youths clearly were peasants who had seen very little of the world before.

Merritt said calmly, "Catson, clearly explain what you saw happen."

"Yes, Lord." The leader of the youths said respectfully. "On June 28th, we three bros were fishing on the river, but suddenly, we saw a richly dressed noble lord clutching onto a dead tree trunk float by us. This noble was covered in blood and had already passed out."

Upon hearing these words, the expression on Bernard's face changed.

"The day that we pursued the leader of the smugglers was June 28th as well. As it just so happened, the leader jumped into the river." Merritt looked at Bernard. "Bernard, are you willing to admit guilt yet?"

"My third brother is adventuring in distant lands. He definitely wasn't organizing any smuggling activities. My Debs clan is definitely innocent." Bernard still held his head up high and maintained his innocence.

Merritt laughed coldly, then said, "Bring Kanter [Kan'te] Debs."

Hearing the name 'Kanter Debs', the faces of Bernard as well as the members of the Debs clan present all immediately turned white.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 22, The Enormous Fine

“This Kanter Debs should be that third brother of the Debs clan.” Clayde laughed softly towards Linley, and Linley nodded. Linley and Clayde merely watched these proceedings, while the Debs clan’s members all felt terror.

All of those viewers from the Debs clan were now so nervous that they were trembling.

“Clatter!”

The sound of shackles rattling could be heard, as under the escort of two soldiers, a thin, ashen-faced, golden-haired middle-aged man entered the court. The gazes of everyone in the court were drawn towards him, including Bernard, Kalan, and Nimitz.

Seeing that golden-haired man appear, Bernard let out a long sigh, then shut his eyes.

“It really is the third brother of the Debs clan, Kanter!” From the watcher’s gallery, the sound of discussion could be heard. Many of the nobles present recognized and knew Kanter Debs, due to his position within the Debs clan.

By now, the Debs clan had no further hope of trying to dissemble.

Seated up in the magistrate’s chair, Merritt looked towards Clayde, who nodded.

"Bernard." Merritt looked at Bernard. "As things stand, do you still have something to say for yourself?"

But Bernard didn't look at Merritt. He turned his head to look at his third brother, Kanter, fixing Kanter with his gaze. Kanter, too, was staring at his elder brother Bernard. The gazes of these two brothers met.

"Third bro, why did you do this?" There was disbelief in Bernard's eyes, as pain and rage caused his entire body to shake.

"I'm sorry." Kanter said softly.

Bernard laughed bitterly, then shook his head. In a solemn voice, he said, "It isn't me you should be sorry to. It's the entire Debs clan. How many years has the Debs clan existed? It was only thanks to countless generations of hard work and effort by our ancestors that we enjoy our current level of success. But you....you..." Bernard was in so much pain that he couldn't speak.

"Thud!"

Kanter fell to his knees within the court, and two streams of tears began to flow.

"Big brother, I deserve to die!"

He slapped his face severely with his shackled hands. Crying miserably, he said, "Big brother, I'm sorry. This is all my fault. I was greedy and wasn't satisfied with that little bit of authority and wealth I had within the Debs clan. That's why I used the clan's gold to engage in this smuggling operation. This is all my fault. Big brother! This is all my fault!"

This scene startled everyone present.

Linley and Clayde both raised an eyebrow, while the sentencing magistrate, Merritt, frowned.

"Since things have already developed to this extent..." Bernard raised his head, forcing his tears to stop. He seemed very desolate. "Third bro, it's no matter a question of whose fault it is. Your actions have caused our entire clan to be in danger of annihilation. I, Bernard Debs, as this generation's leader of the Debs clan, will not be able to face our ancestors, even in death."

As he spoke, Bernard's tears once more began to fall.

Bernard suddenly turned to look at Clayde, kneeling in his direction. Crying miserably, he said, "Your Majesty. It is the greatest misfortune possible for our Debs clan to have given birth to this miserable, petty traitor to the kingdom. As the leader of the Debs clan, I, Bernard Debs, cannot escape responsibility. I, Bernard, am willing to use my death in order to beg you, your Majesty, to spare the Debs clan. After all, the vast majority of people within our clan are innocent!"

Clayde looked at Bernard.

And then he looked at Merritt, nodding once.

Merritt understood Clayde's intentions. Immediately, he called out, "Fifteen minute recess! Fifteen minutes later, we will announce the final sentence!"

.....

All of the nobles present had to leave the court, and could only come back fifteen minutes later. The direction this case was heading towards had become very clear. As for how the Debs clan would be punished for its crime of smuggling, that was totally up to his Majesty.

Such a large-scale smuggling operation could definitely impact the entire clan. Even if the clan was exterminated, it would be understandable.

But of course, Clayde could also be more benevolent and merely punish the Debs clan but allow it to survive.

The result would be entirely up to Clayde.

....

Outside the court, Duke Bonalt was chatting with Linley.

"Linley, did you see that? These main branch descendants of the Debs clan are really quite good. That Kanter had been captured quite a few days ago. But, instead of committing suicide, he waited until today to put on that show just now." Duke Bonalt laughed.

Linley nodded in praise as well.

"If Kanter had killed himself, then the Debs clan would be in an even worse, more passive situation." Linley laughed as well.

If Kanter had committed suicide, then his corpse would have been used as evidence proving the guilt of the Debs clan in engaging in smuggling. The Debs clan would have had no way to argue against it. But now, Kanter himself was acknowledging that he had acted alone, giving the Debs clan a chance at life.

But of course, whether or not the Debs clan would live was entirely up to his Majesty.

"Kill'em, kill'em all." Bebe, on Linley's shoulders, bared his fangs while mentally speaking to Linley. "This Debs clan is too good at playing games. I, Bebe, can't stomach them."

Hearing this, Linley couldn't help but laugh.

"Squeaaaaak."

The door to the court opened. Fifteen minutes had passed. All of the nobles outside made their way back into the court, all of them quietly assuming their previous positions. Just then, the only people present in the court had been Merritt, King Clayde, and a few other people.

"Linley, take a guess. How do you think I will sentence him?" Clayde smiled towards Linley.

"No clue." Linley replied succinctly.

Clayde grinned secretively.

"All rise!"

Saying these words, Merritt rose solemnly, and all of the nobles in the court followed his lead. His head raised high, Merritt said in a solemn, clear voice, "This is the sentence of this court: Kanter Debs, a member of the Debs clan, did flagrantly engage in the large-scale smuggling of a huge quantity of water jade, and is therefore sentenced to execution by hanging, with the sentence to be carried out on October 11th."

"The total value of this smuggling operation was in excess of forty million gold coins. We sentence the Debs clan to receive a punitive fine of double that amount, eighty million gold coins. Bernard Debs is to be released. Court adjourned!" After hearing these words from Merritt, Bernard, Kalan, and Nimitz all let out a sigh of relief, but in their hearts, they felt very helpless.

Eighty million gold coins!

What a terrifying sum!

The entire net worth of the Debs clan was only around a hundred million gold coins, and that was including all of their illiquid assets. For them to be able to pay such a huge fine would certainly require them to sell off many of their illiquid assets. Such a large-scale auction, in term, would definitely result in a great deal of lowballing and haggling from the buyers.

Although their illiquid assets were worth eighty million gold coins, the chances of them actually receiving eighty million gold coins was really too low.

“Linley, what do you think?” Clayde looked at Linley.

Linley laughed and nodded. “Admirably done, admirably done.”

The fine which Clayde had levied against the Debs clan was carefully calibrated, precisely because the valuation of the Debs clan’s illiquid assets worth around eighty million or so. If Clayde really were to sentence the Debs clan to extermination, then without a doubt, he wouldn’t have been able to get his hands on a single coin of their liquid assets.

But if the penalty fine was too high, perhaps the Debs clan would even risk extinction rather than pay the fine.

The fine of eighty million gold coins was neither too high nor too little. It was just right.

“Father.” Kalan and the others instantly went to help Bernard to his feet.

But Bernard only stared at his third brother, Kanter. A gloomy, calm look was on Kanter's face. He only nodded towards Bernard. After he had been exposed in leading the smuggling operation, Kanter knew that he would die, without a question. But now that he was dying on behalf of the clan, the clan would most likely treat his son and his wife well.

Bernard nodded towards Kanter as well.

Two brothers. From a single exchange of glances, they knew what the other was thinking.

"Let us...go back." Bernard said with a sigh.

After experiencing this tribulation, the Debs clan had suffered a major blow to its vitality. At absolute best, they would have a tenth of the economic power they previously had. From this day forward...the Debs clan had toppled from its previous position of power at the highest levels in the Kingdom of Fenlai. They could only be considered a fairly wealthy clan, now."

.....

Within Linley's manor, in the Hot Springs Garden.

Linley was seated on a chair, quietly staring blankly.

"Linley, what are you pondering?" Doehring Cowart came out of the Coiling Dragon ring.

Linley glanced at Doebling Cowart. Sighing, he said, "Today, when I saw the Debs clan be sentenced, I suddenly thought of my own clan. My clan was once a clan which dominated the entire Yulan continent, but now, after all these generations, who is left? My father died, and my mother's whereabouts are unknown. Little Wharton is now in the O'Brien Empire. In the entire Holy Union, I am alone with no kin."

Linley was gripped by a powerful, lonely melancholy.

His parents were gone, and he was engaged in a mission of revenge that couldn't be revealed!

On this road to revenge, Linley's heart was tightly spun up, and he didn't dare to slacken off in the slightest.

Looking at Linley, Doebling Cowart felt surge of pity. Although superficially Linley seemed very mature, and didn't have any problems at all dealing with those important nobles...Linley was still only seventeen years old this year. He had just graduated from the magus academy not too long ago.

"Linley, relax. Don't give yourself too much pressure. You have plenty of time." Doebling Cowart encouraged him.

Linley looked at Doebling Cowart. On this lonely road he had been travelling, it was good that he had Grandpa Doebling with him, along with that mischievous rascal, Bebe.

"Thank you, Grandpa Doehring." Linley said gratefully.

Doehring Cowart began to chuckle.

"I really want to know what happened to my mother as soon as possible. I want to kill Clayde as soon as possible." Even if they ignored the fact that Clayde had abducted his mother, the fact that he had caused his mother to be separated from their family for over ten years, resulting in the death of Linley's father, meant that without a doubt, Clayde had to die.

"Who knows when that 'King of Killers', Cesar, will bring that poison recipe." Linley was beginning to grow impatient.

.....

Each day, Linley had been urgently awaiting the return of Cesar, the 'King of Killers'. But each day passed with no news of Cesar. Time passed, and in the blink of an eye, it was now October. During this past month, the Kingdom of Fenlai had been fairly tranquil. The only major affair was the large-scale auction carried out by the Debs clan.

Many clans seized the opportunity to try to haggle with or lowball the Debs clan. However, the value of the Debs clan's illiquid assets really were very high, so there were quite a few bidders from other clans as well. Thus, the price at auction wasn't too low, in the end. The assets, previously valued at around eighty million gold coins, ended up selling for around seventy million gold in total.

After paying the fine of eighty million gold coins, the Debs clan could finally be considered as having escaped from danger.

But after this affair, the net worth of the Debs clan had essentially shrunk by 90%.

.....

October 10th was the day before Kanter's execution. This day, Linley remained in the Hot Springs Garden, training as he always did.

"Lord Linley, Lord Cesar has come!" A female attendant called out in a high-pitched voice from outside!

Linley had instructed that he must be immediately alerted if Cesar came.

"Cesar came?" Linley quickly threw on some clothes and immediately rushed out of the Hot Springs Garden. Given Linley's current speed, in ten seconds, he arrived outside the main hall. Right now, Cesar, still dressed in those long, loose robes, was seated lazily with one leg crossed. He was drinking a cup of tea.

"Mr. Cesar." Linley called out from afar. Three steps later, Linley entered the main hall.

Seeing Linley, Cesar's eyes lit up, and he immediately rose to his feet. "Master Linley, my truest apologies for only coming today." As he spoke, Cesar withdrew an envelope from his clothes. "Linley, this is the recipe I mentioned. It's all yours."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 23, The Bloodrupture Poison

Linley looked at the two female attendants outside the main hall. He called out coldly, "Leave. Without my orders, no one is to be permitted inside."

"Yes, milord."

The hearts of those two female attendants shook, and they quickly left.

"Master Linley, you are quite cautious." Cesar laughed.

Linley felt helpless.

Cautious?

How could he not be cautious? He was going to use this recipe to kill Clayde.

"This Cesar probably knew all along that I am intending to kill Clayde." Linley understood this point. Previously, he had told Cesar that he wanted to kill one of the six rulers of the kingdoms of the Holy Union. And then, he said he wanted to kill a warrior of the ninth rank.

As long as Cesar wasn't a total idiot, he would easily be able to connect these two points to understand that Linley wanted to kill a king of the Holy Union who was also a warrior of the ninth rank. In the entire Holy Union, the only one who fit these criteria was Clayde.

"Cesar, this old freak, wouldn't go curry favor with Clayde by selling me out." Linley felt quite confident.

What sort of person was Cesar? Would he deal with someone like Linley using tricks like these?

"Linley, you do indeed have to be careful. That person you intend to deal with is highly valued by the Radiant Church." Cesar said in a low voice by Linley's side. "And he has many guards as well. If you are to try and poison him, it will be quite hard."

Linley glanced at Cesar. "Thank you for your advice, Mr. Cesar."

Poison Clayde?

If Linley was willing to risk his life, he definitely would be able to succeed. All he had to do was to invite Clayde to his manor, and then serve Clayde some wine. In his own manor, lacing the wine was an extremely easy task. But if he did this, he would be revealing himself as the perpetrator.

He had to find an opportunity to kill Clayde without anyone knowing about it.

Such an opportunity was quite rare.

"I can't always rely on being lucky, like that time with Patterson insisting on meeting with me in secret.” Linley said to himself. That private, secret meeting with Patterson really was an unexpected, wonderful surprise for Linley, but such surprises could only be wished for, not relied upon.

As he was considering this, Linley opened the envelope.

There was a piece of paper within the envelope, filled with countless words.

“Drug name: Bloodrupture Poison

Ingredients: Astralagus fruit, white ginseng, turmeric, fog grass, cloud fungus, bitterskin, cardamon kernels, Blueheart Grass.

Effect: Bloodrupture poison, when dissolved into wine or water, has no odor and no taste. To this date, no way of detecting it has been discovered. Once it is ingested, it will seep into the blood and then into the dantian, preventing battle-qi from being generated, causing a warrior to have less than 10% of his strength left. Anyone below the Saint-rank is vulnerable to this poison, and there is no cure. Only by using battle-qi over a long period of time to cleanse the poison from the bloodstream can one cure one’s self.

Instructions: In order to produce one gram of Bloodrupture poison, one needs to have thirty grams of Astralagus fruit, twelve grams of white ginseng, ten grams of turmeric, fifteen grams of fog grass, twelve grams of cloud fungus, one gram of bitterskin, twelve grams of cardamon kernels, and one gram of Blueheart Grass. First use the twelve grams of ginseng, the fifteen grams of fog grass, and the gram of bitterskin. Place them into the alchemist’s pot and boil them until the fog grass begins to emit whit mist, then stop. Filter out the concentrated juice, then place it into the mixing pot and add in the Blueheart Grass, the turmeric, and the cardamon kernels....

Storage method:"

This paper very clearly detailed every aspect of the manufacture and usage of the Bloodrupture poison. Just from examining the concocting procedures, Linley quickly understood how difficult it would be to produce this poison. If a single mistake was made in any of the procedures, the entire potion would be worthless.

The way to store it and preserve it was also very complicated.

The cost of a unit of Bloodrupture poison was more than a million times that of an equivalent weight of gold.

"Of the eight ingredients required to concoct this Bloodrupture poison, five of them aren't that rare. Astralagus fruit, white ginseng, turmeric, bitterskin, and cardamon kernels. The prices of these five shouldn't be considered too high for you. But the other three are very rare. That fog grass generally only grows in the far eastern plains, east of the Four Great Empires. It is extremely rare, and is rarely found in the marketplace. As for the other two ingredients, their rarity is even greater than that of fog grass!" Cesar explained carefully.

"Both Blueheart Grass and cloud fungus are virtually un-purchasable and cannot be found in the market, even if you have money. Supposedly, a while ago, someone tried to offer a hundred thousand gold coins to buy Blueheart Grass, but still was not able to do so. Cloud fungus, as well, hasn't appeared in the market for a long time."

Cesar patted Linley on his shoulders comfortingly. "Linley, it will take you quite a bit of effort to gather these eight ingredients."

Linley still felt a degree of confidence.

Of these eight ingredients, five wouldn't pose any problem at all. As for fog grass, even though it was rare, it shouldn't be too hard to buy it. As for Blueheart Grass...he had it already. There was no need to buy it. Right now, the only problem was the cloud fungus!

"Once I acquire the cloud fungus, I'll be able to produce some Bloodrupture poison. And that day will be the day of Clayde's death." Linley said to himself.

Linley could no longer endure any longer. If in the future, he still couldn't find an appropriate opportunity, he would go all out and kill Clayde, even if it meant exposing himself as the killer. If worst came to worst, he would go ask Yale for help and have the Dawson Conglomerate aid him in fleeing from the Holy Union.

Based on the influence and power of the Dawson Conglomerate, it wouldn't be too hard for them to help Linley escape from the Holy Union.

"Right now, what's important is finding these eight ingredients." Linley was still very happy right now.

At least he now had a goal to work towards.

"Linley. Linley." Cesar called out to him. "Ahem, Master Linley!"

"Uh?" Only now did Linley end his pondering and turn to look at Cesar.
"Mr. Cesar, is there something you need?"

Cesar chortled. "Linley, are you perhaps forgetting something?"

Linley immediately understood. Laughing, he said, "Haha, Mr. Cesar, you are referring to the sculpture, right? I finished the sculpture you asked for a full month ago. Come, please, this way." Linley immediately led Cesar towards a side room.

In the corner of this side room, there was a man-shaped sculpture which radiated a cold, killing aura. Those two eyes contained within them a disdain for all life and an arrogance that forced viewers to feel awe and terror.

As for the facial features, the facial details were carved even more accurately. The sculpture looked exactly like Cesar.

"Wonderful, wonderful!!!" Cesar was so excited, he said the word wonderful twice.

"Master Linley, you truly are a master sculptor. In such a short period of time, you were able to produce such a flawless sculpture. In my mind, this sculpture is ten thousand times better than even that 'Awakening From the Dream' of yours." Staring at his sculpture, Cesar was grinning so widely that his face threatened to split.

The more he looked at this sculpture, the happier Cesar felt.

"This King of Killers is perhaps a bit too narcissistic." Seeing the grin on Cesar's face, Linley couldn't help but think this to himself.

.....

"Lord Linley." A nearby housekeeper bowed politely.

Linley pulled out a piece of paper and handed it to the housekeeper. "Go purchase these twelve ingredients for me. The exact amount I need for each is written on the paper."

"Yes, Lord Linley." The housekeeper accepted the piece of paper.

Of the twelve ingredients on the list of paper, six of them were the ones which Linley needed, while the other six were just some normal, random ingredients Linley had scribbled on as well. Of the twelve ingredients, only fog grass was relatively expensive. As for the Blueheart Grass and cloud fungus which the Bloodrupture poison required, Linley didn't even bother writing them down on this piece of paper.

Linley wasn't actually worried about these ingredients being made public.

After all, the secret formula for Bloodrupture poison was one of the secret formulas of the Deathgod's Hands. Aside from the Saber organization, most likely no one else knew this formula. And there were many other formulas that also used those ingredients.

After all, Linley didn't write down the two most critical ingredients; Blueheart Grass and cloud fungus.

"Find and purchase these ingredients for me as soon as possible." Linley instructed.

After giving his orders to the housekeeper, Linley immediately sent someone to invite Yale, Reynolds, and George to come meet with him at his manor. Whenever they had a chance, the four bros would meet and have food together, thus this wasn't out of character for Linley.

The next morning.

This was the day of Kanter Debs' execution by hanging, but Linley couldn't be bothered to go watch. He was in his manor, drinking wine and chatting with his three bros. Only after they finished drinking did Linley bring up what he wished to discuss.

"Boss Yale, there's something I want to ask you to help me with." Linley said.

"Third Bro, just let me know what you need." Yale said boldly.

Linley withdrew a piece of paper. "Boss Yale, I need two types of ingredients. One is fog grass, the other is cloud fungus. These two herbs are extremely rare, and are virtually unavailable on the market. I was hoping you could help me, Yale.” Yale was supported by the Dawson Conglomerate, after all.

As one of the three great trading unions of the Yulan continent, the Dawson Conglomerate was a massive organization with astonishing abilities.

It would be much simpler for them to look for cloud fungus and fog grass than for Linley to do so on his own.

“Two types of herbs? Don’t worry about it. I’ll handle it for you.” His tongue slurred from wine, Yale pounded his chest and promised. At the same time, he took the piece of paper with the two herbs written down on it from Linley.

“I’ve seen fog grass at home when I was young. It is a very fun type of grass. Under the hot morning sun, it will emit white mist.” Reynolds immediately said.

Linley’s eyes lit up. However, Reynolds’ clan was back in the O’Brien Empire. From his clan to the Kingdom of Fenlai would require at least a year of travelling time. Linley didn’t have that much time to wait. Only if he absolutely couldn’t find it would he be forced to wait patiently.

“How long would it take us, if we were to wait for you to get fog grass from your home, Fourth Bro?” Yale snickered. “Third Bro, I’ll go talk to my Second Uncle right away and have him help you find these two ingredients.”

Yale really did handle Linley's matters with high importance. That very day, he went to find his Second Uncle.

That night, with a private deluxe room, the brown-haired Myron [Mai'lon] Dawson was casually draped in a bathrobe. Bare-chested, he was lying on a reclining chair, while two beautiful young ladies were by his side, attending to him.

"Second Uncle, Second Uncle!" Yale's voice sounded out from the other side of the door.

Myron curled his lips helplessly. Stroking the fragrant hair of the two beauties, he chuckled. "My dears, the two of you can go outside and wait a while." Those two beautiful women left the deluxe room very obediently, and then Yale rushed in."

"Yale, you are already a grown up now. How can you act like this?" Myron Dawson said with a frown.

Yale chortled. "Second Uncle, don't be angry. I've come today to ask for your help with something. This is something on behalf of my Third Bro, Linley."

"Your Third Bro? That Linley fellow?" Myron immediately sat up straight. "Go ahead, what is it?"

Yale withdrew that piece of paper from his clothes. "Second Uncle, my Third Bro is in urgent need of these two types of herbs, which is why I'd like to ask you, Second Uncle, to help out and see if we can find them." As he spoke, he delivered the paper to Myron.

"Fog grass, cloud fungus?" Upon seeing the words on the paper, Myron Dawson nodded. "I'll send some people to investigate and see if there's any to be bought nearby."

"Haha, thanks, Second Uncle!" Yale was excited. "Then I won't disturb you, Second Uncle, from your festivities. I'll leave now."

"You little punk." Myron Dawson chuckled, then looked back at the piece of paper. "Fog grass and cloud fungus? What does this Linley need these two ingredients for?"

.....

Linley had to admit, the Dawson Conglomerate was an astonishingly efficient machine.

"Third Bro, within the various branches in the Holy Union of our Dawson Conglomerate, we only have a small amount of fog grass. As for cloud fungus, we had some a while ago, but it's already been shipped towards our headquarters. The headquarters of the Dawson Conglomerate is the place where we have the most herbs and ingredients. Here, let me give this fog grass to you first." Yale directly handed Linley a pouch.

Within the recipe, the amount of fog grass needed was measured in grams, but the pouch which Yale handed to Linley contained nine full clumps of fog grass. This amount was more than enough.

"So there's no cloud fungus available?" Linley accepted the pouch.

Yale nodded. "Third Bro, if you are in a hurry, I can have my Second Uncle send experts to ride flying magical beasts to head to our headquarters as soon as possible. Riding flying beasts is quite fast. From here to our headquarters, three months is more than enough."

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 24, Breakthrough

Linley was silent for a moment, then smiled and nodded apologetically at Yale. "Boss Yale, sorry for the hassle."

"It's no hassle." Yale chortled. "It's just sending someone to make a delivery is all. No big deal. Our Dawson Conglomerate often sends people to deliver letters to the headquarters. We'll get several things done."

Linley nodded.

"Third Bro." Yale's voice became solemn as he looked at Linley. "Tell me the truth. Why are you in such a rush to get these herbs?"

If it were someone else asking him, Linley totally could've lied and claimed that he was using it to make a medical lotion which would help him increase the speed at which his body gained strength. After all, it wasn't unheard of to bath in medicinal waters as part of training. But facing one of his bros, Linley didn't wish to lie.

"Boss Yale, right now, I can't tell you yet. When the time is right, I will tell you." Linley patted Yale on the shoulders as he spoke.

The bros of dorm 1987 had been together since they were young. They ate together, lived together, played together. They were as close as real brothers.

"Understood, Third Bro. But if you need anything at all, make sure you let me know." Yale didn't ask anything else.

The next day, Linley's housekeeper brought over the herbs which Linley had asked for, except he hadn't been able to find any fog grass. Based on what the housekeeper said, there was no fog grass available on the market at all. If they wanted to buy some, they would have to send someone to buy it from the Four Great Empires.

After all, fog grass was cultivated from the great plains to the far east. Some of the market centers of the Four Great Empires fairly close to the great plains did have a small amount of fog grass for sale.

"Right now, of the eight ingredients I need to produce Bloodrupture poison, seven are ready. All I'm missing is cloud fungus." Within his secret study, Linley had put all of the various herbs in front of him on a table, pondering what to do. Of the eight ingredients, there were three that were rare. Fog grass had been procured by the Dawson Conglomerate, while he already had enough Blueheart Grass.

"If I wait three months, then at that time, the people from the Dawson Conglomerate will come and deliver the cloud fungus." Linley felt very confident.

At most, three months. At that time, he would have all the ingredients that he needed, and would thus be able to prepare a few mixtures of Bloodrupture poison.

But Linley wasn't the sort of person to sit around waiting.

“Help me spread the word. Let it be known that I am preparing to begin a period of training with the usage of herbal baths, and need cloud fungus as one of my components. I’m willing to pay up to a million gold coins for it.” Linley instructed his housekeeper.

Although Linley wouldn’t lie to his bros, he had to give a good excuse to the rest of the world.

Cloud fungus, in and of itself, was not a poisonous plant. It actually was greatly beneficial to the body. But all herbs possessed their own wondrous properties. When these eight herbs were all refined and processed together, they would be able to produce a poisonous powder like the Bloodrupture poison.

“Yes, Lord Linley.” Upon hearing the words, ‘a million gold coins’, the housekeeper’s heart trembled.

To Linley, a million gold coins really wasn’t much. When he had auctioned off his sculpture, ‘Awakening From the Dream’, the price was twelve million gold coins. Afterwards, when Patterson had secretly met with him, he had gifted Linley another ten million gold coins. After Linley’s rise to prominence and appointment to the rank of Prime Court Magus, the Radiant Church, King Clayde, and many other nobles had all given Linley many valuable gifts.

And just a short while ago, the Debs clan had gifted Linley with a magicrystal card that had one million gold coins on it.

Linley’s current net worth was well over twenty million gold coins.

And this wasn't even counting the Saint-level magicite core that Linley had acquired from the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. That core, which Linley was keeping hidden, was a priceless treasure which probably was worth more than even a hundred million gold coins.

The news that Linley was seeking to buy cloud fungus for a million gold coins originally only spread amongst herbal merchants, but shortly afterwards, all the various nobles of the Kingdom of Fenlai learned of it as well. All of those nobles now knew that Master Linley needed cloud fungus.

If they could provide Linley with the cloud fungus, not only would they receive a million gold coins, they would also have a chance to build up a relationship with Linley.

Many nobles began to wrack their brains for methods by which they could locate cloud fungus.

But alas, cloud fungus was far too rare, and far too expensive.

After ordering this news to be spread out, Linley continued his life of solitary, pitiless training within his manor. In the blink of an eye, November arrived, and with it the temperature began to drop as well. The leaves of the trees within the Hot Springs Garden began to turn yellow and fall, filling the grass with fallow leaves.

"Haaaaa!"

Linley, who had been engaging in one-finger vertical push-ups suddenly exerted strength through his fingers, flipping himself into the air. Somersaulting easily through the air, Linley landed on the ground, his bare upper chest covered in sweat.

Aided by the Supergravity Field, after having trained for so long, even Linley's powerful body was beginning to feel tired.

"Whew."

Standing normally again, Linley felt the muscles in and near his fingers, arms, and shoulders all feel numb and sore. He found this feeling to be very comfortable, as he knew that in this situation, his muscles and bones were slowly strengthening.

The way to train one's body was to exceed one's limits time and time again, so long as one didn't exceed the limits by too much each time.

Seating himself cross-legged, Linley immediately began to train in accordance with the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual', allowing the liquefied Dragonblood battle-qi in his dantian to begin to rush out. In a short while, the mighty Dragonblood battle-qi had filled Linley's entire body.

Training, time and time again. Each time, the Dragonblood battle-qi would become a bit more pure, and Linley's bones and flesh would become a bit stronger.

The azurish-black Dragonblood battle-qi entered his dantian again, then spread out again. The dantian was the nucleus for a Dragonblood Warrior. Linley had reached the late-stage of the sixth rank long ago, and in September and October, he had reached the peak of the sixth rank.

Right now, Linley had reached a plateau. He could break through any day now.

"Crack. Crack." All sorts of strange sounds began to emit from Linley's body. Linley's muscles seemed to have a mouse buried beneath them, as they began to ripple up and down nonstop. Even his veins were popping out, and throughout Linley's bodies, beads of sweat and beads of blood were beginning to come out!

"I'm finally about to break through." Linley was shocked and pleased.

He had waited far too long for this day.

"Bubble, bubble."

That azurish-black Dragonblood battle-qi began to roil about strangely, filling Linley's entire body with pain. But within his dantian, that liquefied Dragonblood battle-qi began to condense itself yet again, increasing in density by several factors. The Dragonblood battle-qi was being drawn back into the dantian nonstop. And then, it would once again be emitted from the dantian yet again, forming a circle.

Whenever the Dragonblood battle-qi entered the dantian, it would transform.

After roughly an hour's time had passed, all of the Dragonblood battle-qi in Linley's body had undergone this transformation. Although there was theoretically only a thin barrier between the peak of the sixth rank and the early seventh rank, Linley's strength was now several times greater than it had been in the past.

Linley opened his eyes, a look of uncontrollable excitement within them.

"Haha, I've finally entered the realm of a warrior of the seventh rank." Linley was extremely excited.

As long as he were to agitate the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body, he would be able to assume the Dragonform. The training speed of the Dragonblood Warriors was extremely high, especially in the earlier stages. Linley had spent just about half a year before advancing from the sixth rank to the seventh rank. This sort of advancement was extremely astounding.

But Linley estimated that to progress from the seventh rank to the eighth rank, he would need several years, most likely.

The farther along one was, the harder the road would become. But nonetheless, most Dragonblood Warriors only needed a few decades to reach the Saint-level in power.

Bebe, who had been sleeping nearby this entire time, opened his sleepy eyes, which suddenly brightened. Excitedly, he spiritually said to Linley, "Boss, you reached the seventh rank?"

"Yeah." Linley nodded happily.

"Then doesn't that mean, once you Dragonform, you have the power of an early-stage ninth rank?" Bebe was excited. "Looks like your power is gonna be more than mine now, Boss!"

Linley began to laugh as well.

In the early stages, the boost to power provided by the Dragonform was quite dramatic. For example, as a warrior of the seventh rank, in the Yulan continent, he could only be considered an unremarkable fellow. But upon using the Dragonform, he would be an early-stage ninth rank warrior, who was qualified to be considered a notable figure in the world.

However, the more powerful one grew, the weaker the boost provided by the Dragonform would be.

Dragonform, after all, was nothing more than forcibly drawing out the Dragonblood which a weak Dragonblood Warrior hadn't been able to fully absorb.

"Early-stage ninth rank, and your Dragonform was influenced by the Armored Razorback Wyrms. The Armored Razorback Wyrms specializes in speed and defense, while you also possess strong defense and unquestionably high speed." Doehring Cowart appeared from the ring at this time.

Linley was very confident in his own speed.

Because after taking on the Dragonform, not only did he have the natural high speed of a Dragonblood Warrior, he could also utilize wind-style magic and boost himself with a Supersonic spell of the seventh rank, which would increase his speed by a good amount.

Linley was so pleased that he just stood there, grinning stupidly.

"Boss, stop laughing like an idiot. Look at yourself, you're filthy. Take a bath, jeeze." Bebe intentionally put a disgusted look on his face while covering his nose and jumping up and down as he bared his fangs at Linley.

Linley looked at himself.

At this moment, his body was covered in both sweat and blood. He really did look dirty.

"Splash!"

Linley jumped directly into the hot springs pool. The water in the hot springs were constantly flowing, so Linley didn't worry about getting it dirty. After having experienced the sensation of his entire body transforming, then having the hot springs water rush against it, Linley felt so comfortable that he lay within the hot springs pool, eyes closed.

He fell asleep.

He felt so comfortable that he actually fell asleep.

Just as Linley was enjoying a beautiful dream, a voice rang out from outside. "Lord Linley. Lord Linley." The female attendant's voice clearly sounded rather anxious.

Linley's eyes suddenly opened. Hearing the voice, he couldn't help but frown. "Come in."

Only then did that female attendant dare to enter the gardens. Standing at the side of the hot springs pool, she snuck a few looks at Linley's naked body, then respectfully said, "Lord Linley, a herald from the palace is waiting outside. He says that he has come at the command of his Majesty, who is inviting you, Lord Linley, to make a trip to the palace."

"By command of his Majesty?" Linley hesitated slightly, then directly clambered out of the pool.

"You can leave now." Linley always dressed himself, as he didn't like the female attendants helping him dress.

"Yes." Her cheeks scarlet red, the female attendant quickly lowered her head and fled the Hot Springs Garden.

.....

Seated in a carriage, headed for the palace. Outside the carriage, aside from sixteen palace soldiers, there were sixteen knights from the Radiant Church. Linley's entourage was larger than that of even the Left Premier or the Right Premier.

"Lord Linley, his Majesty is currently within the East Flower Garden." The shrill voice of the palace attendant rang out.

"Lead the way." Linley said abruptly.

The palace attendant was very deferential towards Linley, smiling at him the entire way.

"Who else has his Majesty invited this time?" Linley asked.

"Just you, Lord Linley." The palace attendant replied.

"Just me?" Linley began to feel suspicious, but he didn't ask anything further. Under the guidance of the palace attendant, Linley finally arrived at the palace's East Flower Garden. As it was now already November, there were very few flowers which were still in bloom. But the countless flowers in the East Flower Garden of the palace were still vibrant and beautiful.

And that 'Golden Lion', King Clayde, was currently chatting with his Queen in the garden.

"Haha, Linley, you came." Clayde greeted Linley in a very friendly manner. "Come, sit." "Your Majesty. Queen." Linley paid his respects, then sat down.

Clayde and the Queen exchanged glances, and then he grinned at Linley. "Linley, I heard that you have been looking for cloud fungus in order to create a medicinal bath for yourself?"

"Yes." Linley nodded.

Suddenly, Linley had an idea as to why Clayde had specially requested his presence at the palace. But Linley didn't quite dare to believe it. He was searching for this cloud fungus for the sake of dealing with Clayde. Could it be that Clayde was going to...

"Haha, I knew you were searching for this cloud fungus, so I sent my men out to do a search. By a stroke of good fortune, my palace storehouse just so happened to have a single clump of cloud fungus." Clayde glanced at a nearby female attendant, who immediately presented a golden brocade box she was holding to Linley.

Linley was really, truly stunned.

The cloud fungus that he had been so desperately seeking, had been provided to him by King Clayde!

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 25, Producing the Powder

Cloud fungus. The true reason why Linley was seeking cloud fungus was to use it to produce Bloodrupture poison powder. And the reason why he wanted to produce Bloodrupture poison was because he was going to use it on Clayde.

But in the end, it was Clayde who provided the cloud fungus to him.

“Can it be that hidden deep within the world, there really is such a thing as the cycle of karma?” Linley suddenly thought of the teachings of the Radiant Church, one part of which discussed fate. In the past, Linley had never believed in any religion, but this affair really had developed in a very bizarre way.

Given that the cloud fungus had just been delivered into his hands, how could he not take it?

“Thank you, your Majesty.” Linley smiled, bowing in thanks while accepting the cloud fungus.

But in his heart, Linley was laughing coldly. “Since you’ve given it to me, this means that the heavens themselves desire your death. You can’t blame me.”

Linley had virtually no memories of his mother, but that didn’t stop Linley from deeply desiring to have had a mother’s love. Due to never having known his mother, Linley had always been a bit lonely. Whenever he saw someone else’s mother and felt a bit unhappy, he would think silent, lonely thoughts of his mother.

Upon capturing Clayde, he definitely would be able to discover his mother's whereabouts!

"Linley, I've invited the Right Premier for lunch today. Stay here and have lunch with us, why won't you." Clayde beamed at Linley.

"Yes, your Majesty." Linley's attitude was very humble.

The Queen nodded gracefully to Linley, then said to Clayde in a gentle voice, "Your Majesty, you and Master Linley can remain here. I'll go back now." Clayde nodded calmly as well. In the Kingdom of Fenlai, the King's authority vastly outstripped that of the Queen's.

November. The temperature was getting cold.

But Linley and Clayde were both dressed lightly, not afraid of the cold in the slightest. Linley was now a warrior of the seventh rank, while Clayde was an even mightier warrior of the ninth rank.

"Your Majesty, why did you invite Merritt to dine with you?" Linley was chatting naturally and casually with Clayde.

Hearing Linley's words, a very satisfied smile appeared on Clayde's face. He glanced at the nearby palace maids, who very obediently left. Only then did Clayde say in a low voice, "Linley, are you aware that Merritt has recently married his thirteenth wife?"

"Thirteenth?" Linley was stunned.

He didn't know that this apparently serious, solemn judge, the Lord Right Minister, was so fickle in love.

"His new wife is an extremely flavorful woman." Clayde revealed a smile towards Linley, a type of smile all men understood.

Seeing that expression on Clayde's face, Linley couldn't help but be startled.

"Haha..." Clayde patted Linley on the shoulders. "Linley. Next year, you will be eighteen. Don't tell me you've never tasted a woman before."

Linley couldn't help but feel awkward.

Clayde sighed, "Merritt, that kid, was actually able to acquire such an intoxicating little vixen. It really does make one jealous. But since I've taken a fancy to her, that intoxicating little vixen is mine. Merritt won't even dare to touch her from now on."

Clayde openly spoke of such affairs to Linley.

"Your Majesty? Is that...is that appropriate?" Linley was a bit surprised.

She was, after all, the wife of the Right Minister. But from the sound of it, Clayde was going to directly seize her for himself.

“What’s inappropriate about it? Merritt only climbed to his current position through women to begin with. He should know very well what his place is. But Linley, that day when Merritt got married and had his banquet, I think you didn’t attend.” Clayde said questioningly.

During this period of time, Linley had been pondering the question of alchemy and herbal ingredients. He had no inclination to go to a wedding at all. Generally speaking, Linley declined all banquet invitations from nobles.

The wedding banquet of the Right Premier?

Declined all the same!

“Linley, how about today, during lunch, you take a look at Merritt’s new wife, Windsor [Wen’sa]. If you like her, I don’t mind giving her to you. I can guarantee that no matter how daring and audacious Merritt might be, he won’t dare to touch Windsor a single time.” Clayde said confidently.

Clayde possessed absolute authority within the Kingdom of Fenlai.

The day of Merritt’s wedding, Clayde had taken a fancy towards Windsor. That very night, Clayde had sent someone to bring Windsor to a manor outside, and he, Clayde, had thoroughly enjoyed himself.

As for Merritt, he didn’t dare to show any hint of temper.

What's more, ever since that night, Merritt no longer dared to touch Windsor.

Some of the major ministers in the Kingdom of Fenlai had risen to their ranks through their abilities. Those were truly capable ministers indeed. But some ministers had clawed their way to their current ranks through some unsightly deeds.

Linley was secretly surprised at Clayde's forcefulness.

But then again, Clayde, the one whom men named the 'Golden Lion', had always been as forceful as a lion. One could imagine how despotically he could act if he so chose.

"Your Majesty, Duke Merritt and the Duchess have arrived." A palace attendant ran over and said respectfully.

"Haha, come, Linley." Clayde immediately stood up.

Holding the packaged cloud fungus, Linley could only follow Clayde out. But shortly afterwards, they arrived at a very graceful, light red courtyard within the palace.

Merritt and that Madame Windsor were there, waiting at the gate to the courtyard.

Linley couldn't help but glance at the Madame Windsor who had drawn Clayde's interest.

Madame Windsor's body was extremely slender. Although she was dressed very conservatively, her tight clothes accentuated every curve and every line of her slender body. Her waist was so slender, and yet her bosom was so full.

Her dark red hair was so alluring.

In particular, this Madame Windsor's eyes were soul-beguiling. Anyone who saw her would unconsciously begin to think improper thoughts.

"Your Majesty. Lord Linley." Merritt said, and that Madame Windsor echoed him in her gentle voice.

"She really is quite an enchanting vixen." Linley said to himself.

Clayde cast a delighted glance at Linley. In a low voice, he said to Linley, "What do you think? Do you feel a bit a bit of an urge to...?"

"Your Majesty, let's go in and have lunch." Linley said in a low voice.

"Haha..." Clayde began to laugh loudly.

That Windsor couldn't help but turn to stare at Linley with her beguiling eyes, seemingly quite interested in Linley. If Merritt and Clayde hadn't been there, perhaps she might have gone directly up to Linley and struck up a conversation with him.

"Wow, what a beautiful lady." Bebe, on Linley's shoulders the entire time, said, his eyes growing round.

"Swish."

Bebe actually leapt off of Linley's shoulders, landing directly...on Windsor's bosom.

"It's so big..." Bebe's voice sounded out in Linley's mind.

Linley was flabbergasted.

"What an adorable mouse!" Windsor excitedly cuddled Bebe, who used his little head to rub himself against her ampleness, seeming to enjoy himself very much.

....

"Whew."

Bebe in hand, Linley managed to finally leave the palace. This entire time in the palace, that Windsor kept on using her beguiling eyes to stare at him. Even Linley found it hard to endure.

They entered the carriage.

"Return." Linley snapped an order to his guards, and the carriage immediately began to move. "Hey, Boss, what's the rush? Right, didn't that Clayde say he was willing to give Windsor to you? You should accept." Bebe's beady little eyes stared at Linley.

Linley couldn't help but smack Bebe on his head. "You perverted little mouse."

"Hrmph, I'm about to be of age, y'know." Bebe said unhappily.

Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

But thinking back to what he had gained from this trip to the palace, Linley couldn't help but let a hint of a smile appear on his face. He took out the case by his side.

Within this case was a clump of cloud fungus.

"Now that I have the cloud fungus in hand, all eight ingredients are ready. I have what I need to produce the Bloodrupture poison powder." Linley had already decided that he would immediately start to produce the powder when he got back home.

"Boss, I feel like that Clayde is rather brotherly, stand-up guy. Are you really going to kill him?" Bebe said in a low voice.

Frowning, Linley turned to look at Bebe.

"Bebe, Clayde is the ruler of a country. As long as he has any brains at all, he would naturally try to build a good relationship with me. He is friendly and does right by me, only because of my status and my potential. If I didn't have potential, then Clayde probably wouldn't even bother to notice me. Perhaps if I had a beautiful wife, he would directly take her for his own pleasure. Just like with that Merritt."

Linley understood Clayde quite well.

A person like Clayde was actually quite heartless. But he could still be considered a capable ruler. At least, he was able to distinguish between capable ministers and useless ones.

"In fact, I even am beginning to wonder if, in the past, Clayde saw that my mother was beautiful and therefore wanted her for himself." Upon seeing Windsor, Linley had thought of this possibility.

Based on Clayde's personality, this was not impossible.

"Bebe, tell me, how can I spare Clayde?" Linley looked at Bebe. Just thinking about that possibility filled Linley with a boundless desire to kill.

Perhaps because he could feel the killing desire Linley was feeling towards Clayde, Bebe instantly said, "Kill him, kill him. I, Bebe, will be the first to act against him." Bebe rose to his feet, waving his two paws around while baring his fangs, demonstrating to Linley the deep hatred he, too, felt for Clayde.

"No need for you to act. After finding out about my mother's whereabouts, I will be the first to act." Linley said coldly.

Within the secret room in Linley's manor, under the light of eighteen lanterns, the entire room was bright. Linley was carefully following the procedures for producing Bloodrupture poison powder.

The procedure for producing this powder was extremely complicated. Each step required caution, caution, caution.

If there was even the slightest error, then the ingredients would have been wasted.

Right now, on the table within the secret room, there were alchemist's tools, and the eight ingredients, all chopped up into many small pieces.

"Gurgle, gurgle."

Linley filtered the herbal juice out from the alchemist's pot, then placed this juice into a new, clean pot and began to boil it. At the same time, Linley began to carefully add the three remaining ingredients to the mixture.

"Can't get the order wrong. I should put in the Blueheart Grass, then the turmeric, then the cardamon kernels."

Staring at the alchemy pot, Linley focused all of his concentration onto it, carefully watching it for any reactions. Each step had to be controlled with extreme precision.

An entire night passed.

"I've finally produced a single liquid dose." Linley carefully strained the small amount of clear liquid out of the alchemist's pot, pouring it into a white tray.

"This translucent liquid seems to be just like clear water. There's no distinguishable difference at all." Linley sighed emotionally.

Based on the instructions for producing Bloodrupture poison powder, this final liquid dose could already be considered a form of Bloodrupture poison. However, only allowing it to dry into powder form would it reach its highest level of potency.

By now, this liquid dose had already been boiled once, and not much water remained within it. Most likely, within ten days time, it would totally dry and transform into the Bloodrupture poison powder.

"The first dose was a success. Tomorrow, I'll make a second dose." Linley was very careful.

He didn't dare to use all the materials on a single attempt. After all, if he were to fail, it would be disastrous. By dividing the materials into multiple attempts, at least a single failure wouldn't be too disastrous.

A single dosage of poison powder should be enough. But, to be cautious, Linley had decided to prepare multiple doses.

Year 9999 of the Yulan calendar. The end of November.

The six doses of Bloodrupture poison which Linley had produced had completely dried into powder form. Just by looking at its translucent, crystalline form, it was hard to imagine something which could so dramatically cripple the power of a warrior of the ninth rank.

“Whew. Although I’ve used up all my ingredients, these six doses of poison powder should be enough.” Looking at the six packets of powder on his table, Linley let out a long breath.

For the sake of this Bloodrupture poison powder, Linley really had expended a great deal of time and effort. And now, he had succeeded.

“Now, the only thing that I am missing is an opportunity to make my move against Clayde.” Linley couldn’t help but begin to ponder a way to poison Clayde and capture him without anyone suspecting that it had been Linley who did it.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 26, The Scheme

This would be difficult!

If it was within the palace, Linley would have to first find an opportunity to use the poison, and then both question and kill Clayde within the confines of the palace.

“Even if I don’t worry about the issue of being discovered to be the murderer, upon killing Clayde, it will be very hard to escape the palace.” In Linley’s mind, one possibility after another appeared, then was discarded.

Linley finally reached a conclusion...

“To use poison within the palace and then escape afterwards is virtually impossible.” Linley discarded this possibility entirely. After all, there were simply too many experts in the palace. Only if he used the Dragonform would he be able to cut his way out.

But Linley was not willing to expose the secret that he could Dragonform.

“It has to be outside the palace.” Linley felt his head hurt.

A place outside the palace, where Clayde would be willing to be alone with him. And, the place had to be a standalone place. This was extremely difficult. Clayde was, after all, the king. If someone wanted to meet with him, they would go in person to the palace.

Linley couldn't, after all, send someone to the palace and ask King Clayde to come meet him.

Linley had never heard of a situation where a subject would request a ruler to come see them. This clearly was unfeasible. Even if Clayde gave him face and agreed, Clayde would most likely be suspicious and on guard.

As soon as Clayde became on his guard, the chance of success would be lowered.

"I have to find an opportunity to be with him alone in a place outside the palace." Despite having been in Fenlai City for so long, Linley had never been in a one-on-one situation with Clayde before.

Generally speaking, they would only meet at banquets.

But Linley couldn't make his move at a banquet, in front of an audience of countless people, could he?

"What to do?"

Linley was beginning to feel vexed.

Early December. The temperature of Fenlai City suddenly dropped, and the first snow of this winter came as well. The entire Fenlai City was covered white, and the cold bite of the air caused many nobles to hide inside their homes, unwilling to venture outside.

Still dressed in loose robes, Linley was strolling on the snow-covered streets, escorted by two guards.

"Crunch. Crunch." The sound of footsteps on the snow.

The snow-covered Fenlai City was exceptionally alluring. On the gates of the noble manors on each side of the Greenleaf Road were countless icicles. The reflected rays of the sun glittered off of them, making them seem all the more beautiful to behold.

The towering, snow-covered pine trees in front of the manors seemed exceptionally beautiful as well.

The scene was a beautiful one.

But Linley's mood was foul.

"That Clayde is already a warrior of the ninth rank. Although advancing from the ninth rank to the Saint-level is very hard, perhaps one day he will suddenly break through. By then, it will be even more hopeless." Linley really didn't want to wait any longer.

The earlier he made his move against Clayde, the greater his chance of success.

But he needed an opportunity.

"Boss, look. Many of the nearby manors have been renovated and redecorated." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

While walking on the road, Linley's thoughts were elsewhere, so naturally he hadn't noticed. But upon hearing Bebe's words, Linley noticed that the manors alongside Greenleaf Road were now different from before.

"This is..." Linley said questioningly.

"Hang it up. Good. Now move it a bit to the left." A servant of the nearest manor was busy hanging up various decorations under the instruction of a nearby man.

"Those are...Yulan flowers!" Linley noticed the decorations hanging next to the door and what patterns they had. The patterns looked like Yulan flowers.

Suddenly, Linley understood what was going on.

"Right! It's already December. The Yulan Festival will be coming quite soon. And it will be the 10000th Yulan Festival!" Linley knew the importance of this particular Yulan Festival.

Year 10000 of the Yulan calendar, January 1st. That would perhaps be the most festive day in the history of the Yulan continent. No wonder every single noble clan was putting up so many decorations.

"Crunch!"

One of the steps on a ladder which the servant was standing on while hanging up decorations suddenly broke. The servant lost his footing, wobbled, and then fell down, first banging against the ladder, and then slamming into the stone ground head-first, his fresh blood staining the ground red.

The nearby servants all were frightened.

"Are you okay?" All of them ran forward to help the man up.

"A bit...a bit dizzy..." That wounded man said in a weak voice. Fortunately, the ladder wasn't too high, and so the force with which he struck the ground wasn't too great either. That was the only reason he had survived.

"Alright, that's enough for you for today. Go home and rest. Kohl [Ke'er], go take care of him. Jeeze, you weren't even that high up, but you managed to smash yourself this badly." The manager shook his head helplessly.

The servant named Kohl immediately helped prop up the wounded servant and began to assist him back to his home.

Seeing this, Linley was stunned.

"Lord...Lord Linley?" Only now did that manager notice Linley, and he quickly went forward to pay his respects to Linley. This manor was the manor of Duke Bonalt, and Linley had come here before. Naturally, this manager recognized Linley.

"Good morning, Lord Linley," the manager said with a bow.

Only now did Linley recover from his stupor. An excited smile appearing on his face, he looked at the man and chuckled. "Haha, good morning to you as well. Haha, alright, time to go home."

Excited, Linley immediately turned around, leading his guards back.

"Hey, why is our lord so happy?" Those two warriors began to chat with each other in low voices.

They had seen what a foul mood Linley had been in this morning, so what had suddenly caused him to be so excited?

"This method is so simple. Why didn't I think of it? Haha!" Linley couldn't help but slap himself on the head. He really had obsessed so much that his brain had gone bad.

Linley had already come up with a surefire method to bring Clayde to visit him. This method was...receive an injury!

"I'll pretend that when I was training battle-qi, I suffered some internal injuries by accident. If I'm wounded, from what I've seen thus far, Clayde will most likely come to visit me."

Linley was feeling unbelievably happy. As long as he made his move within his own manor, it would be very easy for him to plot against Clayde.

“As for the status and wealth granted by the Holy Union, I’ve never cared too much. After I find out what happened to my mother and kill Clayde, I will use the backchannels of the Dawson Conglomerate to flee from the Holy Union’s domain.” Linley had already come to a firm decision.

The Holy Union held no attractions for Linley.

Right now, his one and only family member, little Wharton, was staying in the O’Brien Empire. There was nothing in the Holy Union preventing Linley from leaving.

To kill Clayde in a way which wouldn’t raise any suspicions was virtually impossible. Since this was impossible, the only choice Linley had was to accept that he would have to make a small sacrifice. To Linley, the Holy Union held no further attractions, after all.

Linley’s manor. The Hot Springs Garden.

Linley was seated cross-legged within the grassy area, cultivating Dragonblood battle-qi. Like the ferocious waves of the ocean, the Dragonblood battle-qi burst forth, clashing against every blood vessel in his body.

In truth, the average warrior of the seventh rank wouldn't be able to withstand such training. But Linley was different. He had drank blood from a living dragon. Generally speaking, when dragon's blood was applied to the outside of one's body, it would acquire an astonishing durability. But Linley had actually drank it into his stomach, which caused all of his blood vessels to also gain an incredible degree of resiliency.

"Paagh!"

Linley suddenly vomited out a mouthful of fresh blood, and his face turned white.

"Aaaaargh!" A painful, guttural roar ripped out from Linley's mouth.

Right now, all of the female attendants outside the Hot Springs Garden could faintly hear that low roar of Linley's, and they all rushed against the door, pressing their ears against it to listen carefully.

"Lord Linley...seems to be in a lot of pain?" One of the skinnier attendants said questioningly.

"Seems like it." Another, chubbier attendant nodded.

But none of them dared to go inside.

"Lord Linley?" That skinnier attendant called out.

"Come...come in..." Linley's voice rang out.

Those two attendants exchanged glances, then immediately pushed the door open and ran inside. But upon arriving at the grassy area, they were both frightened. There was a large pool of blood on the ground, and Linley was collapsed on the ground, his face pale.

"Assist me to my room." Linley said in a low voice.

"Yes. Yes."

The two female attendants were a bit frantic. Each of them helping hold Linley by an arm, they immediately assisted Linley all the way to his private bedroom.

"Milord, should we ask for the light-style magi to come?" The skinnier female attendant asked.

"No need. My injuries are internal. Magic won't be able to help. I have to quietly recover." Linley took a deep breath, then assumed the meditation position on the bed, his eyes closing. "The two of you can leave now."

"Yes, milord." The two female attendants bowed respectfully and left.

Both the light-style and the water-style recovery spells were spells of a reparative nature, allowing physical wounds to heal. But to damage done to internal organs, they wouldn't be of much assistance.

.....

Within Linley's room. Only him and Yale were present.

"Third Bro, you aren't injured?" Yale was confused. "If you aren't injured, why are you pretending to be injured? And asked to meet with me so urgently." Even before he feigned injury, Linley had sent someone to ask for Yale.

Linley said in a low voice, "Boss Yale, this affair has to do with my revenge. Boss Yale. I can tell you now. That Clayde is most likely the person who killed my mother."

"The person who killed your mother?" Yale stared. "Third Bro, you are planning to...?"

"Right. Get revenge." Linley didn't hide anything from his bro.

"That Clayde is a warrior of the ninth rank. How are you going to get revenge on him? And he's the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai as well." Yale was growing frantic with concern for Linley.

Linley said solemnly, "Don't worry. I already have total confidence in my ability to deal with him. However, after I kill Clayde, then even if the Radiant Church spares me and doesn't kill me, my life will most likely be made miserable. Thus I have decided that after I kill Clayde, I will immediately leave the Holy Union."

"Leave the Holy Union?" Yale was startled, but then he quickly understood. "Right. You do need to leave. Leave this to me. The mercantile power of our Dawson Conglomerate is spread over every major city in the Holy Union. It will be very easy for us to smuggle a person out of the Holy Union with no one the wiser."

"What's more, our Dawson Conglomerate has master disguisers as well." Yale was totally confident.

Linley knew full well how powerful the Dawson Conglomerate was. How could one of the three major trading unions of the Yulan continent be trifled with?

"I know. That's why, Boss Yale, I want for you to arrange for someone to wait for me at that hotel at the end of the Greenleaf Road. When I arrive there later, you can help arrange for me to be smuggled outside the Holy Union."

Linley was very confident that after killing Clayde, he would be able to easily make his way to this hotel.

"No worries." Yale nodded.

"Third Bro." Yale frowned, looking at Linley. "You have to be careful."

Linley smiled at Yale. "Boss Yale, you must have faith in me."

The news that Linley had been injured quickly spread out. The first to receive this news was not the ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai; it was the Cardinal of the Radiant Church, Guillermo.

But very quickly, King Clayde and the various nobles of Fenlai received the news that Linley had suffered an injury when training. Although injuries caused by training were rather rare, they weren't unheard of. Generally speaking, only someone who trained too hard and exceeded his body's maximum limits would suffer such an injury, and sometimes even harm the organs. "The only thing to do now is to wait for King Clayde." Wearing a loose robe, Linley sat on a chair in his bedroom, his face ashen.

Bebe was standing on a nearby chair as well.

"Lord Linley." The female attendant from outside ran in.

Linley's eyes couldn't help but light up. But then, Linley immediately returned to presenting himself as 'weak'. Looking at the attendant, he said calmly, "What is it."

"Lord Cardinal Guillermo has arrived." The female attendant hurriedly said.

"Oh?" Linley's heart was suddenly gripped with worry.

Although Guillermo's visit had been expected, Linley suddenly thought of something...what if Guillermo was present when King Clayde arrived as well? Then it would be very difficult for him to act against Clayde.

After all, Guillermo was a magus of the ninth rank. That Bloodrupture poison was used primarily against warriors to weaken their power, and didn't have much of an impact on magi.

"Linley!" Just at this moment, Guillermo's voice sounded out from outside the room.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 27, The Wine

Linley couldn't help but turn his head to the door.

Guillermo was there, dressed in a long, red robe, a smile on his face, his waist straight. His eyes, however, were very fierce and resolved. Under the escort of the two Vicars, Guillermo strode into the room.

"So Guillermo has already arrived. I hope Clayde will be a bit slower." Linley was filled with anticipation.

The only weakness in this plan of his was the possibility that Clayde and this magus of the ninth rank would come at the same time. After all, the Bloodrupture poison was of no use against a magus.

Linley immediately began to stand up. "Lord Guillermo."

"Linley, look at yourself. Your face is so pale. Sit, sit." Guillermo immediately took two quick steps forward to stop Linley from rising.

"Lord Guillermo, I'm fine. Although I suffered some internal injuries while training battle-qi, I can still walk and act normally. Only, it's a pity that for a period of time, I won't be able to train battle-qi any more." Linley said with a long sigh.

"At a time like this, you are still thinking of training battle-qi?" Guillermo said angrily. "External injuries are easy to heal, but internal ones are much more dangerous. If you don't heal them properly, it's possible that they'll cause harm to you for your entire life.”

“Thank you, Lord Guillermo, for your concern.”

In truth, Linley had a very good impression of Guillermo. He couldn't help but cast a glance to the entranceway. “I hope this Clayde will arrive a bit later.”

Yesterday's blizzard had caused Fenlai City to become very cold, and there were very few people on the road from the palace. But right now, a hundred-man strong contingent of guards were currently protecting and escorting a lavish golden carriage out of the palace.

“Crunch. Crunch.”

The wheels of the carriage crushed through the snow.

“Ransome [Lan'sai'mu], open the door.” Clayde ordered.

The carriage was extremely spacious, and could easily fit five or six people very comfortably. This Ransome was one of Clayde's personal bodyguards, and he immediately said, “Yes, your Majesty.” He quickly pulled open the curtain-door, letting in a blast of that frigid air.

But neither Ransome nor Clayde felt the cold in the slightest, despite the fact that Clayde was just wearing a jacket over some undergarments, while Ransome was wearing the traditional uniform of a palace servant.

"This Linley actually managed to damage his vitals due to over-training battle-qi. Jeeze." Clayde couldn't help but laugh while sighing.

Ransome said in a low voice, "That Lord Linley is still very young, yet he still has such accomplishments. No matter how talented a person is, one still needs to train hard. For a warrior to be able to injure himself internally due to over-training battle-qi shows to what extent he goes to when he trains."

The limits to a person's body's endurance might perhaps be very high.

But each time one tried to stimulate one's potential, one couldn't go too far. Although it was true that hard work was beneficial to a warrior in training, one couldn't go overboard either. The body wouldn't be able to handle it.

"Right. This Linley's future accomplishments will be unimaginable." Clayde nodded as well.

Seeing the look on Clayde's face, Ransome sighed secretly.

As Clayde's personal bodyguard, naturally he had a deep understanding of his master. With the forceful personality that Clayde had, it was very rare for Clayde to be so courteous to someone. But towards Linley, Clayde had never stopped being courteous for a single moment.

"It's a pity that, in that year, his Majesty...alas. His Majesty knows that he has no hope of entering the Saint-level, which is why he views Linley with such importance." Ransome knew Clayde's secret.

Although Clayde was a warrior of the ninth rank, Ransome knew...that unless the Radiant Sovereign was to bestow his divine power upon Clayde, Clayde would never be able to reach the Saint-rank, no matter what.

"Your Majesty, we have arrived at Lord Linley's manor." Ransome said softly.

Through the open door, the gate to Linley's manor could be seen quite clearly. At this moment, there were two powerfully built warriors standing guard outside the gate. These two warriors were elite members of ace divisions of the Knights of the Radiant Church.

"Crunch." The carriage came to a halt.

Ransome was the first to leave the carriage, then respectfully waited for Clayde to step out as well.

"Your Majesty!" Those two guards bowed respectfully.

"Oh, someone arrived before me?" Clayde noticed that there was another luxurious carriage stationed outside, along with a group of Knights of the Radiant Temple standing outside.

"Right. Lord Guillermo has already arrived." One of the two warriors guarding the gate said respectfully.

"Lord Guillermo has arrived? That's fine." Clayde glanced back at his own squad. "All of you stay here. Ransome, come with me." After issuing these orders, Clayde made his way through the gate, his personal bodyguard behind him.

.....

Right now, Linley was still engaged in conversation with Guillermo. Neither of them knew that Clayde had already reached the gate.

"This Guillermo still isn't leaving?" Linley was beginning to grow impatient.

If Guillermo intended to keep on chatting with him like this, who knew how much longer this would go on for? The longer this went on, the more complicated things would get. Growing anxious, Linley suddenly put a hand to his mouth.

"Cough. Cough!" Linley let out a few coughs, coughing so hard that his white face turned red.

"Linley." Guillermo was very surprised.

He didn't imagine that Linley's injury would be as severe as this.

"Linley, you must properly use this medicine I have brought you. They have the effect of assisting the body in healing its internal organs."

Guillermo hurriedly said. "Your body isn't in good shape right now. Get some rest. I won't disturb your rest any further." Guillermo stood up.

After coughing, Linley's ashen face was even paler than before, without a hint of blood.

"Lord Guillermo, my sincere apologies." Linley said apologetically.

"It's fine. Get some rest. Your body is what's important." Guillermo reminded him yet again, before leaving the room along with his Vicars.

Just as Clayde and Ransome walked through the gate to Linley's manor, they heard a voice call out from behind them.

"Your Majesty. Your Majesty."

Clayde turned around questioningly, only to see Merritt quickly jump out from a carriage. "Your Majesty."

"Merritt, you came as well?" Clayde chuckled, coming to a stop as he looked at Merritt.

Merritt ran to Clayde. Respectfully, he said, "Lord Linley's been injured. How could I not come? Your Majesty, how could you go inside with just Ransome? It isn't safe!" Merritt hurriedly said.

When a ruler paid a visit to one of his subject's, usually he would bring all of his guards directly inside as well.

The first reason was to protect the safety of the ruler. The second was to display the ruler's authority and power.

"No need. I'm just checking up on Linley. No need to raise the flag high and all that." Clayde chuckled. "Much less, within the city of Fenlai, who is capable of posing a threat to me, hrm?"

Clayde's self-confidence wasn't without merit.

First of all, Clayde wasn't worried about most combatants of the ninth rank. The only type of person which Clayde truly feared was a Saint-level combatant, but would a Saint-level combatant come to assassinate him, a king? What's more, this was Fenlai City, the Holy Capital of the Radiant Church!

Who would dare to act rashly within the confines of the Radiant Church's headquarters?

"Right, right. Your servant was being too cautious." Merritt hurriedly said.

"Let's go. We can go inside together." Clayde entered along with Merritt and Ransome.

"Your Majesty, Linley is currently recuperating within the private courtyard in the east wing. Allow me to guide the way." Escorted by the pretty attendant, Clayde, Merritt, and Ransome began to head towards Linley's resting area. But halfway there...

Clayde and the other two saw Guillermo and his two Vicars.

"Lord Guillermo." Clayde, Merritt, and Ransome simultaneously paid their respects.

"Clayde, you came as well." Guillermo nodded. "This internal injury of Linley's seems to be a heavy one. Just now, he was coughing. When you go to see him, don't waste too much time. Just see how he is doing, then allow him to rest."

"Understood." Clayde nodded.

"Then I'll leave now." Guillermo nodded as well, then led his two Vicars out and left.

Clayde went with Merritt and Ransome to Linley's chambers.

Guillermo's departure had let Linley to let out a sigh of relief. But before he had a chance to take a breather, a female attendant came running in to make a report.

"Lord Linley. His Majesty and the Right Premier have arrived." The female attendant hurriedly reported.

"He's here?"

Linley's eyes lit up.

"I've waited so long. He finally came." Linley couldn't repress the excitement in his heart. "You can go now." Linley immediately ordered the attendant to leave, and then he calmly stood up, quietly awaiting Clayde's arrival.

Just a few seconds later, Linley heard the sound of footsteps.

"Linley." Clayde's voice rang out as soon as he entered the room. In three quick steps, he arrived by Linley's side. In a very caring voice, he said, "Linley, your face looks terrible. Quick, sit down and rest. Have a good rest."

Linley was pressed down to his seat by Clayde.

"Lord Linley." Merritt was very courteous to Linley as well.

"Thank you, your Majesty. Thank you, Lord Merritt." Linley said with a rather weak voice.

But the excitement in Linley's heart was beginning to swell. In the past, after learning of his father's death, Linley had instructed Hillman to take his clan's heirloom, the warblade 'Slaughterer', to the O'Brien Empire. At that time, he had already made up his mind that the risk of death would not be enough to sway his decision to gain revenge.

Father. Mother!

His father's death was linked to Clayde as well. If it hadn't been for Clayde ordering Patterson to abduct his mother, how would his father have died in an attempt to gain revenge? And of course, his mother's disappearance was Clayde's doing.

"Your Majesty. I'm fine. I've just suffered some internal injuries, and won't be able to train battle-qi for a while. I can still carry out my normal, day-to-day activities." Linley said with a smile.

"That's good. That's good." Clayde revealed a hint of a smile as well.

"Lord Merritt, you came as well." Linley suddenly 'remembered' something, and exclaimed happily, "Right! I haven't had the chance to drink the flagon of fine wine that you gifted to me last time, Lord Merritt. Since both you and his Majesty have arrived today, let's have a little drink."

As he spoke, Linley headed to the liquor cabinet next to him.

"No need. Linley, you've been injured. You can't drink any alcohol." Clayde advised him.

"It's fine. My wound is just a light one. And a little bit of wine is good to get one's veins active." As he spoke, Linley plucked out four wineglasses, along with a bottle of red wine. "Ransome, you should sit as well. At my home, there's no need to stand on so much ceremony."

Linley knew a great deal about Ransome.

As Clayde's personal bodyguard, he was an extremely powerful person as well. Although Linley couldn't clearly determine his power, Linley was certain that he was at least a combatant of the seventh rank, or perhaps even of the eighth rank.

"No need. I don't drink alcohol." Ransome shook his head in refusal.

As his Majesty's personal attendant, he had to maintain his wakefulness at all times.

"Linley, Ransome never drinks alcohol. No need to invite him to drink." Clayde shook his head towards Linley. "Linley, when Lord Guillermo saw me just now, he said you were coughing hard. He wanted you to have a good rest. It's best that we don't drink."

Not drink?

Nobody but Linley knew this, but the Bloodrupture poison had already been mixed in with this wine. If Clayde didn't drink, how would he be poisoned?

"No worries. Lord Guillermo is overly concerned about my welfare." Smiling, Linley poured everyone a glass of wine. "Your Majesty. This wine is exceptionally delightful. Lord Merritt, come. Let's all have a toast." Linley raised his own glass.

Clayde and Merritt had no choice but to raise their glasses as well.

A light ringing sound as their cups touched. And then Clayde, Merritt, and Linley each drank the wine.

"Paaah!"

Linley suddenly began to cough violently again, spitting out all the wine from his mouth. The coughing Linley's face turned a sickly red color again.

"Linley, I told you not to drink wine. You just had to drink." Clayde said in dissatisfaction. He hurriedly went over to help Linley.

"I'm fine." Linley smiled and reached out to stop Clayde.

Suddenly. Linley stared at Clayde. In a solemn voice, he said, "Your Majesty. There is a very important matter which I would like to discuss with you, your Majesty."

"A very important matter?" Seeing the expression on Linley's face, Clayde felt confused.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 28, Mother's Life or Death

Linley cautiously glanced about the room, saying in a low voice, "Your Majesty, just a moment. Let me order out the people who are outside." As he spoke, Linley walked out the door, then barked at the two guards outside. "Both of you, stand down. Without my direct orders, do not permit anyone to enter this courtyard."

"Yes, Lord Linley."

Those two guards saluted respectfully, then left. Now, the only ones left in this standalone courtyard were Linley, Clayde, Merritt, and Ransome.

"Creaaak." Linley quietly shut the door.

"Linley, what sort of secret is this, that you even close the door?" Clayde chuckled.

Linley glanced at Clayde, laughing coldly in his heart. He himself knew that Clayde had already been poisoned by the Bloodrupture poison. As the Bloodrupture poison didn't actually cause any damage to the body, only prevent the generation of battle-qi, only after a person attempted to generate battle-qi would they discover that they had been poisoned.

"This affair really is quite important." Linley's face was solemn.

At this time, Ransome subtly moved closer towards Clayde. As the personal bodyguard of the king, Ransome was beginning to feel that this environment was vaguely dangerous. At the same time, Ransome also felt that as Clayde was a warrior of the ninth rank, and he Ransome was a warrior of the eighth rank, by all rights, nobody here should be capable of being a threat to them.

But one could never be too careful.

"Your Majesty." Linley stared solemnly at Clayde. "My mother left this world when I was young."

Clayde nodded. He had investigated Linley's background, and had discovered that Linley's mother had died in childbirth, while giving birth to Linley's younger brother, Wharton.

"I have no memories of receiving motherly love, only of the strictness of my father. My father was quite severe towards me in terms of both warrior training as well as all the education which nobles were expected to have. My father's requirements for me were very high and very strict."

Linley looked at Clayde as he spoke slowly.

Clayde was beginning to be confused. He didn't understand what any of this had to do with the so-called 'important matter' which Linley had mentioned. But as the ruler of the kingdom, Clayde showed a kingly poise and didn't interrupt.

"Your Majesty, I expect that you know that my clan, the Baruch clan, is also the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors." A slightly proud look was on Linley's face.

"That's right. One of the Four Supreme Warrior clans, the Dragonblood Warrior clan. This is an illustrious, ancient lineage." Clayde sighed with praise.

Linley shook his head. "We were only illustrious in the past. My clan had fallen so far that even our ancestral heirloom had been lost for hundreds of years. Each and every generation of Baruch clan leaders had desired to seize back this heirloom for centuries, but this never occurred. Your Majesty, when I was accepted by the Ernst Institute and left home, do you know what my father said to me the day I left?"

"What did he say?" Clayde looked at Linley.

"My father said, if in the future I do not bring back the ancestral heirloom of our clan, even in his death, he wouldn't forgive me!" Linley's body was trembling slightly.

Clayde, Merritt, and even Ransome all stared in amazement. A father could actually say such a thing to his son? "Your father went a bit too far." Clayde said.

"No."

Linley shook his head solemnly. "I understand my father's desire. My Dragonblood Warrior clan had been downtrodden for centuries, without a single truly powerful person appearing in all that time. My father understood that I would be the strongest person my clan had produced in centuries. Hundreds of years of hopes and desires all rested on my shoulders. Tell me, how could my father permit me to be a failure?"

Clayde began to understand.

"My father's lifelong desire was to bring the warblade 'Slaughterer' back to the clan." Linley's voice was growing fierce. "At the Ernst Institute, I didn't dare to slacken off in the slightest. I trained like mad. I always remembered my father's wish, my father's instructions!"

Clayde and the others were beginning to understand Linley's motivations.

"Half a year ago, after I auctioned off 'Awakening From the Dream', I went back home, and that time, I brought the warblade 'Slaughterer' with me." Linley's voice rose to a higher timbre.

Clayde, Ransome, and Merritt were stunned.

Because they all knew that on that trip, Linley had found that his father had already passed away.

"But when I excitedly returned home, I was welcomed by the news of my father's death. Before he died, he didn't have a chance to see the warblade, and I didn't have a chance to see my father one last time either. All those years of hard work, my dream of making my father happy... unfortunately..." All the muscles on Linley's face were twitching, and the expression on his face was terrifying to behold.

Clayde and the others could all understand how Linley was feeling.

"Linley, don't be too heartbroken," Clayde sighed.

Linley sneered. "But, do you know why or how my father died?"

Clayde, Merritt, and Ransome were all startled.

"My father was killed, your Majesty, by your younger brother, Duke Patterson!!!!" Linley's eyes began to turn red.

"What?!" Clayde rose to his feet in shock. By his side, Merritt and Ransome were both stunned as well.

"Therefore...I killed Patterson!" Linley's voice was very sinister.

At this point in time, Ransome was the first to feel that something was very wrong in this room. He vigilantly inched closer to Clayde, guarding against Linley's actions. But suddenly, just at this moment, Ransome felt a gust of wind from behind. Ransome, a warrior of the eighth rank, knew that he wouldn't have time to turn his head, and so his only choice was to swing his arm behind him in defense.

"Crunch!"

An incredibly painful feeling...and then, Ransome could no longer feel his arm's existence. Only now did Ransome notice, from the corner of his eyes....

A rat-like magical beast, nearly half a meter long, was standing beside him. Aside from noticing the rat's blood-covered maw, Ransome also noticed its sharp claws moving extremely fast towards him. At such a close distance, Ransome didn't have any chance of dodging at all.

It was too fast!

"Snick."

The sharp claws split apart Ransome's throat. Ransome stared in astonishment, but gradually, the life faded away from his eyes.

He simply couldn't understand where this half-meter long rodent-type magical beast had come from. The first thing he had done when he had entered the room was to scan it carefully. He only noticed a small Shadowmouse on the ground which was the size of a man's palm.

Could a palm-sized Shadowmouse pose a threat?

To a warrior of the eighth rank, not at all. Ransome thus wasn't on his guard against it at all.

And thus, being caught totally off-guard, this warrior of the eighth rank, Ransome, was easily killed by the Shadowmouse, Bebe. In truth, his death wasn't too unjust. Given Bebe's current power, even if Ransome had been able to fight him openly and fairly, he still probably wouldn't have been able to hold on for too long.

"Ransome." Clayde and Merritt were both shocked.

A stately warrior of the eighth rank died in one action. The two of them stared in shock at that Shadowmouse. Before their very eyes, Bebe's body shrank down, returning to a fist-sized state, then leaping back onto Linley's shoulders.

"Bebe. Well done." Linley rubbed Bebe's little head.

Bebe closed his eyes, luxuriating in the feeling.

Linley turned his head to once more stare at Clayde. That cold look in his eyes made Clayde feel very uneasy.

"Linley, what do you think you are doing?" Clayde barked coldly. At the same time, he began to activate the battle-qi in his body. But at that moment, Clayde suddenly felt that those wide open blood vessels in his body had suddenly been stopped up by something.

Based on the dense battle-qi which Clayde possessed as a warrior of the ninth rank, in the past the flow of his battle-qi was as powerful and forceful as the crushing waves of the sea. But now, he was only able to forcibly activate a tiny amount of battle-qi, and sometimes the flow would break entirely. Right now, the amount of battle-qi available to Clayde was perhaps only one percent of what was normally available to him.

"Your Majesty, don't shout and don't resist. If you resist, you die." Linley said calmly.

Clayde instantly realized what sort of situation he was now in.

Right now, just based on his muscle power, he could perhaps compete against a warrior of the seventh rank. But that little Shadowmouse on Linley's shoulders was capable of killing even a warrior of the eighth rank like Ransome in a flash.

Clayde didn't doubt in the slightest that Linley and his little Shadowmouse had the power to kill him in an instant.

"Linley, how dare you! You dare to attempt to assassinate his Majesty?" Terrified out of his mind, Merritt shouted.

"Shut your mouth." Linley cast a frozen glance at Merritt.

Merritt's muscle strength wasn't that powerful. Now that he was virtually totally unable to activate his battle-qi, he could perhaps be comparable at most to a normal warrior of the fourth rank.

Merritt quickly understood the situation as well. Not daring to shout at Linley, he still tried to persuade him. "Linley, you have a great future and lots of potential. In the future, you'll be a high-level official within the Radiant Church, and perhaps one day you'll even be the next Holy Emperor. Why must you destroy your future prospects? Linley, I trust that his Majesty won't blame you for having killed Patterson. He brought calamity upon himself when he acted against your father." As he spoke, Merritt glanced at Clayde.

Clayde nodded as well. "Linley, I am willing to pretend that nothing happened today. As for Patterson, he's already dead."

"Linley, his Majesty has already spoken. Don't act too rashly." Merritt hurriedly said.

"Shut your mouth!" Linley suddenly stretched his arm out.

Like iron claws, Linley's right hand stretched out and grabbed Merritt by the throat, suddenly raising him up in the air.

"Ah! Ah! Ah!" Merritt stared at Linley, terrified, gurgling out his pleas.

"Linley." Clayde immediately called out.

But with a cold laugh, Linley flexed his fingers, and then let his hand relax.

"Crunch!" With a snapping sound, Merritt fell to the floor. He grabbed his throat, just barely managing to force out an 'ah' 'ah' sound. In the moments just before his death, he still couldn't believe what had happened. He had come to visit today alongside King Clayde, and yet, this was the result.

As he died, Merritt's life began to flash before his eyes. The last thing he thought of...was a woman.

"If I had known that I would die in Linley's hands, then...that day...I shouldn't have let Alice slip through my fingers." This was the last thought Merritt ever had.

Linley was smiling coldly at Clayde.

"Linley, why are you acting against me? I seem to have treated you quite well." Clayde looked at Linley, but at this moment, Clayde was hoping to himself: "Snow Lion, bring someone, quick, quick!" As a warrior of the ninth rank, Clayde had a magical beast companion of his own.

The Snow Lion was a Glacial Snow Lion, an eighth-ranked magical beast who came from the far north. Generally speaking, it would remain in the palace.

Because of the soul-binding contract which bound them, the minds of the Snow Lion and Clayde were linked. Thus, the Snow Lion immediately knew that Clayde had been a victim of an ambush. Clayde knew very well that right now...his priority was to delay, delay as long as he could!

"True, you have treated me well! But what about my mother?" Linley stared death at Clayde.

If it hadn't been for the fact that in the past, Clayde had ordered the abduction of Linley's mother, Linley's father would still be alive, and his mother would be at home as well. His parents would still be alive! But because of Clayde's actions, he had lost both parents.

"Mother? Didn't your mother die in childbirth?" Clayde didn't understand.

"Die in childbirth?" Linley laughed loudly, his voice wild. And then he stared coldly at Clayde. "That was just a cover story that we made up. Clayde, after my mother gave birth to my little brother, my father and her went to the Radiant Temple to pray. But that night, upon returning to their hotel, they were attacked and my mother was captured."

"Clayde, could it be that you have forgotten that twelve years ago, you ordered Patterson to have kidnappers abduct my mother?" Linley stared coldly at Clayde. "Don't deny it. Patterson has already told me everything."

"That...that was your mother?!" Clayde was totally shocked.

"What, you remember now?" Linley's eyes were boiling with fury. "Tell me. What happened to my mother? Tell me, is she alive, or is she dead?"

Clayde said calmly, "Your mother, I handed over to another person. You can't afford to offend that person. Neither can I."

"Another person?" Linley totally didn't understand.

But at the same time, Linley felt a thread of hope in his heart. A person that even Clayde couldn't afford to offend had abducted his mother. There had to be an important reason behind it. Perhaps...his mother was still alive.

Clayde laughed coldly. "But I can tell you one thing. Your mother is dead. Without question, she is dead!"

"No..." Linley stared.

“You don’t believe me?” Despite the situation he was in, Clayde began to laugh.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 29, Kill However Many Come!

Within the palace.

The Glacial Snow Lion which Clayde had tamed had ten or so servants dedicated solely to his maintenance. After having tended him for so long, the Glacial Snow Lion's attendants could already guess what the Glacial Snow Lion was saying when it roared.

"Where's the Snow Lion?" A white-robed male palace attendant said in a high-pitched voice.

"Milord, the Snow Lion is currently asleep." One of the Glacial Snow Lion's attendants said respectfully.

"Mm." The palace attendant nodded arrogantly.

"Roar! Roar!" Suddenly, a series of ferocious roars could be heard. The roars sounded frantic and worried.

Hearing the sound, the face of the attendant responsible for tending the Glacial Snow Lion instantly changed. The white-robed palace attendant was even more worried. He asked, "What's going on? What's wrong with the Snow Lion?"

Roaring furiously, the Snow Lion quickly charged forwards to them.

"His Majesty, his Majesty is in danger!" The servant charged with tending the Snow Lion was frantic. "Quick! Ten years ago, this happened once as well. His Majesty must be in grave danger! Quick, quick, go protect his Majesty! Milord, where is his Majesty right now?"

The expression on the face of the white-robed palace attendant changed as well. "His Majesty, his Majesty left the palace. Right. He went to Lord Linley's manor."

"Quick, quick, go protect his Majesty!" The attendant bellowed.

At the same time, the attendant directly leapt onto the Snow Lion's back. After having spent every day feeding the Snow Lion, the creature held very little animosity towards him and was willing to let him ride atop itself. Just at this moment, five shadows suddenly flew over as well. These were five of the top experts of the palace.

"Snow Lion, is his Majesty in danger?" A golden-haired middle-aged man barked out to the Glacial Snow Lion.

The Snow Lion continued to bellow while nodding at the same time.

"Quick, to Lord Linley's manor. His Majesty is there." A jade-haired expert quickly said.

"Fourth Bro, you go find Lord Kaiser [Kai'sa]." The golden-haired middle-aged man shouted.

Lord Kaiser was the leader of these experts, and one of the most powerful combatants of the Kingdom of Fenlai. There were only a total of two combatants of the ninth level who had pledged loyalty to the Kingdom of Fenlai, with one being King Clayde himself, and the other being this Lord Kaiser.

Because of Lord Kaiser's high status, there was no need for him to live long-term in the palace.

"Yes, Second Bro! You go protect his Majesty. I'll find Lord Kaiser." The jade-haired man immediately sped off.

"Snow Lion, let's go."

The four of them immediately sped off with the Snow Lion in the direction of Linley's manor.

Within Linley's manor. Right now, within Linley's 'recuperation' courtyard, aside from two corpses, only Linley and Clayde were present.

"No...how do you know that my mother is dead? Didn't you say you gave my mother to another person, a person even you dared not offend? I don't believe that a person like that would abduct my mother just for the purpose of killing her." Linley refused to believe it.

His father was already dead. Linley didn't want for his mother to be dead as well.

Deep in his heart, Linley thirsted for his family to be alive!

"Haha..." Clayde began to laugh while looking at Linley with pity in his eyes. "Linley, I can tell you clearly, right now, that person didn't instruct me to abduct your mother for him. I did it on my own initiative, abducting your mother, then gifting her to him. Because I knew...he really needed women like her."

"And I also know very well that in the past, this lord had acquired quite a few women like your mother. And all of them, without exception. Perished." A hint of mad laughter was in Clayde's eyes.

Linley seemed to have been hit by a bolt of lightning. His body swayed.

"Without exception?" Linley stared at Clayde.

Clayde looked at Linley with pity in his eyes. "Linley, you should've had an extremely resplendent future. But you insisted on choosing this path. Since you've already chosen this path, your future has now been determined as well."

"Haha.....hahahahahahaha!" Linley suddenly began to laugh loudly, all of the muscles on his face twitching.

Linley stared at Clayde with eyes like death. "Clayde. It was you. You were the one who harmed my mother, and in the end caused my father to die. If it wasn't for you, I probably would be enjoying a wonderful life with my parents right now. It was you. It was all you. It was you who ruined—"

Linley's hand stretched out, grabbing a straight chisel by his side.

"What are you planning to do?" Clayde stared at Linley with his tiger-like eyes.

"What am I going to do?" Linley stared at the straight chisel in his hands. "In the past, I always engaged in stone sculpting. But today...I want to try flesh sculpting." Linley's eyes had already begun to turn a dark, gold color, just like those eyes of the Armored Razorback Wurm. Heartless. Cold!

Within the Coiling Dragon ring, Doebling Cowart continued to maintain his silence.

Having watched Linley grow up, Doebling Cowart understood Linley very well.

Linley deeply valued his family and his bros. For the sake of his family and his bros, Linley wouldn't fear death. Right now, the man responsible for the deaths of his mother and father were right in front of him. It was impossible for Linley to remain calm at a time like this.

"Flesh sculpting?" Clayde was startled. Linley's gaze was fierce, and he carefully inspected Clayde's entire body. "Don't worry. You have such a strong, powerful body. I am confident that I will be able to slice you a thousand times before I let you die, as a woman." Linley's voice was freezing cold, and the murderous aura rolled from him in waves.

"You!" Clayde's face turned icy cold as well, and he viciously snarled, "Linley, I will definitely kill you and let you reunite with your two unfortunate parents."

"Reunite?"

Thinking of his parents, Linley's urge to kill grew only stronger.

"Have a taste of my straight chisel technique." Linley's face appeared to be covered by a layer of frost. With a wave of his hand, he sent the straight chisel directly towards Clayde's waist. But once the straight chisel got within ten centimeters or so of Clayde, it was suddenly impeded by a strange force.

A translucent sigil suddenly appeared in mid-air, easily blocking Linley's chisel. "What is this?" Linley was totally shocked.

"I told you. I will definitely kill you." Clayde stood up, looking at Linley arrogantly. His powerful body made him look like an enraged lion.

"Impossible."

Linley's body erupted with Dragonblood battle-qi, and the straight chisel in his hands chopped viciously towards Clayde's body.

"Swish! Swish!" Seven chops in a row, all aimed at a different part of Clayde's body. But no matter where he chopped, his chisel would be blocked by that translucent pattern at around ten centimeters away from Clayde's body.

"You don't have the ability to kill me." Clayde said arrogantly.

"Raaaargh!" On Linley's shoulders, Bebe's mouth suddenly widened and expanded as he viciously bit down at Clayde. Facing Bebe's bite attack, Clayde didn't seem afraid in the slightest. Perhaps he was simply too confident in the power of this defense, as he didn't even try to dodge.

When Bebe's fangs crunched down against that translucent defense, the translucent barrier suddenly glowed with the seven colors of the rainbow for a moment, and then the colors vanished.

"Hrm?"

The expression on Clayde's face changed. "What a powerful attack." Clayde didn't dare to let Bebe bite him again, and he quickly charged towards the outside.

"Boss, attack him, attack him! That defensive barrier on his body isn't innate to him. It must be some sort of magical spell from a scroll or something. There's got to be a limit to how much it can take! Your attacks will whittle away its energy, and once the energy is gone, he will definitely die!" Bebe frantically urged Linley.

Linley immediately understood this logic.

"You want to escape?!"

Linley's skin suddenly began to be covered by black scales, and those sharp spikes began to jut out from his elbows and kneecaps. A long, iron-whip-like tail sprouted from behind him, and on Linley's back, a row of spikes erupted from his spine.

Dragonform. Total Dragonform!

Even in his normal state, Linley was already a warrior of the seventh rank. After Dragonform, he was an early-stage warrior of the ninth rank.

"Swish!" Linley kicked off from the ground, and as he did, the marble beneath his feet cracked. Transforming into a blur, Linley charged directly at Clayde. Right now, Clayde was only able to rely on that comparatively pitifully small amount of muscle power to run, and thus couldn't move at high speed.

Linley's powerful, scale-covered right arm swept its claws ferociously at Clayde.

"Whap!" A terrifyingly powerful force smashed against Clayde's defensive barrier. Although this barrier was able to protect Clayde, it would still be impacted by the momentum of the force. It was as though Clayde was inside an incredibly sturdy carriage. When others attacked the carriage, although Clayde wouldn't be harmed, the carriage would be sent flying in a certain direction. Naturally, Clayde would be sent flying as well.

This was exactly that sort of situation.

Clayde's body was sent flying forward, then smashed directly into wooden screen. The wooden screen totally disintegrated from the power of this blow, but Clayde wasn't harmed at all. He rolled to his feet.

“Dragonblood Warrior. You actually can transform into a Dragonblood Warrior.” Seeing Linley having truly Dragonformed, Clayde was totally stunned.

Before, Linley’s strength wasn’t that impressive. But after having taken on the Dragonform, he actually possessed the power of a warrior of the ninth rank. The fame of the Supreme Warriors really wasn’t hollow.

“I can’t let this continue. Otherwise, this Fateguard is going to collapse.” The thing which Clayde counted on the most was this Fateguard. In the past, the Holy Emperor himself had bequeathed it to Clayde. This Fateguard came from one of the finest defensive magical scrolls in existence, and was powerful enough to allow Clayde to withstand a single blow from a Saint-level combatant!

Capable of blocking a full-power attack from a Saint-level combatant. As for a ninth-rank combatant, it could take dozens of blows before shattering.

“Clayde, I refuse to believe that the energy of your magical armor is endless and infinite.” The totally Dragonformed Linley walked towards Clayde, step by step.

Seeing Linley with spikes jutting from his back, his entire body covered in scales, and in particular with that long, whip-like tail, Clayde felt he had encountered a human-shaped magical beast. In the past, he wouldn’t have been the slightest bit afraid, but right now, he had less than a tenth of his usual power!

“Whoosh!” Clayde suddenly scurried forward, flying towards a window.

"Swish!"

Linley's draconic tail swept over viciously. Despite moving later, it arrived first, landing directly on Clayde's body. Clayde's body was sent flying, smashing viciously at a corner of the window. Breaking through the window, Clayde's body was sent rolling into courtyard. With a leap, Linley flew out as well, the ground beneath his feet splintering from his jump.

"You still want to escape?"

Linley's Dragonformed claws and legs all ferociously attacked Clayde, while at the same time, Bebe continuously bit and scratched at Clayde, trying to whittle away the energy in his defensive barrier as quickly as possible.

Relying on his significant combat experience, as well as his natural strength as a warrior of the seventh rank, as well as the defensive power of the Fateguard, Clayde did his best to dodge Linley's blows and delay as long as he could.

"Protect his Majesty! Protect his Majesty!"

"Roaaar!"

From outside, the sounds of many people shouting could be heard, as well as the roar of a magical beast.

"Linley, today, you are doomed to die." Clayde was exultant. By now, he could sense that his Fateguard had only expended half of its energy. It had more than enough to continue to block Linley's attacks. Linley's gaze grew even colder.

"If one comes, I'll kill one. If two come, I'll kill a pair. I will kill however many come!" Linley's killing intent had boiled to a crescendo.

"Whap!" Linley's draconic tail smashed viciously down on Clayde, sending him flying into the courtyard's wall, which immediately began to crack. At the same time, the sharp claws of a black blur fiercely swiped down at Clayde's body, smashing Clayde hard against the ground yet again.

"Crash!"

The closed gate to the courtyard suddenly split open, sending its shattered shards flying everywhere. A five meter long, three meter tall lion with a body of pure white fur charged inside. From its mouth, it spat out hundreds of javelin-sized jade-blue spikes, while behind it, a group of palace experts charged in as well!

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 30, Even if I Die, I'll Kill You!

The group of warriors who had charged in behind the Glacial Snow Lion were all shocked upon seeing the scene within the courtyard.

"What is this monster?"

The creature within the courtyard was covered in black scales, a back covered with a row of sharp spikes that gleamed with a cold, golden light, and an iron-whip-like draconic tail that swung back and forth. In particular, when this monster stared at them, they noticed its strange, dark golden eyes.

These dark golden eyes were filled with heartlessness, coldness, and murder!

"Graaaaaawr!" Not afraid in the slightest, the Glacial Snow Lion was the first to charge forward at the monster.

The Glacial Snow Lion spat a mass of jade-blue javelins from its mouth, but the monster didn't dodge at all, allowing them to strike against his scales. With a thunderous clatter, the air was rent by the sound of the collision. The attack hadn't harmed the monster at all!

"fk off!" A guttural, furious voice rang out from the mouth of the monster.

Its right leg suddenly transformed into a cylindrical blur and viciously smashed against the Glacial Snow Lion's body. The Glacial Snow Lion was actually kicked away! This was a magical beast of the eighth rank, but it was sent flying away by a single kick.

But how could these guards know that having fully Dragonformed, Linley had stepped into the domain of a combatant of the ninth rank!

"Kill him, kill him!" Clayde howled loudly with rage.

Only now did those experts, who had been stunned by this scene, recover. Immediately, all of them let out angry cries as they drew their weapons and charged towards Linley. At the same time, the magical beast companions belonging to these experts also began to charge at Linley.

Magical beast, Frostwolf. Magical beast, Gorehorse. Magical beast, Mastodon. Magical beast, Bluewind Warbird.

One magical beast after another charged at Linley from the air or from the ground. Linley was like a whirlpool, attracting all of the nearby warriors and magical beasts to attack him. This sort of large-scale focused attack was truly very terrifying.

Linley's death-promising gaze was locked onto Clayde. Bebe continued to attack Clayde nonstop, reducing the energy remaining in Clayde's Fateguard.

"Clayde, today, I must kill you." Linley didn't care about the surrounding warriors in the slightest. Right now, the strongest person present was a warrior of the eighth rank. Although in his Dragonform, Linley was still just an early-stage ninth rank warrior, Linley had inherited one of the strongest traits of the Armored Razorback Wurm; an incredibly terrifying defense!

The attack of a warrior of the eighth rank, when landing on Linley's black scales, couldn't hurt Linley in the slightest.

The only large-sized man among them, a two-meter tall, massively muscled man with a waist like a bear swung a massive battleaxe at Linley. On top of the battleaxe was a layer of blazing red light, causing even the temperature of the air itself to rise.

"fk off!"

Linley didn't dodge at all. Balling his fierce claws into a fist, he punched at the axe with astonishing speed, splitting the air with the force of his punch.

"Bam!"

That massive, sturdy battleaxe was directly smashed into smithereens. Linley's fist didn't slow down in the slightest as it pierced through the warrior's chest. And even as his fist penetrated the man's chest, Linley's other hand came piercing in as well...

With a powerful tug from both arms, Linley ripped the warrior into two halves from within. Blood splattered all over Linley's scales, making Linley look all the more like a demon come from the pits of hell.

"Second Bro!"

The other three warriors screamed with rage. The one whom Linley had killed was one of those four warriors of the eighth rank. The eyes of the three remaining warrior turned red, and alongside their magical beasts, they all charged towards Linley.

"Whap!" Linley's draconic tail suddenly swept at them from the side.

One of the warriors who had intended to ambush Linley from behind, a tall, skinny, golden-haired man, was struck on the head by the tail. His head shattered, spraying blood everywhere.

"He's a demon, a demon! Everyone, kill him!" Terrified by Linley's display of might, everyone began to scream and attack.

More and more people were pouring in from the more distant courtyards, and even some of the guards that had been originally stationed to protect Linley came charging in to attack Linley as well. Because black scales covered Linley's entire body, even his face, nobody knew...that this monster was Linley!

In everyone's minds, this was a terrifying demon!

Kill it!

"Your Majesty, hurry and flee!" Two warriors of the eighth rank leapt over to Clayde's side. But just as they finished speaking, a black shadow charged towards them. These two warriors had extremely fast reaction times though, and with a tremble, their bodies became blurs as well.

"Ah!"

A chunk of flesh from one of the warrior's shoulders was bitten off, and that black shadow continued to attack that warrior. Relying on fierce claws and sharp teeth, in a very short period of time, over ten pieces of flesh were bitten off that warrior, and blood flowed from everywhere on his body.

Having lost too much blood and too much flesh, the warrior began to stagger and stumble.

"Crunch!"

A sharp paw directly slapped onto his skull, crushing it and killing him on the spot.

"Bebe, focus your attacks on Clayde!" Linley's voice rang out in Bebe's mind.

"Got it, Boss!"

"Whoosh!" Clayde had seized this opportunity to jump out the courtyard.

"Shiiiiirk!" Bebe's high-pitched screech once more split the air. Transforming into a black blur, Bebe smashed directly into the wall at high speed. The already-cracked wall instantly split apart, and Bebe charged straight through, attacking Clayde frantically.

"Kill this demon! Everyone, kill him!" Clayde commanded in a loud voice.

"Your Majesty!"

The people in Linley's courtyard were growing greater and greater in number, and thousands of soldiers from the palace had come charging in to protect the king as well. Many nobles as well, having noticed the commotion, immediately ordered their people to protect his Majesty. The number of people in Linley's manor could already be described with the phrase, 'an ocean of people'.

People were everywhere!

"For honor!"

"For honor!"

A squad of Knights of the Radiant Church immediately rushed in front of Clayde, and all of them simultaneously attacked that lightning-fast black blur. For the sake of protecting his Majesty, a large number of soldiers were willing to ignore their own safety.

"Shkreeeee!"

Bebe's high-pitched screech once more split the air, and his speed suddenly increased even further. Bebe's strange blurred body, sharp claws, fierce fangs, and astonishing speed had transformed into the emissary of the god of death, and one warrior after another collapsed.

Bebe directly burrowed through some of their chests. Others were decapitated, their heads sent flying. The skulls of others were shattered...

Circling around and around, Bebe continued to attack Clayde. Clayde could clearly feel that the energy around his body was continuing to diminish.

"This pet of Linley's is too terrifying." Only now did Clayde totally understand how much power Linley had.

Right now, Linley had been totally surrounded and pinned down by an ocean of warriors. He was powerful, true. But under the mass attack of a huge number of magical beasts and warriors, even if he was able to kill a person in a single blow, he would still need to take a long time.

"I can't delay. Once the Saint-level combatants of the Radiant Church arrive, I won't have any chance at all."

Seeing the crazed masses set against him, and the warriors screeching words such as 'For honor' and 'For his Majesty' and 'Demon', Linley grew more and more frantic. What's more, many magi were lobbing spells at Linley from afar as well.

“Whap!”

“Bam!”

Linley's body seemed to have transformed into a rainbow, as countless magical spells landed on his body. But Linley's defensive abilities were simply too terrifying. The Armored Razorback Wurm was praised as the dragon-type beast with the highest defensive power. There was no question about this.

“Shkreeeee!” Far away, Bebe's screeching cry could be heard, but Linley was surrounded by a sea of soldiers and warriors. He couldn't help but feel frantic.

“Clayde!”

“Father! Mother! Today, even if I die, I will kill him. If worst comes to worst, then our family will reunite in the Netherworld! Little Wharton, I entrust the Baruch clan to you!” Linley said to himself. At this moment, Linley no longer cared about or feared death.

“Clayde!!!”

Linley let out a furious roar, and his scale-covered right arm touched his waist. Suddenly, a beautiful violet flash lit the air.

“Die, all of you, die!”

Linley began to slaughter!

Linley transforming into a tornado, and the violet light flickered around beautifully, its strange radiance flashing here and there. Every place Linley passed by, warriors would fall down, chopped in half or turned into meat paste.

The Godsword, Bloodviolet!

Given Bloodviolet's sharpness, especially when wielded by the Dragonformed Linley, even warriors of the seventh rank were directly chopped in half.

A massacre!

Wielding Bloodviolet, Linley's rate of slaughter increased tenfold. Wherever that purple light flashed, groups of warriors would fall to the ground. Linley was charging forward in Clayde's direction at high speed. Every step forward, he was forced to kill ten people!

Kill!

Kill!

Kill!

Human blood spurted everywhere like fountains, and shattered bones lay everywhere, as common as mud. The black scale-covered Dragonformed Linley seemed to have truly transformed into a demon from hell. In the face of his massacring charge, one warrior after another collapsed.

Nobody could stop his advance!

"Bam!" With each step, Linley made the earth shake. Bloodviolet danced in his hands, and yet another body collapsed. All of the bushes in the manmade hill nearby had been eradicated long ago, and all of the walls in the manor had toppled as well.

Linley finally arrived by Clayde's side. Because of Bebe's constant attacks, Clayde hadn't been able to flee anywhere.

"Linley, must you kill me?" Clayde glared at Linley.

Linley's lips curved upwards, ever so slightly.

Must?

Ever since his father died and Linley had instructed Hillman to take the warblade 'Slaughterer' out of the Holy Union, Linley had made his mind up. No matter what, he was going to avenge his father.

"Hah!"

His Dragonblood battle-qi exploding, Linley's arms suddenly, bizarrely expanded in size by an inch, as his physical strength was pushed to the limit. Seeming to shatter and slice through the air itself, the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands cut down viciously on Clayde's body.

"Bam!" Clayde was knocked flying by the force of that blow, and his body viciously slammed against that manmade hill. The boulders atop the manmade hill were sent flying everywhere.

His body turning into a blur, Linley once more appeared in front of him.

Linley seemed to have turned into a tornado, and as he turned, his right leg lashed out fiercely against Clayde's neck. Although this blow was once more guarded against by the Fateguard, Clayde's body was still smashed deep into the ground by the force of that blow.

"Whap!" Immediately following Linley's right leg was Linley's draconic tail.

Like a whip, it struck harshly again and again on Clayde's body. The power that was being slammed onto Clayde's body and through it into the ground was akin to a meteor striking the earth. More than ten large cracks appeared on the ground, and his body sank into the newly created crevice.

The translucent barrier protecting Clayde's body was beginning to tremble, and the seven-colored rainbow was flashing wildly, about to break at any moment.

"It's about to break." Linley exulted wildly.

"Protect his Majesty!" A high-pitched shout rang out.

"Lord Kaiser!"

The warriors who had been terrified by the way they had been slaughtered by Linley and Bebe were ecstatic. A powerfully built man with long, flowing jade hair charged forward, a greatsword in his hands. The speed of his movements weren't inferior to Linley in the slightest.

Linley's heart shook. "The second warrior of the ninth rank in the Kingdom of Fenlai, Kaiser. Not good!"

"Forget it." Linley didn't even turn to look at Kaiser. He quickly chased after Clayde, who had seized the opportunity to flee out of the crevice he had been smashed into. Clayde's Fateguard defend had been stretched to the limit, and could shatter at any moment. He had to seize this last moment to kill Clayde!

"Stop!" Kaiser howled with rage.

"Bam!"

Linley once again smashed a fist against Clayde, this time landing an uppercut on Clayde's jaw, sending him rising up in the air. Immediately following, Linley's body turned around at high speed and, like a pair of battleaxes, his right leg and his iron-whip-like tail struck in sequence against Clayde's body.

"Bzzzt." A very strange sound emanated from Clayde's body.

Clayde's body was in midair, and the protective barrier around him was trembling nonstop, glowing with that seven-colored rainbow. But just then, in midair, a black blur flashed towards him, sending a vicious claw against that seven-colored rainbow.

"Shatter!"

A clear sound could be heard, and the barrier around Clayde's body broke apart.

"It broke." Seeing this, Linley was wildly happy. He immediately charged directly for Clayde, but right at this moment, Kaiser arrived and chopped viciously at Linley with his greatsword. But Linley didn't care about the sword in the slightest, continuing to charge directly at Clayde.

But just at this moment....

None of the thousands of battling warriors in Linley's manor had noticed that a person was floating in mid-air, watching from above. Although this person was standing in mid-air, someone staring up at him from below wouldn't be able to see him at all. They would see nothing there.

He was very skinny, bald, and wore a long white robe. His face was calm, and he watched the proceedings below with the icy gaze of a god.

It was his Holiness, the Radiant Church's Holy Emperor himself!

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 31, Won't Accept it

"As I suspected, this genius of the Baruch clan is indeed capable of Dragonforming. Although it isn't quite the same as the Dragonblood Warriors of record, despite his youth, he already has the power of a warrior of the ninth rank. The Dragonblood Warriors live up to their reputation as one of the Four Supreme Warriors."

The Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church, Heidens [Hai'ting'si], had a hint of a smile on his face as he watched the going-on's below.

The thousand-plus casualties below and the blood-stained earth wasn't enough to make the Holy Emperor's heart quiver even slightly.

"Kaiser, stop him!" Clayde shouted frantically.

Clayde had never imagined that despite being in possession of a Fateguard, that he would be beleaguered to this extent. What's more, it was within the Holy Capital of Fenlai City.

"Yes, your Majesty!" Kaiser called out in response, while sweeping his greatsword towards Linley.

Linley didn't try to defend against this attack at all. "Even if I have to take this blow head on, I am going to kill Clayde first." The death of his parents had filled Linley with boundless hatred towards Clayde. Only by killing Clayde would he be satisfied. Otherwise, even if he died, he would be unsatisfied!

"Thud!" The greatsword slammed against Linley's body.

Linley had been planning to take this blow head-on, but he suddenly realized that, bizarrely, this actually wasn't an attack against him at all. This blow was used to block Linley's charging momentum, while at the same time, Kaiser took advantage of the counterforce to knock himself flying towards Clayde at an astonishing speed.

"Swish!" Bebe once more charged towards Clayde.

"Bam!" That greatsword sliced through the air, blocking Bebe's way. Bebe used his fierce claws to exchange a vicious blow against the greatsword.

"Clang!"

Bebe only felt a fiery aura emanate from the surface of that greatsword, while at the same time, a fierce gust of battle-qi raged towards him. Bebe immediately dodged quickly, but nonetheless that fiery battle-qi struck his body. However, relying on his astonishing defensive abilities, Bebe only somersaulted through the air once before landing on the ground again.

Kaiser stood in front of Clayde, staring coldly at Linley and Bebe.

"Boss, this guy is really tough!" Bebe's fur was standing straight up, and he stared fixedly at Kaiser.

Linley could also sense Kaiser's power. In terms of speed, Kaiser wasn't a single bit slower than him, and when he struck with his sword, his speed was even more astonishing. This Kaiser was a true, full warrior of the ninth rank, with significant experience as well.

“Who are you? Why are you trying to kill his Majesty?” Sword in hand, Kaiser stared coldly at Linley.

Linley didn’t speak. Tapping his waist, the Bloodviolet Godsword once more appeared in his hands. At the same time, Linley immediately utilized the wind-style supporting spell, Supersonic. A Supersonic spell of the seventh rank was still capable of raising Linley’s speed a bit.

“A double expert, both magus and warrior.” The expression on Kaiser’s face changed.

“Clayde.” Linley’s guttural voice rang out.

Right now, there were a group of warriors surrounding Clayde, but as far as Linley was concerned, aside from that Kaiser, none of them were capable of opposing him.

“Swish!” Linley furiously stomped the ground, causing the ground to split and crack. Relying on that powerful counterforce, Linley transformed into a merciless black blur and shot straight towards Clayde.

“Whoosh!” Bebe, being spiritually linked with Linley, shot out at the same time.

“Chi! Chi!” The Bloodviolet Godsword transformed into a violet blur of light, piercing directly at Kaiser. With a flip of his wrist, Kaiser's huge sword moved with surprising agility to block Linley's Bloodviolet. But just at that moment...

That previously ramrod stiff Bloodviolet Godsword suddenly curved, avoiding Kaiser's sword and thrusting directly at Kaiser.

It was too close!

Kaiser didn't have the chance to dodge at all.

"Bam!"

Three centimeters away from Kaiser's body, the Bloodviolet Godblade suddenly came to a halt, ramming against a layer of blazing red battle-qi that was sprung up to protect Kaiser. As a warrior of the ninth rank, Kaiser was incredibly strong, even a bit more so than Linley.

This blow having failed, Linley didn't hesitate in the slightest, charging directly towards the nearby Clayde.

"Halt!" Kaiser let out a low shout, about to move to block Linley.

But from the corner of his eyes, Kaiser noticed a black blur suddenly arrive at the back of his neck. Kaiser knew exactly how terrifying this unique magical beast could be, and he didn't dare to use his battle-qi to forcibly block its fierce claws.

Kaiser hurriedly and agilely pivoted to dodge, putting some distance between him and Bebe. Flipping the greatsword in his hand again, he chopped directly at Bebe.

"Kaiser, come save me!" Clayde called out frantically.

Kaiser couldn't help but grow anxious. Both Linley and this terrifying magical beast had, without question, the power of a combatant of the ninth rank. What's more, that magical beast of Linley's possessed both incredible agility and terrifying defense. Kaiser was confident in his ability to deal with one, but dealing with two was a major headache.

"Slash!"

As the Bloodviolet Godsword cut through the air, it left behind a trail of severed limbs and sprays of blood.

Linley's dark gold eyes were fixed firmly upon Clayde, and he charged towards Clayde at high speed. Everyone who sought to block him was bisected by the Bloodviolet Godsword in Linley's hands. Blood had already dyed every inch of Linley's black scales!

With each step he took, he killed ten people!

"Slash!" After chopping away the last two warriors guarding Clayde, Linley charged directly towards Clayde.

"Don't, don't kill me!" Clayde was now truly afraid.

Kaiser was still being entangled by that astonishingly durable Bebe, and simply wasn't going to be able to come rescue him. As for the other warriors, they were nothing more than an afterthought to Linley. The power of Linley in his complete Dragonform was enough that he would only fear a combatant of the Saint-level. Even most warriors of the ninth-rank would not be enough to make Linley afraid.

"Clayde, die."

This time, Linley didn't use his sword. With his right claw, he swiped viciously at Clayde's neck. He wanted to rip Clayde to death with his own hands.

"Ah!" Clayde hurriedly flew backwards at high speed, falling against a manmade hill.

But with a single twitch of his legs, Linley once more appeared in front of him. Those fierce claws arrived directly in front of Clayde's eyes.

"Father. Mother. I've finally avenged you." Linley's heart was shaking, and he brought his right claw down with force. The totally unprotected Clayde, in front of Linley, was like a toothless, claw-less animal.

Clayde's eyes were filled with terror and disbelief.

"Thruuuuum."

An extremely strange vibration suddenly emanated from the sky. In the blink of an eye, it totally surrounded Linley, making him feel as though he was sunken in quicksand. His entire body had been bound, and he couldn't use any more force with his right claws.

If Linley were to use just a bit more force, he would be able to sever Clayde's neck. But Linley wasn't able to move at the slightest.

Clayde stared, stunned, and then he exulted wildly.

"Ha...hahahaha!"

Clayde began to laugh loudly, and then he slowly retreated several steps before raising his head to stare at the sky. At this moment, a white-robed figure slowly floated over from up above in the sky. It was his Holiness, the Holy Emperor Heidens.

"Your Holiness." Clayde immediately bowed respectfully.

All of the warriors nearby, Kaiser included, were stunned. But then immediately, they all bowed very respectfully and called out respectfully, "Your Holiness!"

The highest authority within the Holy Union. The man with the authority to depose a ruler from his rule. The Holy Emperor, Heidens, had appeared.

The Holy Emperor walked one step at a time towards Linley, and as he did, Linley suddenly felt as though he had escaped from the quicksand and could now move. But facing the Holy Emperor's gaze, Linley only felt his heart quiver.

"Your Holiness!" At this time, another squad rushed over, with two Cardinals leading them, along with several Executors from the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.

"Heathen!" Guillermo, seeing the totally Dragonformed Linley, was the first to speak, his face changing.

The Holy Emperor Heidens calmly glanced at Guillermo. Guillermo instantly fell silent, not daring to make another sound.

"Get out."

Linley's guttural voice rang out, causing the Holy Emperor Heidens to look at Linley with some surprise. Despite being affected by the power of his Presence, this man still was resisting? Heidens knew very well that his Presence was even more powerful than the presence of most Saint-level combatants, because Heidens was carrying several valuable treasures of the Radiant Church on him.

"Surrender." Heidens spoke.

"Whoosh!"

Linley suddenly moved, transforming into a blur as he flew towards Clayde, while striking in an arc towards Clayde with that iron-whip-like draconic tail. Without question, the terrifying power of Linley's tail was enough to kill Clayde with one blow.

Heidens suddenly made a waving gesture with his right hand. "WHAP!" Linley's body was sent flying far away, slamming into a distant manmade hill. Rocks shattered, and blood began to seep out all across Linley's body. From this single blow, his astonishingly sturdy scales had been shattered to the point of allowing blood to be drawn.

Heidens glanced at Guillermo.

Guillermo understood what Heidens wanted. He shouted an order to the Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal. "Take this demon away!"

Instantly, four Executors charged towards Linley.

"Boss!" Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley was half-kneeling against the manmade hill, and blood was dribbling out of his mouth. "Bebe. Leave. Leave now. While they haven't noticed you, leave!"

"I won't leave." Bebe was crouching off in the distance behind the corner of a wall, but continued to mentally converse with Linley.

"No. With the Holy Emperor present, we no longer have any chance at all. He hasn't noticed you yet, so you have a chance to slip away. Bebe... leave now. I must kill that Clayde. Even if I die, I need you to help me kill him. If even you are caught, in the future I will have no chance at all."

"Boss..."

"Leave! Or else, even if I die, I won't forgive you!" Linley roared mentally.

In the corner of that wall, Bebe stared at Linley, his little eyes filled with fury, grief, and an unwillingness to depart.

"Leave now!"

Linley mentally howled with fury at him. At this moment, those four Executors had walked to Linley's side and reached out, intending to subdue Linley. But that half-kneeling Linley suddenly rose to his feet, like a praying mantis attacking from ambush.

"Swish!" A violet light flashed. All four of them were bisected at the waist.

"Die!" Linley charged towards Clayde once again.

The expression on Clayde's face changed.

"Even if I die, I will kill you first!" Linley howled with rage.

"Hrmph!"

The eyes of the Holy Emperor Heidens flashed coldly, and he let out a sneer. His right hand slapped in Linley's general direction, and suddenly, a terrifyingly powerful force appeared out of nowhere, surrounding and pressing down Linley from all sides. Linley felt as though an enormous mountain had just slammed onto his body.

"Bam!" Linley was slammed into the ground.

"Crack!" Linley felt that the bones in his body were suddenly broken in over ten different places. Totally paralyzed, he lay there on the ground, unable to move again. Nobody, no matter how strong, would be able to move with so many bones broken.

"Take him away." Guillermo once again ordered.

"Boss..." Seeing the sorry state Linley was in, tears were flowing down Bebe's face.

Linley was lying on the ground, totally paralyzed. All the bones in his arms, legs and ribs were shattered. He couldn't move at all. The black scales covering him were in even worse shape, and blood flowed out from the flesh beneath the scales, dying his entire body red.

"Boss."

"Leave! Bebe, leave!" Linley was mentally roaring with rage.

Several Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal roughly lifted Linley up. Perhaps it was because they had just seen Linley murder four of their colleagues, but their hands were not gentle, and as they carried him, they didn't pay any attention to his wounds. This sort of carrying method caused Linley's entire body to be filled with agony.

As he was lifted and carried away, Linley continued to stare unblinkingly at Clayde.

"Haha, haha..." Clayde began to laugh again.

Staring at Clayde with those dark gold eyes, Linley roared furiously, "If I don't kill you, I won't rest! Even in death, I won't accept it!" Linley's voice made the heart of that far-off Bebe quiver.

Hearing these words, Clayde's heart couldn't help but quiver as well.

"I, won't, accept it!" Two trails of tears cascaded down from Linley's eyes. He had been so close to victory. But in the end, he had still failed to kill Clayde.

Book 6, The Road to Revenge – Chapter 32, In Dire Straits

Within the hotel at the end of the Greenleaf Road, Yale and a group of people were waiting.

“Young master. His Majesty suffered an attack from some sort of demonic creature at Lord Linley’s manor. Right now, many palace guards as well as the warriors of many noble clans have gone to protect his Majesty.” A golden-haired man in front of Yale said respectfully.

Yale was startled.

He knew that Linley wanted to kill Clayde, and now, Clayde was the target of an assassination attempt. Nine out of ten, this had something to do with Linley.

“I wonder if this so-called ‘demonic creature’ is actually Third Bro.” Yale began to worry.

But Yale could only wait here quietly. He had no other options. Shortly afterwards, another report came. “Young master Yale, that demonic creature has begun a wild slaughterfest. Too many people have died. Lord Linley’s manor has become a river of blood, and is littered with corpses.”

Yale secretly felt shocked.

“Third Bro is really formidable. But I don’t know if Third Bro will be able to escape in the end." Yale could only continue to wait.

One report after another continued to come.

"Young master Yale, that demonic monster's violet sword is far too powerful. Wherever that violet flash appears, death follows. Countless people have died within the manor. Of the palace guards, many platoons and even entire companies have been wiped out."

Upon hearing this, Yale became even more certain.

"A violet sword? Could it be that Bloodviolet sword?" Yale, Reynolds, and George all knew that Linley was in possession of a Bloodviolet Godblade. In particular, Yale suddenly recollected something about Linley's clan. "The Baruch clan is the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. Can it be that Linley transformed into a Dragonblood Warrior?"

The so-called 'demonic creature' could very well be Linley after having transformed into a Dragonblood Warrior.

Thinking about how his beloved bro was currently being attacked by thousands of men and beasts and was engaging in a wild battle, Yale couldn't help but worry even more.

"Third Bro!"

Yale's fists clenched, relaxed, clenched, relaxed. All of the people present could sense his nervousness.

"Young master Yale. His Holiness, the Holy Emperor appeared. He heavily injured that demonic creature, and it has already been dragged back to the Radiant Temple." The final report came back. Yale's face turned white, devoid of all blood.

Upon hearing the words, "His Holiness, the Holy Emperor appeared", Yale knew that things had just gone from bad to worse.

"Squeak squeak!" A black blur suddenly appeared within the hotel.

"Bebe." Seeing this Shadowmouse, Yale instantly ran over to it.

"Bebe. Where is Third Bro?" Yale immediately looked at Bebe, asking desperately.

The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, didn't have any of his usual exuberance. He only stared at Yale, then lowered his head and let out a few dejected squeaks. Yale could sense the grief and pain hidden within Bebe's eyes. Although Bebe was a magical beast, his intelligence was no lower than that of a human.

"Swish." Bebe's body flickered, and he suddenly disappeared from in front of Yale.

Yale was startled.

"Young master Yale." A nearby person said softly.

"Go back. Go find my Second Uncle." Yale suddenly rose to his feet and issued orders to his men.

Within one of the more secluded private rooms on the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple. Linley had been tossed inside the room like a dying dog. For Linley to be imprisoned within the Radiant Temple was actually still a testament to how highly the Radiant Church valued Linley.

The Radiant Temple was the heart of the Radiant Church.

This was a place which even Saint-level combatants dared not to trespass into.

"Ah." All the scales on Linley's body had already retracted back inside. Currently, Linley's body was covered with blood, and he had more than ten visible wounds. These wounds were all caused by the Holy Emperor, Heidens. His visible wounds were very serious. But his internal wounds were even worse.

The bones of all four of his limbs had been broken. Linley could only grit his teeth as he tried to force his body to move, but all he could accomplish was resting his head against the wall.

"Linley."

Doehring Cowart flew out of the Coiling Dragon ring. He looked at Linley, and his eyes were filled with affection and helplessness.

"Grandpa Doehring." Linley looked at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart sighed mentally towards Linley. "Linley, do you feel any regret?"

"Regret?"

Linley shook his head. "No. In fact, in this life, I have only two desires. The first is to reclaim the lost glory of my clan. The second is to reach the highest pinnacle of power and training that I can reach. But if I do not gain my revenge, I probably won't even be able to sleep well. I would be in torment my entire life."

Doehring Cowart nodded. He could understand Linley's frame of mind.

"I lost. Haha. I lost."

Linley laughed lightly. His entire body hurt. Right now, most likely any person at all could easily trample him.

He lost!

As soon as the Holy Emperor had appeared, Linley knew.

He lost. And losing meant death.

Linley had been aware of this long ago. In this world, many people died every day. Linley never believed that it was impossible for him to die.

"Linley, you probably won't die." Doehring Cowart said.

"Huh?" Linley looked questioningly at Doehring Cowart.

Doehring Cowart laughed calmly. "If that Holy Emperor wanted to kill you, he would've killed you long ago. How could it be that he would have acted against you several times, yet still spared your life? In addition...you haven't considered the fact that most likely, a ruler of a kingdom holds less attraction for him than you do."

Linley suddenly began to understand a bit.

"The second greatest genius magus in all of history, someone likely to become a Saint-level Grand Magus. And now, the Holy Emperor has discovered that you are a Dragonblood Warrior as well. Most likely, he would be all the more reluctant to kill you now. The Dragonblood Warriors are one of the Supreme Warriors. Upon entering the Saint-level, you will definitely be one of the most powerful Saint-level combatants. In terms of attack power alone, you definitely won't be any inferior to the Holy Emperor himself!" Doehring Cowart said with certainty.

Supreme Warriors were very terrifying.

Most people, upon entering the Saint-level, would have to progress through the so-called early-stage, middle-stage, and peak-stage.

But upon entering the Saint-level, a Supreme Warrior, especially in Dragonform, would definitely be a peak-stage Saint-level combatant with incredible defense and offense. Even amongst peak-stage Saint-level combatants, the Supreme Warriors would probably be amongst the most powerful.

"A genius like you, Heidens won't be willing to kill unless there's absolutely no options available." After finishing his speech, Doehring Cowart flew back into the Coiling Dragon ring.

Linley's heart was very calm.

Life, death?

The thing which Linley truly cared about was vengeance.

"I'm afraid that even if he spares me, Heidens won't allow me to kill Clayde." Linley knew very well that having failed to kill Clayde this time, in the future, it would be very hard for him to kill Clayde. If he couldn't kill Clayde, in his heart, Linley wouldn't be able to accept it.

"Who knows when I will be able to get vengeance."

Linley's heart was filled with helplessness.

Within the highest floor of the Radiant Temple. The Holy Emperor, Heidens, was sitting calmly on his seat.

Guillermo was staring at the Holy Emperor in shock. "Your Holiness, that demon was Linley? But...but..."

At first, Guillermo hadn't known that person was Linley, but after the scales had retracted into Linley's body, Guillermo discovered his identity. This had totally shocked the man.

"That wasn't a demon. That was a Dragonblood Warrior!" Heidens glanced calmly at Guillermo.

Guillermo was startled, but then he quickly understood. "Right...the Baruch clan is the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. But it has been over a thousand years since the Dragonblood warrior clan has produced a Dragonblood Warrior. It's unimaginable that...that...that Linley was actually...your Holiness, that was a Dragonblood Warrior?"

Remembering how terrifying Linley had appeared, Guillermo felt his heart tremble a bit.

"Perhaps a mutated version. But it should be a Dragonblood Warrior transformation, yes. Otherwise, how could he rise in power so quickly?" Heidens said calmly. "This Linley's potential is too great. Although this time, his offense was a major one, there are very few outsiders who know that 'demon' was actually Linley."

Guillermo instantly understood Heidens' meaning.

Linley's potential is too great?

Guillermo sighed to himself. Linley's potential was absolutely terrifying.

Not only was his potential as a magus incredible, he was also a Supreme Warrior. In both aspects, he was a very terrifying person. If such a person could remain within the Radiant Church, in several decades, the Radiant Church would almost assuredly have another supreme combatant.

"Indeed. Your Holiness, others all say that it was a demon. Aside from those Executors who dragged Linley back, nobody else knows this demon was Linley." Guillermo said respectfully.

"Oh. Those four. Deal with them." Heidens said coldly.

"Yes, your Holiness." Guillermo said respectfully. "It is their good fortune to be able to return to the Lord's embrace."

Guillermo then said softly, "Right. Your Holiness, another person knows that the demon is actually Linley."

"You mean...Clayde?" Heidens said softly.

"Yes, your Holiness." Guillermo said. Questioningly, he wondered, "Clearly, this Linley has an extremely deep grievance with Clayde, otherwise he wouldn't have gone to this extent to kill him. Your Holiness, Clayde is the ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai. If we are to preserve Linley, perhaps we should have a chat with Clayde."

"Yes, we should have a chat."

A hint of a smile was on Heidens' face. "I am very curious. What sort of deep grievance and enmity does Linley have with Clayde?"

Late in the evening, Clayde arrived at the top floor of the Radiant Temple.

"Your Holiness." Clayde bowed respectfully.

The Holy Emperor, Heidens, was seated on his chair, leafing through a few thick tomes. Without even looking up, he said, "Clayde. In your opinion, who is more important to the Holy Union? You? Or Linley?"

Clayde's heart thumped hard.

"The Holy Emperor means to preserve Linley?" Clayde's heart began to grow frantic.

After having experienced this event, he now knew that Linley's father and mother were killed as a result of him, even though he didn't do it himself. In terms of responsibility for the deaths of Linley's parents, he, Clayde, probably bore 90% of the responsibility.

That year in the past, if it hadn't been for Clayde deciding to take Linley's mother and offer her up, how could she have ended up dying? And how would Linley's father have died?

Clayde remembered very clearly that look of unrelenting hatred in Linley's eyes, even as Linley had been dragged away after being heavily wounded by the Holy Emperor.

"This Linley will fight with me until one of us dies. He cannot be allowed to live." Clayde said to himself.

"Clayde, the outside world all believe that it was a demon. Nobody knows that it was Linley, yes?" Heidens looked at Clayde.

Hearing these words, Clayde even more was certain of the Holy Emperor's intentions. He hurriedly said, "Your Holiness, that Linley truly is an incredible talent. Most likely, he is the greatest genius to have appeared in thousands of years, both as a magus as well as a warrior. He is an absolute genius. It is very understandable that your Holiness would desire to have him be of use to the Radiant Church. But...it is already determined that he will not be of service to our Church."

These words from Clayde caused Heidens to frown. His eyes stared coldly at Clayde.

Clayde's heart quivered in fear.

But he knew that if Linley didn't die, then he would never have a moment's peace again.

"Your Holiness, do you know why Linley wishes to kill me?" Clayde hurriedly said.

"Summarize." Heidens said coldly.

Clayde immediately said, "Your Holiness, the reason Linley wishes to kill me is because twelve years ago, I sent people to abduct his mother. And then, his father, in the course of investigating his mother's disappearance, was killed. His mother and father, it can be said, died because of me."

"The enmity sowed by the deaths of one's parents is indeed a great one." Heidens nodded.

"But your Holiness, do you remember that woman from twelve years ago? That woman I gifted to you, your Holiness?" Clayde looked at Heidens.

Heidens started.

"Are you saying..." The look on Heidens' face changed.

"Right. That woman was Linley's mother!" Clayde said in a resounding, loud voice.

"Your Holiness, if Linley is to remain within the Radiant Church, then as his station rises, he will begin to learn some of the secrets of the Radiant Church. He will definitely discover how and why his mother died. By then...is it even remotely possible that he would still be loyal to the Radiant Church?" Clayde let out a mental sigh of relief.

He trusted that given the situation, Heidens would definitely decide to act appropriately. Yes, Linley's potential was high. But the more powerful that Linley became, the greater a threat he would pose to the Radiant Church once he discovered the truth.

"If this is the case...pity. What a waste of a talent." Heidens let out a single sigh.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 1, A Hope of Living

Upon hearing the words, "What a waste of a genius", Clayde exulted mentally.

He already knew that the Holy Emperor's choice was.

"You can leave now." Heidens waved his arm and said calmly.

"Yes, Your Holiness." Clayde bowed respectfully, then turned and left the top floor of the Radiant Temple. In the entire hall, only Holy Emperor Heidens now remained. Walking to a window, Heidens stared down at the city of Fenlai, maintaining a long silence.

After a long time...

"Knock!" "Knock!" "Knock!" The sound of knocking on the door.

"Enter." Heidens said calmly.

The person who entered was Cardinal Guillermo. Guillermo glanced at Heidens's back. Able to sense that Heidens was in a foul mood, he respectfully lowered his voice. "Your Holiness, how should we attempt to persuade Linley?"

"Persuade? No need." Heidens said calmly.

Guillermo couldn't help but raise his head to stare at Heidens in astonishment. If they wanted Linley to be of use to them in the future, at the very least they would have to speak with him and persuade him. After all, not only had Heidens severely injured Linley, Linley had a deep grudge against Clayde to begin with.

"Guillermo, do you know who Linley's mother was?" Heidens turned his head to stare at Guillermo. Guillermo was startled. Curiously, he said, "Linley's mother? Didn't she die while giving birth to Linley's younger brother?"

"No."

Heidens shook his head. "When you investigated Linley's background and information regarding his mother, you weren't able to uncover the truth. Linley's mother was actually that woman we acquired twelve years ago."

That woman from twelve years ago!

Guillermo instantly remembered, because that woman had had a huge impact on the upper levels of the Radiant Church.

"But if we've already killed his mother, then..." Guillermo instantly understood why the Holy Emperor was now in such a foul mood.

A genius such as Linley was extremely enticing. But in the future, once Linley discovered the truth about his mother, he would be a huge threat to the Radiant Church.

“Guillermo. The 28th of this month will be the day when the glorious aura of the Radiant Sovereign will be the strongest, is it not?” Heidens said suddenly.

“Yes.” Guillermo was somewhat perplexed by Heidens raising this question.

“Make the preparations. That night, I intend to beg the Radiant Sovereign for a divine boon.” Heidens said calmly.

“Divine boon?” Guillermo was greatly shocked, but then he quickly understood Heidens’s plan. He secretly sighed to himself, “The Holy Emperor is most likely requesting this divine boon on behalf of Linley. Although this will limit Linley’s future potential, given his talent, he will still be an incredible figure. Only, what a waste of his talent.”

A Divine Boon was in reality a manifestation of the divine power of the Radiant Sovereign in the material world.

The Radiant Sovereign, as a Sovereign, one of the most powerful entities in existence, could extend a thread of his divine, faith-based power to totally cleanse a person’s soul, causing them to be wholly devoted and faithful to the Radiant Sovereign. Only a person who had already reached the Saint-level and was able to crystalize his soul would be able to resist the effects of this Divine Baptism.

Everyone else...definitely could not resist!

But after his soul had been affected by the Divine Baptism of the Radiant Sovereign, Linley's natural talent would be impacted as well. His future accomplishments would definitely be a bit lower.

"What a waste. What a waste of a talent." Heidens sighed again. This was the reason why earlier, in front of Clayde, he had said the words 'what a waste'. Heidens was, however, very confident. Once he had been affected by the Divine Baptism, even if he later found out about his mother's death, Linley would still be loyal and faithful to the Radiant Sovereign.

Because the faith this Divine Baptism created would go deep within a person's soul!

In the blink of an eye, ten days passed. The city of Fenlai was as calm as it had always been, but all the major noble clans in Fenlai felt a strange, oppressive atmosphere. For example, his Majesty, King Clayde, was always in a terrible mood these days, and several major ministers and nobles had run afoul of his temper and been executed.

On the Fragrant Pavilion Road, behind a lavishly decorated hotel, a group of people were gathered together within a quiet, three-story building.

Yale, George, and Reynolds had been here this entire time.

Ever since they had found out about what happened to Linley, the three of them had continued to worry for Linley. They knew very well what a huge disaster Linley had dragged down upon himself. Not only had he openly attacked King Clayde and killed over a thousand elite warriors of the kingdom, he had even forced the Holy Emperor himself to subdue him in the end.

“Boss Yale, have your people heard any news of Linley yet?” George asked, and Reynolds looked at Yale as well.

Yale shook his head.

All of them had ugly looks on their faces. They had grown up alongside Linley. At the Ernst Institute, they had eaten together and roomed together. Although they weren’t actual siblings, they were as every bit as close to each other as real brothers were. There was no way they could just stand by and watch as Linley was executed.

“There’s no way. I don’t have any means of reaching the high level people in the Radiant Church.” Yale was somewhat frantic. “Wait a few more days. My father will arrive soon.”

Yale’s father.

Monroe [Men’luo] Dawson!

The Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate, and the controller of the enormously powerful Dawson clan, whose wealth made even the Four Great Empires and the two major alliances envious. Their mercantile web had already encompassed every city in the Yulan continent, and was totally able to determine whether a nation’s economy flourished or collapsed.

Each of the three major trading unions possessed tremendous power.

Neither the two major alliances nor the Four Great Empires were willing to be openly hostile against them, because once one of the trading unions was openly at war with an empire, it could very well trigger an economic collapse, wiping out decades of progress and causing chaos within its domain.

"Boss Yale, you told us to wait a few more days two days ago! If we keep on waiting, I'm afraid..." Reynolds was frantic as well.

There was nothing Yale could do.

Fortunately, his father had been engaging in some tourism in a kingdom not too far from the Kingdom of Fenlai. Upon getting the news, Yale had immediately gotten in touch with his father and expressed the hope that his father could come to Fenlai City as quickly as possible. Given his father's status as the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate, most likely Heidens would personally welcome him to the city.

Once his father appeared, the chances of rescuing Linley would be exponentially greater.

"Young master, young master!" A skinny, tall youth came running in, excited. "Young master, the Chairman has arrived!"

"Father!"

Yale leapt to his feet in joy. In the eyes of Reynolds and George as well, a hint of hope appeared.

Within the VIP reception hall of the Radiant Temple.

A two-meter tall, bald, pudgy man stepped into the hall, grinning merrily. This bald fatty was two meters tall and of enormous girth, most likely weighing 300-400 pounds.

This was the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate – Monroe Dawson! From another door, in walked the Holy Emperor – Heidens.

Heidens was also nearly two meters tall, but he was quite thin. The two of them together, both tall, both bald, but one fat while the other was skinny, made for a very interesting sight.

Behind Monroe Dawson, there were two middle-aged men. One was a golden-haired man with cold, hawk-like eyes, while the other was a powerfully built red-haired man. These two followed solemnly behind Monroe Dawson. Without question, the two of them were both combatants of the ninth rank!

Behind Heiden, as well, there were two red-robed Cardinals, one male, one female. These two were Guillermo and Melina [Ma'li'na].

"Oh, Your Holiness."

Monroe called out in an exaggeratedly loud voice as he attempted to bow. However, that large belly of Monroe's made bowing an extremely difficult thing to do. "Monroe, please sit." Heidens was still quite friendly to him.

Monroe immediately sat down, as did Heidens.

Monroe's enormous butt was simply too big. Most chairs wouldn't be a good fit for him. Fortunately, the Radiant Church had prepared a special chair for him in advance. Upon sitting down, a delighted grin split his rotund face, and he laughed loudly. "Thank you, your Holiness. On this trip, I had only intended to do some sightseeing near Greenstone Lake, but who would've thought that my son would insist on me hurrying over here? Alas, you should understand that as a father, I had no choice."

"Monroe, you really do pamper little Yale." Heidens said with a smile.

Monroe nodded helplessly. "Hehe, that little tyke. But I've heard Yale say that he has an extremely incredible bro by the name of Linley. Not only is he a master sculptor, he is a genius magus, and also a very powerful warrior. When I heard this, I was very much impressed. But from what Yale says, this Linley has now been imprisoned within the Radiant Temple."

"This is indeed the case." Heidens nodded in acknowledgment.

Monroe chortled, "Your Holiness, can you give me some face and free Linley? Young people are always so impetuous. Although I know he attempted to assassinate Clayde, in the end, Clayde didn't die, right? I'm sure that your Holiness wouldn't care too much about a small matter like this."

Monroe spoke casually and simply.

But Heidens couldn't respond to him in as casual a manner.

This Monroe Dawson had gone so far as to explicitly ask Heidens to give him face. If Heidens refused, wasn't that the same as directly refusing to give Monroe face? Although Monroe was grinning cheerfully, Heidens knew very well how powerful the Dawson Conglomerate standing behind Monroe was.

"Monroe." Heidens shook his head. "It isn't that I won't give you face. It's that it's really not convenient for me to free him. Because...Linley killed several people from the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, including students of Osenno [Wu'sen'nuo] himself. Osenno is extremely angry this time."

"Osenno?" Monroe Dawson frowned.

Osenno was one of the other pillars of the Radiant Church – the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.

In truth, it should be said that the Radiant Church actually had two leaders; the public leader known as the Holy Emperor, and the hidden leader in charge of killings, slaughters, and eliminating heathens and apostates – the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.

"This is going to be difficult." Monroe immediately knew that this was not good.

Perhaps Heidens would care somewhat about Monroe's status, but that cold fellow Osenno was nothing but a crazed killer.

But Monroe Dawson could also guess something.

“Linley killed the students of Osenno? These words are most likely a lie spun by Heidens, but there’s no way I’ll be able to verify this with Osenno.” Monroe felt helpless. He could tell that clearly, Heidens did not wish to let Linley go that easily.

The Dawson Conglomerate really did have its eyes set on Linley.

This was especially true after discovering that Linley was capable of Dragonforming. In terms of both his potential as a magus as well as a warrior, Linley’s potential was incredible. Once the Dawson Conglomerate acquired Linley, when Linley entered the Saint-level, the influence of the Dawson Conglomerate would instantly supersede that of the other two trading unions.

“If that’s the case, then I’ll leave now.” Monroe Dawson immediately stood up.

Heidens smiled calmly. “I truly am sorry, Monroe. Right now, the Radiant Church has not internally decided on how we should punish Linley. After we have decided on how we should deal with Linley, I’ll send someone to inform you.”

“Sure. During this period of time, I’ll stay in Fenlai City. I really want to see the upcoming Yulan Festival. This 10000th Yulan Festival is sure to be an amazing spectacle. In a man’s entire life, he might only see such a spectacle this one time." Monroe Dawson beamed as he spoke.

After speaking, Monroe Dawson departed with his two bodyguards.

Heidens quietly watched as Monroe Dawson departed. By his side, Guillermo said quietly, "Your Holiness, that damn fatty foolishly thinks he can claim Linley for his own. After the 28th, Monroe can abandon all of his hopes."

Heidens turned to glance at Guillermo. Smiling, he left the hall as well.

Right now, the only thing to do was to wait for December 28th.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 2, The Divine Boon Descends

On the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

Linley seemed to have been discarded here and forgotten. The only people who came were the cold, grim purple-robed Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal who came each day bringing his meals. His arms and legs both broken, Linley's only choice was to squirm over then lower his head to the food.

Within the dark, gloomy cell, one such day after another passed.

Life? Or death?

Linley didn't know which it would be, but Linley wouldn't so easily give up any hope of staying alive.

These past few days, Linley had spent his time reviewing why his attempt at gaining revenge this time had failed. Almost everything had been within his calculations, and he even included the existence of Clayde's magical beast companion in his plans. But Linley hadn't expected that Clayde would have a Saint-level magical barrier enchantment!

Producing a barrier enchantment was far more difficult than just casting a spell.

To produce a Saint-level barrier enchantment, the effort that needed to be expended in both spiritual energy and mageforce was greater than the effort needed to directly cast a Saint-level magical spell. Linley didn't believe that Clayde would have a Saint-level barrier enchantment on him.

Even Doebling Cowart had said: "Forget about Clayde. Most likely, even the Cardinals of the Radiant Church wouldn't have a Saint-level barrier enchantment on them."

Given Linley's power as a warrior of the ninth rank in Dragonform, and combined with Bebe's power, Clayde should've died without a doubt. Although Linley was perhaps a bit too hasty in his plan to get revenge, he should've had a nearly 100% chance of success. Alas, that Fateguard enchantment ruined Linley's plans.

"Who would've thought that a mere ruler of a kingdom would have a Saint-level barrier enchantment!" Linley was still unable to accept it.

He really just couldn't.

The temperature of these winter nights was now extremely cold. There were very few people on the streets of Fenlai City. A black Shadowmouse was standing in a corner of an intersection, staring up at the tall and far-off Radiant Temple. The little Shadowmouse just stood there and stared, not moving at all.

That entire night, the little Shadowmouse remained there staring, even after the sun began to rise.

He didn't dare to enter the Radiant Temple, because he knew very well that the Radiant Temple was a place where even Saint-level combatants feared to tread. He, a rat-type magical beast, wouldn't be able to escape. If in the end he was captured as well, Linley would only be even more heartbroken.

It was day now.

"Boss, I will definitely avenge you." Bebe glanced at the Radiant Temple one final time, then with a flicker, disappeared.

Over the entire past twenty days, the Shadowmouse, Bebe, had been thinking about how to avenge Linley. But he discovered that Clayde was now as cautious as a bird which had been frightened by the twang of a bow. Not only did he order magi to lay multiple magical formations around him, he also ordered Kaiser to constantly remain by his side. The little Shadowmouse didn't have any chance to ambush him at all.

However, Bebe was very patient.

He would wait, continue to wait patiently. He would wait for the day when Clayde let down his guard, and then suddenly appear and chew Clayde into a meaty paste, avenging Linley.

Midnight, December 28th.

"Clank!"

The door to Linley's holding cell swung open, and two Vicars stepped in. They didn't seem as cold and sinister as the Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, and they even brought a gurney. Very carefully, they placed Linley on top of the gurney, and then lifted the gurney with Linley on top of it.

"What are you doing?" Linley coldly looked at the two Vicars.

Recollecting how Linley had slaughtered people in the past, the two Vicars felt some fear in their hearts towards him.

"Lord Linley, the Holy Emperor is preparing to treat your injuries." A female Vicar said in a soft voice.

"Treat my injuries?"

Linley's heart stirred. "Can it be that the Holy Emperor really is going to let me live?" Linley didn't say anything else, maintaining his silence. He allowed the two Vicars to carry him further upstairs into the top of the Radiant Temple. One floor after another...

Finally, the two Vicars carrying Linley arrived at the top floor of the Radiant Temple. Currently, this floor was very empty. In the middle of the room, there was a very complicated-looking octagram magical formation. In each of the eight corners of the octagram, there sat quiet, barefoot Ascetics with disheveled hair and sackcloth clothes. In the very center of the octagram stood the Holy Emperor Heidens, who was wearing an ornate white robe.

At the edges of this top floor, there were three Cardinals, and two Deputy Arbiters along with six Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal. All of these people were combatants of the ninth rank. One could tell how powerful the Radiant Church was, for it to be able to summon so many combatants of the ninth rank.

"Put him down. You can leave now." Guillermo spoke.

"Yes." The two Vicars didn't even dare to breathe loudly. Right now, within this very room, there were astonishingly powerful Ascetics, mysterious Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, three Cardinals, and two Deputy Arbiters.

These were all important, major figures.

After putting down Linley, the two Vicars hurriedly, respectfully departed, and the door once more was shut behind them.

Lying on the gurney, Linley swept the people present with his gaze. Linley could easily tell that every single person here possessed incredible, astonishing power, all at least of the ninth rank or higher. "Your Holiness, what are you intending?" Linley said in a hoarse voice.

Heidens glanced at Linley. Laughing calmly, he said, "Linley, although this time you committed a major offence, after the internal deliberations of the Church, we have decided to give you another chance. Right now, we are preparing to execute a joint spell and use it to help you heal your wounds in the best possible way."

If Linley had any experience whatsoever with light-style magic, he would've quickly seen the gaps in Heidens claims.

"Grandpa Doebling, it seems like the Radiant Temple is planning something major." Linley was conversing mentally with Doebling Cowart.

"What's going on outside?" Doebling Cowart very prudently didn't appear, not daring to reveal even a hint of his spiritual power.

Heidens was a peak-stage Saint-level combatant. If Doebling Cowart left the Coiling Dragon ring, the Holy Emperor would definitely discover him.

"There's around twenty or so people outside, and even the weakest is at least of the ninth rank. There are eight Ascetics and the Holy Emperor standing in an octagram magical formation." Linley reported.

Doebling Cowart had far more experience than Linley. "Linley, if they just wanted you to fully recover, a single Saint-level combatant using the Lifelight spell would be enough to fully heal you. There's no need for them to do all of this. I think they must be planning to summon the divine energy of a Sovereign of Light. Otherwise, there'd be no need for them to cause such a commotion."

There was more than one Sovereign of Light.

The Radiant Sovereign, however, was the most powerful one of them.

"Summoning the power of a Sovereign?" Linley was greatly shocked. "They intend to use the power of a Sovereign against me? What are they intending?"

"I'm not sure either."

In Doehring Cowart's era, both the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows were fairly small and weak. There nothing more than two religions amongst many in the Pouant Empire. Back then, the Radiant Church also had very few experts, and couldn't possibly produce as many as they did today.

"Your Holiness. It is time." Guillermo said respectfully.

Heidens raised his head upwards, looking at the sky, then nodded.

"Let us begin." Heidens said calmly.

A white light immediately began to emanate from the bodies of those eight Ascetics seated within the corners of the octagram, causing an extremely dense wave of light-style mageforce to flow into the center of the magical formation. The entire magical formation immediately grew bright. In front of Heidens, a golden holy scripture suddenly appeared, while Heidens himself slowly began to radiate a golden light.

Heidens opened the scripture to its first page.

"Lord, it is you who grant us everything." Heidens said softly, but his voice rang out in the hearts of everyone present like a thunderclap. At the same time, the glow from the holy scripture brightened dramatically, and the amount of holy white light in the magical formation increased dramatically as well.

Two lines of light intersected.

"Crackle, crackle."

A perfectly straight line of light shot upwards, piercing into and through the very tip of the Radiant Church, then continuing upwards into the dark night. Anyone in Fenlai City would be able to clearly see this holy white light, entwined with a golden light, penetrate into and past the clouds.

Within the top floor of the Radiant Temple.

Heidens suddenly turned to look at Linley. Linley felt as though an extremely dense power was lifting him up, causing him to slowly rise into the air. Linley floated over to the middle of the magical formation, directly above Heidens' head.

"Lord, you take pity on and love the people of this world, and in turn, we must put our faith in you."

Heidens raised his head, an incomparably holy radiance emanating from his face.

"Rumble."

The air above the Radiant Temple began to tremble. A cloud of white light began to gather in the air above the Radiant Temple, covering an extremely large expanse of space. Many of the people in Fenlai City noticed it.

"If one betrays you, Lord, then you shall take everything from them. But those who place their faith in you, Lord, shall receive your benevolence and your love." Heidens flipped to the next page in the holy scripture. "Boom!"

The world shook. In the air above the Radiant Temple, the darkness of the night had been shattered by that exceedingly bright cloud of light. In the middle of the cloud of bright light, a single crack appeared in space, and a line of white light shot down from the crack at high speed.

"Swish!"

That line of white light carried with it a majestic presence which filled everyone's hearts with awe. It pierced straight through the tip of the Radiant Chapel before finally landing on Linley, who was hovering in the air above the magical formation.

Within the top floor of the Radiant Chapel.

Heidens, the eight Ascetics, the three Cardinals, the two Deputy Arbiters, and the six special Executors all raised their heads, looking at Linley. The majestic power that line of white light embodied filled even the heart of Heidens with awe and worship.

Although it was just a hint of divine power, this power came directly from the Radiant Sovereign himself.

The white light penetrated Linley's body, and Linley's entire body immediately began to emanate that white light as well. At the same time, Linley's body began to heal at an astonishing speed. In the blink of an eye, Linley's shattered bones and wounds were all healed, and his physical condition was restored to a better than ever condition.

"Ah!"

Linley's soul moaned. When that ray of white light had entered Linley's body, the healing effects had only been a side effect. The primary target of this ray of white light was Linley's soul. Clearly, this ray of white light wished to sink into and merge with Linley's soul.

Once this divine power merged with Linley's soul, then Linley would never again be able to shake off the control of the Radiant Sovereign, and would forever be his loyal vassal.

But just as this was happening....

An incomparably powerful force surged forth from the Coiling Dragon ring on Linley's finger. Passing through Linley's body, it rushed straight to Linley's brain. That terrifyingly powerful force surrounded the divine power in Linley's body and rapidly began to devour and dispel it.

And then, that burst of unimaginable power once more travelled through Linley's body and re-entered the Coiling Dragon ring.

"Grandpa Doehring, what is going on?" Linley said frantically.

"No idea. That force belonged to the Coiling Dragon ring itself. That force was terrifyingly powerful. It was terrifying...terrifying... terrifyingly powerful." Doehring Cowart was so shocked and nervous that he repeated the word 'terrifying' three times.

Doehring Cowart had been in possession of the Coiling Dragon ring five thousand years ago, but he had never had any inkling that such an unsurpassable power lay dormant within the ring.

Doehring Cowart was absolutely certain that if that power had been used to attack someone, even ten peak-stage Saint-level combatants would've been reduced to dust in the blink of an eye.

"Where did this burst of power come from, and what was it? Even I, the owner and master of this Coiling Dragon ring, was unable to sense it, much less control it." Linley knew very well that this power was not so easily used. In the past, Doehring Cowart had worn and used this ring for over a thousand years when he was alive, but had never used or discovered this burst of power.

While this was occurring....

All of the people in the top floor of the Radiant Temple were astonished. The Holy Emperor Heidens, the eight Ascetics, the three Cardinals, the two Deputy Arbiters, and the six Executors all stared in disbelief. They could tell that Linley's body didn't show a single hint of having received the Divine Baptism. There wasn't even a Radiant Seal on his forehead.

"How is this possible? It failed?" Heidens stared at Linley, stunned.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 3, Would Definitely Die?

All of the powerful people in the highest floor of the Radiant Temple were stunned. Linley's soul was a huge distance away from the level of crystallizing. He was nothing more than a magus of the seventh rank. Even an Arch Magus of the ninth rank wouldn't be able to resist the Divine Baptism of the Radiant Sovereign.

"How is this possible?" The Ascetics, Executors, and Deputy Arbiters all began to mumble amongst themselves, unable to believe what they had just seen.

"It actually failed. The divine boon actually failed to successfully create a new Blessed One. Then...how should we deal with this Linley?" Heidens stared at Linley, suspended in mid-air. "An absolute genius such as him will definitely be a peak-stage Saint-level combatant within a hundred years. He might even become more powerful than me. By that time, the glory of our Radiant Church will be able to spread across an even wider territory."

Heidens really couldn't bear to just kill Linley.

"Your Holiness?" Guillermo called out softly.

Heidens's lost, confused gaze suddenly sharpened. He had made his decision.

"Your Holiness, Linley hasn't become a Blessed One. Then we...?"

Guillermo asked.

Heidens looked at Linley. Under his control, Linley's body slowly drifted down to the floor. At this point in time, Linley pushed himself to a standing position with his hands. Right now, Linley's body was totally uninjured. It must be said that receiving a divine boon had its benefits.

Linley looked at the mighty people surrounding him.

"These people are all combatants of the ninth rank at least. If I were to struggle against them, I wouldn't have any chance at all." Linley coldly stared at Heidens and the others. "Your Holiness, what exactly are you intending to do with me?"

Suddenly, a smile appeared on Heidens face. "No need to ask too much. Executors, return Linley to his private room." "Yes, Your Holiness." Those six special Executors nodded.

Without giving Linley any chance to react, they immediately headed towards Linley, as one of them barked out, "Move! Or do you want us to drag you?"

They were forcing him by their actions. Linley had no options.

"Fine." Linley opened the door and began to walk downwards. Those six Executors followed directly behind Linley. As Linley went down the stairs one level at a time, he saw that all of the guards, upon seeing those six Executors, were all extremely respectful.

Those six special Executors all wore bluish-violet robes. Those icy eyes of theirs stared at Linley, making him feel as though...if he acted untowardly in any way at all, they would immediately kill him.

After the six Executors had escorted Linley away, the female Cardinal, Melina, asked, "Your Holiness, that Linley didn't become a Blessed One. Although we don't know the reason why not, the decision we must come to right now is, what should we do with Linley?"

Guillermo and the others all looked at Heidens.

Linley was a genius. They all knew this. But Linley hadn't become a Blessed One, and his mother had been killed by the Radiant Church. The Church had to come to a decision: Would they accept the risk of recruiting Linley and hide the truth behind the death of his mother? Or would Linley be put to death?

Although it would be possible to hide the truth behind his mother's death for a time, once Linley entered the highest ranks of the Radiant Church, it would most likely be impossible to hide it any longer.

Heidens' face was cold. In a cold voice, he said, "Kill."

Guillermo and the others felt their hearts quiver.

"In a few more days, it will be the 10000 year anniversary of the Yulan Festival. Let's arrange for Linley's execution to be after the festival." Heidens announced.

Guillermo, who had the closest relationship with Linley, sighed in his heart.

A genius who would have dominated the entire continent would now see his fate cut short. Guillermo knew very well that with Linley imprisoned in the Radiant Temple, there was no way Linley would be able to escape. Linley wouldn't even be able to leave his cell.

"That Cesar has some sort of a relationship with Linley, but even Cesar doesn't have the ability to break into the Radiant Temple to rescue Linley." Guillermo sighed secretly.

Linley would definitely die!

On the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple, within the private cell.

"Get in."

Linley entered the cell, and the six Executors closed the door behind him.

As the six Executors turned and immediately left, one of them, a silver-haired man, turned to look at Linley. "Kid, let me give you a reminder. Although you have recovered your strength, don't dream about breaking out of this cell."

The other five Executors halted as well, and a bald old Executor laughed, "Break out of the cell? Kid, if you are able to break out of this cell, that would mean your power is on the level of his Holiness himself."

“What do you mean?” Linley asked.

Linley himself couldn't see anything special about this cell. Given his power as a warrior of the ninth rank when Dragonformed, an ordinary stone cell would be shattered as easily as paper.

“The Radiant Temple is the most incredible edifice the Radiant Church possesses. The entire Temple itself hides a massive magical formation within it known as the Glory of the Radiant Sovereign. It's impossible for you to do the slightest bit of damage to it, whether from the inside or from the outside.” That silver-haired man said proudly. “Kid, let me tell you, the only chance you have of breaking out from this cell is by breaking the lock on the cell door. I can also tell you that the lock is made from metals that were alloyed with some adamantine.”

Finished speaking, the six Executors laughed loudly amongst each other, then left.

Linley was silent.

When he heard the words, 'adamantine', Linley understood that it was probably impossible for him to break out. According to legend, when the earth-style spell Earthguard reached the Deity level, the Earthguard armor would be composed of adamantine. Its power and durability was enough to be able to withstand several blows of even a Deity-level combatant. As for a Saint-level combatant, there was no way at all for them to break it.

Linley was an earth-style magus, and so naturally he knew about the legends regarding the Earthguard armor at its peak power.

Upon becoming a Saint-level Grand Magus, the Earthguard armor would be composed of diamonds, and upon breaking through to the Deity-level, the armor would be of adamantine.

“Linley, I expect that this cell is used for the Radiant Church to imprison combatants of the ninth rank, or perhaps even the Saint-level.” Doehring Cowart spoke. “Although this lock only has a trace amount of adamantine and isn’t pure adamantine, it would probably be hard for even a Saint-level combatant to break it.”

Linley nodded.

From the words of the Executors, he had already figured out that he would not be able to break out, as they had said that breaking out would demonstrate Linley’s power was at least on par with the Holy Emperor.

That next afternoon.

Monroe Dawson, Yale, Reynolds, and George were all seated together around a table covered with breakfast items. During this period of time, Yale, Reynold, and George had never stopped being worried about Linley. But even Monroe Dawson making a personal appeal had failed. What could they possibly do?

Break into the Radiant Temple to rescue Linley? Even Monroe Dawson wouldn’t dare to do such a thing.

"Yale, in two days, it'll be the Yulan Festival. This Yulan Festival will be the 10000th Yulan Festival, which we'll only see once in our lives. You three kids can have a nice, rowdy time." Monroe Dawson chortled.

Monroe Dawson had treated these two dear bros of his son Yale with the utmost friendliness.

This was because all three of Yale's bros were quite out of the ordinary. Linley, George, and Reynolds. Reynolds' clan possessed an astonishing amount of power in the O'Brien Empire's military. George's clan held tremendous influence within the Yulan Empire, and wasn't much weaker than the Leon clan.

As for Linley, although his clan was now weak, it was still the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. And Linley's own potential was limitless.

Suddenly, the sound of footsteps.

"Milord Chairman, an emissary of the Radiant Church have arrived." A servant said respectfully.

Hearing the words "Radiant Church", the eyes of Yale, George, and Reynolds all lit up, and they turned to look at the servant. Monroe Dawson knew what his son was thinking, and he immediately instructed with a laugh, "Let them in."

"Yes."

A short while later, a Vicar walked in. He said respectfully, "Chairman Dawson. His Holiness instructed me to deliver this letter to you." As he spoke, he withdrew from within his clothes a beautifully, lavishly decorated letter.

The servant immediately accepted the letter, then gave it to Monroe Dawson.

Monroe Dawson immediately opened the letter. But upon seeing the contents of the letter, his face changed. He said coldly, "You can leave now."

That Vicar bowed slightly, then left.

"Father. What is in the letter?" Yale asked urgently. "Does it have to do with Third Bro?" Reynolds and George all looked hopefully at Monroe Dawson.

Monroe Dawson nodded.

"The Holy Emperor informs me that the internal deliberations of the Radiant Church have concluded. They will execute Linley in secret." Monroe Dawson's words were like thunder, ringing in the ears of Yale, Reynolds, and George, whose faces immediately turned white. They were stunned for a long moment.

"No, no way."

Yale was the first to begin shouting. He snatched the letter from his father's hands, and with shaking hands held it as he began to read. By his side, Reynolds and George both craned their necks to take a look as well. But when the three of them saw the contents, they all turned frantic with fear.

"No!!!"

Yale leapt out of his seat, intending to rush directly out of the hall. "Yale!" Monroe Dawson frowned, shouting coldly.

"Stop him." Monroe Dawson ordered.

Yale turned his head to stare at his father. Frantic, he said, "Father, I beg you, lead some men to rescue Third Bro. If necessary, the Conglomerate can give up something valuable. I refuse to believe that the Radiant Church won't care whatsoever about our Conglomerate. Father, I beg you."

"Hmph, what do you know? If there really were terms that could be negotiated, the Holy Emperor would've started negotiating with me long ago. The grievance which Linley has with the Radiant Church clearly isn't what we thought it was. Otherwise, the Radiant Church wouldn't decide to execute a genius like him. Enough. Men, escort your young master to his room. Let him spend a good period of time calming down."

Immediately, the guards escorted Yale back to his room. No matter how frantically or how angrily Yale protested, it was of no use.

Reynolds and George could only maintain their silence.

They didn't have any special relationship with Monroe Dawson, after all. But in their hearts, they were frantic on Linley's behalf.

A visitor had arrived at Linley's cell. It was Guillermo.

"Guillermo." Linley looked at Guillermo with some surprise.

Guillermo had brought with him an extremely lavish meal, and delivered it through the small opening in the cell door.

Guillermo looked at Linley. He let out a sigh. "Linley, I really viewed you very favorably. But...alas. Perhaps it was meant to be, that you couldn't become a member of our Radiant Church. Alright, have a good meal. You won't have many meals left."

Hearing these words, Linley was stunned.

"Lord Guillermo, what do you mean by saying this?" Linley looked at Guillermo.

Guillermo let out a sigh. "In two days, which is to say, January 2nd, the last day of your existence will arrive." Guillermo really did like this young man, Linley. Especially after finding out the reason why Linley attempted to assassinate Clayde, Guillermo felt all the more regretful for how Linley's fate had turned out.

He could've had a glorious future, but for the sake of his parents' deaths, he was willing to forsake everything in order to gain revenge.

Although he, Guillermo, would never have acted in such a way, in his heart, he still felt admiration for Linley.

"January 2nd?"

Linley's facial expressions changed several times, but finally he closed his eyes. He already completely understood. Clearly, in two days, he would be put to death.

"Thank you, Lord Guillermo. If it wasn't for you, I would've clung to the hope of surviving." Linley laughed calmly.

Guillermo looked at Linley. With a low sigh, he shook his head, then turned his head, leaving Linley alone in his cell.

"January 2nd. They had to wait until after the Yulan Festival to kill me, eh? Tomorrow will be the Yulan Festival. I believe it will also be the day of Kalan and Alice's marriage as well, right?" Knowing that he was about to die, Linley somehow felt calmer and more at peace than he ever had before.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 4, A Giant Foot

The night between year 9999 and year 10000. The snow flew about as the temperature in Fenlai City dropped to an astonishing low. Within a cold cell in the Radiant Temple, Linley was resting against one of the icy stone walls of the cell.

Linley didn't notice the cold at all.

"I know that I am about to be put to death, but I don't have any ability to resist at all." Linley lowered his head, sighing softly.

He had made attempts, had tried.

But this cell was exactly as the Executor had described. It possessed incredible endurance, and even in Dragonform Linley was not able to break the lock or the room in the slightest. All he could do was quietly wait for the sentence which was soon to be carried out.

The dark night went by quickly, and that great blizzard finally came to an end as well. Both the nobles as well as the commoners were celebrating, in their own ways, the arrival of this 10000th Yulan Festival on this glorious, cloudless day. In particular, the Radiant Temple.

On this day, in the air above the Radiant Temple, countless beautiful mirages and illusions created by magical formations were on display.

In the Holy Capital, Fenlai City, today was a day for a sea of celebrations. That massive plaza in front of the Radiant Temple was filled to the brim with people who hailed from all sorts of places. Everyone was calling out in excitement to each other over this 10000th Yulan Festival, and the Radiant Temple organized many lively activities as well.

Yale, Reynolds, and George were within the third floor of a hotel. They stared at the far-away Radiant Temple Plaza. The plaza was covered densely by people, a veritable sea of people.

"Boss Yale, are we going to go to the wedding ceremony of the Debs clan today?" George asked.

The wedding of Kalan of the Debs clan was on Yulan Day. Today was an extremely propitious day, and there were many families in Fenlai City holding wedding ceremonies on this day. These sorts of weddings would start at noon, and continue until nightfall.

"Yes. Of course." Yale had an ugly look on his face.

Due to Linley's affairs, Yale, George, and Reynolds were all in low spirits.

"Hmph, Third Bro was too soft-hearted towards this bitch and that punk Kalan. But now, Third Bro is going to be executed, while that bitch and that punk Kalan are going to be enjoying themselves and hold a wedding ceremony." Yale was burning with rage.

He had never looked kindly upon Alice and Kalan.

Especially right now, with Linley on the verge of being executed, and himself unable to save him. He had no place to vent his frustrations and anxiety. This only made him now view Alice and Kalan even more unfavorably.

“Right. They want their wedding to go smoothly? In their dreams!” Reynolds ground his teeth as well.

Even George felt a desire to wreck this wedding.

Yale, George, and Reynolds had all been consumed by worry for Linley for days now. Knowing that Linley was about to die, but not having the ability to rescue him, they couldn't help but think back to all the years they had spent together growing up. They hated themselves all the more for not having the power to save him.

And right at this time, Alice, who had discarded Linley, was now going to get married to Kalan.

How could these three just let it slide?

On Greenleaf Road, the Deb's clan's manor.

At noon, one noble or magnate after another arrived at the Debs clan's manor. Although after the smuggling case, the Debs clan was no longer one of the topmost clans of the Kingdom of Fenlai, they were still a clan with some influence. At least, in the Kingdom of Fenlai, they could still be ranked amongst the top twenty. “Lord Count Juneau has arrived!”

"Lord Baron Prey [Pu'lei] has arrived!"

Nobles, noble ladies, affluent girls, all entered the manor of the Debs clan. The leader of the Debs clan, Bernard, welcomed them all in a very friendly manner. The Debs clan's power had shrunk dramatically, but within the Kingdom of Fenlai, they were still able to remain standing on fairly stable footing.

"Lord Duke Bonalt has arrived!"

Hearing the words 'Duke Bonalt', many nobles turned to look at the door. Even Bernard immediately hurried over to welcome him. Right now, the highest ranking person attending this wedding ceremony would be Duke Bonalt. Last time, at the engagement ceremony, even King Clayde, the ruler of Fenlai, had come. But this time, for the wedding proper, his Majesty did not come.

Everyone knew the reason why.

"Lord Duke, your attendance brings great honor and joy to our Debs clan." Bernard said humbly.

Duke Bonalt nodded.

After the assassination attempt at Linley's manor, the Right Premier Merritt had died. Although Clayde had promoted another important minister to the rank of Right Premier, in terms of influence, there was no way he could compare for now with Merritt, who had been Right Premier for decades.

What's more, the Minister of Finance, Patterson, was also dead. Right now, in the entire Kingdom of Fenlai, perhaps the most powerful, influential figure aside from the ruler was this Left Premier, Duke Bonalt.

"Kalan, come and pay your respects to Duke Bonalt." Bernard immediately called out.

Kalan was dressed very handsomely today. The pure black tailored suit he was wearing made him the most outstanding-looking young man present today. Kalan very modestly bowed in front of Duke Bonalt. "Duke Bonalt, welcome to my wedding."

"Congratulations, Kalan." Duke Bonalt said with a casual laugh. But just at this moment...

"Young master Yale of the Dawson Conglomerate has arrived!"

When these words rang out, Bernard's eyes immediately lit up, and even Duke Bonalt headed over alongside him. These other nobles of Fenlai naturally couldn't compete with the Dawson Conglomerate. The Dawson clan of the Dawson Conglomerate was one of the most powerful clans within the entire Yulan continent.

Yale, dressed in a sleek black suit.

Reynolds, dressed in a handsome blue suit.

George, dressed in a faintly checkered white suit.

The three walked in, shoulder by shoulder, causing all the watching nobles to stare at them with bright eyes. Generally speaking, magi would have a certain aura about them. This was because magi often entered the meditative state, resulting them being very much in sync with natural elemental essence. That, combined with their powerful spiritual energy, gave them a certain aura.

In addition, Yale, George, and Reynolds all belonged to ancient clans. Clearly, their refinement and aura could not be matched by the likes of most nobles in Fenlai.

"Young master Yale, welcome! And these two are?" Bernard could tell at a single glance that these two definitely weren't from any ordinary clans either.

Yale laughed calmly. "These two are my two dear bros from the Ernst Institute."

Reynolds courteously said, "Mr. Bernard, I am from the Dunstan [Deng'si'tan] clan of the O'Brien Empire. You can address me as Reynolds."

"The Dunstan clan?"

Both Bernard and Duke Bonalt were startled. Everyone present with some experience knew of the fame of the Dunstan clan. The Dunstan clan was an extremely powerful clan within the O'Brien Empire, a clan which controlled an exceedingly powerful military force.

"Young master Reynolds, our Debs clan warmly welcomes your arrival!" Bernard said excitedly.

The arrival of a young master from the Dunstan clan naturally gained a great deal of face to Bernard. Nearby, Kalan also bowed very courteously. But it was clear that the difference between him and a descendant of one of the great clans was extremely large.

"And this?" Bernard looked towards George.

George smiled. "Mr. Bernard, I come from the Walsh [Hua'shi] clan of the Yulan Empire."

"The Walsh clan?" The hearts of all the nearby nobles thumped hard. The Walsh clan was an ancient clan with thousands of years of history. In the Yulan Empire, they possessed tremendous influence, and was pretty much on the same level as the Leon clan of Dixie and Delia.

"Young master George, your arrival today brings exceptional honor to our Debs clan." Bernard was extremely humble.

Both the Walsh clan and the Dunstan clan were extremely powerful clans from the Four Great Empires. They were clans which could influence the internal strategies of their respective empires. Even before the fall, the Debs clan couldn't compare with the likes of these clans, much less the current Debs clan.

The wedding ceremony of the Debs clan was a very lively affair. Many nobles as well as many young noble ladies wanted to strike up conversations with Yale, George, and Reynolds. In the eyes of those young noble ladies, even if they abandoned the thoughts of becoming a principal wife, if they could become even just a secondary wife to one of those three, their clans would receive countless benefits.

As for the original center of attention, Kalan, much less attention was now paid to him.

But there were three people whose attentions were focused on him. Yale, Reynolds, and George.

"Look. Miss Alice and Miss Rowling have arrived." Suddenly, a voice rang out in the hall. Right now, the two female leads had appeared, dressed in beautiful wedding gowns. They entered from a side door, and Kalan immediately went to go welcome them. Very naturally, both Alice and Rowling slipped their arms around Kalan's.

At this time, Yale, Reynolds, and George finally acted.

"Haha, Kalan, these two must be your wives, right? They really are beautiful!" Reynolds was the first to laugh and walk over.

Seeing them walk over, Kalan immediately headed towards them with his two wives. "Rowling, Alice, pay your respects to these three young masters. This is young master Reynolds of the Dunstan clan, and this is..." But halfway through his words, George let out a cry of surprise, shouting out loudly, "Alice?! You're getting married to this Kalan?"

George's shout was very loud. These words caused the entire hall to fall silent.

To say something like this at someone's wedding ceremony was far too impolite.

"Right, Alice, aren't you dating our Third Bro?" Reynolds added.

It was Yale's turn to speak. "Second Bro, Fourth Bro, you two didn't know this, but this Alice has already broken up with Third Bro. She's going to get married with this Kalan now."

"She broke up with Third Bro?"

George and Reynolds both shook their heads, sighing.

Reynolds then immediately said, "Alice, since you abandoned our Third Bro to be together with this Kalan fellow, then you definitely will be his principal wife, right?" "Actually, no. The principal wife is this Miss Rowling. This was already proclaimed at the engagement ceremony." Yale immediately said.

These two sentences made Alice's face turn scarlet, while the look on Kalan's face was extremely awkward as well. But not a single person in the entire hall dared to berate Yale, Reynolds, or George for their discourtesy. Given their statuses, who would dare?

"Three young masters, we have to toast our guests. Please excuse us." Kalan forcibly suppressed the rage in his heart and spoke modestly.

"Alright." Reynolds nodded as well.

Kalan immediately led Rowling and Alice towards other tables. Yale, George, and Reynolds only coldly watched him depart. Thinking about how Linley was probably going to be executed soon, their hearts were filled with even more rage at the injustice of it all.

Suddenly...

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

A terrifying series of sounds could be heard from outside. It was a low, somber sound that made the earth tremble with each vibration, and all of the utensils in the hall were knocked to the floor.

"What's going on outside?" A nobleman in the hall stood up in surprise.

"Rowling, Alice, stay put." Kalan immediately ran out of the main hall with his father, and many other nobles ran out as well. They wanted to see what exactly was going on outside, for such a huge ruckus to be caused.

Reynolds, Yale, and George also headed outside, curious.

But right at this moment...

"BAM!"

A giant foot suddenly descended from the heavens, landing directly in the front courtyard of the Debs clan's manor. That giant foot just happened to land directly on Kalan and Bernard, who had just entered the front courtyard. The sound of bone splintering could be heard as the two of them, father and son, were immediately smashed into a meaty paste. The ground was stained with their blood.

That foot was over four meters long, and was covered with thick golden fur.

"Ah!" Many people raised their heads to stare at the monster.

This was an enormous golden-furred ape, at least twenty or thirty meters tall, the size of an eight-floor tall building. This gigantic golden ape's eyes were like a pair of giant purple carriage wheels. The giant golden ape's body seemed to be brimming with power, causing the very air around it to shudder.

"Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape! A Saint-level magical beast, the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape!" Seeing this magical beast, Yale couldn't help but stare at it, his jaw slack.

That Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape raised its head, letting out an excited howl, and spoke in the human tongue, "Haha, kill, haha, kill them for me! Kill them all! The more you kill, the greater the rewards the King will give you! Haha, kill!"

"Bam." "Screech!"

Yale, George, and Reynolds could suddenly hear the howls and cries of magical beasts from all directions, as though the entire world had suddenly been filled with them. Suddenly, Yale, George, and Reynolds saw that the entire sky had been filled with countless, innumerable flying magical beasts!

“Dragonhawks! These are Dragonhawks! This...” Reynolds was stunned and slackjawed as well.

From far away, an enormous flock of Dragonhawks had appeared, covering the entire sky with their presences. The density of Dragonhawks was so high that there was no way to count their number.

Suddenly, everyone felt as though the day of the apocalypse had descended upon them. Right now, no one could be bothered to grieve or feel pity for Kalan and Bernard, who had been crushed to a pulp by that giant foot of the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 5, Apocalypse Day

“What on earth is going on?”

Yale, Reynolds, and George were all stunned. Just moments ago, they were participating in a wedding banquet, but then all of a sudden, a giant Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape had dropped out of the skies, apparently with a huge host of magical beasts behind him. That incredibly supermassive flock of Dragonhawks in the sky was terrifying to behold.

Not only were the three bros stunned; all of the people within the city of Fenlai were stunned.

“Get out, now!” Yale immediately shouted.

Yale, George, and Reynolds hurriedly fled from the Debs clan’s manor. Fortunately, the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape didn’t pay any attention to the three of them, because there were simply too many people running about in Fenlai City. Someone worthy of the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape noticing would have to be at least a combatant of the ninth rank or a Saint-level combatant.

“Young master.” The vast majority of the guards of the Dawson Conglomerate had undergone training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and so were able to maintain their calm despite seeing that vast number of magical beasts descend upon them.

“Quick, to my father!”

Yale immediately shouted.

Escorted by the Dawson Conglomerate bodyguards, Yale, Reynolds, and George quickly rushed back to the Dawson Conglomerate's headquarters. On the way back, Yale noticed that there were a huge number of flying magical beasts already within the city of Fenlai. Not only were there Dragonhawks, there were also Winged Pegasi.

There were also magical beasts of the seventh rank such as Thunderwing Pegasi and Blue-eyed Thunderhawks, and magical beasts of the eighth rank such as Golden Sunhawks as well as various giant dragons.

Both the skies and the streets of Fenlai City were covered with massive magical beasts. The apocalypse had descended onto Fenlai City, and there was no way to fend it off. Even the weakest of the giant flying dragons was a magical beast of the eighth rank. Over a hundred giant flying dragons had come to attack. Who could stop them?

Even the Eight Ace Regiments of the Radiant Temple would see their numbers cut in half from a single combined fiery blast from those hundred plus dragons.

"Apocalypse. Apocalypse!"

The entire Fenlai City had already sunken into a mass of fires and floods. But the dwellers of Fenlai City didn't know that these magical beasts made up only a fraction of the total number coming...because the magical beasts on the ground far outnumbered the flying beasts. But in terms of speed, of course the flying magical beasts were much faster and had arrived first.

Thus, the flying magical beasts had led the attack as the vanguard.

....

The soldiers standing on the walls of Fenlai City were all stunned. This was the 10000th anniversary of the Yulan Festival. Just earlier, during lunch, they had all celebrated by drinking alcohol, but now, all they could see were endless numbers of magical beasts. And in front of them...

"Magical beasts. So many. So many." Those soldiers were all speechless.

The earth was shaking. Outside the city of Fenlai, an army of hundreds of thousands of Windwolves were charging towards the city at high speed. Just the very sight of those hundreds of thousands of Windwolves charging at them in masse was enough to freeze the blood of the watchers.

"Where are the magi?! Magi!"

"Magicannons! Load the magicannons!"

The army officers all began shouting loudly, trying to do their best to get their soldiers ready. In reality, they also knew that struggling was hopeless, because a huge number of winged magical beasts had already descended within the heart of Fenlai City.

"Captain, what is that?" Suddenly, a soldier stared speechlessly at the skies.

The captain looked in that direction as well, and saw that up in the air, there was an enormous magical beast that was speeding towards them. This magical beast had no wings at all, but it sliced through the air as it flew towards them at astonishing speed.

"Flying in the air. This is...this is a Saint-level magical beast. A Saint-level magical beast!"

That captain now understood that there really was no chance at all.

"Groaaaaaaaaaaaaaawr!"

At the same time, far away from Fenlai City, a terrifying roar could be heard. A huge form passed through the horde of Windwolves at high speed, moving so fast that it was at least ten times speedier than the Windwolves. It probably wasn't much slower than the Saint-level beast flying in the air.

This was an enormous beast, at least thirty meters tall. Physically, it looked exactly like an enormous lion, except its eyes were bloody red!

A magus on the walls of Fenlai City screamed, "Saint-level magical beast, Bloody-eyed Maned Lion! Heavens, another Saint-level magical beast! It's a Bloody-eyed Maned Lion! Amongst behemoth-type monsters, only the Golden Behemoth is a match for it!"

Everyone was stunned.

There was no way they could match it in power.

“Haha! Bloody, why are you, a Saint-level magical beast, running on the ground?” The giant beast flying in the air spoke with words that sounded like booming thunder.

Quite a few soldiers below raised their heads to look up.

“It’s speaking in human tongues! So it’s true that Saint-level magical beasts can speak in human tongues!” This was the first time anyone present had ever personally encountered a Saint-level magical beast, much less two of them! By now, they could tell what the magical beast in the air looked like.

The body of Saint-level magical beast above was obsidian black, and it looked like a dragon, but without wings.

“Saint-level magical beast, Tyrant Wyrms! A hegemon amongst dragons!” Another magus cried out in terror.

Dragons were primarily divided into two types. The first type was the winged dragons, such as the eighth-ranked Emerald Dragons and Fire Dragons, or the ninth-ranked Silver Dragons, Black Dragons, and Frost Dragons, or the Saint-level Gold Dragons, Prismatic Dragons, and Bloodgem Dragons.

The other type was the wingless dragons, such as the seventh-ranked Velocidragons, the ninth ranked Armored Razorback Wyrms and Stegowyrms, or the Saint-level Thunder Lizards, Tyrant Wyrms, and Triceratops Wyrms.

The main difference between winged dragons and wingless dragons lay in the power of their bodies.

The wingless dragons possessed immense power within their bodies. The Armored Razorback Wyrms, the Stegowyrms, the Thunder Lizards, and the Tyrant Wyrms all possessed incredibly durable bodies that were somewhat stronger than winged dragons of the same rank.

"Hmph, enough chitchat. Let's compete and see who can kill the most." The Bloody-eyed Maned Lion's terrible voice growled out, shaking the earth with its echoes.

"Fine!" The Tyrant Wurm roared in response.

Instantly, that enormous, hundred-meter plus body of the Tyrant Wurm descended from the heavens, aiming directly at the city walls. The walls of Fenlai City were extremely sturdy, and were covered with countless powerful magical formations. But because there were too many flying magical beasts present, there was no way to activate the magical barriers without interference.

"Do you think you can run faster than me?" The Bloody-eyed Maned Lion roared angrily as well, increase its speed still further.

These two terrifying massive beasts charged towards the city, one from the air, another from the ground. The walls protecting Fenlai City were over ten meters thick. Walls that thick were definitely capable of defending against enemy armies, but facing two such terrifying magical beasts...

After all, Tyrant Wyrms and Bloody-eyed Maned Lions could only be matched by peak-stage Saint-level human combatants!

"Bam!"

At virtually the exact same instant, the Tyrant Worm and the Bloody-eyed Maned Lion slammed into the wall. Under the attack of these two Saint-level massive magical beasts, the ten-meter thick wall was only able to serve as a slight, momentary impediment. And then, in the next heartbeat, the section of the walls blocking them collapsed entirely.

"Boom!"

Those two parts of the wall exploded, sending rubble flying everywhere. The rubble alone killed many people.

"Growwwwwwwr!"

The Bloody-eyed Maned Lion and the Tyrant Wurm excitedly charged towards the heart of Fenlai City. Given their astonishing speed, most people would totally be unable to dodge out of the way of their charge. Their massive weight and the force of each step would most likely heavily injure even a warrior of the ninth rank. A warrior of the eighth rank would die from being stepped on, no question at all.

"Hooooowl!"

Hundreds of thousands of Windwolves charged forward, like the boundless waves of the sea, charging through the openings created by the two Saint-level magical beasts. Other Windwolves just leapt directly into the air, bypassing the wall entirely. Windwolves possessed incredible leaping abilities, after all, and were able to leap 20-30 meters in a bound. These walls were totally useless in stopping them.

Hundreds of thousands of Windwolves had entered Fenlai City...

"Rumble, rumble, rumble."

The earth continued to shake with thunder-like galloping sounds. Behind the Windwolves were countless numbers of different types of land-based magical creatures. There were Mastodons and other creatures far more terrifying than Windwolves. Those soldiers who had been lucky enough to survive, staring at that massive flood of magical beasts, knew true despair.

"The Holy Capital is finished." Staring off into the distance, a soldier hiding in a corner of the walls said in despair.

"Crunch."

A Windwolf suddenly appeared next to him and bit his head off in a single bite.

.....

A cell in the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

“What is going on?” Linley climbed to his feet. He could feel the ground shaking and hear the thunderous roars, howls, as well as screams of misery from outside. Having stayed so long within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley could tell just from listening to the sounds what sorts of magical beasts had arrived.

“Why are there so many magical beasts here? They seem to be everywhere.” Linley was totally amazed.

“Boom!”

A terrifyingly powerful force struck against the Radiant Temple. All the walls of the Radiant Temple suddenly began to glow with a dim light. Despite having received such a tremendous blow, the Radiant Temple had managed to withstand it.

“This Radiant Temple’s defense is really something.” A deep, thick voice growled from outside. The power and strength of that voice was such that even in his cell, Linley could clearly hear each word.

“Someone is attacking the Radiant Temple?”

Linley found it somewhat hard to believe. The Holy Union was one of the six major powers, and the Radiant Church had existed for millennia. In all that time, no one had ever dared to attack the Radiant Temple. But given the attack just then, as well as that loud voice, someone had definitely just attacked the Radiant Temple.

"KING!"

Suddenly, in unison, several rough voices rang out loudly. There was definitely more than one loud voice!

"Stop!" An angry bellow.

"That's the Holy Emperor." Linley could clearly tell it was him, but right after the Holy Emperor's voice rang out, there was a....

"BAM!"

A terrifyingly powerful force descended upon the Radiant Temple, causing the entire Radiant Temple to shake violently. The light shining from the myriad complicated magical patterns covering the Radiant Temple began to flicker and shudder, while on the walls of the Temple, cracks began to emerge.

"How terrifying." Doebling Cowart sighed in amazement. "A single attack was enough to nearly collapse the entire Radiant Temple."

"BAM!"

Yet another terrifying strike. This time, even the giant magical formation covering the Radiant Temple, the Glory of the Radiant Sovereign, wasn't able to withstand it. With an exploding sound, the Radiant Temple split open at the middle, and the top eight floors of the Radiant Temple collapsed.

"The protective magical formation was destroyed." Linley could feel his cell beginning to shift about, as if it were sliding down.

Linley was both amazed and overjoyed. Before this, the cell walls were extremely sturdy, because any force used against it would be absorbed by the entire magical formation. But now, the magical formation itself had been destroyed! Linley's hands transformed into a pair of draconic claws, and he immediately smashed a giant hole into the walls with five or six punches.

Linley immediately burst out from within the hole he had just created.

"Bloodviolet Godsword!" When Linley had been seized, the Bloodviolet Godsword had been taken from him by the Radiant Church. But since the Bloodviolet Godsword had already been personalized and bound by Linley long ago, with a mental command by Linley, it began to fly towards his direction, arriving in Linley's hands shortly afterwards.

By now, the Radiant Temple was in a state of chaos. No one could be bothered to worry about Linley.

With a tap of the foot, Linley sent himself leaping down into the plaza below. Right now, the Radiant Temple Plaza was littered with corpses. Far too many had just died. There were many people engaged in battle against magical beasts as well.

“So many people.”

Linley was totally stunned.

The skies were filled with countless types of flying magical beasts – Dragonhawks, Bluewind Hawks, Winged Pegasi, Thunderwing Pegasi, Emerald Dragons, Fire Dragons, Black Dragons...all sorts of dragons. The sight of these creatures blocking out the sky with their mass was enough to freeze anyone’s heart.

And the numbers of magical beasts on the ground were even more astonishing.

“Is that...?”

Linley stared in the direction of the Radiant Temple. In the air directly above it, there were over ten enormous magical beasts.

“A Savage Worldbear...Bloody-eyed Maned Lion...Electrobolt Panther... Thunderwing White Tiger...Thunder Lizard...Tyrant Wyrms...” Linley saw one legendary Saint-level magical beast after another, all hovering in the air above the Radiant Temple. He was totally stupefied at the number of Saint-level magical beasts that had just appeared.

What’s more, the person leading these Saint-level magical beasts seemed to be a human.

He was a very devilish looking young man, wearing a dim gold robe, with a strange slit-like scar on his forehead. This devilish young man was coldly, calmly looking at Heidens and Heidens' forces. Heidens, Mr. Fallen Leaf, and five other Saint-level human combatants were all standing in mid-air, staring back at the young man. Clearly, the Radiant Church's side was in very bad shape.

"You..." Heidens and the other humans were furious.

"I really am so sorry for disturbing you on your Yulan Festival, but I must inform you that your Radiant Church needs to go find another place to be your Holy Capital." The devilish young man said calmly.

Linley could clearly hear these words, and he couldn't help but be secretly shocked at how terrifying this young man was.

"Boss, boss!" Linley suddenly heard Bebe's voice ringing out in his mind. Linley could sense Bebe's location, and he couldn't help but turn to look at him. He saw a black blur pass through the massed throngs of people and magical beasts. Very shortly afterwards, the blur arrived, and with a leap it threw itself directly into Linley's arms.

"Bebe." Linley felt extremely moved.

"Boss." In Linley's arms, Bebe was also so moved that his little eyes turned moist.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 6, Deity-Level Combatant

There were magical beasts both inside and outside of Fenlai City. Countless numbers of magical beasts. This city which had just been celebrating the 10000th Yulan Festival now found itself having run into the day of Apocalypse. Deaths were happening constantly, and the population of this Holy Capital, Fenlai City, was dropping at a terrifying rate.

Both the higher ups of the Radiant Temple as well as the commoners were all fleeing for their lives from the magical beasts.

“Quick, quick, stop dawdling!”

Duke Bonalt roared furiously. Right now, Duke Bonalt didn't give a damn about his 'king'. He only led his own family out of his Duke's manor, along with ten of his most powerful guards, immediately fleeing towards the outside of the city. The only thing he had on him was a few magiccrystal cards.

They were fleeing for their lives!

“Father, let's go rescue Nessa [Ni'sha],” pleaded Duke Bonalt's son Albert [Ai'bo'te].

“You bastard, if you want to live, then follow me!” Duke Bonalt howled furiously. “Let's go!”

Duke Bonalt paid no more attention to his son, and immediately led his wife and his other children out. As for Albert, he hesitated there for a moment, then ground his teeth and pulled out his sword as he ran in the other direction.

"You ungrateful whelp!" Duke Bonalt swore, but in his heart, he was extremely grieved.

But Duke Bonalt knew very well that right now, Fenlai City was covered with magical beasts. Magical beasts of the seventh rank could appear at any time, and even magical beasts of the eighth rank and ninth rank were not rare. Right now, if they didn't immediately flee the city, they wouldn't have a chance at surviving.

"Son, forgive your father." Duke Bonalt said to himself, while at the same time, he shouted at his guardsmen. "Quick, let's leave Fenlai City! Once we've reached safety, each person will receive 30,000 gold coins!" At a time like this, Duke Bonalt was not going to be stingy.

"Yes, Lord Duke!" The guardsmen exulted. 30,000 gold coins was more than enough for them to live out their lives carefree.

But after travelling just two or three kilometers, they had already encountered and killed two magical beasts of the seventh rank, five magical beasts of the sixth rank, and three magical beasts of the fifth rank.

"Groooooowl!"

A ten-meter high black bear began to run at them from high speed from far away, each step causing the earth to shake. Seeing the black bear, all of the faces of the guardsmen turned white, and Duke Bonalt shouted loudly, "Quickly, flee! That's a Violet Tattooed Bear! Quickly!"

An adult Violet Tattooed Bear was generally a magical beast of the ninth rank.

The Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear which Linley had encountered in the Foggy Valley within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was a particularly strong representative of its kind.

"Groooowl!" The Violet Tattooed Bear clearly had its eyes set on Duke Bonalt's group, and it continued running towards them, causing both the earth and the hearts of Duke Bonalt's group to shake. The Violet Tattooed Bear was running in a totally direct line towards them. Anything which got in its way was smashed.

"Bam!" With a wave of its arm, a three story high building was disintegrated, showering Duke Bonalt's group with rubble.

"Smash!" A piece of rubble nearly half the size of a man came smashing down on one of the young daughters of Duke Bonalt. The pretty, delicate head of that girl was instantly transformed into a pile of mud-like meat paste, as blood and brain matter splattered across the stone and across the ground.

Duke Bonalt and his men didn't even have the chance to be angry or to be heartbroken, because immediately afterwards, the Violet Tattooed Bear slammed down its huge paws upon one of the guards, turning him into nothing more than ground meat.

"Ah!" Duke Bonalt suddenly realized that a giant foot was coming for him, and he frantically tried to roll away.

"WHAP!"

The Violet Tattooed Bear stepped on Duke Bonalt, killing him on the spot. If someone as weak as Duke Bonalt would have been able to avoid the attack of a Violet Tattooed Bear, then the Violet Tattooed Bear wouldn't have been worthy of being classified as a magical beast of the ninth rank.

"Grooooooowl!" The Violet Tattooed Bear raised its head and roared, beating its chest with excitement, before turning and heading in a different direction to find more prey.

.....

Crushed to death. Swiped to death. Slapped to death. Bitten to death. This was extremely common and normal, now. Regardless of whether they were nobles or commoners, right now in Fenlai City, life was a very fragile thing. And so, one noble and commoner after another died.

Fenlai City was a scene of utter catastrophe.

And the place where the slaughter was the most ferocious...was the area around the Radiant Temple.

On the massive plaza in front of the Radiant Temple, the mighty Knights of the Radiant Temple as well as the Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal were engaged in ferocious battle against the magical beasts. The defense here was the stiffest, and so even more magical beasts congregated here as well.

Linley and Bebe were in a corner of the Radiant Temple Plaza, but the two of them were very safe. This was because, given their current strength, they had nothing to fear as long as a Saint-level combatant didn't come attack them.

And right now, all the Saint-level combatants were in the skies above the Radiant Temple.

"Boss, there's so many Saint-level magical beasts." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley looked up again at the Saint-level magical beasts in the air above the Radiant Temple. Linley hadn't expected that at a critical moment such as this, the Radiant Church was able to mobilize seven Saint-level combatants within Fenlai City.

"The Saint-level combatants which the Radiant Church officially acknowledges having can be counted on one hand. In truth, it has many powerful combatants lying hidden. This is just the Holy Capital, yet they already have seven Saint-level combatants. Most likely the total number of Saint-level combatants within the Holy Union is a good deal higher."

Linley finally had an idea of what the highest levels of power within the continent were like.

The aura of a Saint-level combatant was enough to cause dread in lesser individuals. Any of the seven Saint-level humans in the air above could easily kill Linley, as though Linley were nothing but an ant. But right now, those seven Saint-level humans were at a definite disadvantage!

Magical beasts were naturally more powerful than humans.

For ordinary magical beasts, immediately upon reaching the Saint-level, despite being early-stage Saint-level magical beasts, generally only middle-stage Saint-level human combatants would be a match for them. For those particularly powerful magical beasts which reached the Saint-level, such as an Armored Razorback Wurm, or a Tyrant Wurm, or a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor...immediately upon reaching the Saint-level, they could only be matched by a peak-stage human Saint-level combatant.

And right now...

Over ten Saint-level magical beasts stood in mid-air, and amongst them were a Bloody-eyed Maned Lion, a Tyrant Wurm, a Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape, and other incredibly strong Saint-level magical beasts. Any one of them was capable of fighting with the Holy Emperor head to head.

What was even more amazing was that in front of these magical beasts, there was that devilish 'young man'.

"Are you a human, or are you...?" Heidens stared at that devilish young man.

The devilish young man glanced coldly at Heidens. "A human? How could I be a pathetic human? Humans are nothing more than food to us magical beasts!" The devilish young man's words were loaded with absolute contempt. Even when looking at Heidens, he was filled with nothing but utter contempt.

"Haha, if our almighty King wished to kill you, it would be as easy as flipping over his hands. He's giving you guys face. You'd best accept it. Haha..." That Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape shouted loudly with laughter.

The expression on Heidens' face changed dramatically, and so did the faces of the six Saint-level combatants behind him.

A magical beast that could take human form. What sort of power was this?

"Could it be that yet another Deity-level combatant has appeared on the Yulan continent? An invincible entity?" Heidens felt extremely sour. In the past, there had only been three individuals who had stood at the very peak of power in the Yulan continent; the 'War God' of the O'Brien Empire, the 'High Priest' of the Yulan Empire, and the 'King' of the Forest of Darkness.

Heidens didn't imagine that the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts would suddenly produce its own 'King', who was able to take human form as well.

"Broke through the Saint-level to reach the Deity-level. A Deity-level magical beast. This..." Heidens knew very well how terrifying a Deity-level magical beast was. To this 'King', killing these seven human Saint-level combatants would be like child's play.

Heidens instantly made his decision...

They had to retreat!

Right now, preserving as much power as remained to the Radiant Church was the most important thing of all. If it lost seven Saint-level combatants, the Radiant Church's power would drop by at least a large half, and its status would drop as well.

"A Deity-level magical beast. How could a Deity-level magical beast appear out of nowhere?" Heidens cursed to himself. He had no idea that this Deity-level magical beast had been accidentally released by Linley from within the Foggy Valley. And as it just so happened, when this Deity-level magical beast had implemented the plan he had been formulating for over half a year, he had accidentally saved Linley.

Fate truly was a strange thing.

"Mighty King of Magical Beasts, I am the Holy Emperor Heidens. Might I ask what you wish of me?" Heidens decided to submit.

The devilish young man smiled and nodded. "Your name is Heidens? Very well. What you need to do is lead your people and flee to the north. The magical beasts of my Mountain Range of Magical Beasts will also continue to expand to the north. When the day comes that my magical beasts feel they have enough territory, they will stop expanding.”

Heidens’ heart was filled with fury.

What sort of offer was this?

When they felt they had enough territory, they would stop expanding?

“Hmph, don’t worry. We won’t take over all of the territory belonging to your Holy Union. At most, we’ll take half. Right...as of right now, the Holy Capital of the Cult of Shadows has been destroyed by us as well.” The devilish young man said casually.

“The Holy Capital of the Cult of Shadows?” Heidens and the other six Saint-level combatants were all startled.

Could it be that the magical beasts of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts had launched simultaneous attacks against both the Radiant Church as well as the Cult of Shadows? This was too insane! They knew that the magical beasts in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were quite numerous, and there were quite a few Saint-level magical beasts there as well. But they hadn’t imagined there would be enough to launch simultaneous assaults against two major powers.

“You can beat it now. Oh, and there’s one more thing I can tell you. My name...is Dylin [Di’lin].” The devilish young man said casually.

Hearing the conversation going on up above, Linley was totally stunned. Clearly, this horde of magical beasts wasn't just attacking Fenlai City; it was attacking the entirety of both the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance. And judging from what the devilish young man was saying...

They intended to take over half of the territory of both the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance!

"Then it seems the twelve kingdoms and thirty two duchies to the west of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts are going to plunge into disaster." Linley felt terrified.

"The King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Dylin?"

Linley firmly imprinted this name, 'Dylin', into his memory. After having quietly listened for a while, Linley stealthily made his way through the crowds and departed, heading to his own residence at high speed. This was because he had left a number of things back at his manor.

"Hoooowl!" A powerfully built Windwolf noticed Linley and immediately lunged at him.

"Swish!"

A flash of violet light. Linley didn't even pause or slow down, but that powerful Windwolf suddenly split in half, staining the ground with its blood. On the road back to his manor, Linley saw that the streets had become avenues of death and destruction. There were magical beasts everywhere.

But by the time Linley reached the intersection between the Fragrant Pavilion Road and the Greenleaf Road, Linley saw a squad of troops numbering thirty-something strong. Wherever this squad went, the magical beasts were unable to block them.

"Boss Yale?"

Linley suddenly saw that Yale was bound on the back of a powerful warhorse. "Second Bro and Fourth Bro are here as well. Only, they are riding their horses."

"Father, let me go, let me go! Let me go save Third Bro! The Radiant Temple has already been demolished. This is our best chance to save him!" Tied up and bound, Yale continued to shout loudly from his position on the back of the warhorse. The person actually riding the warhorse was an extremely powerful looking red-haired man.

The feeling he gave Linley was that he wasn't weaker than Kaiser at all.

"Shut your mouth." Riding in the center of this convoy was an extremely fat man, who was wielding a giant battleaxe in his hands. It danced like a vicious blur in his hands, clearly possessing tremendous power.

"Father? Is that the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate?" Linley secretly mused.

With a few leaps, Linley reached the convoy in seconds.

"Boss Yale, Reynolds, George!" Linley shouted loudly.

Yale, who was in the middle of shouting, was startled, and he couldn't help but turn to look. Reynolds and George, who had been maintaining their silence while riding, turned to look as well. Seeing the blood-splattered Linley, and that familiar-looking little Shadowmouse, Bebe, on his shoulders, the eyes of all three of them turned instantly red.

"Third Bro!"

All three of them cried out in joyful unison.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 7, Fleeing in Panic

When the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate, Monroe Dawson, saw what was going on, he immediately ordered, "Halt!"

In unison, all of the riders immediately pulled sharply on their horses' reins. The horses rose high in the air on their hooves, then came down and halted.

"Release the young master." Monroe Dawson instructed. The red-haired warrior of the ninth rank in charge of Yale's protection and escort waved his hands, and the ropes covering Yale instantly split apart. Yale immediately jumped down from the horse. As for George and Reynolds, they had jumped down long ago already.

"Third Bro, are you okay?" Reynolds was so excited that his eyes were red.

"Third Bro, this is wonderful! I knew you would be fine!" Yale said excitedly.

George didn't say anything at all, just thumping Linley on the chest.

"Third Bro, let's go. Leave Fenlai City with us." Yale immediately said, and Monroe Dawson also spoke out now. "This would be Linley, right? Come along with us. As long as we aren't attacked by a Saint-level combatant, our safety should not be a problem at all."

Monroe Dawson desired very much to have Linley be a member of the Dawson Conglomerate.

What the Dawson Conglomerate lacked the most was Saint-level combatants!

"No need. I have some affairs to settle. Boss Yale, Second Bro, Fourth Bro, you leave first." Linley shook his head.

"Third Bro, are you actually going to...?" Yale shouted in shock. Yale already guessed at what Linley was planning.

Linley nodded. "Right."

Clayde. Had to die!

Last time, he failed because of the Saint-level Fateguard, but Linley believed that, given it was already extremely rare for a ruler of a kingdom to possess a single Fateguard, there was no way that Clayde could be in possession of a second one. Right now, the Saint-level combatants of the Radiant Temple were all focused on saving their own skins. It was highly unlikely that they would care about protecting a king at this point.

"Boss Yale, you can leave now. I'll go find you all later." Linley said.

"There's too many magical beasts here this time. I'm afraid that the Ernst Institute is going to be attacked as well, given its proximity to Fenlai City. We won't be heading back to the Institute. After reaching a safe location, both Reynolds and George plan to go back to their own empires. As for me...I'll follow my father for now." Yale replied. George and Reynolds both nodded.

"Good. Then in the future, I'll go looking for you all. Boss Yale. Second Bro. Fourth Bro. Farewell." Linley stared longingly at his three good bros, nodded heavily a single time, then turned and leapt in the opposite direction at high speed, travelling over a hundred meters in three steps.

Yale, Reynolds, and George all understood that seeing this Third Bro of theirs again in the future would be quite difficult.

The three of them immediately mounted their horses. "Go!"

The Dawson Conglomerate's convoy headed out once more.

This day, countless clans within the city of Fenlai were on the brink of annihilation, and the Debs clan was no exception. The clan leader, Bernard, had been crushed to death by the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape's foot, along with the successor, Kalan. The other clan members didn't have any time to consider who the next clan leader should be, because immediately afterwards, they suffered an even greater loss. Magical beasts began attacking the Debs clan's manor.

Guards, servants, maids, clan members...they all died, one after the other. The people of the Debs clan all went wild, grabbing what valuables they could get their hands on and fleeing in all directions. By now, nobody would think about helping others.

"Big sister Alice, what should we do?" Rowling was stunned.

Alice was stunned at first as well, but now she recovered. "Come with me." Alice immediately shouted. Alice was a magus of the fourth rank, after all, while Rowling was a warrior of the fourth rank. Considering their ages, this was actually quite impressive. But in a situation where magical beasts of the fifth rank were everywhere, they didn't have the ability to resist at all.

Leading Rowling, Alice rushed into Kalan's room and grabbed two magicrystal cards from a drawer.

"Little sister Rowling, each of these two magicrystal cards have a hundred thousand gold coins in them. They'll be enough for us to survive on. We can go now." Alice handed Rowling one of the magicrystal cards, then they rushed out of the manor together. One of them was a magus, the other was a warrior.

They were in fairly good physical condition, and were able to run quite agilely.

"Save me! Ah!"

A maid frantically ran past Alice and Rowling, while behind her a Windwolf was in hot pursuit. The Windwolf viciously charged directly to her, then snapped directly at her throat. Staring at Alice and Rowling, the maid's eyes were filled with the desire to keep living. But then, her eyes grew dim and faded.

Rowling stood there, staring stupidly at the spectacle.

"Hurry, let's go!"

Alice pulled at Rowling's hands. To try and be benevolent right now was to court certain death. Right now, even combatants of the ninth rank didn't dare to be too self-sacrificing, much less them. In the city of Fenlai, there was currently more than ten Saint-level combatants, and nearly a hundred magical beasts of the ninth rank.

The lower ranked magical beasts were even more plentiful, especially the fifth and sixth ranked magical beasts such as the horde of Windwolves, which numbered in the hundreds of thousands alone. There were only a million or so denizens in Fenlai City to begin with, and most of them only possessed strength at the first or second rank. They had no chance of fighting back.

"Rip!" Alice and Rowling, these two weak girls, ripped off the dress part of their wedding gowns, so as to allow themselves to run faster.

"Big sister Alice, there are magical beasts up ahead." Rowling suddenly called out.

"This way." Alice pulled Rowling by the hand, rushing towards a small alleyway.

But after crossing through the alleyway, they saw that the other side also had magical beasts. Alice and Rowling were forced to stay in the middle of the alley, between two manors. But suddenly, from the other side of the alley, a Vampiric Iron Bull charged towards them.

"Let's go!" Alice pulled strongly at Rowling's hands, and they rushed out of the alleyway. They ignored the magical beasts up ahead. There were many people up ahead as well, after all. Those magical beasts might not necessarily target the two of them. They continued to charge forward as frantically as they could.

Their breaths were hoarse and ragged. This life and death juncture had increased their anxiety to the highest level.

"Howl!" "Howl!" Suddenly, from behind them, over ten Windwolves suddenly charged forward at high speed. Windwolves were simply too fast, possessing more than double the speed of Alice and Rowling. Very soon, the ten Windwolves would catch up to them...and at the same time, up in front of Alice and Rowling, an enormous Landwyrn appeared.

The Landwyrn was large enough that just by standing there, it blocked off almost half of the Greenleaf Road. And with that draconic tail...there was nowhere for Alice and Rowling to flee.

"Big sister Alice..." Rowling felt somewhat hopeless.

Alice looked at that enormous, two-story tall Landwyrn, then at the ravening pack of Windwolves charging in their direction. She couldn't think of any way to escape at all.

"Am I going to die?" Alice couldn't help but tightly embrace Rowling. At this moment, she too felt that all hope was lost. From behind, the ten Windwolves were about to arrive, their white fangs gleaming with a cold light...

A beautiful flash of violet light.

The heads of the ten Windwolves instantly flew apart. A human figure descended from the heavens, then charged directly towards that enormous Landwyrn.

"That is..." Alice and Rowling stared stupidly at the person who had suddenly saved them.

Alice could clearly see who it was.

"A long, long time ago, something like this happened as well." A lost look in her eyes, Alice stared at that figure. It was Linley. In truth, Linley's own residence was located right across the street from the Debs clan's manor, and right now, Alice and Rowling were only a few dozen meters away from Linley's manor.

Linley wouldn't just watch someone die without helping, after all.

"Haaaargh!"

Twisting his waist, Linley applied power to his legs, kicking out forcefully like the snapping of a whip. Like an iron whip, Linley's leg snapped out, piercing through the air with a shriek as it landed against the skull of the Landwyrn.

And as this was happening, Linley's legs suddenly became covered with black scales.

Demidragon form!

"Bam!"

This kick was simply too fast. Caught offguard, the Landwyrn was unable to react, and its skull exploded from the force of this blow. The enormous body of the Landwyrn collapsed, slumping to the ground.

Linley landed on the ground. Rowling and Alice, watching all of this, were somewhat stunned.

"Big...big brother Linley..." Alice said softly.

Linley turned to look at them, a frown appearing on his face. Linley didn't have the spare time to lead these two girls around, but if Alice and Rowling were to be here by themselves, they would definitely die. But then, Linley suddenly saw a squad of knights charge over at high speed. Within this squad of knights was an old man riding a handsome stallion. It was Managing Director Maia of the Proulx Gallery.

Under this assault by the magical beasts, the collections within the Proulx Gallery were essentially finished. Director Maia was only able to collect the most important pieces within his interspatial ring of holding.

These interspatial rings were extremely valuable and rare. Even Director Maia only had one because his clan had passed one down.

"Director Maia." Linley shouted loudly.

Seeing Linley, Director Maia was extremely excited. "Master Linley, you are here!" The people Director Maia admired the most were those master-level sculptors, so naturally, Director Maia greatly admired Linley, this young man who was able to so easily carve out a sculpture that was almost on the same level as Proulx and Hope Jensen.

There were actually very few people who knew about Linley's attempted assassination of King Clayde. In the outside world, the story was that a demon had attempted to kill King Clayde. Naturally, Director Maia didn't know the truth.

"Master Linley, come along with us." Director Maia was very confident.

The martial force of the Proulx Gallery was quite high. As long as they weren't attacked by a Saint-level magical beast, they definitely wouldn't find surviving to be a problem.

"Director Maia, no need. But I hope you can help me. These two girls have some ties to me, and I hope you can take them to a safe location." Linley instructed.

"No problem. But Master Linley, Fenlai City is not safe right now." Director Maia hurriedly said.

"No need. I have affairs to settle. I entrust these two girls to you." After he spoke, Linley immediately disappeared into his manor. Alice and Rowling exchanged glances, and then immediately were ordered by Director Maia to mount a horse and integrate into the convoy.

"He...actually didn't say a single word to me." Alice suddenly felt a little heartsick.

The sound of hoof steps unabated. Director Maia's convoy, along with Alice and Rowling, departed.

Only now did Linley emerge from his manor, bearing a black parcel on his shoulders. This parcel contained several magicrystal cards, some of the remaining Bloodrupture poison powder, and Blueheart Grass.

"Bebe, now we head to the palace."

"Boss, let's go have ourselves a slaughter." Bebe was excited as well.

Linley immediately led Bebe and moved at high speed towards the palace.

Quite a few people had already fled, but Clayde had gone into the royal treasury instead. How could Clayde abandon the riches of the royal clan which had been accumulated for countless years? The wealth of a royal clan was an incredibly large figure.

The Debs clan, at its prime, was worth perhaps a hundred million gold coins.

But a corrupt major official such as Duke Patterson had also managed to accumulate around a hundred million gold coins. As for the wealth stored within the palace treasury, that was worth far more.

Within the treasury.

“This is the wealth that has been accumulated by countless generations of rulers of Fenlai over thousands of years.” Staring at the treasures within the treasury, Clayde didn’t have too much time to ponder. He grabbed the most valuable items and directly absorbed them into his interspatial ring. As a king, Clayde had been lucky enough to procure an interspatial ring as well.

“And these 32 magiccrystal cards.” Clayde looked at the magiccrystal cards in his hands.

These 32 magiccrystal cards were all un-bound, and they represented thousands of years of wealth that had been accumulated by the kingdom. Each card contained within it a hundred million gold coins. The 32 magiccrystal cards, in total, represented a wealth of 3.2 billion gold coins. This was a terrifying sum. Perhaps even some of the major clans of the Four Great Empires didn’t have such a large sum of gold.

A popular saying was that the easiest way to make money was to become a king. The wealth that had been accumulated by kings over thousands of years was naturally astonishingly high.

“The capital, Fenlai City, is finished.” Clayde turned to give the remaining treasures one last look, then ground his teeth and left.

But what Clayde didn't realize yet was that it wasn't just the capital which was finished. The entire Kingdom of Fenlai had now become the territory of magical beasts! He, Clayde, was no longer a king! What's more, it wasn't just the Kingdom of Fenlai that had been destroyed; a huge amount of the territory belonging to the Holy Union was being rapidly devoured and claimed by magical beasts.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 8, One Hand

In a secluded courtyard within the palace, the most important members of the royal clan of Fenlai were gathered, including Clayde, his wives, and his many children.

“The entire city of Fenlai is swarming with magical beasts. We definitely cannot all travel together in a large group, as that would attract some extremely powerful magical beasts.” Clayde said solemnly. This reasoning was something everyone understood, and was the reason why Director Maia and Menlo Dawson were travelling in small convoys.

Convoys of a few dozen people were everywhere in Fenlai City, and weren't remarkable at all.

But a convoy of several hundred people would draw the attention of magical beasts of the ninth rank, and perhaps even result in an attack from a Saint-level magical beast.

The most dangerous thing one could do right now was to attract attention from magical beasts.

“Carre [Ka'lei], you and your mother shall lead a division of the Wildthunder squad soldiers. Here are five un-imprinted magiccrystal cards. Remember, this represents thousands of years of accumulated wealth of our clan!” Clayde looked solemnly at his son.

There were too many people in the royal clan. They had to go in separate packs.

Clayde didn't want for his clan to be annihilated. By going in separate packs, the chances of at least some surviving would be greater.

"Yes, father." Carre was overjoyed.

Thousands of years of accumulated wealth...how much would that be worth?

"Shaq [Sha'ke], you, your mother, and your younger sister will also lead a division of the Wildthunder squad soldiers. Here are five magicrystal cards for you as well." Clayde withdrew another five magicrystal cards and handed them to his second son. Both of the princes were extremely excited.

Clayde's face was very solemn. He said, "The elite soldiers of our clan will be divided into these three divisions. Carre's, Shaq's, and my own. No matter who manages to survive in the end, at least our clan will continue. Enough, let's head out!"

"Kaiser, as the instructor for the Wildthunder Regiment, you will come with me." Clayde looked at Kaiser.

"Yes, your Majesty." Kaiser nodded.

The Wildthunder Regiment was the most powerful defensive regiment within the Kingdom of Fenlai. The entire regiment, including Kaiser, only consisted of a hundred people, giving each squad only 33 soldiers. But although they were small in number, they were high in quality. Even the weakest member of this regiment was a warrior of the seventh rank.

Divided into three squads, the royal clan immediately began to flee in three separate directions.

....

"Swish!" Linley leapt up at a high speed. At the same time, there was a violet flash of light, and the Thunderwing Pegasus that was harassing Linley suddenly split into two halves. Linley continued to run forward, making his way towards the palace at high speed.

On the way, he passed by far too many human and magical beast corpses.

"Arrived at the palace." Linley was leaping forward so fast that his body was naught but a blur, and with each movement, he travelled dozens of meters. This sort of astonishing speed made it impossible for magical beasts of the fifth and sixth ranks to stop him.

"Whew."

Linley easily leapt up over ten meters in the air, flipping into the interior of the palace.

"Roaaaar!" The sound of magical beasts roaring could be heard from within, as well as the battle cries of soldiers. Right now, there were no longer any guards at the palace gates. The only things present were corpses, blood, and rent flesh. And, occasionally, a massive corpse of a magical beast.

Like an agile treecat, Linley leapt his way through the tops of the various palace buildings.

But when Linley arrived on top of one particular roof, he suddenly saw a mounted squad far away. Right now, virtually no one was using carriages anymore. Carriages were simply too slow for fleeing.

"That is..."

Linley instantly was able to recognize that golden-haired man in the center of the squad. It was the 'Golden Lion', Clayde. Clayde was currently issuing orders to his soldiers to kill the magical beasts besieging them. This squad's teamwork was really quite marvelous.

When a group of elite warriors of the seventh and eighth ranks worked together as one, they were actually more powerful than a group of the same size consisting only of warriors of the eighth rank that had no teamwork.

"Clayde." Linley's eyes lit up.

"Boss, let's make our move." Bebe was excited as well.

"Wait. We can't afford any mistakes this time. Wait for his squad to get closer to us, and then we will launch a sudden ambush." Linley remained on top of the roof, his cold eyes focused on that distant mounted squad.

....

"Don't waste any time. Quick." Clayde swung the giant warsword in his hands, chopping down a Dragonhawk from midair."

During this past half month, Clayde had managed to purge a small amount of Bloodrupture poison from his system, allowing him to recover 10% of his battle-qi. Although it was just 10%, he once more had the power of a warrior of the eighth rank.

But Clayde recognized that he would most likely need another half year to purge the remaining 90% of Bloodrupture poison from his body.

"Where the hell did all these magical beasts come from. Bastard." Clayde was growing more and more furious.

These magical beasts had destroyed his capital, and now they were threatening his life. How could he not be angry?

"Quick."

After killing all of the attacking magical beasts, Clayde immediately pressed his men to hurry on, and the troop of knights once more sped forward. As Clayde and his men travelled at high speeds through the pathways between the palace buildings, they didn't notice at all that someone was lying in wait on the roofs above.

Watching Clayde and his men draw nearer and nearer, Linley narrowed his eyes.

All the fur on Bebe's body was standing straight up.

"Now is the time!"

Linley's voice rang out in Bebe's head, and the two of them, man and magical beast, flew at high speeds towards Clayde. In that split second before launching, Linley's entire body was suddenly covered with a layer of black scales, and spikes sprouted from his forehead, his elbows, and his knees. From behind, that draconic tail sprouted out as well.

Dragonform!

That squad of knights lived up to their reputation of being elites. As soon as Linley and Bebe flew towards them, they immediately noticed and tried to react. But Linley and Bebe were simply too fast!

"Ah! It's you!" Immediately seeing that terrifying creature, Clayde knew without a doubt that Linley had come!

He didn't have time to wonder why Linley wasn't dead yet, because Linley's draconic tail had already arrived, viciously slapping at him from just two meters away. Behind him, Kaiser had already become caught up dealing with that black Shadowmouse and wasn't going to be able to save him.

"Whap!"

Linley's draconic tail slapped down mercilessly, and Clayde quickly dodged by tumbling to the ground. Linley's tail thus landed on the horse, and the animal was split into two halves by the sheer force of that vicious blow. The warhorse let out a pain-filled whinny before collapsing.

Fallen on the ground, Clayde pressed down on the ground with his fists and quickly retreated.

But now, Linley came chasing after him.

"Swish swish!" At the same time, eight spears gleaming with battle-qi were thrust at Linley.

"Haaargh!"

The Dragonblood battle-qi in Linley's body burst forth, and he used his right leg to viciously kick at the ground. He instantly reached an extremely high momentum as he shot forward like a boulder that had been catapulted forth in anger. Linley's body smashed fiercely against those eight spears.

The eight spears shuddered at almost the exact same time, and those eight streams of power essentially managed to cancel out with the power of Linley's charge.

"This will be troublesome." Linley frowned.

He didn't expect those eight knights would be able to block his attack so effortlessly.

But what Linley didn't know was that those eight knights were shocked and terrified as well. These eight knights were Clayde's personal bodyguards, the most elite of the elite Wildthunder Regiment. All of them were warriors of the eighth rank. Working together, the eight of them would even be able to hold off a warrior of the ninth rank.

However, not even a warrior of the ninth rank would dare to forcibly ram into their spears. But Linley had.

"What a freakishly strong defense." Hiding far away and protected by the remaining knights, Clayde's heart trembled.

"Shkreeeee!"

Bebe let out a piercing screech, then swept his fierce claws at Kaiser again and again, while sometimes using his fangs to bite at him as well. But Kaiser rather effortlessly managed to use his greatsword to block each of Bebe's attacks. Kaiser's sword techniques seemed very simple but were highly effective.

One step back, then a piercing stab with the sword that seemed incredibly hard to block.

"Clayde, who is going to rescue you today?" Linley looked at the mighty warriors in front of him and sneered. "Fine, you want to engage in group attacks?" As soon as Linley finished speaking, he immediately charged at one particular knight.

Linley didn't fear or pay attention to the attacks of the other knights, simply aiming himself at that one knight.

Now, their combined attacks were useless.

"Whoosh!" Linley was simply too fast. In the blink of an eye, he arrived by the side of that warrior of the eighth rank. Balling his fierce claws into a fist, he slammed it towards that warrior. The warrior leaned back to avoid it, but at this time, Linley's draconic tail suddenly swung forward and crushed the warrior's skull in.

"Thrall[Sa'er]!" Many of the knights howled in fury.

The Wildthunder Regiment had always trained together, and their affection for each other was no less than that of blood brothers. Many warriors furiously aimed their attacks at Linley, and despite their anger, they were still able to coordinate their attacks very well, as greatswords and long spears attacked in perfect sequence.

"Pew!" The Bloodviolet Godsword suddenly appeared in Linley's hands. Ignoring the attacks aimed at him, Linley flew to another knight while thrusting Bloodviolet directly towards his eyes. The sword went straight through his skull. The man died immediately.

"Die!" Instantly, another one of the knights pierced at Linley's head with his own spear.

Linley flipped Bloodviolet around and struck a counterblow. Just as the knight was about to attempt to block it, Bloodviolet suddenly curved in midair and effortlessly cut the knight's head off. Even without being activated by battle-qi, the Bloodviolet Godsword in Linley's hands could easily kill a warrior of the seventh rank. And now, suffused by Linley's Dragonblood battle-qi, the Bloodviolet Godsword was more than capable of killing a warrior of the eighth rank as well.

Bizarre attacks!

Three of the warriors of the eighth rank had died in the blink of an eye.

"I want to see how you'll block me!" Linley once again charged towards Clayde, the devilish Bloodviolet Godsword flashing nonstop in the air. None of the knights dared to close with Linley, because that Godsword in Linley's hands was simply too bizarre.

"Groooooowl!"

Suddenly, from far away, a roar could be heard.

"Rumble, rumble, rumble." Ponderous, heavy footsteps shook the earth. The deep sounds and vibrations made it more than clear that this was an enormous magical beast headed their way, and it was drawing closer.

But Linley didn't care about anything at this point.

"Block him, block him!" Clayde shouted loudly, while continuing to retreat.

Linley suddenly leapt into the air, launched himself off a wall, and flew towards Clayde at high speed. Seeing this though, Kaiser instantly kicked off and launched himself backwards as well, transforming into a blur and sweeping the greatsword in his hands directly towards Linley.

"Come." Linley didn't attempt to block the sword at all, aiming the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands directly at Clayde.

"Last time, you had a Saint-level Fateguard to protect you and Heidens to save you. I want to see who will rescue you this time." Linley's dark gold eyes spat death at Clayde, and the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands struck out towards Clayde's throat like a vicious snake. Right now, Clayde had almost gone crazy as he began to wave the greatsword in his hands in an attempt to block.

"Haaah!" Very suddenly, Kaiser released his grip on his greatsword, letting it fly.

"Bam!" Linley didn't manage to react in time, and his right arm was struck heavily by the greatsword. Right at that moment, the burning battle-qi contained within the greatsword burst forth. Linley felt his arm suddenly grow numb. Due to this smashing blow, the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands was now more than a meter away from his target, Clayde.

"Hmph."

The Bloodviolet Godsword suddenly curved in midair, wrapping itself around the greatsword in Clayde's hands, then sliding down until it was wrapping around Clayde's wrist, then chopped!

"Whap!"

Clayde's right hand was cut off, and it fell to the ground with a thud. The fingers on the hand were still extended, and the sword fell to the ground as well. In addition, that severed hand had a ring on it. That ring was the most precious item of all to the royal clan of Fenlai – the interspatial ring.

"My hand! Get it back, get it back!" Clayde's face had turned white from the pain, but he still shouted furiously.

This interspatial ring contained 22 magicrystal cards with a total value of 2.2 billion gold coins! In addition, it had several dozen precious treasures that the royal clan had accumulated over thousands of years. Clayde would rather die than allow this interspatial ring to be lost. This was the accumulated wealth of countless generations of his clan!

"Swish!"

A black blur suddenly flashed by and made off with the severed hand, then leapt onto Linley's shoulders.

"Boss, the more Clayde wants something, the more we will prevent him from getting it." Standing on Linley's shoulders, Bebe mentally spoke to Linley. "But Boss, why would he want this severed hand so much? There's nothing special about this hand. Could it be that it is this ring that he wants?"

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 9, Interspatial Ring

“Get it back, quick!” Clayde was so frantic that his face and neck were both beet red with rage. He roared, “The ring, get it back, get it back! A million gold coins to whoever gets it back!”

When the members of the Wildthunder Regiment heard the words ‘a million gold coins’, a hint of greed appeared in their eyes. All of the mighty knights began launching group attacks against Linley, and the leader of the Wildthunder Regiment, Kaiser, was the first to charge at him.

“Ring, eh? Looks like it really is valuable.” Seeing how crazed Clayde had just become, Linley couldn’t help but laugh coldly. With a powerful leap, he shot backwards at high speed, retreating. While retreating, Linley quickly pulled the ring off the severed hand, and then put it on his own finger.

“Linley, this is an interspatial ring!” Doebling Cowart said excitedly. Given his powerful soul, Doebling Cowart could instantly sense what was so special about this ring. An interspatial ring was a priceless treasure! Linley was shocked as well.

He had thought that this ring was something akin to an ancestral heirloom of the royal clan of Fenlai. He didn’t expect it to be one of the fabled interspatial rings of legend. Interspatial rings were extremely rare. Even just two of the five Cardinals of the Radiant Church were in possession of interspatial rings.

No one was stupid enough to sell an interspatial ring.

And once these interspatial rings were imprinted and bound by the blood of its master, there was no way anyone else could use them. This was the best place to store treasures. Of course, there was one way to open an interspatial ring; kill the owner. Once the owner died, the interspatial ring would revert to being an un-bound item. At that point, one could imprint and bind it to one's self and gain access to the treasures within.

"Whoosh."

Greatsword in hand, Kaiser stared fixedly at Linley as he suddenly pierced through the air. Carrying an explosive force that seemed capable of shattering mountains, the greatsword shattered the air and howled terrifyingly as it swung towards Linley. Linley could clearly, visibly see the red light flowing on the surface of the sword.

This power couldn't be blocked head on!

"Swish!" With another leap, Linley sent himself dodging in another direction again.

"Bam!" The wall Linley had been standing on was struck by the terrifying force of that sword, and an entire section of wall exploded outwards with the sword at the epicenter. The walls within a hundred meters of that blow all crumbled and collapsed.

"So powerful!" Linley was secretly amazed.

Far away, under the protection of his remaining guards, Clayde couldn't be bothered about the pain from his severed hand. He shouted loudly, "Quick, get the ring back for me, quick!" Clayde was about to go mad. Although he knew that Linley wouldn't be able to open the interspatial ring despite having it, if the ring remained in Linley's hands, then he, Clayde, wouldn't be able to access the items within it despite being its master.

2.2 billion gold coins! What an amazing, enormous sum of money that was.

Thousands of years of accumulated royal wealth. For these treasures and wealth to be taken away was more painful to him than being killed.

"Bam!"

A section of wall collapsed. An enormous magical beast was walking in the middle of the palace grounds, passing through walls as though it were walking on flat ground. One wall after another collapsed as though they were made from mud. This enormous magical beast had already noticed Clayde and Linley, and it roared in excitement. "Groooooooooow!"

"Violet Tattooed Bear!" Seeing that familiar figure, Linley wasn't too frightened. Perhaps it was because he could still remember the terrifying power of the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear in the Foggy Valley. In terms of size, this Violet Tattooed Bear was about the same size as the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear in the Foggy Valley, but Linley felt this bear's aura was not as formidable.

This Violet-Tattooed Bear was the one which had killed Duke Bonalt and his family. By now, he had begun to attack the palace.

Having seen Linley and Clayde's group, it was now gleefully charging through the palace towards them, roaring happily.

"Thud!" "Thud!" "Thud!" "Thud!"

The Violet-Tattooed Bear was a machine bred for war, with a body the size of a three-floor building and massive, sturdy bear paws. Even the sturdiest of walls would be shattered by a single blow of those paws. And right now, the bear's target was Linley and Clayde's group.

"Clayde, you want the ring? If you have the ability, come and get it." Linley shouted loudly while moving around at high speed.

"Bebe. You deal with those other warriors. This Kaiser, I'll handle." Linley said mentally.

"Fine. Boss, just watch me!" Bebe excitedly scurried towards that group of warriors.

Those combination attacks practiced by the warriors were all meant to be used against human-shaped opponents by attacking their vitals. They were of no use at all against a magical beast like Bebe which was physically small, extremely fast, and astonishingly durable.

Bebe stretched out his vicious claws and gave a nasty swipe. "Snick!" He slashed directly through half the neck of a warrior of the eighth rank, causing blood to spurt out wildly. That warriors' head directly swung down, only remaining connected to his body by a thin layer of skin.

"Hmph." Kaiser's eyes turned red, and with an angry shout, he chopped at Linley with his greatsword.

With a leap, Linley dodged, while at the same time his legs spun like a tornado. Carrying the power of a pair of sharp knives, Linley's legs chopped towards Kaiser's neck.

Kaiser leaned his head backwards while launching a counterattack, and Linley's kicks just barely brushed against Kaiser's face. Just a little closer, and he would've been able to kill Kaiser. While Kaiser was leaning his head back, he too launched a powerful kick at Linley, but Linley, who was in mid-air, didn't dodge at all.

"Swish!"

Linley's long, iron-whip-like tail suddenly pierced through the air, thrashing viciously towards Kaiser.

One attack after another!

If Kaiser was to continue his attack against Linley, then clearly this attack of Linley's would hit him as well. "Hrmph." Kaiser kicked the ground hard, sending himself flying backwards as he retreated at high speeds while at the same time, slamming the greatsword in his hands against Linley's tail. Kaiser's speed was so fast that he had retreated roughly a hundred meters in the blink of an eye.

"Whoosh!"

Kaiser once more charged forward at high speed. The greatsword in his hands was actually vibrating now, transforming into six illusory swords, causing Linley not to know how to block.

"Ah!" Bebe killed another warrior, this one of the seventh rank, by crushing the warrior's skull with his fangs. This was Bebe's seventh kill.

These deaths only further enraged Kaiser, who had trained and taught these Wildthunder Regiment soldiers. But Linley was simply too hard to deal with. Not only could Linley attack with his hands and his feet, the attack power of his tail was also extremely terrifying. And Linley's durability was astonishingly high as well.

Fortunately...

In terms of both combat experience and tactical acumen, Linley couldn't compare to a true warrior of the ninth rank who had trained for over a hundred years.

"Quick, quick, get the ring back!" Clayde was at the verge of losing his sanity.

Right now, the situation was totally not in his favor. If this continued, they wouldn't have any chance of recovering the ring at all. Within that interspatial ring was thousands of years of accumulated wealth by the royal clan. Even if he died, he couldn't allow that ring to be lost.

“Roaaaaaar!”

The Violet Tattooed Bear had finally arrived, and all the warriors nearby scattered in its wake. No one dared to fight with it head on. To engage in battle against a powerful magical beast of the ninth rank required one to be a warrior of the ninth rank at the very least. And given that magical beasts were naturally more powerful than humans, most likely even a warrior of the ninth rank would only be able to guarantee that he wouldn't die.

That Violet Tattooed Bear actually came to a halt and glanced at the group of people present. The intelligence of a high-rank magical beast wasn't inferior to that of humans at all, and a magical beast of the ninth rank might actually be even more intelligent than some humans. This Violet Tattooed Bear could easily tell that these people in front of him were divided into two groups. On one side, there was a man and a magical beast. The other were the knights who were led by the man with only one hand.

And that man with one hand seemed to be quite concerned about a ring.

The Violet Tattooed Bear could understand the human tongue. Although he couldn't speak in it, he could understand it. A hint of excitement appeared in the eyes of the Violet Tattooed Bear.

“Wooo, wooo!”

The Violet Tattooed Bear clapped its massive paws together excitedly, then charged directly towards Linley and Kaiser. Upon encountering any warriors in its path, it simply waved its massive paws, mercilessly batting them aside.

“Ah!” A warrior of the eighth rank tried frantically to dodge, while at the same time a jade-green light appeared from his body.

But although the Violet Tattooed Bear didn’t move that quickly, its paws were able to attack at a terrifying speed. “WHAP!” The massive paw slammed against the warrior of the eighth rank. A sickening crunching sound could be heard as the man’s head was instantly shattered. The warrior’s battle-qi aura was shattered as well, and his body was reduced to nothing more than ground meat.

Even the ground beneath the man had a giant hole gouged into it, with deep cracks appearing in the area around the hole.

“Why is a magical beast of the ninth rank so much more powerful than humans of the same rank?” Seeing this from afar, Linley’s heart couldn’t help but feel surprise. Kaiser, still engaged in battle against Linley, grew frantic as well. He didn’t have any confidence at all in his ability to deal with a Violet Tattooed Bear.

Violet Tattooed Bears possessed extremely thick, durable skin and tremendous power. Even giant dragons would probably be reduced to a pulp by its massive paws. Its only flaw was that in terms of movement speed, it was rather slow. Its attack speed, however, was still astonishingly high. The Violet Tattooed Bears could be considered one of the extremely powerful kinds of magical beasts of the ninth rank.

“Bam!” “Bam!” “Bam!”

Linley and Kaiser exchanged blows at high speed, and Linley's arms, legs, and tail clashed nonstop with the greatsword. The speed of their blows was at an astonishingly high level. Linley, relying on his astonishing defense, dared to fight with seemingly suicidal attacks, but Kaiser's techniques were effective, and he possessed both experience and powerful battle-qi.

The battle between them had no clear victor.

"Roaaaaar!" The Violet Tattooed Bear had reached Linley and Kaiser, and it swiped down with its massive paws towards the two men.

"Swish!" Linley and Kaiser both retreated backwards at high speed.

"Bam!" The sound of the bear's paw slamming into the ground produced a deep vibration, causing the entire ground to shake, and the ground within ten meters of the blow became covered with cracks. Neither Linley nor Kaiser chose to attempt to forcibly block that blow!

A Violet Tattooed Bear's paw was perhaps the most powerful, durable part of its body.

If they attempted to block it head on, the two of them would've both become nothing more than meat paste.

"Roaaaaar!" With a loud howl, the Violet Tattooed Bear actually turned and charged at Linley.

"Why the hell are you chasing ME?" Relying on his high speed, Linley began to flee. After having Dragonformed, Linley possessed the speed of a warrior of the ninth rank, and a very fast one at that. At the same time, the Violet Tattooed Bear's weakness was its movement speed. It wasn't too hard for Linley shake it off.

The Violet Tattooed Bear continued to charge forward, and anyone who got in its way was slapped to death.

It only pursued Linley!

Linley didn't know that the Violet Tattooed Bear had taken a fancy to that ring. Given its intelligence, and its understanding of human languages, the Violet Tattooed Bear knew that the ring was something which both parties valued.

It was actually quite common for magical beasts of the ninth rank to understand the human tongues. They understood it, they just couldn't speak it, simply because their bodies weren't designed to speak it. But upon reaching the Saint-level, they could break free of this restriction and speak in human tongues.

"Ring, ring!" Clayde was about to cry.

"Your Majesty." Kaiser was standing guard in front of Clayde. "Your Majesty, it's best we leave now. If we don't leave, things will become extremely dangerous."

Of the 33 members of the Wildthunder Regiment, fourteen had just been killed by Bebe. The remaining members were beginning to panic as well. The magical beast in front of them was physically small, possessed astonishing durability, and terrifying attack power. It was highly suited for dealing with humans.

“Roaaaar!”

“Roaaaar!”

Suddenly, a mighty series of draconic roars could be heard from the skies, as hundreds of gigantic dragons with jade-green scales, blazing red scales, silvery scales, and even a very tyrannical-looking Black Dragon began to fly in this direction.

Dragons possessed a very high level of intelligence. They knew that the palace held many treasures, and dragons loved collecting treasures.

“Roaaaaaar!” The leader of this flight, the massive Black Dragon, focused on Clayde and Linley. With a mighty roar, it led the large pack of dragons to charge downwards towards the palace. Those Fire Dragons and Emerald Dragons were only dragons of the eighth rank, but Silver Dragons and Black Dragons were generally dragons of the ninth rank.

Seeing this, Clayde, Kaiser, and the others were all stunned.

A single magical beast of the ninth rank was already hard enough to deal with. And now a horde of beasts was coming?

“Boss, this isn’t good. Let’s run.” Bebe’s voice rang out in Linley’s head as well, but right now, Linley was still being pursued by that Violet Tattooed Bear who had taken a fancy to that interspatial ring.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 10, A Terrible Situation

“Thud!” With each step of its massive feet on the ground, the Violet Tattooed Bear would make the earth shake. This Violet Tattooed Bear was fixated on Linley. No matter where Linley ran off to, the Violet Tattooed Bear followed, while its two massive bear paws continually tried to reach out at him.

“Groooooowl!”

Hearing those familiar dragon roars, Linley couldn’t help but look up at the skies. What he saw made his heart clench tightly.

The sky was covered with countless massive dragon bodies. In terms of numbers, there were definitely more here today than that time previously at the Foggy Valley. What’s more, within the host of dragons, there were even Silver Dragons and Black Dragons. Both of those were dragon-type beasts of the ninth rank!

“No!”

With a sudden leap, Linley avoided yet another attack from the Violet Tattooed Bear, then charged directly for Clayde. “No matter what, this time, I have to kill Clayde.”

“Get it, ring, get it back!” Clayde’s forehead was covered with sweat, but he didn’t dare charge forward himself.

"Roaaaar!"

"Roaaaar!"

Several dozen dragons swooped down from the skies, blasting forth dragonfire from their mouths. The flames belched forth by the Black Dragons were black in color as well, while the Silver Dragons exhaled plumes of silvery-white flames. Clearly, in terms of temperature, the black flames and silver flames were far hotter than the dragonfire of the Fire Dragons.

"Sizzle sizzle."

The temperature of the surrounding area immediately began to rise at a terrifying speed as several dozens streams of dragonfire blasted down.

"Your Majesty, if we don't leave, we'll die for sure! If we're dead, treasures will be useless to us!" Kaiser's entire body was suffused with red battle-qi. He roared frantically at Clayde, who started.

"CLAYDE!!!"

A furious roar from the fully Dragonformed Linley, who was shooting towards him like an arrow.

"Go. Go, let's go!" Clayde immediately howled out the order angrily. This decision of Clayde was an extremely painful one for him, but he too understood that if he died here, everything would be lost. In addition, his eldest prince and his second prince both had magicrystal cards on them, with a combined value of a billion gold coins.

A billion gold coins was definitely enough to allow a royal clan to rebuild and flourish again.

"Bam!" Kaiser's giant sword once again blocked Linley's attack.

"Kaiser, let me kill Clayde. No matter how much gold you desire, I'll give it to you." Linley was half-mad with anxiousness as well.

Kaiser just shook his head.

"Roaaaar!"

Right at this moment, a Black Dragon suddenly swooped down and tried to snatch Linley with its claws. Black Dragons were highly intelligent. Seeing how the Violet Tattooed Bear continuously pursued and tried to kill Linley, it was sure that there had to be a reason for the bear's fixation. Thus, its first target was Linley.

"Me again?" Linley frantically dodged to the side.

Just now, when he had been fighting with Kaiser, that Violet Tattooed Bear had decided to chase after him instead of Kaiser. And now, the same thing was happening again. The Black Dragon of the ninth rank chased after the fleeing Linley.

"Whew." Kaiser paid no more attention to Linley as he hurriedly upped his speed to the maximum and fled away. Immediately, several of the giant dragons began a pursuit of Clayde and Kaiser, but the large majority of them continued to encircle and attack Linley.

The Violet Tattooed Bear began to roar in anger as it rose to its hind feet.

Clearly, it was enraged at the dragons for stealing its prey, but the Violet Tattooed Bear didn't dare to openly fight against the dragons either. The Violet Tattooed Bear wasn't confident of beating even that extremely large Black Dragon leader of this host of dragons, to say nothing of the rest of the dragons.

"Thud!" "Thud!" "Thud!"

The Violet Tattooed Bear began to walk away in a different direction, moving a long distance with each stride. Every building in its way was crushed and demolished.

"Clayde!" Seeing Clayde and his men grow farther and farther away, Linley wanted to immediately chase after them.

But yet another massive dragon descended from the skies. This was a massive Black Dragon, over a hundred meters long, and it blocked the road in front of Linley while constantly reaching for Linley with its claws. From its mouth, it repeatedly blasted hot flames at Linley.

Both the earth and the skies were covered in dragons, and all of them were launching attacks at Linley. Surrounded and attacked by so many dragons, Linley felt miserable as well.

"Bastards!"

Encircled and besieged by a large number of dragons, Linley could only watch as Clayde disappeared from his field of vision.

"Boss, we need to flee!" Bebe was frantic now.

Bebe was extremely agile, and also very small. It would be very difficult for those dragons to attack him. What's more, Bebe's fierce claws and sharp fangs were very powerful as well. His attack power was now enough to cause some harm to the dragons, causing all of them to be quite nervous with respect to that little tiny thing.

"Go. Go where?"

No matter in which direction Linley tried to flee, a host of dragons would block and attack. He wasn't afraid of dragons of the eighth rank, but there were more than ten dragons of the ninth rank as well.

"Whap!"

Linley was attacked viciously by a Silver Dragon's tail, but Linley only flipped around in the air before trying to flee again. But it was useless. In midair, several dragons encircled and attacked again. Linley was in such a bad situation that he wanted to cry.

"Swish!" Linley very agilely avoided an attack by a fierce claw, continuing to dodge about at high speed.

"Boss, I'll help you!" Seeing the danger Linley was in, Bebe immediately flew over as well and began chomping down viciously at the leg of that dragon. CRUNCH! CRUNCH! CRUNCH!

"Roaaaaar!" That giant dragon let out a roar of pain.

Relying on his astonishing speed, Linley managed to resolve one draconic attack after another. Whenever he met with real danger, Bebe would help out. The dragons weren't able to do anything to Linley for now either.

In their eyes, this human-shaped aberration was too hard to deal with, and that even smaller-sized rat-type magical beast kept on nibbling at them and causing them pain.

"Roaaaaar!" The leading Black Dragon let out another roar.

Instantly, all of the dragons flew into the air. They had already made the decision to give up this battle against this difficult-to-deal-with human-shaped aberration. It was totally not worth it for an entire host of dragons to waste so much time on a single human-shaped aberration.

The host of dragons flew away, just like that.

"They left?" Linley was startled.

Just moments ago, he had been frantically dealing with the attacks of many dragons, and he had been dodging for his life. That was a very miserable experience. He didn't expect the dragons to give up just like that.

"Boss, let's go now!" Bebe urged.

"Right. Clayde."

Recalling Clayde, Linley maintained his Dragonform and led Bebe at a high speed charge through the city.

By now, the vicious battles between man and magical beast within Fenlai City had all but come to an end. There were very few living people within Fenlai City now, and virtually the only creatures alive on the streets were magical beasts that were hunting for living humans. The Dragonformed Linley moved too fast, and what's more, the fact that his body was covered in scales deceived many magical beasts into thinking that Linley was a magical beast as well.

"Not here."

Linley had led a chase in the direction where he thought Clayde would've fled to, but even after escaping Fenlai City, he still didn't find any traces of Clayde's party.

Outside Fenlai City. A desolate scene.

Even many of the great trees that had lined the road to and from Fenlai City had been shattered. Countless human corpses lay on the road as well. Clearly, these people had managed to flee Fenlai City, but had been killed outside the city by magical beasts nonetheless.

In the desolate countryside outside Fenlai City, small groups of one or two magical beasts could be seen everywhere.

"I wonder what direction that Clayde ran off in." Linley stared at the three branching forks ahead of him. He felt very helpless. It was possible that Clayde might've even left through the East Gate of Fenlai City, but as Linley saw it, that was unlikely, because the further east they went, the closer they would have become to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Thus, Linley had chosen to exit via the West Gate.

But despite having left by the West Gate, Linley still didn't know in what direction he should now head. After all, there were hoof prints pointing every which way.

"Perhaps that Clayde didn't choose any of the roads, and went cross-country into the wilderness." Linley said to himself. The weakest person in Clayde's party was of the seventh rank, and so going cross-country wouldn't be difficult at all.

Linley understood that the chance of finding Clayde in the wilderness was very, very low!

"North. I heard that 'King' of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts say that the people of the Holy Union could only flee to the north! I'll head north as well. Given Clayde's fame, there's no way that his passing will attract no attention. When I reach the north, I'll search for him again." Linley made up his mind.

Seeing the corpses littering the area around him, Linley couldn't help but sigh.

"Ah! Wushan township!"

Linley suddenly thought of his own hometown. Wushan township was less than a hundred kilometers away from Fenlai City. What sort of shape was Wushan township currently in? Linley couldn't be bothered to cancel his Dragonform transformation, as he began to run at high speed available to him towards Wushan township.

Although Linley wasn't moving at maximum speed, after having assumed the Dragonform, he was able to easily travel two or three hundred kilometers each hour as a warrior of the ninth rank.

The trees on each side of the road quickly disappeared into the distance, and dust flew about everywhere.

"Is that...?" A fleeing mounted knight suddenly saw a human-shaped aberration suddenly charge in his direction from behind. He couldn't help but be frightened, but Linley only passed him by, moving like the wind towards Wushan township. This was the speed of a warrior of the ninth rank! Within twenty minutes, Linley had drawn close enough that he could see his hometown.

Wushan township.

This was a very quiet little township. In the past, the lives of the commoners here had been very peaceful.

But now...

Corpses. Mutilated corpses everywhere. Those corpses clearly bore the signs of having been ravaged by magical beasts.

"This...this..." Linley walked onto the main road of Wushan township. He stared at the corpses littering the main road or the side alleys. There were old people, young people, women, children...seeing all this, Linley couldn't help but feel grief in his heart.

Linley recognized the majority of these dead people.

Linley suddenly saw a young man not far away, clutching a baby in his arms. That young man's body was covered with blood, and that baby had been bitten to death as well.

"Or...Orson [Ao'sen]." Linley wanted to cry, but the tears wouldn't come out.

Orson was only one year older than him. When Linley had first started his physical training at the empty training grounds outside Wushan township, both of them had been placed within the six-to-eight year old group. Orson was the little boy who had stood right next to Linley when they had lined up. The two of them were on fairly good terms. Linley knew that two years ago, Orson had gotten married after reaching the age of maturity. That dead infant was most likely Orson's child.

"Rip. Rip." Not too far away, several Windwolves were chewing on the corpses of the dead.

"Ah!" Linley cast a furious glare at them, then flew towards them like a bolt of lightning. He didn't use his Bloodviolet Godsword. Using his two hands, he either smashed their heads in or ripped them into several pieces barehanded.

In the blink of an eye, the few dozen magical beasts which had remained in Wushan township were all killed.

Seeing the magical beast corpses around him, as well as the human corpses, Linley cancelled his Dragonform transformation, a pained laugh escaping him. And then, he fell to his knees, powerless.

Everyone was dead.

"Haha..." Linley began to laugh in a low voice, but his eyes had begun to fill with tears.

"When the magical beasts ambushed the city and I escaped from the Radiant Temple, I was so immeasurably smug and self-satisfied with myself. But..." Linley's tears began to flow. Only now did Linley truly understand the meaning behind the words that 'King' of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts had spoken.

"How could I be a pathetic human? Humans are nothing more than food to us magical beasts!"

"Food. Food."

Linley's heart was filled with grief.

Wushan township. His hometown. These familiar fellow villagers!

All dead.

When he had left his hometown, Linley had felt fairly calm, because he had always known that his hometown would still be there. But now...his hometown was gone. Everyone was dead.

"What a calamity." Doebling Cowart's ancient voice rang out. "Not just for your hometown. Most likely nearly half of the entire Holy Union has now become the domain of magical beasts. Those people...will become nothing more than food."

Linley quietly stared at his surroundings. He could totally envision how the countless people within the domain of the Holy Union had now been trapped within a catastrophic nightmare. This so-called day of joy, the 10000th anniversary of the Yulan Festival, to the people of the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance, had become a day of catastrophe.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 11, The Titanic Black Python

When a catastrophe occurred, the only thing a person could do was accept it.

After leaving Wushan township, Linley and Bebe headed north. Everything Linley saw only made him all the more taciturn. The entire Kingdom of Fenlai had turned into a playground for magical beasts, and human corpses were nothing more than food for them.

On the long road north, magical beasts occasionally dotted the landscape. Not a single living human being could be seen.

But suddenly, a human form appeared at the end of the road. The human form was moving forward quickly, and was being pursued by several howling magical beasts. But with a few flashes of violet light, those magical beasts were diced apart, and the human form continued northwards. On this person's shoulders, there was an adorable little black Shadowmouse.

"Boss, shouldn't we find a place to rest? I'm getting a bit hungry." Standing on Linley's shoulders, Bebe mentally spoke to Linley.

Linley cast a helpless look at Bebe.

This entire trip, he was the one who had been actively moving, while Bebe was either just standing on his shoulders, enjoying the wind, or sleeping inside Linley's clothes. How exactly was he tired?

“Fine. There’s a mountain up ahead. We can kill a few magical beasts and cook them for food.” Linley still pampered and spoiled Bebe as always. To Linley, aside from his three bros and his younger brother Wharton, who was in the O’Brien Empire along with Uncle Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri, he had no close kin. But meeting with Wharton or his three bros was and would be an extremely rare thing.

Only Bebe would always be by his side.

In Linley’s heart, he viewed Bebe as a younger brother to be pampered and spoiled.

“This Bloodviolet Godsword is still quite handy when dealing with magical beasts of the seventh or eighth ranks. But it is quite hard for it to penetrate the defense of a magical beast of the ninth rank and deliver a sufficiently deadly wound.” Linley glanced at the sword at his waist and sighed.

The Bloodviolet Godsword was very sharp and very fast, and could bend in any which way he desired it to, and was thus extremely useful when dealing against large numbers of weaker enemies. But when used to deal with a single powerful magical beast, this Bloodviolet Godsword of Linley’s was actually not even as good as Linley’s own claws and draconic tail.

At the base of the stubby mountain, Linley and Bebe were roasting a pair of wolf legs. Bebe and Linley had not yet left the boundaries of the Kingdom of Fenlai, and so the area was swarming with magical beasts. But given Linley and Bebe’s current power, as long as they didn’t encounter any Saint-level magical beasts, they would be safe.

"It's cooked." Bebe immediately grabbed a haunch of wolf leg and began to chomp through it.

With a wave of his hand, Linley extinguished the fire, then grabbed a roasted wolf leg and began eating as well. This roasted wolf leg, when cooked alongside some wild herbs and grasses, was actually quite tasty. In the mountain wilderness areas, one could often find some ingredients which could be used for cooking. This was a survival skill one learned in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and Linley naturally knew it.

That wolf leg was much larger than Bebe, but Bebe finished eating it before Linley had. By the time Linley was halfway through, Bebe had finished his portion.

"Slither slither."

Suddenly, a very minute sound could be heard from far away. Linley froze in mid-bite, while Bebe's little ears perked up as well. In unison, the man and the magical beast turned to stare behind them.

It was a python.

An enormous python, easily the size of a house. Those two bizarre, reptilian eyes looked like giant red lanterns. Only ten or so meters of its enormous body could be seen outside of a grove, but just judging from the fact that its body was three meters thick, Linley could easily imagine how terrifyingly large this creature really was.

The visible ten or so meters was just a small part of it.

Seeing the dense black skin, tattooed with yellow lines, the expression on Linley's face changed.

"It's a Titanic Black Python." Linley was instantly sure of this magical beast's breed.

Titanic Black Pythons were considered one of the more powerful types of pythons. Generally speaking, adult Titanic Black Pythons were magical beasts of the ninth rank, roughly on par with the Nine Headed Serpents. Amongst python-type beasts, the Titanic Black Python was famed as a war machine.

If you were to place a Titanic Black Python in the middle of an army, it could definitely kill a hundred thousand soldiers.

It was a darkness-style magical beast with incredible defensive powers. Its fangs were poisonous. These were the special traits of the Titanic Black Python.

"Hisssss. Hisssss." The forked tongue of the Titanic Black Python flicked in and out, and its cold eyes stared at Linley and Bebe. Clearly, this Titanic Black Python had already decided that Linley and Bebe were to be its next meals.

"Bebe. Be careful."

Linley's gaze was locked on the Titanic Black Python, not daring to relax in the slightest. At the same time, dense black scales began to erupt from Linley's skin, and a row of spikes rose up out of his back. His forehead, elbows, and knees all sprouted fierce, sharp spikes as well.

"Whap. Whap." Linley's draconic tail slapped the ground a few times. By Linley's side, all of the hair on Bebe's body was standing up straight.

Seeing this, the Titanic Black Python suddenly rose up high in the air. Clearly, it was now on guard and vigilant.

"Whoosh!"

Like a gust of wind, the entire body of the Titanic Black Python shot forward. In less than a second, its enormous, hundred-meter long body was striking against Linley and Bebe, who both also almost simultaneously launched attacks against the Titanic Black Python.

"Swish!" Bloodviolet flashed.

"Clang!" Linley heard a sound similar to a hammer striking against an anvil. His Bloodviolet Godsword had only been able to leave behind a white mark on the Titanic Black Python's skin, and hadn't managed to wound it at all.

"It really is very durable."

The enormous body of the Titanic Black Python began to wrap around Linley. Linley knew that if he allowed it to constrict him, not only would he be unable to breathe, the terrifyingly powerful constrictive force would probably be able to crush him to death.

"Haaaa!"

Linley's sharp claws suddenly pierced towards the Titanic Black Python's body. With a 'rip' sound, his claws penetrated the Titanic Black Python's outer layer of scales. However, Linley could feel that his claws could go no further. Beneath the scales, Linley could sense an astonishingly durable force.

"Whoosh!" The Python was about to constrict Linley!

Linley only laughed coldly. He suddenly ripped his claws free and leaped outside of the Titanic Black Python's coils, while at the same time smashing his elbows down at the Titanic Black Python. Linley's elbows had those sharp spikes on them, which were the unique traits of Armored Razorback Wyrms and possessed astonishing power.

"Riiip!" The spike pierced through the black scales and slowly penetrated downwards.

"What exactly is underneath the scales of this Titanic Black Python? Its defense is so formidable." Linley's sharp spike was only able to penetrate halfway through before being stopped.

"Aaaargh!"

The Titanic Black Python let out an angry, pain-filled roar, and in a flash, its massive head struck towards Linley, its bloody maw opened wide. Suddenly, a black liquid shot out from its mouth and was spat towards Linley.

"Venom." Linley immediately leapt off against the body of the Titanic Black Python, hurriedly dodging backwards.

But the amount of black venom was too great, and the area it covered too large. Some of it still managed to land on Linley's legs.

"Sizzle, sizzle." A strange sound could be heard coming from Linley's legs.

Linley could feel that the black venom which landed on his legs had been totally blocked by that layer of defensive scales. The defensive powers of an Armored Razorback Wyrms were quite formidable, and the venom didn't pose much of a danger to the scales.

"Boss, let's run. That Titanic Black Python is freakishly tough. Its scales and flesh are too thick." Bebe urged.

"Run."

Without hesitating in the slightest, Linley and Bebe went running northwards. Slithering forward rapidly, the Titanic Black Python gave chase for a while, but in the end, Linley and Bebe managed to leave it in the dust.

After escaping the Titanic Black Python's pursuit, Linley and Bebe finally left the boundaries of the former Kingdom of Fenlai. However, despite having left its boundaries, they still saw the same desolate sights. It seemed as though the 'King' of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts had told the truth.

They intended to take over half of the territory which had belonged to the Holy Union.

"Swish!"

Bloodviolet flashed, easily cutting a Dragonhawk in two.

"Bebe, tell me, why is it so hard for us to deal with magical beasts of the ninth rank?" By now, Linley had already encountered several magical beasts of the ninth rank, such as the Black Dragon and Violet Tattooed Bear in Fenlai City. When faced with these creatures, Linley was forced to dodge. There was no way for him to take them head on.

Even when dealing with the fairly slow Violet Tattooed Bear and Titanic Black Python, Linley wasn't able to truly harm them.

Bebe was speechless as well.

Bebe and Linley both had the same problem. Bebe's problem was that he was physically small, and probably wouldn't even be able to chew past the opponent's thick skin with his teeth. How would he harm the enemy?

"Linley." Doehring Cowart's voice rang out.

Linley suddenly came to his senses.

Right. Why not ask Grandpa Doehring? Grandpa Doehring had vast experience, and certainly should've seen many Saint-level combatants. He must have some sort of understanding in this regard.

"Linley, are you frustrated by the question of dealing with magical beasts of the ninth rank?" Doehring Cowart laughed.

Linley nodded. "Yes, Grandpa Doehring. Do you know what I should do?"

Doehring Cowart continued, "Linley, actually, your Bloodviolet Godsword is quite powerful. But the problem is, pre-Dragonform, you are only a warrior of the seventh rank. Post-Dragonform, you are still only an early-stage ninth rank warrior. As an early-stage ninth rank warrior, you think you can kill a magical beast of the ninth rank?"

Linley was startled.

Right. The problem was that he wasn't strong enough.

"When you enter the eighth rank, you will be a peak-stage warrior of the ninth rank in Dragonform. By then, you will be able to harm magical beasts of the ninth rank using your claws or using Bloodviolet." Doehring Cowart chuckled. "However, it's still possible for you at your current level of power to deal with magical beasts of the ninth rank as well."

"How?" Linley exulted. Grandpa Doehring really did know a way!

Doehring Cowart said, "Linley, did you notice that both Kaiser and Clayde used greatswords?"

Linley thought back to his battles. Right, Kaiser and Clayde did indeed both use greatswords.

"Do you know why they use greatswords?" Doehring Cowart asked.

Linley was beginning to grow curious. Right. As warriors of the ninth rank, Clayde and Kaiser naturally knew that using lighter weapons would be faster. Why did they choose to use greatswords instead? Linley couldn't help but to think back to those battles he had with Kaiser.

"Linley, when I was young, I remember that whenever my father was cutting down trees, he would always use heavy axes, rather than small hatchets. Why is that?" Doehring Cowart guided patiently.

Linley started to have an inkling of understanding.

"Light weapons are sharp. When dealing with large groups of enemies, they are very effective. But when fighting in solo combat against a powerful foe, they are inferior to heavy weapons. Through usage of a heavy weapon, a person can utilize more of his power and increase the force of his blows. And...to a warrior of the ninth rank, even a weapon weighing a few hundred pounds won't slow him down too much."

Linley was now beginning to truly comprehend.

Only through using heavy weapons could one truly unleash all of the power they were capable of.

For example, would a strongman deliver more powerful blows using a massive mace, or a light sword? A Dragonblood Warrior was capable of lifting boulders weighing tens of thousands of pounds. Their potential strength was extremely astonishing.

"No wonder why when I faced the Titanic Black Python, I felt as though using the Bloodviolet Godsword wasn't as effective as using my own fists and claws." Linley said. "Perhaps I too should find a heavy weapon to use."

While chatting, Linley continued to make his way northwards into the desolate wilderness.

"Boss, there's a squad of knights up ahead." Bebe suddenly said to him mentally.

Linley looked carefully. Indeed, up ahead, there was a squad of knights taking a break up ahead. Linley had already encountered quite a few such squads. Generally speaking, squads capable of surviving in these magical beast infested lands were composed of elite soldiers belonging to major clans.

"No need to pay them any mind." Linley ignored these people, continuing forward.

But when he drew near, Linley suddenly noticed a familiar face.

"Shaq? Second Prince Shaq?" Linley was startled.

As the Prime Court Magus for the Kingdom of Fenlai, Linley knew both Crown Prince Carre and Second Prince Shaq.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 12, The Rescue

Travelling on this desolate road, Shaq, the Second Prince of Fenlai, was bitterly cursing at these magical beasts. Off in the distance, Linley quietly removed the interspatial ring from his fingers and placed it within one of his pockets.

“The royal clan of Fenlai divided into several squads when they left. No doubt, they had made prior arrangements for where they would meet up.”

Linley was worrying about where he would find Clayde, but now that heaven had delivered Shaq and his squad to him, how could Linley not be overjoyed? In addition, Linley could guess...that when he had tried to assassinate Clayde, then been captured by the Radiant Church, the Radiant Church had originally still planned to make use of him and thus had most likely had ordered Clayde to keep silent.

“Perhaps this Shaq doesn’t yet know that the ‘demon’ who tried to kill his father was me.”

As he was thinking these thoughts, Linley began to walk in Shaq’s direction.

Linley had another thought as well. “If Shaq knows that I tried to kill his father, then none of them will be spared!” Shaq’s men were powerful in comparison to most magical beasts, but compared to these two freaks Linley and Bebe, they weren’t much at all.

"Second Prince! Your Highness!"

Linley called out in a loud, friendly voice.

Shaq, who had been eating roasted meat while cursing, started upon hearing Linley's shout. He swiveled his head over to look at Linley. As he did so, Linley and Bebe both watched him carefully, paying attention to his every facial expression and to his gaze.

"If anything seems off at all, first we capture, then we kill!" Linley carefully watched Shaq's eyes and face.

Upon seeing Linley, Shaq excitedly jumped to his feet. He charged over, his burly body two meters tall, and immediately pulled Linley into a massive hug. In an overjoyed voice, he said, "Lord Linley, you actually made it out safely! This is wonderful, wonderful!"

"I am very happy to be able to see you here as well, Second Prince!" Linley didn't detect any falseness in Shaq's eyes or expressions. He nodded to himself.

Linley's guess was spot on. Clayde had been instructed by the Radiant Church to remain silent, and that he could not, no matter what, reveal that the 'demon' who had attempted to assassinate him was Linley. No matter how daring Clayde was, he wouldn't dare disobey the direct orders of the Radiant Church.

"Lord Linley, have you eaten yet? Come, come eat with us." Shaq warmly said.

Right now, Shaq had no idea that he was walking on a fine line between life and death. If just now, there had been anything wrong with his facial expressions, he would've died.

"Lord Linley, please don't blame my royal father for not rescuing you. Those hordes of monsters came too quickly. My royal father had no choice. He didn't even bring most of his royal consorts, only just the most important ones." Shaq explained on behalf of his father.

"I can understand." Linley nodded while walking towards their camp.

All of those elite knights reminded Linley of the Wildthunder Regiment knights he had fought back when he attacked Clayde at the royal palace. The knights in front of him had a very similar aura and bearing to those knights back then. Aside from those thirty or so knights, there was a slightly older lady, and a little girl who was only five or six years old.

"My respects to you, Royal Consort. My respects to you, Princess."

Linley immediately bowed towards those two women.

The very beautiful, refined-looking consort was over forty years old, but she looked as though she was barely thirty. She was an alluring, attractive woman. The consort immediately laughed. "Linley, when his Majesty left, he was in a terrible rush. He didn't bring a single magus with him. And, he felt confident that the Radiant Church would rescue you, thus..."

Both Shaq and the consort immediately made explanations for Clayde.

Both Shaq and the consort felt that it was very important to have good relations with Linley. They didn't know the real relationship between Linley and Clayde.

"I understand." But in his heart, Linley was laughing coldly. Earlier, when he was battling with Clayde's men in the palace, Linley had already noticed that the guards consisted solely of knights, and that no magi were present. Similarly, there were no magi present here in Shaq's squad either.

Clearly, when fleeing, Clayde hadn't had time to look after his magi at all.

Although magi were very useful when it came to doing battle, this time they were engaging in flight, not in battle with magical beasts. Bringing a magus along would actually slow things down. How could a magus travel as quickly as a powerful warrior? Some of the more powerful warriors could run like the wind even if they had no horse. But magi?

.....

On this desolate road, Shaq and his squad continued to hurry forward nonstop. Some of the formerly prosperous villages on the way had already been reduced to ash, and rotting corpses were strewn everywhere. In this wasteland, magical beasts could often be seen roaming about singly or in pairs.

Those lucky humans who had manage to escape the first massacre would eventually all be chased down and eaten by these roaming magical beasts.

“Our Kingdom of Fenlai is finished.”

Shaq, riding side by side with Linley on their horses, said with a sigh as he looked off into the distance. Occasionally, a magical beast would launch attacks against them, but the Wildthunder knights would easily dispose of them. Shaq and Linley’s conversations weren’t disrupted at all.

“Most likely nine out of ten citizens of the Kingdom of Fenlai are dead now.” Linley’s face was full of sorrow and despair as well.

Shaq nodded slightly.

In his heart, Shaq was also in mourning. The destruction of the Kingdom of Fenlai meant that his clan was no longer a royal clan. When there was no kingdom, how could there be a royal clan?

“Fortunately...” Shaq’s thoughts turned to the five magiccrystal cards in his bag. With these five magiccrystal cards, even though the royal clan of Fenlai no longer had a kingdom, it wouldn’t be too hard for them to become a powerful clan again, thanks to their thousands of years of accumulated wealth. Linley suddenly said, “Second Prince, where will we be meeting with his Majesty?”

The purpose of Linley travelling with Shaq was to learn of Clayde’s whereabouts.

Shaq said with resignation, "Lord Linley, my royal father and I originally didn't expect the scope of this disaster to be so wide. Thus, the two meeting points we had originally designated were within the Kingdom of Fenlai's borders and are now useless. Right now, the only thing I can do is follow our original plan and keep heading north. When we reach one of the cities that was designated by me and my royal father, we will stop, if the city is safe."

Linley instantly understood.

Clayde and Shaq had designated more than one city as possible rendezvous points. They most likely designated a string of cities heading north of the city of Fenlai. Whichever city was safe would be the city they would stop at.

"Which cities did you and his Majesty designate as meeting points?" Linley asked with a laugh.

Shaq wasn't suspicious at all. He immediately said, "There were quite a few cities. Some were within the Kingdom of Fenlai, while others were in the kingdoms and dukedoms to the north. We even designated a city within the O'Brien Empire."

"The O'Brien Empire?" Linley began to laugh.

Shaq said, somewhat embarrassed, "My royal father was worried that these magical beasts might take over the territory of the entire Holy Union. If that was the case, we would be forced to flee to the O'Brien Empire. The O'Brien Empire is the empire with the strongest military force in the Yulan continent, and definitely would be able to stop those magical beasts.”

Linley knew much more than Shaq did.

The O’Brien Empire didn’t just possess a powerful military. It also had War God O’Brien.

As long as the War God was present, even that ‘King’ of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts would have to seriously consider whether or not attacking the O’Brien Empire was a good idea.

“No need to over-think it. We’ll just continue to make our way forward. When we reach a safe spot, we’ll find the nearest city that my father and I designated, then we’ll rest. Lord Linley, let’s speed up. Giddy up, giddy up!” As he spoke, Shaq sped up as well. Their hoof steps speeding up, the squad of knights quickly made their way through the wilderness.

Travelling with Shaq and his squad, Linley no longer had to personally act when they were attacked by magical beasts. Those Wildthunder troops disposed of all the attackers.

Three days later.

“Two kingdoms and three duchies have collapsed.”

Shaq and Linley had passed the Kingdom of Fenlai, the Kingdom of Hanmu, as well as two duchies. They had just entered the Dukedom of Ligaode, but here, too, no humans could be seen.

Such a huge swath of territory had fallen. This really was an astonishing event.

After all, the Holy Union only had six kingdoms and fifteen duchies to begin with.

"Growl."

"Growl."

A series of growls from magical beasts could be heard from far away, mixed with the shouts of men. Hearing those mixed sounds, Linley and Shaq immediately knew what was going on.

"There's a battle between humans and magical beasts going on up ahead." Shaq frowned. Rubbing his chin, he said, "Everyone, be careful. Let's go around them." "Yes." The members of the Wildthunder squad said respectfully.

Leading his men, Shaq carefully circled around the area in front. But when they got close to the combat area, Shaq suddenly stared at the battlefield. "Prince Louis [Luo'yi]?"

Linley also turned to pay attention to that battlefield. Another elite squad of knights was there, but unfortunately, this squad had terrible luck. They had run into a pack of Fire Lions.

Fire Lions were fire-element magical beasts of the seventh rank. They could easily blast fireballs from their mouths, and their bodies were wreathed in flame.

Although they were 'only' magical beasts of the seventh rank, magical beasts naturally were more powerful than most humans of the same rank. Even a warrior of the eighth rank would usually have to expend some effort to kill a fire-element magical beast of the seventh rank. But clearly, within that elite squad of knights, there were very few warriors of the eighth rank. The majority were of the seventh rank.

Over half of this squad of knights had died as a result of this battle against nearly twenty Fire Lions. Only a third of the Fire Lions had perished.

But although half of the knights had perished, none of the warriors of the eighth rank had. Thus, in reality, the squad of knights had only lost a third of its total combat potential.

"Stop." Shaq ordered.

The group of knights were startled, but they all nodded. The power of the Wildthunder squad, when added to Prince Louis' forces, should be enough to kill those Fire Lions without too much trouble. But what surprised them was that Shaq didn't permit them to do battle right away.

Another half of Prince Louis' men had died or been injured, including two warriors of the eighth rank. Half of the Fire Lions had died as well. Only now did Shaq give the order.

"Let's go. Rescue Prince Louis." Shaq suddenly ordered his men.

"Yes!"

Instantly, the Wildthunder squad began to charge. With the added strength of these thirty-plus warriors, ten of them of the eighth rank, five of the Fire Lions were instantly killed. The rest, seeing the writing on the wall, quickly turned tail and fled.

"Prince Shaq, thank you, thank you!"

Prince Louis was an extremely handsome young man, but right now, he looked to be in a very sorry state. Upon seeing Shaq, Louis was so grateful that he ran over to hug him.

"Prince Louis, alas, I saw your squad of knights attacked from quite far away, but due to self-preservation considerations, I hesitated for a while. Only after I saw it was you did I order my men to come attack. I hope you won't blame me." Shaq said very 'honestly'. He regretfully added, "If I had come a bit earlier, you would've lost fewer men."

Earlier, Shaq and his knights had waited far away for quite a while. How could experts like Louis and his men not be aware?

In his heart, Louis had borne a grudge towards Shaq, but now, hearing him say this, Louis somewhat believed him.

It made sense.

After such a disaster had occurred, who would go rescue someone who had no relation to one's self?

"Prince Shaq, no need to say such things. I am already extremely grateful. If it weren't for you, most likely only two or three of us would be remaining. Hey, no need. We can take care of our own people's corpses." Seeing one of Shaq's men actually go and remove the bags from the corpses of their own volition, Louis shouted out at them.

As soon as the Fire Lions had fled, those few lucky survivors of Prince Louis' force immediately went to remove the bags from the corpses of the deceased, then put them on.

This naturally raised Shaq's suspicions.

Why bring the bags of the deceased? Thus, he ordered that man to go remove some of the bags. Indeed, it had agitated Prince Louis. "Alright, here you go." Shaq's knight immediately handed the bag over. When Louis' knight received the bag, he glared angrily at Shaq's knight.

Seeing this, Shaq only laughed coldly in his heart.

This was too easy to guess.

Very few royal clans were in possession of an interspatial ring. The royal clan of Fenlai had only managed to acquire one through great luck. Now that disaster had struck, naturally these royal clans would want to take the treasures in their treasuries with them. Without interspatial rings, the only option was to carry them in bags. For Prince Louis to be so agitated about these bags most likely meant that he was having his subordinates carry important treasures of the Kingdom of Hanmu.

“Not too many men left. 100% chance of success.” Shaq looked at Louis’ men. He had already made his decision.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 13, A Major Treasure

“Prince Shaq, thank you once again for your assistance. Let us part ways here.” Prince Louis said with a smile.

Shaq’s face immediately turned stern. Unhappily, he said, “Prince Louis, what’s the rush? Right now, this area is covered with magical beasts, and you only have seven people left. If you meet any more magical beasts on the road, it’ll be very dangerous. Come along with us. With our combined strength, we will be safer as well.”

Prince Louis hurriedly said, “Prince Shaq, no...”

“Don’t refuse. Otherwise, I’ll get angry.” Shaq said with a stern, angry look.

Prince Louis looked very awkward, but in his heart, he was furious. He, Prince Louis, wasn’t an idiot. He knew that his subordinates’ earlier actions of collecting off the bags of the deceased had aroused suspicion.

It was true.

The bags of his subordinates contained the major treasures of the royal clan of the Kingdom of Hanmu. The royal clan of Hanmu had been in existence for over a thousand years. Although its history wasn’t as long as that of the royal clan of Fenlai, it still possessed an astonishing amount of wealth and major treasures. However, their royal clan didn’t have any interspatial rings, and so they had to carry their treasures with them.

Actually, in such a chaotic period, the various noble clans of Fenlai and Hanmu had all thrown their valuables and magicrystal cards in bags and fled. The number of people in the entire continent who had interspatial rings was very low. Even a powerful entity such as the Proulx Gallery had only one, belonging to Managing Director Maia.

"This Shaq is full of bad intentions." Louis was extremely worried.

He wanted to refuse, but he was afraid that Shaq really would have a falling out with him.

A knight by the side of Prince Louis nudged him, then stepped forward. This knight was the instructor for Prince Louis. "Since Prince Shaq is so sincere, then we shall travel alongside your squad. Only, we're sorry to have troubled you, Prince Shaq."

"No trouble at all. Haha, let's go together." Shaq laughed loudly.

Just judging from appearances alone, this two-meter tall, burly man looked like a foolish boor. But having grown up in the royal clan, how could Shaq truly be foolish? He, too, could guess what the other party was thinking. Nonetheless, he led everyone travelling north.

"Boss, the atmosphere seems really weird." Bebe said mentally to Linley.

Linley laughed inwardly. That Prince Louis didn't dare to offend Prince Shaq too much, but he had to be careful so as to prevent Prince Shaq from acting against him. Naturally, this expedition became rather..

special. Watching both sides, Linley knew exactly what was going on.

After chatting for a while with Prince Louis, Prince Shaq separated, then rode over to Linley. In a low voice, he said, "Lord Linley, did you see?"

"See? See what?" Linley looked at Shaq.

After making sure that no one belonging to Prince Louis was nearby, Prince Shaq said in a low voice, "The royal clan of Hanmu is in flight. They surely took with them many of the major treasures they accumulated over their thousand years of existence. In my estimation, those knights' bags are all filled with major treasures." Linley knew that the existence of the Golden Bank of the Four Empires had made magicrystal cards quite popular.

Even large clans and royal clans used magicrystal cards. To these clans who possessed hundreds of millions of gold coins in wealth, most treasures weren't a big deal. For example, when they were fleeing, these nobles couldn't be bothered to bring something like Blueheart Grass, which was worth 100,000 gold coins.

The only things they would take were the most important treasures, all worth over a million gold coins, such as magicite cores of magical beasts of the ninth rank or of the Saint-level, or perhaps treasures from other planes. Or divine artifacts...

"Lord Linley, as long as you are willing to assist, when we divide the treasures, naturally you will have a share as well. No. Two shares. What do you say? In my view, those treasures must be worth several million gold coins at least." Shaq said in a low voice.

Shaq knew very well what an astonishing amount of wealth a royal clan possessed. Because in his own hands, there were five hundred million gold coins in magicrystal cards.

The Kingdom of Hanmu wasn't inferior to the Kingdom of Fenlai. They probably possessed the same amount of wealth. How could the major treasures they carried out be of low quality?

"Fine." Linley nodded. "When you plan to make your move, notify me as to what you wish."

Hearing this, Shaq was extremely excited.

Perhaps when they were fleeing, magi were hindrances, but when they were able to engage in a battle, their power was astonishing. Linley was a dual-element magus of the seventh rank. With their opponents totally caught off-guard, he alone could probably kill half of them.

Linley carefully inspected those seven people on Prince Louis' side. Right now, each of them were carrying four or five bags. In particular...

"Hrm?"

Linley suddenly noticed that the sound of hoof steps of one middle-aged man's horse was particularly loud. In addition, that horse seemed more tired than the other horses as well. More importantly, that middle-aged man had another horse running alongside him! He had two horses to himself!

Clearly, this middle-aged man needed to frequently change horses.

“These horses are both fine horses. Even if they were carrying three or four people, they would gallop like the wind. Why would this middle-aged man cause these horses to be so tired, to the point where he would have to frequently change horses?” Linley instantly understood the reason.

This middle-aged man was very heavy.

Or, to put it another way, the things he was carrying was very heavy. “But this middle-aged man is only carrying a short sword. Can it be that within his bags...” Linley’s only explanation was that the four bags the middle-aged man was carrying included something extremely heavy.

The wind howled.

Both Prince Louis’ and Prince Shaq’s men had retired for the night. No matter how strong one was, they would still need rest. Prince Louis’ and his six warriors all rested together, while Prince Shaq’s men were divided into four or five units. These two forces were located in separate areas.

“Master, when should we leave?” Prince Louis said in a soft voice. The other five men were all feigning sleep.

“Wait a bit longer. When they’ve all fallen asleep, we’ll mount and leave.” That middle-aged man said quietly.

Fleeing into the dark night was a very common strategy. It was a common strategy because many people used it...and many people used it because it was effective!

The thirty people on Prince Shaq's side were feigning sleep as well. Not a single one of them was truly asleep. Everyone knew that there would be a battle they had to fight tonight.

"Lord Linley." Prince Shaq was by Linley's side. He called out to Linley in a soft voice.

"Hrm?" Linley turned to look at Shaq.

Prince Shaq continued, "Lord Linley, prepare to secretly cast a magic spell. This will catch them off-guard and make them suffer heavy losses. And then, my squad will charge over and finish them off. Lord Linley, it's up to you now."

"Fine." Linley nodded.

A sudden sneak attack via magic at night was something which opponents definitely would not be able to foresee.

Linley's lips began to move slightly as he quietly began to chant the words to a magical spell. By his side, Prince Shaq could only wait impatiently. Poor Prince Louis and his men actually wanted to wait a while longer and flee after Prince Shaq and his men had fallen asleep.

"Swish! Swish! Swish!"

In a circular area with a radius of ten meters, dozens of sharp earthen spears suddenly jutted out of the ground. "Ah!" A series of agonized screams sounded out as those sharp earthen spears suddenly pierced through those warriors' bodies, and one of them was directly impaled through and through. That poor Prince Louis was instantly killed as well by those spears. He was, after all, the weakest person amongst them.

The thickly clustered array of earthen spears was enough to freeze one's heart.

Earth-style magic of the seventh rank – Earthen Spear Array.

Four of the seven people in Prince Louis' party died in agony on the spot, while the three remaining warriors of the eighth rank suffered serious injuries as well, due to being caught off-guard.

"Kill!"

The thirty members of the Wildthunder squad were previously feigning sleep, but hearing those miserable screams, they all charged towards the other camp as though they had received orders. They immediately attacked those three wounded warriors of the eighth rank, in a thirty against three fight.

This wasn't a fair contest at all. What's more, the Wildthunder squad had ten warriors of the eighth rank.

"Slice." "Slice."

Those three wounded warriors of the eighth rank were easily killed. They were barely able to resist at all.

"Second Prince, all of them are dead now." The captain of the Wildthunder squad, an energetic, golden-haired middle-aged man reported.

Shaq was overjoyed. "Haha, wonderful! Quick, bring those bags over to me. For this action alone, I will award all of you a hundred thousand gold coins. When we reunite with my royal father, I will disburse the gold." Shaq was extremely excited.

There were thirty people in the Wildthunder squad. A hundred thousand gold coins each was only a total of three million gold coins. But the wealth contained within those ten bags surely was worth more than a hundred million gold coins.

"Come, Lord Linley. You pick two bags first." Shaq said very magnanimously to Linley.

The usefulness of a magus in pitched group battles had been totally put on display. This sneak attack by magic of Linley's had killed four and heavily injured the remaining three. If Shaq had ordered his men to directly attack, quite a few of them probably would've died.

Linley walked directly over to Prince Louis' master's corpse, the middle-aged man. He hefted each of the four bags. As he did so, Linley indeed noticed something strange. Three of the bags were very light, very ordinary.

But the last bag...it seemed very small, and the object inside was only the size of a man's palm, but its weight...was over a thousand pounds.

"Something the size of a hand but over a thousand pounds in weight?"

Linley was stunned.

He had never heard of anything this dense and heavy. Even gold and diamonds were much lighter than this material. The size of a hand, but over a thousand pounds...

"Lord Linley?" Shaq walked over. "Have you chosen?"

"No need to choose. I'll just go with these two." Linley randomly grabbed another bag from the remaining three, then slung the two bags over his back.

Seeing this, Shaq felt very happy as well. What he worried about the most was that Linley would open every single bag to take a look inside, then make his decision. This would be quite unfair to him. But Linley had just casually hefted the bags on a single person, then chose two of them.

All of Shaq's subordinates were now carrying bags.

"Let's go." Shaq was now in a wonderful mood.

Linley was riding on a horse as well, but while riding the horse, Linley had cast the Floating Technique on himself. Given his power as a magus of the seventh rank, using a spell of the fifth rank was extremely easy. Linley used the levitational powers of the Floating Technique to counteract the extra weight of that mysterious object.

This allowed the horse he was riding to continue galloping without strain.

"Grandpa Doebling." Linley immediately pressed him. "Take a look and see what I have inside these two new bags of mine?"

"Oh, you got some treasures?" Doebling Cowart, who had been napping inside the Coiling Dragon ring, was suddenly full of energy. He immediately used his spiritual energy to directly sense what was inside Linley's two bags.

"Within that first bag is a brocade box wrapped in several layers of cloth. Inside the box there is a matching pair of beautiful jade crystals. They should have quite the history, but I don't know where they are from." Doebling Cowart said.

"The second bag...ah?!"

Doebling Cowart cried out in surprise. "What is it?" Linley's heart clenched in excitement. He knew that the second bag had to be the one containing the strange item weighing over a thousand pounds, because the item inside the second bag wasn't a perfectly rectangular box.

"Adamantine. Adamantine ore. There's actually a fist-sized chunk of adamantine ore in the Yulan continent. This...this is astonishing.”

Doehring Cowart said in amazement.

Hearing the words ‘adamantine’, Linley’s heart clenched yet again. Adamantine didn’t actually exist in the material plane. It only came from other planes, and it was so tough and durable that supposedly even most Deity-level combatants couldn’t easily break it. When he was jailed in the Radiant Temple, that lock with some adamantine alloyed into it would’ve been hard for even a Saint-level combatant to break. From this, one could tell how tough adamantine was.

“A fist-sized chunk of adamantine ore. This...this is more valuable than even a Saint-level magicite core. How could there be such a huge chunk in the world?” Doehring Cowart simply couldn’t believe it.

“A fist-sized chunk is ‘huge’?” Linley was rather confused.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 14, The City of Hess

Doehring Cowart was rendered momentarily speechless by Linley's question.

"Linley, I must tell you, if a weapon has just a little bit of adamantine alloyed into it, the weapon's durability will increase to a very high level. If a weapon were to be totally made out of adamantine, even if you gave it to a Saint-level combatant and let him try to break it, he wouldn't be able to scratch it, no matter how long he tried."

Doehring Cowart was very resigned.

Linley clearly didn't fully appreciate how valuable adamantine was.

"Then, Grandpa Doehring, can I use this adamantine to forge a 'heavy sword'?" After listening to Doehring Cowart previously explain the benefits to using heavy weapons, Linley wanted to acquire a heavy sword of his own. Originally, Linley was planning to spend some money and buy a good one. But now that he had this chunk of 'adamantine', naturally he had to put it to good use.

Right now, Linley didn't lack for money.

"Forge a heavy sword with adamantine? A heavy sword is rather large, and will most likely need this chunk of adamantine to be mixed with some other metals. But of course, I don't know anything about blacksmithing myself. However, I have heard that forging weapons out of adamantine is extremely difficult. Adamantine is extremely tough. Most master weaponsmiths are not capable of melting and reforging it.” Doehring Cowart chuckled.

Linley nodded to himself.

Adamantine was a material which even Deity-level combatants supposedly would find tough to break. But since it was possible for adamantine to be forged into a weapon, naturally there had to be a special technique for it as well. Only, the technique was probably too difficult.

“Got it.” Linley nodded.

....

Linley and Second Prince Shaq continued speeding northwards, and the farther north they went, the sparser the magical beasts became. After travelling another three or four hundred kilometers without a single magical beast appearing, they reached an area where the local cities and towns hadn’t had any people die.

But these villages and towns were very sparsely populated. Most likely, people were afraid of the danger and had moved northwards as well.

“Haha, good, it seems the Kingdom of Hess hasn’t fallen.” Shaq laughed loudly. “It’s been quite a few days. Finally we can rest.”

Shaq looked at Linley.

Seated on his horse, Linley seemed as solid and unmovable as an old oak, not wavering in the slightest, seeming very stable. His face was calm, and he had been silent, giving him a reliable, taciturn aura. Towards Linley, Shaq had always felt a hint of dread. Although he was a few years older than Linley, he always respectfully addressed Linley as 'Master Linley'.

"Master Linley, look. That's a military camp up ahead." Shaq and Linley were riding side by side.

Linley nodded.

The Radiant Church had clearly decided to set up a line of defense here at the borders of the Kingdom of Hess. Seeing those countless military camps lining the border, one could tell how many soldiers had been deployed here.

"Two kingdoms and five duchies lost. That's about a third of the territory of the Holy Union. I expect the Radiant Church isn't willing to retreat any further." Linley chuckled. Linley and the knights made their way through the guarded pass, and were quickly allowed in.

This guarded pass was to defend against magical beasts.

Naturally, no humans would be denied entry.

"Second Prince, shall we rest here?" Linley seemed very tranquil.

"The city of Hess is one of the agreed upon places that my royal father and I settled upon. We still have around three hundred kilometers before arriving at Hess City. If we hurry, we should be able to reach there by nightfall today." Shaq said unguardedly.

"Hess City!"

Linley memorized this name. "Clayde. Hess City shall be where you die."

.....

They continued their journey. Linley, Shaq, and the thirty mounted knights kicked up a trail of dust in their wake. By the time Linley and Shaq saw the city of Hess, the sun was just setting, casting its red glow upon the earth.

"Hess City, the capital of the Kingdom of Hess. It's only slightly smaller than Fenlai City." Seeing the silhouettes of the enormous city walls, Linley couldn't help but be awed.

How much manpower had it taken to erect such giant walls?

Arriving at the gate to Hess City, Linley and his squad found their way barred.

"Dismount!" A gate guard of Hess City ordered in a loud voice.

"Why should we dismount?" Shaq shouted back angrily.

The gate guard saw that Shaq's group was definitely an extraordinary one, and thus answered the question. "His Highness has ordered that no horses may be ridden within the boundaries of Hess City. Everyone, right now Hess City is overflowing with people. There's simply not enough space to ride horses. It's best if you all dismount."

"Let's dismount." Linley smiled at Shaq.

Shaq nodded.

Linley and Shaq could both imagine that many people had fled here from the two ruined kingdoms and the six destroyed duchies. Most likely many of the people living near Hess City had fled here as well. Those two kingdoms and six duchies possessed a combined population of hundreds of millions.

Even if 90% had died, millions would have survived. And of course, there had been no magical beast sightings within hundreds of kilometers of the Kingdom of Hess, so virtually all of the people who lived in that area had survived.

"So many people."

Stepping into Hess City, Linley and Shaq and the knights were all shocked. Hess City normally could only accommodate at most a million people. But by Linley's calculations, right now there were at least several million people within the city, because every single street was clogged. Even in the city of Fenlai, Linley had never seen anything like this.

"Go find a hotel first, then come back here to pick me up." Shaq immediately ordered his men to go reserve a hotel suite.

"Lord Linley, let's go eat dinner first." Shaq said with a laugh, and of course Linley wouldn't refuse. Shaq immediately led Linley and the others to a nearby restaurant. The bottom floor of this restaurant was full, but there were still dining rooms available in the upper levels.

"Three rooms." Shaq said magnanimously.

But when they sat down and Shaq saw the prices on the menu, he was somewhat flabbergasted. Shaq grabbed the nearest waiter and shouted angrily, "Do you take me for an idiot? With prices like this, a table of dishes would cost several thousand gold coins. You are trying to cheat me!"

Although this restaurant was a high class one, Shaq, as a prince, had naturally been to many high class restaurants.

For a restaurant of this class, a hundred gold coins a table was generally more than enough.

"Milord, if you don't wish to eat, you can leave." The waiter seemed very confident. "Right now, Hess City is filled to the brim with people, including countless nobles who fled here with their valuables. All of them demand high quality service and are willing to pay for it."

Shaq was instantly stunned by these words.

Right. The people who had managed to flee from the two kingdoms and the three duchies most likely all belonged to powerful clans or were powerful combatants themselves. Those powerful clans naturally wouldn't penny-pinch.

"Hmph."

Shaq snorted, but still placed his orders in the end. After Shaq and Linley had finished eating their meals...

"Your Highness, Second Prince." The people who had gone looking for a hotel came back.

"And? Have you found a place?" Shaq asked.

That guard shook his head. "All of the rooms in the major hotels have been booked. Although we only went to five large hotels, we could already tell this wouldn't work. There were too many people trying to make reservations. Your Highness, we arrived at Hess City too late. The members of the clans belonging to the five duchies and the Kingdom of Hanmu arrived much faster than us."

Shaq nodded.

"Sit and eat first." Shaq turned to look at another guard, one with short jade hair. "Are you full yet? If you are, help me find a manor and buy it. I expect the prices here within Hess City will be quite high, but no matter how pricy it is, buy it. Remember, though; don't buy something which is too gaudy and too large. This manor will only be a temporary lodging place for myself and my royal father.”

“Yes, your Highness.” The guard acknowledged, and then left to find a manor.

Linley quietly drank his wine, watching everything.

“A manor? I wonder which manor it will be. When Clayde comes, most likely he will head to that manor as well.” By finding out the place where Clayde was going to stay, all he would need to do was lie in wait. When the opportunity came, he would send Clayde to his death.

.....

Hess City. A very ordinary manor on Keyan Road.

Under normal conditions, a manor in Hess City like this which was not located in the city center would generally be worth two or three hundred thousand gold coins. But Prince Shaq had to pay a million gold coins just to buy it. A large number of nobles and magnates had entered Hess City, causing inflation to skyrocket.

That night.

Linley also stayed in this manor for now.

“That Clayde, after he comes, should be residing in one of these two or three rooms." Linley was walking in the middle of the manor, carefully inspecting its internal layout. He was making preparations for killing Clayde in the future.

The night wind was cool and refreshing, but Linley ignored it, only paying attention to the location and layout of every part of this manor.

"Lord Linley, why haven't you rested yet?" That enchanting consort said to Linley in a soft voice, standing in the doorway to her room.

"Found being in my room to be too stuffy. Thought I'd get some fresh air." Linley replied casually.

"I also feel it's rather stuffy." That consort walked out of her room towards Linley. Her coquettish gaze only made Linley feel apprehensive, and he immediately said, "Then Royal Consort, you should get some air. I'll go back to my room and get some rest now." After he spoke, Linley immediately left.

Watching Linley leave, the consort couldn't help but let out a little hmp of displeasure.

....

The next morning.

"Second Prince, Royal Consort, Princess. I have some things to take care of, so I'll leave now." Linley bid his farewells.

"Lord Linley, why are you in such a rush to leave? Wait for my royal father to come back first, then decide." Shaq immediately tried to convince him to stay.

Linley laughed coldly inside. "Wait for your royal father? If Clayde saw that I was living here, I probably would have to openly attack and kill him. The chance of killing him openly is lower than assassinating him." Linley had already had enough setbacks.

This time, Linley wanted to be absolutely certain of success.

"This time, I'll have to endure and be patient. I'll wait for the moment when Clayde and Kaiser aren't together. When Clayde is alone, I'll kill him. That will definitely be successful." Linley knew that so long as Kaiser was there, he wouldn't be able to kill Clayde quickly.

But as long as Kaiser was not present, he definitely would succeed.

"Then where are you going, Lord Linley?" Shaq asked.

"I plan to leave Hess City and continue north. As for where exactly, I'm not yet sure." Linley replied. "Alright. Second Prince, Royal Consort, Princess. I bid you farewell."

Bowing slightly, Linley led Bebe away from the manor.

.....

That very night, Linley moved into a small courtyard on the same street as Shaq's manor. The manor which Shaq had bought took up a large amount of space, enough to very comfortably fit thirty people. But the house which Linley bought was very small, only enough for three or four people.

This little courtyard had still cost Linley 50,000 gold coins. In normal times, a few thousand coins would have been enough.

"Ah Da, Ah Er, have you seen anyone new enter the manor?" Linley was seated at his dinner table as he asked these two men.

"No."

Linley had casually picked these two men up from the streets for his employ. Right now, in Hess City, there were many commoners as well as nobles. After fleeing here, those commoners had no food to eat and place to live. All they could do was beg or do manual labor. Thus, it was easy for Linley to find people to work for him. A salary of two gold coins each day, with food and board included, was an opportunity which any of these impoverished refugees would have fought for.

Linley saw that these two men seemed the reliable sort, and so had chosen them.

"At night, you can sleep, but by day, keep a close watch. As long as any strangers enter the manor, especially in large numbers, you have to inform me. Pay special attention to a man who has only one hand." Linley repeated his instructions.

There was no need to keep a watch at night, because the gates to Hess City were barred shut at night.

And Linley was confident that with two people watching during the day, as long as Clayde's men arrived, he would definitely find out. Shaq and his people believed that Linley had really left the city, but in reality, Linley continued his watch from a courtyard very near them.

"Clayde, I'll just keep waiting here for as long as it takes. Let's see how long it takes you to get here." Linley's gaze was cold.

Seeing the look on Linley's face, those two brothers shuddered.

"Go." Linley ordered.

"Yes, milord."

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 15, The Clan of the Violetflame Warriors

A sky-blue magus robe and a magistaff in hand.

This was how Linley was dressed now as he walked on the streets.

On this outing, Bebe had stayed behind in the little courtyard on Keyan Road. Linley's instructions were for Bebe to instantly tell him once Clayde appeared. Given the soul link between Linley and Bebe, no matter how far apart they were, they would be able to sense each other's thoughts.

Today, Linley had made this outing for the sake of his 'heavy sword'.

"Hrm?" Linley noticed a weapons shop nearby and immediately went inside.

The weapons shop's business was quite average. There were only two customers inside inspecting the various weapons. Linley went straight to the counter and asked calmly, "In Hess City, who is the best weaponsmith around?"

The store clerk glanced at Linley. Realizing he was a magus, the shopkeeper immediately said courteously, "Milord magus, the master blacksmith of our shop possesses very high skills. There's no weapon that he cannot forge."

"My question was, in Hess City, who is the best blacksmith around?"

Linley's face turned cold. "If your so-called master blacksmith is unable to produce the weapon I need, don't blame me when I wreck your shop."

The store clerk was frightened by Linley's words. Previously, he had wanted to try and win a customer, but now he no longer dared to make any rash claims. "Milord magus, the number one blacksmith of Hess City resides in West Hess City. His name is Master Corby [Ke'er'bi], and his weapons shop is quite close to the Radiant Temple."

"Corby?" Linley memorized this name. He immediately left.

"But milord magus." That store clerk said in a quiet voice.

"Hrm?" Linley turned his head to look at the clerk, curious what he had to say.

The store clerk said respectfully, "Milord magus, if you want a good magistaff, you should go to a magic weapons store. These weapons are all meant for warriors to choose from." In the eyes of this store clerk, it was very strange indeed for a magus to not only want a weapon, but to want one made by a master blacksmith.

The weapon of a magus was his magistaff.

And in order to produce a magistaff, one needed high skills in alchemy.

Linley's lips curved upwards in a smile, and he left the weapons store.

Half an hour later, Linley arrived near the Radiant Temple in the west part of the city. Based on Linley's investigations, the Holy Emperor of the Radiant Church and the other Saint-level combatants hadn't arrived in Hess City yet. Supposedly, only a single Cardinal had arrived here, but to better assist the ruler of the Kingdom of Hess, he had taken residence along with the soldiers at the border.

As for where that group of Saint-level combatants of the Radiant Church had gone, no one knew.

"I really hope that 'King' of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts killed a few of those Saint-levels." Linley secretly said to himself. The Holy Emperor Heidens had used the Divine Baptism against Linley. Although Linley didn't know what exactly it had been meant to do, he knew that the divine power of it had tried to merge into his very soul.

His soul.

This was the most important core of a person. Linley was certain that Heidens had been up to no good.

"This is the weapons store of the so-called number one blacksmith in Hess City?" Linley glanced at the weapons store. The store was tens of meters long, and on each side of the door there were two powerfully built warriors in beautifully wrought armor standing guard, weapons in hand.

This weapons store did indeed seem quite impressive. Clearly, it was much better than the store which Linley had gone into just a while earlier.

Entering the weapons store, Linley saw that the attendant was a beautiful young woman. The woman's eyes lit up when she saw how Linley was dressed, and she courteously said, "Milord magus, what sort of weapon do you desire? Come with me. We have all sorts of beautiful court rapiers."

Linley chuckled with resignation.

It seemed this woman thought that he was nothing more than a magus who wanted a weapon to play around with.

"I heard your Master Corby is here?" Linley said directly to the woman.

The attendant nodded. "Right. Master Corby is the head blacksmith here, and he is definitely the number one blacksmith within the city of Hess. I've never heard of Master Corby being unable to forge a weapon of any sort."

"Oh? Have Master Corby come out. I wish for him to make me a weapon." Linley said immediately.

"Have...have Master Corby come out?" The attendant laughed awkwardly. "Milord magus, Master Corby never comes out to meet with customers. If you wish to meet with Master Corby, you'll have to go find him yourself. And...if you want to meet Master Corby, you need to spend some money, as otherwise, he won't meet with you."

Linley had to admit that this man really did know how to put on airs.

"Fine. How much money for me to go meet him?" Linley asked directly.

"Not much. Fifty gold coins." The attendant said.

Fifty gold coins was nothing to those members of rich clans, but this price was enough for a commoner to survive off of for a year or two.

"Fifty?" Linley withdrew a sack of gold from his clothes. This sack contained a hundred pieces of gold. Linley poured out fifty, then instructed, "Lead the way." Linley usually only carried a hundred gold coins on him. He had magiccrystal cards on him, after all. If he needed any more, he could go withdraw it.

"Yes, milord magus." The attendant was extremely happy.

....

Five minutes later, guided by the attendant, Linley arrived at a very plain-looking residence. The guard to the residence clearly was familiar with the attendant, and let them in immediately.

When Linley saw Master Corby, the man was reclining on a chair while sipping a cup of tea. This Corby's hair was totally white, but the powerful muscles bulging from his body showed that he was still a powerful warrior.

Most weaponsmiths were extremely powerful warriors.

"Master Corby, this lord magus wishes to meet with you." The attendant said respectfully.

Corby glanced at Linley and laughed. "Youngster, my fees are quite high. If you want me to forge a weapon for you, at the very least it will cost you ten thousand gold coins."

Linley could sense this Master Corby's approximate level of power.

If he wasn't a warrior of the seventh rank, then he was one of the eighth.

"Fine." Linley nodded. "But this weapon will use special materials. Right. Can the other people here leave?"

"Of course." Master Corby nodded at his servants, who immediately left.

Master Corby looked at Linley curiously. "Youngster, what special materials do you bring?"

"Adamantine." Linley said directly.

Previously sitting lazily on his chair, Master Corby suddenly shot to his feet as though thunderstruck. He stared at Linley in amazement. "What did you just say? Adamantine? Did I hear you correctly?" Adamantine was a material that appeared only in legends. He, Corby, had been a weaponsmith his entire life, but hadn't seen any.

"Right. I intend to use adamantine to forge a weapon. Are you capable of doing so?" Linley looked expectantly at Master Corby.

Master Corby hesitated for a moment, but in the end, he sighed and said, "Youngster, I actually do not have the ability to smith adamantine." Hearing these words, Linley couldn't help but feel disappointed.

"Youngster, can...can you show the adamantine to me?" Corby said somewhat awkwardly.

Linley could understand the desire of a master blacksmith like Corby to see adamantine with his own eyes. He immediately removed the adamantine chunk from his bag and handed it over to Master Corby. This thousand-pound chunk of adamantine didn't seem to be heavy at all to Linley.

However, when the totally unprepared Master Corby accepted the chunk of adamantine, his hand couldn't help but sink down.

"It really is heavy." Master Corby recovered and easily lifted it back up.

But Corby still glanced at Linley in surprise. For this Linley to be able to hold this heavy chunk of adamantine so easily meant that he was at least a warrior of the sixth rank.

"Adamantine. Having seen it, I'm satisfied." Corby stared lovingly at the chunk of adamantine, but in the end he returned it to Linley. In truth, Corby did feel a hint of greed and desire for it, but he knew that for Linley to so casually hand it to him meant that Linley wasn't worried at all about being unable to get it back.

What's more, Corby also knew that he didn't have the ability to smith this adamantine chunk.

"Master Corby, do you know who is capable of smithing adamantine?" Linley asked.

Corby considered for a moment. "From what I know, the Radiant Church has specialized master weaponsmiths. The Radiant Church has a long history and it should possess the techniques needed to smith adamantine. I expect that the master weaponsmiths belonging to the Four Great Empires and to the Cult of Shadows should all be in possession of such techniques as well."

Linley nodded.

"Farewell, then." Linley left, somewhat disappointed.

Linley knew from the beginning that adamantine wasn't so easily smelted, and so he had made some mental preparations. Departing from this location, he headed back towards his own residence. But halfway back, Linley suddenly heard a familiar voice.

"Third Bro."

Linley immediately turned his head to look.

Yale, George, and Reynolds were staring back at him in astonishment.

"Boss Yale. Second Bro. Fourth Bro." Linley immediately ran over excitedly. He didn't expect to be able to meet with his dear bros again. Under Yale's invitation, Linley decided to go to the Dawson Conglomerate's headquarters to have a good meal with his bros.

Within a very secluded manor.

Linley, Yale, Reynolds, and George were all happily exchanging stories of recent events.

"You want to find a master weaponsmith? Mm, I don't know any either." Yale shook his head.

Reynolds said questioningly, "Third Bro, you said adamantine? What is adamantine?"

Neither Reynolds, nor Yale, nor George had ever heard of adamantine.

Adamantine was simply too rare and too precious.

"Linley, we just barely had a chance to meet last time. Only today do I have the opportunity to have a good chat with a genius like you." Monroe Dawson walked in from the main hall, holding his big belly and chuckling. "Hey, did you just say adamantine?"

Linley nodded. "Lord Chairman, I managed to acquire some adamantine and plan to use it to forge a weapon. But I'm not able to find a master weaponsmith capable of forging it."

"Oh."

What sort of a person was Monroe Dawson? How could he not know what adamantine was? "You actually address me as Chairman? You and Yale are like brothers! Just call me Uncle. You say you need to find a master weaponsmith who can smelt adamantine? I happen to know one."

Linley actually didn't feel too excited upon hearing this.

Because even if Monroe Dawson knew a person, that person most likely wasn't in the city of Hess.

"Uncle Monroe, who is that master weaponsmith?" Linley asked.

Monroe Dawson grinned. "That master weaponsmith is known as Master Vincente [Wei'lin'te], the leader of the Hyde clan."

"Vincente?" Linley was a bit curious.

Suddenly, Linley started. "Uncle Dawson, what clan did you just say he belonged to?"

"The Hyde clan." Monroe Dawson replied with a chortle.

Linley had totally memorized that book he had read back in his clan's manor which introduced the Four Supreme Warriors. One piece of information included within was the clan names of the Four Supreme Warriors. The Violetflame Warriors clan...was the Hyde clan! However... there was more than one clan named 'Hyde', and thus this Hyde clan wasn't necessarily the clan of the Violetflame Warriors.

"You thought of them? Haha. Right. This Hyde clan is just like your Baruch clan. They are a clan of Supreme Warriors. The Hyde clan lived within a small city in the Holy Union's Kingdom of Hanmu. After this catastrophe, they fled here to Hess City." Monroe Dawson said with a laugh.

"They are here in Hess City?" Linley was surprised.

"And they are living right next to my manor. I personally arranged for them to be put there." Monroe Dawson continued.

Linley stared at Monroe Dawson in astonishment.

Actually, Monroe Dawson knew several people who were capable of smelting adamantine. The master weaponsmith of the Dawson Conglomerate was capable of smelting adamantine as well. But none of those other people whom Monroe Dawson knew were currently in Hess City. Thus, Monroe Dawson only mentioned this one person.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 16, The Furnace

Linley was in a dire need of a good weapon, and so Monroe Dawson decided to immediately take Linley to Master Vincente. Monroe Dawson, Linley, Yale, George, and Reynolds all went in a group to a dwelling not too far away.

“Lord Chairman!” The guard at the entrance immediately bowed respectfully upon seeing Monroe Dawson.

The servants and guards of the Hyde clan had been personally arranged for by Monroe Dawson. They all belonged to the Dawson Conglomerate to begin with.

“Lord Dawson has arrived?” A middle-aged man who had been quietly lying in rest in the front courtyard instantly scrambled to his feet and walked over. His face filled with gratitude, he said, “Lord Dawson, if you want to see me, all you have to do is send someone for me. I would just come to your place.”

This Vincente truly did feel grateful towards Monroe Dawson.

In this past half year, Monroe Dawson had been extremely friendly and courteous towards his Hyde clan, but hadn’t required anything of them. In particular, when they had fled for their lives, if the Dawson Conglomerate hadn’t assisted them while they were in the Kingdom of Hanmu, perhaps many more members of the Hyde clan would have died.

"Haha, let's talk inside." Monroe Dawson slapped Vincente on the shoulders.

"Alright."

Other members of the Hyde clan, such as Vincente's father, and Vincente's two sons all came out.

"Come, Mr. Vincente, let me make some introductions." Monroe Dawson beamed as he pointed at Linley. "The three of you should already know my son, but this one here is that genius magus I have often mentioned to you. He is..."

"Linley of the Baruch clan, a master sculptor and a genius magus." Vincente continued.

Vincente turned his eyes to Linley. Even Vincente's father and his two children turned to stare at Linley in awe.

"Linley, I imagine you know about our Hyde clan." There was a very special sentiment visible in Vincente's eyes. Although both the Hyde clan and the Baruch clan had decayed in power over the years, in their heart, they were filled with pride and a certain type of arrogance.

The clans of the Four Supreme Warriors had five thousand years of history!

No matter how far they had fallen, this sort of innate pride and arrogance sprung from their hearts.

Two descendants of two Supreme Warrior clans looked at each other, sharing a very special moment.

"The Violetflame Warrior clan." Linley said modestly. "In the books passed down within our Baruch clan, there are careful descriptions regarding the Hyde clan, one of our fellow Supreme Warrior clans."

Hearing these words, Vincente couldn't help but feel as though he had been given quite a bit of face, and felt all the more well-disposed towards Linley. "Linley, let me introduce you. This is my eldest son, Yotian [Yu'xing] Hyde. This is my second son, Trey [Te'lei] Hyde." Vincente clearly was very proud of his sons. "Linley, my two sons are quite talented as well. But of course, compared to you, they have quite a distance to go."

Yotian and Trey only nodded, but from the fierce look in their eyes, they clearly didn't submit to their father's claims that the two brothers were a bit inferior to Linley.

"Haha, alright, Mr. Vincente. I've come today to ask you for your help." Monroe Dawson said directly.

Vincente immediately said magnanimously, "Lord Dawson, if you need anything, just tell me. As long as I am capable, I will definitely do my best." In this past half year, the Dawson Conglomerate had helped the Hyde clan out in many matters. But the Hyde clan hadn't been able to repay them at all. After all, the Dawson Conglomerate hadn't asked them to do anything.

The feeling of owing someone wasn't a good one.

Monroe Dawson laughed while gesturing at Linley. "Linley wants a good weapon. I want to ask you to be the one to forge it for him."

"Forge a weapon?" Vincente looked at Linley. "Linley, a weapon for yourself?"

"Yes." Linley nodded.

A gratified look was in Vincente's eyes. Nodding, he said, "Right. We descendants of the Four Supreme Warriors can't be physically puny and weak. We must train as warriors, and naturally we must have a fine weapon. Tell me, what sort of weapon do you desire!"

Both Vincente, and his two sons, upon hearing that Linley was a magus genius, felt a bit of disdain towards him in their hearts. In their eyes, the Four Supreme Warriors descendants should be powerful, invincible warriors. Now that Linley was asking them to help him make a weapon, they felt very happy.

"A heavy sword." Linley said slowly. "Mr. Vincente, I am 1.9 meters tall. You decide how long the heavy sword should be. You should know what length would be most suitable to someone of my height."

Vincente was a bit surprised. "A heavy sword? Not a greatsword or a warblade?"

Greatswords and heavy swords were two different types of weapons. "A heavy sword." Linley said with certainty.

"Alright. Any other requests?" Vincente was the leader of the Hyde clan. The descendants of the Hyde clan weren't just powerful warriors; they were all extremely skilled blacksmiths as well.

Linley removed the bag he was carrying. "The materials for the heavy sword must include this."

From within the bag, Linley withdrew that fist-sized chunk of adamantine ore.

Just by looking at it, Vincente couldn't tell that this was adamantine. After all, even Vincente had never seen adamantine before. He immediately asked curiously, "What is this ore called?"

"Adamantine."

Linley replied directly.

"Adamantine?!" Vincente, his father, and his two sons all stared in astonishment at the fist-sized chunk of black rock in Linley's hands.

Vincente suppressed the excitement in his heart. Looking at Linley, he said, "Can you let me take a look?"

"Yes."

Vincente carefully accepted the chunk of adamantine. Although he had never seen adamantine before, Vincente knew that adamantine was extremely heavy, and so he had prepared himself for it. Indeed...

"At least a thousand pounds." Vincente's eyes shone. "Indeed. Adamantine is over a hundred times heavier than gold. The legends are true."

Vincente suddenly came to his senses, and he stared at Linley in astonishment. "Linley, you want to use this entire chunk of adamantine in the forging of your heavy sword?"

"Right. All of it." Linley replied.

Vincente shook his head repeatedly. "Linley, this adamantine ore is a thousand pounds by itself. Using adamantine as the base, the other materials you will need to alloy it with will have to be of high quality as well. Given the size of your heavy sword, it will most likely weigh nearly three thousand pounds. This will be my first time forging such a heavy sword. Three thousand pounds! You want it for yourself? Even most warriors of the seventh rank won't be able to use it freely. Even a warrior of the eighth rank will be slowed down by it, despite being able to wield it with ease."

"Mr. Vincente, just worry about the forging." Linley laughed.

Dragonblood Warriors were immensely strong, physically. Comparatively speaking, in terms of battle-qi, Dragonblood battle-qi was a bit weaker.

Of the Four Supreme Warriors, the Dragonblood Warriors and the Undying Warriors possessed greater strength. The founder of the Baruch clan, Baruch, was someone who had dared to fight head on against a Nine Headed Serpent Emperor and win, killing it in the end.

A Nine Headed Serpent Emperor was an incredibly large creature, with strength to match. It could be considered one of the most powerful Saint-level magical beasts in existence. But Baruch still dared to fight it head on and killed it. From this, people learned how powerful and strong the Dragonblood Warriors were. Vincente glanced at Linley, then nodded. "Within my clan, we do indeed have secret methods for forging adamantine. But it will be hard for me to acquire all of the other rare ingredients right now."

"Let me handle that." Monroe Dawson said.

Vincente nodded. Given the power and influence of the Dawson Conglomerate, procuring some ores should be very easy. Vincente looked at Linley. Solemnly, he said, "Linley, adamantine weapons are indeed very formidable. If you only use a small amount of adamantine ore in your weapon, I'll still be able to sharpen and put an edge on it. But if you want to use this much adamantine, I'm afraid that at most, I'll be able to make the edges of the sword slightly thinner. But I won't be able to put an edge on it."

A thousand-pound chunk of adamantine ore! Vincente had never even heard of such a thing.

The sturdiness of the weapon it was used to forge would be incredible. To put an edge on and sharpen such a weapon? Vincente knew his own limits.

“Unable to put an edge on it?”

Linley suddenly thought back to the records of his clan. The first Dragonblood Warrior had used a warblade to do battle, but the later Dragonblood Warriors did not. One had even used a massive warhammer, relying purely on weight and power.

A three thousand pound heavy sword would totally be a match for that warhammer of his ancestors.

“If you can’t put an edge on it, so be it.” Linley was very confident. Such a heavy sword with such weight would be able to smash magical beasts to death with sheer kinetic force when wielded by the terrifying strength of a Dragonblood Warrior.

“Good. As long as we have the other ores needed, I can immediately begin the forging for you. A single weapon won’t take more than half a day of work.” Vincente said confidently. He, Vincente, had forged countless weapons, and he was very confident in the secret forging methods of his clan.

Monroe Dawson laughed. “Vincente, then can you provide me with your secret recipe for forging adamantine now?”

“Fine. I’ll go get it now.” Vincente immediately left.

The Dawson Conglomerate’s efficiency level was terrifyingly high. Before nightfall, they had procured a large piled of quality ores. In truth, the secret forging methods of the Hyde clan didn't require any specific ores, as every material had possible replacements as well.

But the materials provided by the Dawson Conglomerate were the best of the best.

That night.

"The quality of these materials is extremely high, and all of these ores are high value ores." Staring at the ores, Vincent was so excited that his face had a ruddy glow. Laughing loudly, he said, "Linley, with such good materials to work with, I'm afraid that the heavy sword will be slightly heavier than I anticipated."

"That's fine." Linley laughed.

A weapon weighing just a bit over three thousand pounds could still be easily wielded by most warriors of the ninth rank, much less the astonishingly strong Dragonblood Warriors.

"Alright. Tomorrow morning, I'll begin." Vincent said heroically.

That night, Linley didn't go back to his own manor. He chatted mentally with Bebe, who very obediently stayed home and didn't come over. As far as Bebe was concerned, right now his life consisted of eat, sleep, eat, sleep. This was the type of life he liked.

Early morning. The sky slowly brightened.

Those three Hyde clan members, father and two sons, were bare-chested as they began the forging process. Vincente was the primary worker, while Yotian and Trey assisted on the sides. The flames spat forth by the bellows were at an incredibly high temperature.

"Hiss, hiss."

Vincente Hyde's body began to emit a blue flame, which quickly merged with the flames in the furnace. The color of the flames in the furnace actually changed as well, and those other ores began to slowly liquefy. Only the adamantine ore didn't change at all.

Vincente picked up a cup of greenish herbal liquids and poured it directly over the adamantine ore. "Hiss, hiss." The green liquid actually began to transform the adamantine ore somehow, as it actually slowly began to melt as well.

Finally, the general shape of a sword could be seen.

"Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!"

The forgehammer smashed down again and again, the speed of the blows coming at a terrifyingly fast rate. The hammer danced in Vincente's hands, giving everyone present the sense of watching an artistic performance. Clearly, Vincente's hammer strokes had a certain rhythm to it, and the form of the heavy sword began to become more and more clearly defined.

"Hiss, hiss."

Vincente's body was constantly emitting that blue flame, keeping the heavy sword under high temperatures at all times. He continued hammering away at it for three hours. The heavy sword, which originally had been all sorts of colors, gradually turned into a pitch black color. Vincente was covered in sweat, and his face was turning a bit white. This was perhaps the most tiring forging project he had ever done.

"Give me mountain spring water." Vincente shouted loudly.

His elder son, Yotian, immediately brought over a nearby barrel of water, then mixed into it a cup with a different, pre-prepared liquid inside. Using the secret liquid ingredients of their clan along with mountain spring water would definitely produce optimal tempering results.

"Hiss, hiss." The heavy sword was placed within the barrel.

Watching by the side, Linley and Monroe Dawson's eyes lit up. After being tempered, the heavy sword would more or less be complete. But just at this time, the gloomy, overcast sky suddenly boomed with thunder, catching everyone off-guard.

"Success!" Vincente pulled the heavy sword out, his face filled with excitement. He raised it high in the air, laughing loudly, "Haha, Linley, success! This is the finest creation I have ever made!"

"BOOOOOM!"

A terrifying sound could be heard as a bolt of blue lightning suddenly forked down, striking directly on top of the heavy sword!

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 17, The Heavy Sword, 'Bladeless'

This naturally generated bolt of lightning slashed down at high speed, and was many times faster than electrical bolts which thunder-element magi could produce. Nobody present was able to react in time, and the lightning bolt crashed onto the upraised heavy sword.

"Ah!" Vincente let out a pain-filled scream as his body was suddenly enveloped in a wild blue flame, which even had some silvery white flame mixed within!

"Thud!" The heavy sword fell to the ground.

At the same time, Vincente collapsed as well, his entire body twitching, especially his right arm, which had been charred badly enough that the scent of burning flesh could be smelled. Even after collapsing, Vincente's body continued to jerk about, and blood was pouring from his mouth.

"Father!" The two brothers Yotian and Trey let out simultaneous cries as they immediately ran forward.

"Mr. Vincente!" Both Linley and Monroe Dawson were shocked as well.

This natural bolt of lightning had carried an enormous amount of energy. It wasn't unheard of for even powerful combatants to die due to being struck by lightning. All of them ran over, surrounding Vincente, as Monroe Dawson roared out, "Quick, have Mr. Armand [A'man'da] come, quick!"

Armand was a light-style magus under Monroe Dawson's command who also specialized in medicine. He was extremely skilled at healing people.

"Yes!" Seeing this, the gate guard also was frantic, and he rushed to find the magus Armand.

Magus Armand arrived shortly afterwards. He was an old man with a snowy white beard. Without saying a word, he immediately invoked a light-style spell. The totally burnt and charred right arm of Vincente began to quickly and visibly heal. Soon, all traces of the injury were gone.

"I...I'm fine." Vincente managed to force out these words with difficulty.

"How are your internals?" Armand asked immediately.

A powerful warrior was easily capable of sensing his body's internal condition. This assessment would be more accurate than a magus' external observations.

Vincente shook his head. "I'm fine. I just need a little time, and I will be alright."

"Mr. Armand, there's no further need for you to concern yourself with my father's injuries." Yotian said bluntly as well.

These words raised the suspicions of Monroe Dawson, Linley, Reynolds,

George, and everyone else. They could all see that right now, Vincente was very weak. Vincente was a very powerful warrior; for him to be so weak now meant that he clearly had suffered an enormous injury.

But suddenly, Linley remember a passage from his clan's records regarding the Violetflame Warriors.

A Saint-level Violetflame Warrior possessed a power known as the Nirvana Rebirth. Generally speaking, they were able to recover from any wounds at an astonishing speed.

"This Master Vincente is only at the 'blue flame' level, and has just barely managed to enter the 'white flame' level. He is quite a distance away from the highest 'violet flame' level. Most likely, he doesn't have the Nirvana Rebirth ability yet, but he should still be able to heal his wounds." Linley understood.

The Four Supreme Warriors.

The Dragonblood Warriors could be considered as the warriors with the greatest combat potential, while the Violetflame Warriors were famous due to their Nirvana Rebirth ability. The Tigerstriped Warriors were known for their attacking speed, while the Undying Warriors were famed for their strength and endurance.

"Uncle Dawson, Master Vincente has secret techniques for recovering from his wounds. There's no need for him to take any medicine." Linley spoke.

Monroe Dawson nodded, then gave instructions to Armand. Armand spoke some well-intentioned words of guidance to Vincente, then left. As for Vincente, he lay down and rested for around ten minutes, after which he looked much better.

Linley couldn't help but feel astonished. The regenerative capabilities of the Violetflame Warriors really were something special.

"Linley, your heavy sword." Immediately after recovering a bit, Vincente began to worry about his masterpiece. "Quick, bring it over and let me take a look. I hope no damage was caused to the sword."

Only now did any of them pay attention to the discarded heavy sword. All of them were amazed! The formerly pitch-black sword now had a faint blue glow on its surface, as though a layer of frost had formed atop it.

"Let me see!" Vincente said urgently.

Linley grabbed the heavy sword and immediately gave it to Vincente. Of all the people present, only Vincente had any true knowledge regarding weapons.

Vincente still hadn't fully recovered from his injury, and so even lifting the sword up was hard for him. He was only able to grasp the hilt after allowing the tip of the sword to rest against the ground. Vincente's face was extremely solemn, and with his left hand, he began rap against the flat of the heavy sword's blade.

"Dang!" "Dang!" "Dang!"

A series of crisp, clear sound could be heard. Vincente began to apply more and more force to each blow, and the ringing sounds were growing louder as well. Vincente rapped every single part of the heavy sword, constantly changing positions.

While doing so, Vincente was staring intently at the sword while listening to the sounds.

Next to him, Linley, Monroe Dawson, and the others had stopped breathing. They knew that most likely, Vincente was assessing the heavy sword to see if the bolt of lightning had caused any damage to it or had altered it somehow. After all, the bolt of thunder had struck it just after it had been quenched in the liquid solution.

"Riiiiing." With a single flick of Vincente's finger, the entire heavy sword emitted a beautiful sound. Hearing this almost perfect, rich, smooth sound, a look of wild joy appeared on Vincente's face.

"Heaven's will. Heaven's will."

His face filled with wild joy, Vincente turned to look at Linley. "Linley, it must be that heaven itself desired for you to possess this divine sword."

"Mr. Vincente, what's the situation with this heavy sword?" Monroe Dawson asked.

Vincente explained, "The hardest part of forging an adamantine weapon is bringing out the full potential of the adamantine, since the alloyed metals are all significantly inferior to adamantine. Although the secret method of my clan allows me to alloy a high percentage of the other metals with the adamantine, I of course am not able to alloy it 100% perfectly."

"In other words, the internals of the sword that I had just forged were not perfectly consistent, and there were minute inconsistencies in each spot."

A look of disbelieving joy was on Vincente's face. "But I didn't expect that right after I finished quenching the sword, I would get struck by that bolt of lightning, which caused all of the remaining internal irregularities in the sword to be fused perfectly. The full potential of the adamantine has been released. I simply can't believe that something like this happened. This is heaven's will. Heaven's will!"

Linley was overjoyed as well.

"Third Bro, congratulations." Yale, Reynolds, and George all began to grin. They all understood. After having withstood this lightning strike, the quality of Linley's heavy sword had just improved by another level.

"And not just that. Look. There's a faint blue glow on the surface of this heavy sword. I've touched the surface of it, and it is unbelievably slick and smooth. Most likely in the future, when you kill someone using it, no blood will stick to it." Vincente chortled.

"Killing without being stained by blood." Monroe Dawson sighed in praise as well.

The creation of this heavy sword was indeed miraculous, causing everyone present to sigh in amazement.

"This heavy sword was originally pitch black, but now it has a layer of blue light on it. At first glance, one would say that it was dark blue." Yale sighed in amazement.

This sword really did have quite the majestic aura to it.

"Yotian, Trey, bring me the measuring sticks." Vincente instructed. After finishing the smithing of a sword, naturally he would have to see what the sword's exact dimensions were. Linley could feel that this sword was very heavy, but he couldn't say exactly what its weight was.

Monroe Dawson only chortled happily as he watched them take the measurements for this sword.

"The sword is 1.41 meters long. It weighs..." Yale and the others quickly began to weigh the sword, but when they saw the figures, they were all astonished.

"3600 pounds! The heavy sword is 1.41 meters long, and 3600 pounds heavy!" Reynolds began screaming in a high-pitched voice. This was an extremely domineering heavy sword! And as far as it was length-wise, it was just about right for Linley.

What's more, Linley wasn't finished growing yet, and his strength would continue to increase as well. Naturally, this sword would only grow more and more easy to use in the future.

“Third Bro. What is the name of this heavy sword? Quick, pick a name.”
Yale was the first to say.

Vincente and the others all looked at Linley.

Reynolds interjected, “This was hit by a lightning bolt. I say, how about calling it Heavenly Thunder? That’s really cool, right?”

“That’s way too vulgar.” George shook his head.

“How about Lightning’s Majesty?” Reynolds continued.

Yale and everyone else began to laugh. Monroe Dawson teased, “Reynolds, why call it Lightning’s Majesty? Let’s just go ahead and call the sword Reynolds.”

[Translator’s note – There is a pun here. In Chinese, Reynolds name is Lei Nuo, with Lei meaning thunder. Heavenly Lightning is “Tian Lei”, while Lightning’s Majesty is “Lei Wei”. Everyone is teasing Reynolds for picking names that sound similar to his own.]

Reynolds pouted and fell silent after letting out a ‘hmp’. “It doesn’t necessarily have to be related to lightning.” Linley laughed. “Since there’s no way for this sword to be sharpened, then let’s just call it Bladeless.” Linley casually picked this name. It was a very simple one, but Linley liked it.

“Bladeless? The heavy sword, Bladeless? Not bad.” Yale nodded.

"Bladeless."

Vincente, Yotian, Trey, and the others all savored the name for a while, then nodded.

That day, Monroe Dawson gifted Linley with a fine sheath for a heavy sword. It was a deep blue color and forged from precious metals. It was only half a meter long, but had openings on both ends. Linley could sheath his heavy sword into it from either direction, with half of it remaining visible.

This was how sheaths for heavy swords were usually designed. Scabbards that were meant to cover the entire sword were simply too long, and once the warrior removed the sword from the sheath, the meter-long sheath would be very impractical and get in the way. This half-meter long scabbard was very light and wouldn't cause any hindrance.

That night at a banquet.

Linley dressed in his warrior clothes and carried this heavy sword with him. Thanks to his long-term training, his 1.9 meter tall body was rippling with muscles, and his warriors clothes put his charisma on full display. With this heavy sword on his back, he did indeed have the aura of a powerful heavy swordsman.

"Haha, Linley." Monroe Dawson laughed as he looked at Linley. "In my opinion, nobody who sees you would believe that you were a genius magus."

Linley was slightly startled, but then he laughed as well.

Dressed like this, naturally it would be hard for others to tell that he was a magus.

"I remember when we first arrived at the Ernst Institute, when we were in our first year, Third Bro was only nine. Even then, he was able to easily lift up and throw that nine year old who won the tournament quite a distance. Ever since then, I knew that Third Bro was extremely talented as a warrior as well." Yale chortled.

Everyone was enjoying this banquet immensely, and after having acquired this heavy sword, Linley felt very pleased as well.

"When I have some time, I'll definitely have to analyze and train in using heavy swords." Linley made his decision. When he had originally acquired the Bloodviolet Godsword, Linley had also spent several months before totally comprehending all the best ways to use a flexible sword such as Bloodviolet.

But Linley had the feeling that, comparatively speaking, training with Bloodviolet wasn't that hard, only fast and strange.

But this heavy sword weighed 3600 pounds.

On the surface, it would seem that the techniques for using a heavy sword were simple. Block, smash, etc. But Linley knew that was just the most basic of movements. Using this sword to its full potential definitely wouldn't be that easy. He knew this because his clan's records had described the ways in which that ancestor of his had used a massive warhammer. Clearly, there were deep mysteries with regards to how one used weapons.

To bring out a heavy weapon's full power and potential?

This was very hard.

But upon succeeding, it would possess tremendous power.

The banquet ended.

Linley began to engage in some simple sword stances in an empty courtyard within the Dawson Conglomerate's estate, trying to feel for the heavy sword's balance, and how it felt when thrusting and chopping. Just as Linley was beginning to totally immerse himself in getting a basic feel for the technique behind using such a sword...

"Boss, boss! Come back, quick! That Clayde has finally appeared!" Bebe's excited voice suddenly rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley instantly came to his normal senses.

"Clayde is back." Linley felt his previously calm heart suddenly fill with excitement, and his body suddenly began to brim with power. He didn't have time to explain too much to his bros. He bid a simple farewell, and then headed for his own residence at high speed.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 18, A Missing Hand?

Bearing the adamantine heavy sword on his back, Linley quickly made his way through the streets. However, just from appearances, nobody could tell how heavy it truly was, and so Linley didn't attract any notice from bystanders.

"Clayde finally came. I've waited so long!" Linley suppressed the excitement he felt. "Calm. This time, no matter what, I can't make any mistakes again."

The first time, he had thought he had a better than 90% chance of success, but unexpectedly, that Saint-level Fateguard had appeared out of nowhere and caused Linley's plan to fail. This time, Linley didn't want to make any mistakes.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart's slightly hoarse voice rang out. "Remember, you previously were together for a period of time with Shaq and his men. Upon Clayde's return, Shaq might report that fact to him."

"Understood."

Linley had thought of this possibility long ago. But for the sake of being able to find the place where Clayde would end up, he had to travel alongside Shaq, which resulted in them arriving together in Hess City. He definitely could not kill Shaq, because once Shaq and his group of men died, then Clayde perhaps wouldn't show himself at all.

"I had to act in this way. But even if Clayde knew that I had travelled along with Shaq for a time, there's nothing he can do, because...I already know his whereabouts. There's no way he can escape." Linley was totally confident. At the same time, Bebe, who was spiritually connected to him, was watching over Clayde and his men.

As they chatted, Linley arrived at Keyan Road.

In order to prevent himself from being seen by Clayde's men, Linley immediately headed towards his residence via a series of back alleys.

A black blur suddenly travelled several dozen meters and leapt into Linley's arms.

"Bebe." Laughing, Linley looked at the little Shadowmouse in his arms.

Bebe's eyes were gleaming as he delightedly conversed mentally, "Boss, I saw Clayde come here not too long ago. But I only caught a glimpse of half his face before he entered the manor. Boss, those two people you employed were too useless. They didn't notice him at all."

"Hrm?"

Linley was somewhat suspicious. He had ordered those two to stay on the lookout. Logically speaking, as soon as Clayde had appeared, they should have noticed him.

"Milord, milord!"

Ah Da and Ah Er ran over and said respectfully, "Milord, we just saw a large group of people enter that manor not too long ago."

"A large group of people?" Linley immediately asked. "Was one of them missing a hand?"

Ah Er shook his head. "No, milord. Milord, you ordered us to pay attention to any groups of people entering the manor, and you also told us to watch for a man with a missing hand. But we didn't see anyone with a missing hand in that group."

"Impossible." Linley said with certainty. "There definitely was a man with a missing hand."

Bebe had already seen half of Clayde's face, and given Bebe's eyesight, he definitely wouldn't have been mistaken. Since Bebe was certain he had seen him, then Clayde was definitely in that group.

"Definitely?" Hearing how certain Linley was, the man felt awkward. "Milord, perhaps...perhaps there were too many people in the group, so my elder brother and I didn't see him."

Linley frowned.

Too many people?

Originally, when he fought with Clayde's squad at the palace, Linley and Bebe had killed quite a number, leaving only ten or so knights remaining. And given the number of magical beasts on the road here, it would be quite exceptional if all ten of Clayde's men were still alive. How could this be considered 'too many people'?

"Many people? How many?" Linley asked.

"Very many. At least seventy or eighty." The man said haltingly, seemingly uncertain. "Regardless, there were very many. That group suddenly appeared and then entered the manor. We two brothers couldn't clearly see every single person in the group. Perhaps there really was a man with a missing hand amongst them."

Linley was confused.

Seventy or eighty people?

Even when he had attempted to kill Clayde in the palace, Clayde's Wildthunder squad had only thirty or so people. What's more, after having been reduced in numbers by himself and Bebe, how could so many more people have appeared out of nowhere?

Linley didn't understand it.

"Boss, there really were a lot of people." Bebe's voice also sounded out now, in Linley's mind. "By the time I noticed Clayde, he was just about to enter the manor. I only had the chance to catch a glimpse of half his face. But behind him there were at least fifty or so people. But as to how many people entered the manor before Clayde, I'm not too sure."

Linley definitely trusted Bebe, of course.

“That many people?” Linley wondered to himself.

“Alright, you can go now. This is a reward for you and your brother. Keep watching for me.” Linley tossed the half-filled sack of gold, which had fifty coins in it.

Accepting the sack, he took a peek inside through the opening. The insides were filled with gleaming gold. This half-bag had to have near fifty coins in it! His heart began to be filled with excitement. When he had escaped here to Hess City, he hadn’t even been able to feed himself. Now, after only having worked for Linley for a few days, the man tossed him a sack with fifty gold coins? How could he not be wildly excited?

“Thank you, milord. Thank you, milord.” He made up his mind. He and his elder brother would consider keeping a close watch on the people inside the manor. He immediately departed, then ran to the top floor of the nearby restaurant where he and his elder brother kept watch.

Within the courtyard.

All alone, Linley was pondering what he should do next.

A white light shone out from the Coiling Dragon ring, transforming into the white-robed, white-haired, white-bearded Doebling Cowart. Doebling Cowart stroked his beard. Chuckling, he said, “Linley, what’s wrong? Are you in a bad mood?”

Linley lifted his head up to look at Doebling Cowart. Upon seeing his Grandpa Doebling, Linley felt his heart calm down a little. With such an experienced elder by his side, at least Linley wouldn't grow frantic or feel unsure of himself.

"Grandpa Doebling. I'm wondering where that group of people with Clayde came from." Linley said.

Doebling Cowart chuckled. "You are wasting your time wondering about this. Why don't you act instead? Hide in a corner of a wall in their manor and take a look for yourself. By then, you will know exactly who these people with Clayde are."

Linley began to laugh.

Right. Why was he wasting time?

"Carrying this heavy sword will still impact my speed." Linley removed his adamantite heavy sword, then entered his bedroom and placed it under his bed, then grabbed his bedsheets.

Standing on Linley's shoulders, Bebe stared curiously at the adamantite heavy sword. He mentally asked Linley, "Boss, is this heavy sword the treasure which you had created for you using that adamantite ore?"

Linley laughed and nodded.

"How heavy is this heavy sword?" Bebe asked curiously.

"3600 pounds." Linley replied honestly.

Bebe rubbed his little nose with his paws in surprise, while his beady little eyes spun around in shock as well as he stared at the adamantite heavy sword.

"Enough. You'll have plenty of time to look at it later." Linley put down the bedsheets, hiding the heavy sword.

"Ah. Hey boss, I suddenly remember something. That Clayde probably already knows that you are right here." Bebe looked at the interspatial ring on Linley's finger and cried out in alarm.

"What? Why?" Linley was extremely shocked. "Boss, you personalized and bound your Bloodviolet Godsword using a drop of blood. I remember you saying that when you were imprisoned within the Radiant Temple, although Bloodviolet was confiscated, you could still sense where it was. Interspatial rings are also personalized through blood. Wouldn't Clayde then be able to sense the location of his interspatial ring?" Bebe urgently transmitted his thoughts to Linley.

But hearing this, Linley only began to laugh.

"Haha." Standing next to them, Doebling Cowart began to laugh as well. Only, Bebe wasn't able to hear Doebling Cowart's laughter.

Immediately upon leaving the city of Fenlai, Linley had already questioned Doehring Cowart regarding this interspatial ring he had taken.

“Bebe.” Linley laughed as he explained. “This interspatial ring is different from a divine artifact such as Bloodviolet. Technically speaking, an interspatial ring isn’t a divine artifact, just a very valuable magical item. Its basic underpinnings are quite similar to the magiccrystal cards, which use fingerprints to personalize and recognize an owner, while interspatial rings use blood to do the same. Only the owner of an interspatial ring can open it and take out its contents. However, when a magical item is taken away, there’s no way for the owner of it to sense the exact location of his item. Do you think divine artifacts are that common? Even my adamantine heavy sword, Bladeless, isn’t at the level of divine artifacts.”

Divine artifacts.

It was impossible for a divine artifact to be forged within this material plane, in the Yulan continent. Things such as the Coiling Dragon ring and the Bloodviolet sword were both very ancient items.

“The Coiling Dragon ring had suddenly emitted a terrifying burst of energy back at the Radiant Temple and saved me. What’s more, when using magic through it, it reduces the amount of mageforce and spiritual energy needed to a sixth of normal. Bloodviolet, in turn, can become flexible or straight as the wielder chooses, and is virtually indestructible.”

Linley had a certain theory.

It was already a fact that the Coiling Dragon ring had secrets hidden within that he hadn't yet discovered. That terrifying burst of energy at the Radiant Temple was proof.

As for Bloodviolet?

For it to be used as a focusing seal for that mysterious magical formation meant that it definitely had special qualities to it as well. Only, right now Linley was still too weak and couldn't discover what was so special about it.

"Bloodviolet." Linley glanced at the sword at his waist which he was wearing like a belt. What was the real ability of this mysterious Bloodviolet flexible sword?

"Bebe, you stay here for now." Linley instructed.

"Got it." Bebe obediently remained within the courtyard, while Linley stealthily slipped out of his residence and headed quietly towards Clayde and Shaq's manor.

Linley pressed himself against one of the walls of the manor which Shaq had purchased.

"Snick."

Linley's sharp claws emerged. He easily cut a small opening into the wall, then transformed his hands back to normal as he peered inside through the opening.

That night Linley had stayed at the residence with Shaq, he had memorized the entire layout, including the manmade hill and which rooms were which. Linley had chosen to make his cut in a very particular location; through this cut, he was able to see into both the front courtyard and the back courtyard, without anything obstructing his vision.

"My royal father."

Linley's sensitive ears actually managed to pick up the conversation between Shaq and Clayde in the back courtyard. Linley carefully peered in that direction. Indeed, Clayde and Shaq were walking shoulder by shoulder within Linley's area of vision.

"It's Clayde." Linley watched carefully.

But what he saw utterly stunned him. "Clayde's hand...his hand..."

Right now, both of Clayde's hands were in perfect condition. But Linley had clearly seen Clayde's hand fall off after being cut. He had even stolen the interspatial ring from the hand. There definitely was no mistake.

"To regenerate a lost hand would require the services of a light-style Arch Magus of the ninth rank at least." Linley was astonished.

When Clayde left, he didn't have a single magus with him. How did he get mixed up with an Arch Magus of the ninth rank?

"Royal father, how did you end up encountering forces belonging to the Radiant Church? Those people are all so formidable." Shaq said in a somewhat astonished voice.

Clayde nodded. "Of course they are. These people are amongst the most terrifying people the Radiant Church leads. The Ascetics led by Lord Fallen Leaf have many combatants of the ninth rank amongst them. Travelling by their side, we were quite safe the entire time."

Clayde was speaking in a normal tone. Logically speaking, someone from the opposite side of a distant wall shouldn't be able to hear him. But Linley, as a Dragonblood Warrior, possessed freakishly enhanced hearing, and heard every word clearly.

"A group of Ascetics? Led by Lord Fallen Leaf?" The look on Linley's face changed.

Lord Fallen Leaf was a peak-stage Saint-level combatant. And he had with him a group of freakishly strong Ascetics, quite a few of whom had reached the ninth rank.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 19, With Bated Breath

Linley quietly left, returning to his own manor.

On the road back from Clayde's residence to his own, Linley's face was a mask of unhappiness. This news he had just received had made Linley think that things would be much more difficult now.

"Linley. What decision have you come to?" Doehring Cowart appeared from within the Coiling Dragon ring.

There was still a degree of distance between Linley's residence and Clayde's manor. Doehring Cowart, this five-thousand year old ghost of a peak-stage Saint level combatant, wasn't afraid that Lord Fallen Leaf would see him here.

"Me?"

Linley balled his fists. "Endure. I can only endure and wait."

Doehring Cowart nodded with satisfaction. He had watched every step of Linley's journey and growth. Doehring Cowart felt affection and love for Linley as he might a grandson.

He didn't wish for Linley to act too rashly.

"Linley. Don't worry." Stroking his beard, Doehring Cowart spoke confidently. "That Fallen Leaf probably just let Clayde travel along with him since it didn't inconvenience him. He definitely won't stay with Clayde for too long. In the past, when Clayde was still the king of a kingdom, his status was already much lower than that of Fallen Leaf. As for the current Clayde...the Kingdom of Fenlai itself has been destroyed, making him even less important. What's more, based on my calculations, the new Holy Capital which the Radiant Church will select most likely will not be Hess City. Thus, Fallen Leaf won't stay here too long."

Linley nodded.

The previous Holy Capital, 'Fenlai City', had been totally annihilated by the army of magical beasts from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Only rubble was left. The Radiant Church definitely would not permit such an event to happen again. Naturally, they wouldn't erect the new Holy Capital in a location like Hess City, which was so near their new borders.

After all, the 'King' of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Dylin, had previously said that the magical beasts under his domain could possibly expand to the point of taking up half of the Holy Union. Right now, they had only taken up a third of the Holy Union's territory. If they were to truly take over half, then Hess City would fall into that area as well.

Heidens and the other top level members of the Radiant Church simply did not have confidence in their ability to resist this Deity-level Dylin.

Although the Radiant Church still had untapped powers of its own that it hadn't put on display yet, once they deployed those powers against Dylin, it would be equivalent to them expending all of the resources they had saved up over ten millennia in one battle.

Heidens didn't dare to act in such a way.

"Just wait." Linley took a deep breath, forcing himself to remain calm. He already knew where Clayde was. So long as he didn't make any mistakes, Clayde definitely wouldn't be able to escape.

Within a restaurant opposite of Shaq's manor, the same restaurant where Linley's two servants maintained their vigil over Shaq and Clayde.

That very day.

Wearing a very ordinary sleeveless sweatshirt, Linley's powerful chest muscles were plainly visible. Those two mighty, muscled arms and that heavy sword on his back gave the impression of an extremely strong man.

A heavy sword warrior!

Linley's current appearance was a very commonly seen one. Warriors prioritized muscular training the most, and thus many of them had powerful bodies, and quite a few used heavy swords as well.

"Two plates of roast meat and two bottles of Bullfighters." Linley said in a deep voice.

"Sir, please take a seat first." Seeing how powerful Linley appeared, the waiter was extremely respectful to him. Linley selected a seat located towards the interior of the restaurant which still offered a clear vantage point to see through the door and the windows towards Clayde's manor.

The waiter immediately pulled the chair out for Linley to sit on.

"Sir, please wait a moment." The waiter said with a smile. At this time, another waiter came over with those two bottles of Bullfighters. Bullfighter was a type of extremely strong liquor, particularly favored by powerful warriors.

Casting a sneak glance at the heavy sword on Linley's back, the attendant was secretly shocked. "Oh my lord. What a long, thick heavy sword, and from the coloration, it must have been made from special materials. It must weigh at least a few hundred pounds. This gentleman must be an extremely strong warrior."

At this restaurant, when the servers were bored, they would sneak peeks at their various customers. After having done so for a long time, their eyes had become quite sharp and their guesses accurate. Seeing how easily Linley was carrying this heavy sword about, they could immediately tell that Linley was an extremely powerful warrior.

The elder of the two brothers whom Linley had stationed in this restaurant walked over at this time.

"Take this roasted meat back and give it to Bebe." Linley didn't give him a chance to speak before issuing orders. "Yes, milord."

The elder of the two brothers didn't have anything important to do either. He immediately carried out Linley's instructions and took the roast meat back.

And then, Linley just quietly sat in the restaurant and drank his liquor.

Linley drank wine very slowly. A single bottle of liquor was enough to last him two or three hours. He just continued to drink while keeping an eye on Clayde's manor.

That night.

In the higher levels of the restaurant, a travelling bard was belting out songs, and the entire bar was extremely rowdy. Quite a few warriors were shouting and laughing at each other.

Because of the catastrophe, Hess City was more lively than it had ever been.

Many powerful warriors patronized this restaurant, and all of them were very energetic. They actually began to compete in arm wrestling.

"Ten thousand gold coins! The winner gets ten thousand gold coins!" The contest organizer shouted in a high pitched voice.

To many of the powerful warriors who had fled here after the disaster, although ten thousand gold coins wasn't a small sum of money, it wasn't a particularly large sum either.

"I'll join. These ten thousand gold coins are mine." A 2.2 meter tall brown-haired warrior with a barrel-sized chest sat down. His arms were definitely thicker than most people's legs.

"Hrmph, I'll give you a go."

A red-haired man with a body similar to Linley's walked over and sat down as well. The two immediately stretched their arms out and clasped hands. Immediately afterwards, the muscles in their arms began to bulge.

Those warriors drinking next to them all began to shout out loudly in encouragement.

"This sort of life isn't that bad." Linley knew that waiting for Fallen Leaf to leave would be an extremely boring event. Who knew how long Fallen Leaf would stay? One day? Two days? Ten?

Linley turned to watch with interest as well.

"Neither of these two are weak. They are at least warriors of the sixth rank." Linley nodded to himself. Right now, experts could be seen everywhere in Hess City.

Their arms locked against each other, these two warriors were exerting ten thousand pounds of force against each other.

"Grrr!" That brown-haired warrior whose arms were thicker than most people's legs suddenly let out a mighty shout, and all of the veins on his arm began to pop out, criss-crossing his arm like worms beneath the skin. Anyone looking at him would think that his veins were about to explode at any moment.

The red-haired man's face had turned red as well, as he wasn't willing to back down in the slightest.

"Creak. Creak." The table underneath their arms was beginning to shiver as well.

The tables and chairs in this restaurant were all made from steel, and were extremely sturdy. Generally speaking, powerful warriors were able to carefully calibrate and control the amount of power released from their wrists as they engaged in arm-wrestling above the table. For the table to begin quivering due to their strength was a sign that both men were at their limits.

"Haha, let's go Harold [Ha'luo'de]!"

"Damnit, Harold, try harder!"

"Second Bro, don't lose in front of me!"

All the warriors who were drinking around them were howling loudly in support. Slowly, that large man with massive arms named Harold gained a slight advantage, causing the red-haired warrior to immediately try desperately to resist.

"Haaaaah!"

With a loud roar, Harold smashed his opponent's arm against the table, causing a impression to be left upon the steel table.

"Haha, I win!" Harold laughed loudly.

"fk. Second Bro, beat it. Let me come. This big dumb idiot wants to win ten thousand gold? Hmph." A one-eyed red-haired warrior walked over.

The restaurant was very rowdy, and those energetic warriors screamed and shouted, while up above, the travelling bard was also singing loudly so as to get that bit of gold the restaurant had promised him.

Noisy.

But in this rowdy environment, three or four people remained silent. The warriors around them quite conscientiously didn't disturb those people. All of these warriors had significant outside experience, and they had good judgment. They knew who they could afford to offend, and who they could not.

The next morning, soon after Linley sat down.

"Hrm?"

Linley suddenly saw a familiar face. Lord Fallen Leaf.

As skinny as a beggar, Lord Fallen Leaf casually walked out of Clayde's manor and departed, with two barefooted Ascetics dressed in sackcloth by his side.

"He left? But only Fallen Leaf and two Ascetics have left." Linley considered for a moment. He knew that many Ascetics had come on this journey, and many experts were amongst their ranks. Right now, only three had left.

"Continue to wait." Linley took a sip of liquor. He would keep waiting.

Clayde, Shaq, and the others sent off Lord Fallen Leaf, watching him leave from the gate.

"Royal father, there is something that I forgot to tell you." Shaq slapped himself on the head. "Royal father, Lord Linley travelled with us for a time, but two days ago he left. He was heading north."

"Linley."

Hearing this name, Clayde almost shouted aloud in surprise.

This Linley had nearly taken his life on two separate occasions.

"What's wrong, royal father?" Shaq questioned. As far as Shaq could tell, this wasn't a major issue. After all, the Kingdom of Fenlai had already been annihilated. Their royal clan was royal only in name now, and not in truth. It would be surprising if Linley had actually continued to be loyal to them.

"He travelled with you. Did he know that you are living here?" Clayde immediately asked.

"Yes. He even stayed here a night." Shaq said, confused.

Clayde's heart began to shudder. "This Linley is definitely still in Hess City." Clayde knew that Linley wanted to kill him, and wouldn't leave just like that.

"No worries. There's still a large group of Ascetics living here." Clayde comforted himself.

"But when the Ascetics leave, I will leave with them." Clayde made his decision. Only by travelling together with the Ascetics would he feel safe.

Clayde carefully looked in every direction.

He even had this strange feeling that Linley was looking at him from somewhere nearby.

A day passed. A second day passed. Aside from going back at night to sleep, Linley spent all his time at the restaurant. Once, a foolish person tried to cause Linley some trouble, but Linley booted him from the back of the restaurant to the front of the restaurant with one kick. Thereafter, no one else disturbed Linley.

In the blink of an eye, six days passed.

During these past six days, aside from Fallen Leaf and those two Ascetics, none of the other Ascetics had left.

Within Clayde's manor.

"Everyone, why are you in such a rush to leave?" Clayde looked at the three representatives of the Ascetics in front of him, trying to persuade them.

An old, golden-haired man said calmly, "Clayde, we must head towards the new Holy Capital now. Sorry for inconveniencing you these past days. We'll leave now."

These three Ascetics totally ignored Clayde's entreaties as they prepared to leave immediately.

"Milords, you are heading to the new Holy Capital? I wish to go as well. How about I travel alongside you?" Clayde said immediately, while at the same time, he instructed his son Shaq, "Shaq, prepare some things. We leave immediately."

At this point in time, Clayde didn't feel any sense of security at all.

If only Kaiser was left with him, Clayde didn't feel confident that Kaiser would be able to protect him against both Linley and that freakish magical beast of his.

"Travel along with us?" The golden-haired old man frowned.

In truth, they were not making a trip towards the new Holy Capital at all. They had a secret mission.

"Impossible. We are under strict orders from the Church." The golden-haired man said coldly.

The other two looked coldly at Clayde as well. "If you follow us secretly, you should know what the end result will be." After they spoke, the three turned and left, leaving behind a pole-axed Clayde.

Clayde hadn't expected that these Ascetics would forbid him from travelling with them.

"Milords!" Clayde chased out from the main hall, but the fifty or so Ascetics had already left the manor via the gate. Not a single one of them turned to look back at him.

Clayde considered what to do. He didn't dare to follow them. Although the Radiant Church taught that men should be benevolent, when they decided to act against someone, they were definitely without mercy. Right now, Clayde was no longer of particular use to the Radiant Church. Those Ascetics definitely would not fear to kill him.

"Royal father." Shaq walked over, looking at Clayde.

Clayde frowned. He was quiet for a moment. Then, he gave his orders. "Let's leave from the back gate. We will leave immediately. Yes, immediately. The danger grows with each passing minute.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 20, The Full Story

Within the restaurant.

Seeing a large group of Ascetics leave Clayde's manor, Linley was wildly exultant. At a glance, Linley could tell that over fifty people were in that group of Ascetics. For such a large group of them to leave most likely meant that all of them had left.

"It's been six or seven days. By now, it's almost certain that Shaq has told Clayde about our meeting. Most likely, Clayde has already been able to guess that I'm nearby."

Linley casually tossed down a few gold coins. Suddenly, gusts of air began to wrap around him, and moving like the breeze, Linley agilely flew out of the restaurant.

Despite bearing the heavy sword on his back, with the assistance of wind-style magic, he still moved with great ease. But of course, this was due to Linley having become a magus of the seventh rank. If a magus of the third rank had been the one to cast the spell, the effect wouldn't have been nearly as good. "Bebe, watch the back door." Linley mentally instructed Bebe.

"Boss, got it."

As Linley rushed towards one of the exterior walls of Clayde's manor, he began to mumble the words to another spell – Windscout.

"Whoosh!"

With Linley at the center, a gust of air suddenly spread out in all directions. Closing his eyes, Linley could clearly sense everything the Windscout had detected.

"Hrm? Gathering near the back gate?"

The Windscout spell could only detect bodies and objects. It couldn't actually make out faces clearly. However, through the usage of the Windscout, Linley had already been able to discover that the people inside the manor were all hurriedly moving towards the back courtyard. Clearly, they were all getting ready to flee.

"Hmph. As predicted." With a quiet movement, Linley flowed into Clayde's manor, moving into the front courtyard with movements as light as the wind. Quietly but quickly, Linley made his way on the inside paths towards the back courtyard.

"Hurry, hurry!" Clayde berated angrily.

"Let's go from the back gate. We are heading out immediately. We are leaving Hess City." Clayde said directly.

The royal consort was confused. "Your Majesty, aren't we all living here just fine? Why-"

"Whap!"

Clayde slapped her across the face.

"Enough crap." Clayde snarled.

"Hurry up. Forget about the horses. You two, you are responsible for the Princess and the Royal Consort." Clayde ordered two of his knights, and then had a third one open the back gate.

Linley, hiding behind a manmade hill, watched this all while laughing coldly.

"As I thought. Not a single Ascetic is left." With a leap, Linley retreated at high speed, moving to a place where Clayde and Kaiser wouldn't be able to see him, then he leapt past the wall. And then, Linley turned and moved at high speed to the back gate. But just as Linley had rounded the corner, he came to a sudden halt.

Bebe was right next to the back gate.

"Creaaaaak." The back gate began to open.

Bebe immediately scurried over at high speed to a patch of wild grass nearby. Given that Bebe was only fist-sized, the wild grass was totally capable of covering and hiding Bebe's entire body.

"Bebe. When Clayde comes out, tell me right away." Linley hid behind the corner, and his entire body began to be covered with black scales. "Snick." His forehead, back, elbows, and kneecaps all began to sprout sharp spikes.

And that long, iron-whip-like draconic tail sprouted out as well.

Linley's black eyes suddenly transformed into a dark gold color, the same color as the eyes of the Armored Razorback Wyrms.

Total Dragonform! "Wind-style supporting magic – Supersonic." At the same time, Linley reinforced himself with a wind spell. After having completely Dragonformed, Linley felt that his body was full of limitless power.

Right now, that 3600 pound adamantite heavy sword didn't have any impact on Linley at all.

To a mighty warrior who could easily lift up something weighing hundreds of thousands of pounds, what was a mere 3600? Comparatively speaking, it was like asking an ordinary man who could lift 100 pounds to carry a one pound item on him. Would it impact him?

Clayde continued to urge his men, and one Wildthunder knight after another began to step out of the back gate.

Clayde himself walked through the gate, with Shaq by his side. And then the princess and the royal consort, under the protection of the Wildthunder knights, headed out as well. As for Kaiser, he was at the very end, serving as their guard and escort.

"Boss, Clayde came out."

Just after Clayde stepped out of the manor, Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind. The eyes of Linley, who had been hiding behind the corner this entire time, suddenly began to shine.

"Whoosh!"

A mighty leap forward, combined with the wind around him propelling him forward at high speed.

"Swish!"

In the blink of an eye, a black, human-sized blur slashed through a distance of seventy meters, charging directly at the back gate to Clayde's manor. Somewhat caught off guard, Clayde turned to look, and when he did, he saw that this human-shaped blur was already next to him. That familiar figure made Clayde's heart quail. Before he even had a chance to call out or to react, a powerful force suddenly bound him.

"Don't move. Otherwise. You die." Linley's voice was transmitted directly to Clayde's ear.

"Ah!" The royal consort had just stepped out of the gate. Upon seeing Linley, she was so frightened that she immediately screamed. But then, with a 'snick' sound, the consort's head went flying off.

Linley retracted his claws.

The severed head of the consort oozed blood everywhere, while her body collapsed to the floor.

"Mon...monster!" The princess, terrified, retreated backwards.

"Release his Majesty!" The Wildthunder knights who had left along with Shaq immediately charged over, but as they did, a black blur flashed towards them. The little Shadowmouse, Bebe, who had suddenly transformed to half a meter in length, landed on the ground. As he did, those two warriors who had wanted to charge over collapsed, as half of their necks had been severed.

"None of you resist. Resistance is futile." Linley's cold voice rang out.

At this time, Kaiser charged over as well.

"Lord Kaiser, what...what is that monster?" The princess was terrified. But Shaq, whom Clayde had explained everything to, knew that this monster was actually Linley.

The aberration in front of them was covered from head to toe in black scales, and there were spikes sprouting from his forehead, knees, elbows, and back. Its scale covered feet and claws were all extremely sharp.

And what's more, it had an iron-whip-like draconic tail.

Right now, that draconic tail was wrapping tightly around Clayde, preventing him from moving at all. With each small swaying motion of Linley's draconic tail, Clayde's body swayed as well.

This scene stunned everyone present.

"Kaiser. This time, you don't have any chance." Linley's cold voice rang out.

A pained look was on Kaiser's face. He knew that even if he fought one on one against Linley, victory was no sure thing. What's more, Linley had that freakish magical beast companion who was on the same level of power as him.

Kaiser wasn't confident in his ability to deal with either Linley or the magical beast, Bebe.

And now that Clayde had been caught by Linley, he, Kaiser, did indeed have no chance at all.

"Lin...Linley! Release my royal father!" Shaq shouted angrily.

Linley glanced at Shaq with his cold, dark golden eyes. Shaq shivered, no longer daring to speak. Right now, Linley's appearance had stupefied everyone present. Those Wildthunder knights who had followed Clayde had also battled against and been slaughtered by Linley and Bebe in the past. They knew exactly how powerful Linley and his freakish magical beast companion Bebe were.

"Linley." Just as Clayde was going to beg for mercy...

"Crunch!" "Crack!"

Linley actually tore off Clayde's ring finger and index finger, then casually tossed them in the direction of the princess and Kaiser's group.

"Ah...ah!" Clayde couldn't refrain from howling from the agony of having his fingers ripped off.

"Clayde, I'll tell you right now that you are definitely going to die." Linley said casually.

Clayde turned his fierce, tiger-like glare towards Linley.

But what welcomed his gaze was Linley's cold, emotionless pair of dark gold eyes.

"Right now, you have two choices. The first is to be tortured to death. The second is to tell me who you gave my mother to, and who killed her. And then, I'll let you die an easy death." Linley said calmly.

Linley knew very well that the best way to deal with someone like Clayde was to lay it out clearly for him.

Otherwise, Clayde would think that there was still some hope of living. He would grit his teeth and refuse to answer, for the sake of that hope.

"No! If you are willing to spare me, AH!!" Linley once again remorselessly ripped out another one of Clayde's fingers. Calmly, Linley said, "You are definitely going to die. The only question is, will you tell the truth early and spare yourself some pain and suffering?"

"Your Majesty!"

Kaiser was about to immediately rush over.

"Kaiser, do you want everyone present to die?" Linley's dark gold eyes stared at Kaiser. Kaiser instantly halted. He understood that Linley and Bebe definitely had the power to kill everyone present.

Even he, Kaiser, would only have the ability to flee. Facing a combined attack from both Linley and Bebe, he didn't have any chance of victory at all. "Ah..." Kaiser really didn't know what to do.

Linley looked back at Clayde.

Clayde's face was totally pale. Large beads of sweat the size of soybeans had gathered on his forehead. Right now, the amount of force Linley was exerting on him with his tail was very high.

"Continue thinking. The longer you think, the more pain you will be in." Linley's scale-covered claw reached out and grabbed Clayde's ear.

Guessing what Linley was about to do, Clayde howled, "No!"

"Riiip."

Clayde's left ear was ripped off by Linley, and he howled in agony while cursing wildly, "Linley, you bastard, you are a goddamn devil!"

"Keep on wasting time." Linley's claws slowly reached towards Clayde's face.

"This time, it'll be your eyes. Tell me, would you prefer your left eye, or your right eye?" Linley's face was still expressionless. When Clayde looked at Linley, hoping to gather anything from Linley's eyes or facial expressions, all he could see was that unmoving, scale-covered face, and those cold, merciless dark gold eyes.

"If you don't decide, I'll decide for you. Just then, it was your left ear. Now, it will be your right eye." Linley reached out with his claws.

"No! I'll talk. I'll talk." Clayde howled with all his might.

Linley retracted his claws. "Then speak."

"I'll talk. I'll talk." Tears actually appeared in Clayde's eyes. He really had mentally collapsed. Linley had no intention of sparing him whatsoever. No matter what he did, he was going to die. If he talked, at least he would die an easy death. If he didn't, he would be tortured to death.

None of the Wildthunder knights standing off in the distance dared to say a word. Linley and Bebe, man and magical beast, were really too terrifying, too formidable.

Clayde was roaring furiously in his heart, "Radiant Church, this time you didn't give a damn about me and left me behind. Don't blame me for giving you an enemy which will be terrifying to deal with in the future!"

"Linley, I'll tell you. Each year, the Radiant Church will offer extremely pure souls to the Radiant Sovereign. The Radiant Sovereign needs only two things: The faith of worshippers, and pure souls." Clayde said directly.

Linley's stared at Clayde with his emotionless eyes. "What does this have to do with my mother?"

Clayde continued, "The purer the soul offered to the Radiant Sovereign, the greater the gifts the Radiant Sovereign will bestow upon the Church. That year...my younger brother Patterson and I had just stepped out of the Radiant Temple. When I saw your mother, I was instantly stunned. Her eyes looked so pure, so innocent. From that first glance I had of your mother, my mind was made up. I had the feeling that your mother's soul must be extremely pure." After having heard this, Linley could guess the rest.

"I could tell that your father was only an ordinary person, and thus I ordered Patterson to go and directly abduct your mother. The next day, I delivered your mother to the Radiant Church."

Clayde took a deep breath. "Indeed, your mother's soul was incomparably pure. When the Radiant Church killed your mother, offering her soul as a sacrifice to the Radiant Sovereign, the Radiant Sovereign blessed them with greater gifts than they had ever received."

“And this was the reason why the Radiant Temple decided to reward me with a divine blessing like none they had ever given before. The blessing raised me directly from a warrior of the seventh rank to the ninth rank. Although it would make my future advancement impossible, I was still satisfied. In addition, the Radiant Temple gifted me with a Saint-level Fateguard.”

Clayde looked at Linley. “Your mother’s soul really was very remarkable. The Radiant Temple actually gave me so many things for her. From this, you can imagine how heavily the Radiant Sovereign had rewarded them when they had sacrificed your mother’s soul to him.”

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 21, Fate

Hearing Clayde's words, Linley fell silent.

"Haha, Linley, now you should know who your true enemy is, right? But are you capable of dealing with the Radiant Temple?" Clayde laughed wildly, on the edge of hysteria. Clayde knew that he was going to die, and at the moment of his death, he had decided to bring as much chaos to the world as he could.

"Do you speak the truth?" Linley's voice was hoarse.

Actually, Linley already believed what Clayde had just told him, precisely because this was the only possible explanation as to why the Radiant Church would have given Clayde a Saint-level Fateguard.

"You yourself know whether I speak truly or not." Clayde laughed wildly.

Linley fell silent.

"Linley, you should've considered the fact that you are a genius magus and a Dragonblood Warrior. In the eyes of the Radiant Church, you have much more potential than me, a warrior who was only raised to the ninth rank due to secret magical methods. In the future, you will most likely be both a Saint-level Supreme Warrior and a Saint-level Grand Magus. If it wasn't for this secret I just divulged, even if you had killed me, the Radiant Church probably wouldn't bear to execute you." Clayde laughed loudly.

Linley understood this reasoning.

“Clayde should be telling the truth.” Doehring Cowart’s voice sounded out in Linley’s mind. Given Doehring Cowart’s experience, his ability to judge whether someone was telling the truth or not was much better than Linley’s.

Linley had deep faith in Doehring Cowart.

.....

At this time, on Keyan Road within the city of Hess, there were six ruthless looking men dressed in violet robes. These six violet-robed men all naturally emitted the aura of cold, arrogant experts, causing everyone else around them to avoid them.

These six people were heading directly for Clayde’s manor.

Right now, they had no idea as to what had happened at Clayde’s manor.

“Waiters [Wei’tē’si], are the Ascetics located here?” One of the violet-robed men said in a low voice.

The leader of the violet-robed men nodded. “Right. From what I understand, the Ascetics are all staying in this Clayde’s manor. This assignment of ours is extremely important. It’s best that we head out together alongside the Ascetics.”

These six people were the six Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal.

They had just arrived at Hess City, and this was the only address they had on hand. They didn't know that a few minutes ago, the Ascetics had all left. They had just barely missed them.

"Hrm? Why is there no one here?"

Upon entering Clayde's empty manor, they couldn't help but look around in confusion. The other five Special Executors looked at Waiters. Waiters was the leader of the squad for this assignment.

"Let's go inside and take a look." Waiters said calmly. The six headed directly into the manor, but the inside of the manor was totally devoid of people as well.

"Linley, release my royal father. My royal father has already told you everything." A voice rang out from beyond the back gate. Instantly, the six Special Executors turned to look at the back courtyard.

The six men's faces turned solemn.

"Linley?"

The six men exchanged glances.

“Linley? His name is on the Red List. Kill on sight.” The six Special Executors immediately hurried towards the back gate.

The Ecclesiastical Tribunal had two special lists. One was known as the Red List. The other was the Black List.

The people on the Red List were to be killed on sight, but there was no need to expend too much effort on those targets. Those on the Black List were to be killed no matter the cost.

Actually, given Linley’s future potential, the threat he could pose towards the Radiant Church in the future should’ve been enough for him to be placed on the Black List. However, while the high levels of the Radiant Church were fleeing, they believed that since Linley was not a member of the Church, the chances of him being able to discover that his mother had been killed by the Radiant Church was very low. Thus, they only placed Linley on the Red List.

The Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal all possessed astonishing power. These six Special Executors were all warriors of the ninth rank. They stealthily began to surround Linley.

.....

In the little alleyway behind the back gate of Clayde’s manor.

Linley’s iron-whip-like draconic tail was still wrapped tightly around Clayde.

"Release your royal father?" Linley stared at Shaq. Letting out a cold laugh, he said, "I can release your father, but what of my mother and father? Although it was the Radiant Church which killed my mother, at least half of the responsibility lies with your father. And over half the responsibility for my father's death lies on your father as well."

As Linley spoke, he began to exert more pressure with his tail.

"Crack, crack." All sorts of strange noises were emitting from Clayde's body. Clayde was in such agony from the constricting draconic tail that he began to try and struggle again.

"Ah! Ah! Linley, kill me cleanly in one stroke!" Clayde moaned in agony.

"Crunch."

Clayde's two arms snapped off. Right now, Clayde had been constricted so tightly by Linley that his formerly broad waist was now more slender than a woman's.

"Die."

Linley looked at Clayde, then exert a bit more force with his tail.

"Smush!" Clayde spat out a large amount of blood from his mouth, and his entire face turned red. While spitting the blood out, he was coughing nonstop, and some bits and pieces of his internal organs were coughed out as well.

Right now...

Clayde had been ripped into two parts at the waist. Even his spine had been snapped apart. The only thing keeping his upper body and lower body connected was a bloody layer of skin.

Clayde let out a few more moans. "Ah...ah..." His entire face was red. A few seconds later, his breathing stopped, and his soul left this earth.

But right now, Linley didn't feel any happiness or sense of accomplishment.

The only thing he felt was a deep grief, a deep sadness.

"Father. Mother. Can you see me?" Linley said to himself.

Shaq, Kaiser, the princess, and the Wildthunder knights all stared at Linley. Many of them had hearts full of fear. After seeing how Clayde had died, they didn't dare to try and avenge him. They could only hope that Linley would leave now.

Linley's dark gold eyes glanced at everyone present.

"Cough." Shaq cleared his throat, beads of sweat appearing on his forehead. His father had died, but he didn't want to die as well.

Linley's draconic tail swayed slightly, then he turned and began to walk away.

"Bebe. Let's go." He called to Bebe.

Just as Bebe, who was off to the side this entire time, was about to scurry away with him, Bebe suddenly paused, all the hair on his body sticking up. Right afterwards, Linley as well sensed sudden danger, which seemed to come from all directions.

"Whoosh."

Several gusts of wind could be heard as six violet-robed figures appeared, surrounding Linley from six different points. Linley and Bebe were both trapped within their encirclement. Four of these six were standing on nearby rooftops, while the other two were at each end of the alley Linley was in. There was no place Linley could flee to at all.

"Special Executors from the Ecclesiastical Tribunal." Linley immediately understood who these people were upon seeing their uniform.

Seeing this formation, Shaq and the Wildthunder knights all turned pale. These six Special Executors hadn't just encircled Linley and Bebe. They had also encircled Shaq and his men as well.

"Milords, I am the Second Prince of the royal clan of Fenlai. Please allow me to leave first." Shaq immediately begged.

Kaiser recognized the Special Executors from their outfit. He also immediately said, "Milord Special Executors, I am Kaiser, and I am also a servant of the Radiant Church. May I leave first?" Kaiser knew very well about some of the special methods available to the Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal. Given the current situation, he, Kaiser, wouldn't be of any use to them, and would actually serve to disrupt their actions."

"Kaiser, you can leave."

One of the violet-robed men standing at one of the ends of the alley said in a cold voice.

"Yes." Kaiser immediately began running towards one of the ends of the alleyway. The six violet robed men didn't block him at all, allowing him to flee past them. Kaiser was an expert of the Kingdom of Fenlai, true, but he was also a holy knight of the Radiant Church.

"Milords, what about me?" Shaq immediately said.

"Milord Special Executors." That princess immediately begged towards the Special Executors as well.

But the six Special Executors didn't even glance at them. The six Special Executors were clear-headed. When Kaiser left, he was but one person, and a warrior of the ninth rank at that. Linley definitely wouldn't be able to find a chance to slip past. But if they allowed Shaq and the others to leave as well, given Linley's current prowess, he definitely might be able to find a way to slip past at a critical moment.

Linley stared coldly at the six of them.

"You want to kill me?" Linley said calmly. He felt total confidence in himself. Even when surrounded by the attacks of that group of giant dragons, he was still able to flee and survive.

To these six Special Executors, killing him and Bebe wouldn't be an easy affair. The protective scales on Linley's body were no joking matter.

"Those on the Red List are to be killed on sight." The leader of the Special Executors laughed coldly.

The six Special Executors stared fixedly at him and Bebe, ignoring everything else entirely. As high level members of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, they naturally knew that Linley was a Dragonblood Warrior. Dragonblood Warriors were one of the Supreme Warriors. They didn't dare to look down upon him.

"Oh? Kill on sight?" Linley's draconic tail began to swing.

"Swish!" Like a steel sabre, Linley's draconic tail casually slashed across the ground, cutting a deep gouge into it. Linley's dark gold eyes were fixed on this group of people as well.

"Milord Special Executors." Shaq and his men were really terrified now.

"Let's go!" One of the Wildthunder knights let out a deep roar, and immediately, a group of knights charged en masse towards one of the alleyway exits. The remaining Wildthunder knights numbered amongst them more than ten knights of the eighth rank. For them to charge en masse like this, even a combatant of the ninth rank would find it difficult to stop them.

Linley's eyes lit up.

Linley immediately charged towards the wall on his left. Ignoring the wall's existence, Linley slammed into it as though he were a large magical beast.

"BAM!" Linley knocked the section of wall over while fleeing at high speed to the north.

"Whoosh."

The bodies of those six Special Executors suddenly began to emit a hot, burning white light. The light from these six Special Executors was totally interconnected, forming a strange, glowing hexagram.

Linley just happened to ram against one of the edges of the hexagram.

"Bam!"

Linley felt as though he had just been slapped by a Violet Tattooed Bear. His entire body quivered as he was sent flying backwards. He remained surrounded by the six Special Executors.

"Ah!!!"

The bodies of those Wildthunder knights who struck against the glowing white hexagram all exploded, drenching the area with blood. Every single one of the Wildthunder knights who had touched the glowing white hexagram died.

"What is this?" Linley was shocked.

"Linley, quick, do your best to escape! This should be one of the combination attack methods of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal." Doehring Cowart immediately recognized the danger that Linley and Bebe were now in. If they continued to be trapped in such a manner, it was very likely that Linley and Bebe would not be able to escape at all.

Those six Special Executors charged forwards towards Linley and Bebe in a very practiced manner. And as they did, the area of movement within the hexagram began to shrink at an extremely fast rate.

"Ah!" "Ah!" "Ah!" "Ah!"

Shaq and the remaining knights who had not touched the glowing white hexagram were unable to dodge with the six Special Executors drawing closer and closer. One after another was forced to come into contact with the glowing white hexagram, and when they did, their bodies began to vibrate before exploding.

In the blink of an eye, no one in Shaq's party was left alive.

But Linley and Bebe were trapped in an increasingly small, tight space.

"Boss, that white thing seems really powerful. What should we do?" Bebe was frantic.

Linley had both felt and could sense the power of this glowing white hexagram. When it had struck his body, he still felt extreme pain despite his defensive powers, and all the blood in his body had been agitated.

"Bebe, you go down through the earth, I'll go up from the skies. Flee!" Linley mentally directed Bebe.

This black-scaled aberration, Linley, and his freak of a Shadowmouse companion, Bebe, acted at almost the same time. One flew up into the sky like an arrow leaving the bow, while the other burrowed deep into the ground.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 22, Passing Away

“Haaah!” The six Special Executors simultaneously stomped the ground viciously, and suddenly the light around them penetrated the earth. Bebe, who had just burrowed into the earth, struck against the white light and was immediately knocked back.

“Whoosh!”

At the same time, the six Special Executors retreated at high speed, suddenly expanding the area within the glowing white hexagram. With each leap, Linley was usually only able to travel a few dozen meters to a hundred meters at most. In the end, he still had to fall to the ground after all.

As for the Soaring Technique....

Under the current conditions, he simply didn't have enough time to utter the incantations necessary to cast the Soaring Technique.

“Haaaaah!” Bebe didn't dare to touch the glowing white hexagram the six Special Executors had created again. Bebe jumped up in the air as well. At this time, five of the Special Executors suddenly rose into the air as well. Of those five, four rose to the same height in the air as Linley, while the last one rose above Linley.

“Whoa!” One person was above him, four were around him, and one was underneath him.

Glowing with white light, the six Special Executors had formed a totally air-tight octahedron, keeping Linley and Bebe totally sealed in within.

“What the hell is this?” Linley was rather stunned.

Doehring Cowart’s voice sounded out in Linley’s mind. “This special combination attack of these Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal consumes an enormous amount of light-style battle-qi. But perhaps they have some secret treasures of the Radiant Temple on them. Five thousand years ago, the Radiant Temple didn’t possess such mysterious, agile combination attacks.

Even if they practiced the same type of battle-qi, every person’s battle-qi would have fine, minute differences. To be able to totally combine battle-qi like these six Special Executors were doing, to the point of even being able to transform their battle-qi to dramatically increase its power was virtually impossible. But the Radiant Temple had succeeded.

“Whoosh.”

Above, below, front and back, left and right. These six Special Executors flew towards Linley simultaneously at high speed. All six of them were wielding very thin, slender longswords.

No place to dodge!

“Boss.” Bebe was frantic. Linley mentally roared, “Bebe, let’s go all out against the one below us. If we can kill one of them, this formation will be broken.”

“Got it.”

Linley and Bebe, man and magical beast, began to fall at high speeds, launching simultaneous attacks against the combatant of the ninth rank beneath them. But the combatant of the ninth rank didn’t seem to be afraid at all. On the contrary, his lips quirked up slightly, a hint of disdain and mockery on his face.

“Thruuum.”

The white light flowed at high speeds. The light dimmed from the other five Special Executors, while the light from the one below began to blaze like the sun. Launching off from the ground, this Special Executor chopped towards Linley and Bebe with his sword.

“Ah!” Ignoring everything else, Linley struck out with his draconic tail, risking everything to try and constrict the Special Executor.

“Slash!” The sword chopped against Linley’s chest. Linley only felt an incomparable degree of pain, and his protective scales instantly began to crack. It felt as though an iron rod that had been heated until it was glowing white had been pressed against his skin, causing such pain that Linley’s entire body began to twitch, but he continued to constrict the Special Executor with his draconic tail. Fresh blood began to flow from Linley’s wound.

The scales of the Armored Razorback Wyrms weren’t able to block this sword.

“That sword blow’s power was only a bit weaker than the power of a Saint-level expert.” Doehring Cowart was astonished as well. After entering their combination attack formation, the attacks of the Special Executors could reach an incredible level of power.

The Radiant Temple was confident that unless the opponent was a Saint-level combatant, this formation attack would always be victorious!

“Ah!” The draconic tail gripping the Special Executor suddenly came under assault by that powerful light-style battle-qi. Linley felt enormous pain coming from his tail, but Linley continued to go all out, risking everything to constrict this opponent. Those dark golden eyes stared fixedly at the Special Executor.

“Hmph.” The Special Executor let out a cold laugh.

“Bam.”

White light exploded forth from the Special Executor, and Linley’s draconic tail uncontrollably slackened. Linley’s constrictive power simply wasn’t able to overcome the opponent’s counterattack.

At this time, the other five Special Executors came charging at Linley as well.

“Boss!” Bebe kicked off from Linley’s shoulders, charging directly towards those five Special Executors. But on his very first attack, Bebe was struck simultaneously by all five swords, and his body was knocked back downwards.

"Bebe!" Linley said worriedly.

"Boss, I'm fine." Bebe flipped to his feet, but a hint of blood could be seen on his firm, tough fur. However, Bebe's defense really was remarkably powerful. He barely suffered any damage to his skin and fur.

These six Special Executors stared at Bebe in astonishment.

Too monstrous. Even that hadn't been able to pierce the skin of this Shadowmouse? As far as the Special Executors were concerned, even magical beasts of the ninth rank should have their defensive armor and skin be pierced by that blow.

Even someone with defense as monstrously powerful as Linley saw the scales over his chest crack and split from a single blow.

"The target is Linley!" The six of them knew that killing this monster of a Shadowmouse would probably force them to use quite some effort, but killing Linley would be much easier.

A single sword had been able to penetrate his defenses. Thus, a few sword strikes should be enough to kill him.

"What on earth is going on?! Their light-style battle-qi seems to be limitless!" Linley mentally roared with fury, as he swept his claws to attack the Special Executors who were charging towards him.

“Shkreeeee!” Bebe’s piercing screech rang out as well.

Light wrapped around their bodies, the six Special Executors did a pincer attack against Linley and Bebe, while Linley and Bebe used all their force to try and counterattack.

“BAM!!!”

A wild series of attacks. Both sides totally ignored their defense, only focusing on attacking.

The six Special Executors retreated at high speed.

More than half of Linley’s black scales were shattered now, revealing multiple wounds beneath. Fresh blood oozed out past the scales, and even the scales on Linley’s tail were shattered.

Linley wasn’t able to suppress the fresh blood which had risen to his throat, and he vomited it out.

“Their defense...” Linley was truly angry and frantic now.

He had finally met people whose defensive powers were even greater than his own. These six Special Executors were using light-style battle-qi in an extravagantly wasteful manner. Their combination formation attacks gave them both terrifying offense as well as astonishing defense. Linley’s attack hadn’t managed to wound them at all.

"Boss, are you okay?" Bebe said in shock and fright. Those beady eyes of him stared at Linley with concern.

Bebe was in much better shape than Linley. The primary target of those six Special Executors had been Linley. In addition, Bebe's defense was even more monstrous than Linley's. Once again, only a hint of blood could be seen on Bebe's fur.

"Fi, fine." Linley wiped the blood from his mouth.

"That was the first attack."

One of the violet-robed Special Executors standing on a distant rooftop said calmly, "Your defense isn't bad. Let's see how many of our formation attacks you can take."

"Waiters, let's not waste time." One of the other Special Executors also standing on a rooftop said coldly.

"Move." The Special Executor shouted in a loud voice.

Many of the buildings nearby had toppled, and the battle aroused the interest of a large number of powerful combatants, who were watching from afar. But seeing such a large scale, intense battle, they didn't dare draw too near.

The aura of that powerful light-style battle-qi alone filled them with dread.

"Swish!" The six Special Executors moved at the same time, transforming into six streaks of white light that flew towards Linley. Surrounded on all sides by the walls of light, Linley had nowhere to run.

Linley ground his teeth.

"Raaaaaargh!" Linley let out an angry howl, then pulled out the adamantine heavy sword from his back, wildly chopping it towards the six Special Executors.

"BOOM." Linley's adamantine heavy sword collided viciously against a Special Executor, who didn't even attempt to dodge. That Special Executor suddenly felt a terrifying force passing towards him.

"Hrm?" The violet-robed Special Executor was knocked flying backwards by the blow, but under the protection of that light-style battle-qi, he still didn't suffer any major injuries.

Only a heavy sword such as this could allow the astonishing power of a Dragonblood Warrior to be put on full display.

"Slash!"

The other five swords continued to chop at Linley's body. Linley used his claws, his tail, and the spikes on his body to wildly attack, and the five Special Executors once more flew backwards.

Linley fell to one knee.

The majority of the scales on Linley's body were shattered now, and that wound on his chest had suffered yet another slash. The wound was so deep that Linley's bones could be seen, and it was rapidly oozing blood.

However, the Dragonblood Warrior's powerful bloodline gave Linley an extremely fast recovery.

Linley's muscles were constantly rippling and stretching out, try to once more mend themselves and stitch themselves back together. This wound, however, was simply too severe. Even Linley's bloodline only resulted in the wound growing stronger. The loss of a large amount of blood, however, was causing Linley to grow dizzy.

"The next one will be the one that kills you."

One of the six Special Executors said arrogantly. Filled with fear, Bebe crouched next to Linley. Both Linley and Bebe felt a sense of despair.

"Hmph." Linley angrily shook his head, forcing himself to try and focus a little.

But he had lost too much blood, and even Linley's vision had grown slightly blurred. But right at this moment, a magical, illusory ray of light shone forth from the Coiling Dragon ring, transforming into an old man with white robes, a white beard, and white hair.

"Grandpa Doebling." Linley was startled. He didn't understand why Doebling Cowart had appeared all of a sudden.

Doebling Cowart looked exactly the way he did when Linley had first encountered him. A little smile on his face, Doebling Cowart gently rubbed Linley on the head.

"Linley, in the future, you'll have to rely on yourself." Doebling Cowart said, a fond smile on his face.

"Grandpa Doebling, what are you..." Linley was stunned.

Doebling Cowart's spirit suddenly rose into the air. Hovering a meter above the ground, he spread his hands wide. A terrifyingly powerful burst of spiritual energy suddenly erupted forth from Doebling Cowart.

Right now, Doebling Cowart felt extremely calm and at peace.

"In the past, when I lived in the Pouant Empire, my life was a life of training and slaughter. In the Pouant Empire, I was extremely arrogant and a difficult person to get close to. I had no children and no grandchildren. But after having spent five thousand years in the Coiling Dragon ring, my temperament has changed. And then, I met you, Linley."

Hovering in the air, Doebling Cowart was still gazing at Linley.

"Grandpa Doebling, what are you going to do?" Linley had a terrible premonition...

"I've watched you grow up and become mature, one step at a time. In my heart, I felt very proud of your successes. I've even come to consider you as my own grandson." The amount of spiritual energy Doehring Cowart was emitting grew even greater.

The amount of spiritual energy was so high that aside from powerful combatants such as Linley and the six Special Executors, even those warriors watching the battle from far away could sense it. All of the six Special Executors were shocked and alarmed.

"Linley, don't be sad. In truth, trapped as I am within this Coiling Dragon ring, I don't have much of a future. Let this, then, be one final demonstration of my power." Doehring Cowart's smile became all the more brilliant.

But Linley was now shaking with terror.

"What is going on?!" The six Special Executors were beginning to be genuinely frightened. That vortex of spiritual energy was simply too powerful, so powerful that they too were beginning to quake with fear.

The power unleashed when a peak-stage Saint-level combatant was igniting the spiritual energy present in his very soul was incomparably more powerful than the power which even a peak-stage Saint-level combatant normally possessed.

"WHOOSH!" All of the earth elemental essence around the entire city of Hess suddenly flowed towards Doehring Cowart at high speed. Bound by Doehring Cowart's terrifyingly powerful spiritual energy, all of the earth elemental essence began to coalesce.

No mageforce. This was a spell that relied solely on spiritual energy to control the earth elemental essence!

Under normal conditions, this would render the attack power of the earth spell to be very weak. But the spell which Doehring Cowart was now casting was so powerful that one could only shiver in terror.

"HEAVENLY METEOR'S DESCENT!"

Doehring Cowart's spirit had begun to grow blurry, but his voice remained as cold and calm as that of a celestial spirit. Six enormous earth-colored meteors fell forth from the sky, smashing towards those six Special Executors.

